Poetry.

A Happy New Year.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Just at the turn of the midnight,
 When the children are fast asleep,
The tired Old Year slips out by himself,
Glad of a chance to be laid on the shelf,
 And the New Year takes a peep

At the beautiful world that is waiting
 For the hours that he will bring;
For the wonderful things in his peddler's pack;
Weather, all sorts, there will be no lack,
 And many a marvellous thing.

Flowers, by hosts and armies,
 Stars and sunshine and rain!
The merry times and the sorrowful times,
Quickstep and jingle and dirge and chimes,
 And the weaving of joy and pain.

When the children wake in the morning,
 Shouting their "Happy New Year."
The year will be started well on his way,
Swinging along through his first white day,
 With the path before him clear.

Twelve long months for his journey;
 Fifty-two weeks of a spell;
At the end of it all he'll slip out by himself,
Glad of a chance to be laid on the shelf,
 At the stroke of the midnight bell.

Miscellany.

A POSTAL EPISODE.

It was a pretty room, this Cell 29, as Katherine Gray called her parlor and alcove suite in The Norman, Cedar street, Blank City. There was a piano; there were books, easy chairs, pictures. Besides the furnishings that in these days are called necessary, there were the countless small things that make a room something more than mere shelter. In the open grate the gas-log burned with irritating regularity and precision, flaunting its beauty in the face of the useful but ornamental steam-coil. Behind a gay screen, slightly ajar, there was a tiny gas-stove, and singing kettle; a half-open door of a cabinet revealed odd pieces of china and shining silver.

This is what the sun shone upon through the big east bay window on New Year's morning. This, and Katherine Gray at her breakfast-table. The postman had made his one round for the day. Some business house had sent her a calendar, and there was one letter. This she was reading. She made a pretty picture as she sat thus. The domestic signs and symbols were becoming to her; they gave her an air of homeliness that made one wish for a cup of the fragrant coffee, just for the sake of seeing her pour it out.

She had a wealth of brown hair, sincere hazel eyes, and a most expressive mouth. She was tall, slow of motion and of speech. No one would have spoken of her as a pretty woman; yet, any observing person would have seen that she had not stopped at prettiness, but had passed on to something finer.

With all the rest of the world, she was having a holiday. So she had arrayed herself in a becoming house-gown, and was enjoying it just as much as though she was not, every day in the year—Sundays and holidays excepted—engaged in the real estate and life insurance business.

"I wish," she said,—she had a fashion of thinking aloud when alone,—"I wish that this letter could have been delayed until tomorrow. I don't like being so disturbed on New Year's Day. There is a saying, that as the first day goes, so goes the whole year." Then she laughed; and she looked very pretty when laughing. "I wonder if I'm to have a proposal of marriage every day in the year, and feel as bad about every one as I do about this?"

Then she rose and walked to the mirror. The reflection was not unpleasant; she smiled as she looked at it. But she said: "There's no use in being flattered by the glass, Katherine; the fact remains that this is your birthday and that you are thirty-four years old today, and from this time right along you are not going to grow any younger. Here in your hand is an offer of marriage from an eminently worthy and respectacle man, who would take you away from Cell 29 and its 'kitcheny-parlor' air, and set you in a handsome home, where you wouldn't have to hide your bread in the bureau drawer, bake and boil in a single dish, or eat 'boughten pie'—who would make a lady of leisure of you, and who, best of all, or what ought to be best of all, would love you and be good to you. And yet," she continued, "you hesitate. With the little lines coming around your eyes and mouth, with work and worry and weariness stretching out indefinitely before you—you hesitate. I am surprised. You don't show your usual good business sense, your keen appreciation of a good bargain. You are ungrateful, also. You ought to fall on your knees and thank the Lord for such a piece of good fortune. That is, I suppose you ought, according to the world's way of looking at such things."

Then she sat down before the fire and fell into silence. Truely, she was not insensible to the material advantages that were offered to her in this letter from Mr. Browne, wholesale grocer and dealer in canned goods. She loved ease and beauty and luxury; she could use them to the adorning of any position that might be offered her. She was tired of work and the continuous struggle for bread. She had achieved some success in a business way, and that, too, in the face of every instinct of her being. She had made something approaching a home in this little suite of rooms. Her friends drifted in of a Sunday, or now and then of an evening, and, sipping tea from a dainty cup, would pronounce it all "so cozy and delightful." It certainly was a great improvement on the gregariousness of the boarding-house, but in Katherine's secret soul she felt it to be a narrow and lonely life. She despised the makeshifts of light house-keeping, and, being of a very social nature, she often found her solitary roll and coffee lacking in flavor.

As she sat thus, with her hands clasped above her head, she thought: "If it were not for that letter received and answered ten years ago today—the first of the year is a fateful day to me, surely—I know what my reply would be to this one. If I could only forget—but I may as well start my life anew today as any time."

Then she went to her desk and took down the old calendar. "You've had your day, and you may as well go with the rest. One nail drives out another. Your successor is here, with his ready-made wisdom. By the way, I'll see what sort this is," she said. "It's some advertising scheme, no doubt; but it may have a message for me, just the same."

She read: "Be more afraid of the companionship that enslaves than of the solitude that leaves you free. Use the High-flyer Bicycle. Best in the world."

She read the quotation twice, smiling as she did so, and hung the new calendar in its place. Then she proceeded to set her rooms in order. She cleared the little table, and cheerfully put the bread and butter in such places as the ordinary housekeeper knows not of. She sang as she washed the dainty plate and cup and saucer. She did not mind that there was only one.

After this she proceeded to do what nine out of ten business women do on their holidays. She took numberless stitches here and there; she "did up" a bit of lace too fine for the aggressive laundress' hands; she regulated sundry boxes and drawers, and set in fair array her store of feminine finery.

At three o'clock she made a careful street toilet and went out for her dinner. Determined not to dine alone, she invited little Joe, the newsboy who brought her morning paper, and who did small errands for her and other occupants of the Norman, to go with her.

To be sure, when she asked him if he had been to dinner, he admitted that he had been "wid de gang to de mission. But dat," he said, "don't cut no figger. I kin eat jes' as well fer all dat."

He verified his assertion. Katherine never had a more satisfactory guest.

"Yer bet it was bully," he said the next day to a properly envious crowd of boys. "None o' you fellers ever seed anything like it. 'Twas a way-up restrent, where dey have chany wid flowers onto it, an' silver an' glass things wot I don't know der names of. An' wite table cloths an' napkins wot I used jes like a genlem does, an' a waiter wot stood behind my cheer an' waited on me jes like he did de rest. He didn't dast do nothink else wid Miss Gray's eyes lookin' right at him. An dere was soup an' turkey, an' inguns, an' jell, an' ice cream, an' pie, an' puddin'—an' I was on'y sorry I'd filled up so at de mission."

II.

She loved music, and not even the demands of the real estate and insurance business had kept her from study and practice.

Then there came a vigorous ring at her door. It flashed across her mind that possibly Mr. Browne was going to forestall the postman and know his fate by word of mouth. Before going to the door, she lighted the gas and went to the mirror. Standing there she said, "Statistics show, Katherine, that women over thirty"—

Then the bell rang again. As if wavering a little, she glanced at the calendar. Bravely the words shone before her eyes: "Be more afraid of the companionship that enslaves than of the solitude that leaves you free."

"Ah! that helps," she said.

Then she opened wide the door.

It certainly was not Mr. Browne who stood there. Mr. Browne was short and rotund; florid also. This man was tall; of fine proportions, with clear-cut features, and a fine mustache.

"Miss Gray?" he said, interrogatively.

"Yes."

"My name is—but perhaps you remember my name"; and the tall man stepped uninvited into the room.

"Yes," she said, her eyes blazing; "I remember your name. It is the name of the only man who ever treated me with disrespect. Go back into the silence that has covered you for ten years!"

"Not yet," he said. "The morning mail brought me this letter that you wrote me ten years ago. You accepted me then; you said that you loved me. I've the proof in my hands,"—and he opened a letter yellow and stained. "You say:—

"Dear Everil—I'"—

"Oh, don't!" she cried.

"Listen, dear," he said; "sit down beside me while I tell you. The post-office in the city where we both lived ten years ago has recently undergone repairs. A package of letters has been exhumed by the gasfitters or plumbers. This is one of them. I only hope the others have been forwarded to as happy a destination. For the words in the letter,—they are true now as then; are they not, Katherine?"

"Oh, I don't know!" she said.

"Find out, dear, as quickly as you can. The years have been long and hard; but these last eight hours have been torture. I had no idea where to look for you"—

"What do you think I must have endured?" she asked.

"I don't dare think of it." Then he added, as ninety-nine men out of a hundred would have done: "We won't talk about it or think of it. We will forget the sadness of the past, and plan for our future."

"How did you find me?" asked Katherine.

"I saw you at the restaurant where you were entertaining that little hoodlum. I knew you at once. There's no woman in the world like you. I, too, had a guest with me, and could not follow you. But an hour later I caught the boy on the street, and by my silvery eloquence and a dollar learned your name, and where you lived."

"My name?"

"Yes. You might have changed it—and then—I should not be here."

Then Katherine told him of her father's death; of the reverses that drove her into earning her own livelihood; of the circumstances that set her in the business she was following; of her modest success; and then of Mr. Browne.

"That is all past," he said emphatically, "especially Mr. Browne. You are going to retire from business, and let me set you in the dearest, sweetest spot on earth, a happy home. I don't fancy this spirit of independence that possesses the women of the present day."

But Katherine said: "Don't talk of a subject you evidently do not fully understand. It's too large for our discussion tonight. It was this spirit of independence that made it possible for me to be true to my own heart so many years. Except for it, I might not have been able to obey the message the New Year brought to me. This has been New Year's Day, you know."

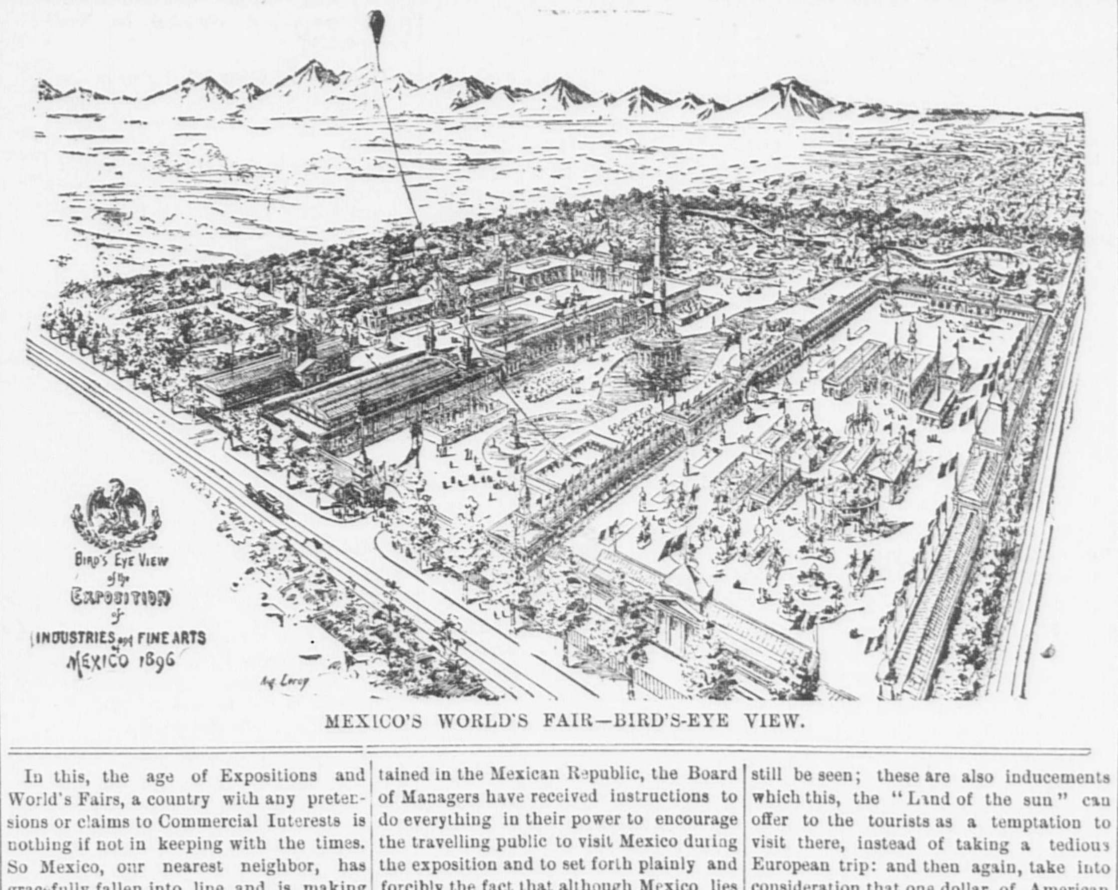

"This is New Year's Day," he said. "It shall be, God helping, the beginning of love, and hope, and happiness that shall last through all the years to come. It shall be the beginning of a companionship that means, not enslavement, but the liberty wherewith love sets us free. And as for that blessed calendar, it shall never be deposed."

So they sealed their vows after the sweet manner of lovers since the world was.

Then some friends dropped in, and after a while Katherine lighted the tiny gas stove behind the gay screen, and soon there was a singing kettle and a dainty little feast, which the friends pronounced "just lovely," but which Katherine and her lover alone knew was the feast of betrothal.

A month later, little Joe was dividing a box of wedding cake with a number of his friends.

"Dey looked as happy as kings and queens," he said, "when dey rode away. An' I don't s'pose 'twould ever have happened if it hadn't been for me."—Carlotta Perry, in the New Orleans Times Democrat.

MEXICO'S WORLD'S FAIR—BIRD'S-EYE VIEW.

In this, the age of Expositions and World's Fairs, a country with any pretensions or claims to Commercial Interests is nothing if not in keeping with the times. So Mexico, our nearest neighbor, has gracefully fallen into line and is making preparations to hold a World's Fair at the City of Mexico, commencing next September and to continue for six months, and which it is claimed will be second only to the World's Fair at Chicago in 1893.

There does not seem to be any reason why Mexico should not have such an Exposition as is now being arraigned for. She has never attempted such a thing before, so this will be the first one. Her population is steadily increasing and her wants are increasing proportionately, consequently the Government Officials are anxious to have our manufacturers exhibit our new methods of Manufacture and Mining Appliances. To give them an opportunity to select such as will best suit the developing of the enormous undeveloped natural resources which are contained in the Mexican Republic, the Board of Managers have received instructions to do everything in their power to encourage the travelling public to visit Mexico during the exposition and to set forth plainly and forcibly the fact that although Mexico lies at our very doors, there is no country in the world that contains greater inducements to tourists than she does. The climate is such that the home of the ancient Aztec and Toltec could be made one of the most desirable Summer and Winter Resorts in the world. It is claimed that a light overcoat can be worn with comfort every night in the year.

Its scenic effects are said to be many and varied. It is claimed that one can, in twenty-four hours' travel, pass through a country that will exhibit every known species of vegetation and Mineral Deposits, with surroundings of Mountains, Valleys, Plauteaus and Deserts and peopled by an intelligent race of native Mexican Indians.

Mexico is an old country, and consequently many ruins of ancient cities can still be seen; these are also inducements which this, the "Land of the sun" can offer to the tourists as a temptation to visit there, instead of taking a tedious European trip: and then again, take into consideration that one dollar of American money is worth almost two dollars Mexican money and one can readily see how much enjoyment can be had on a small amount of money. And then, as a country for investors, its resourses are practically inexhaustible; under careful cultivation, she would alone produce all that commerce collects from the rest of the world. Given the proper expansion to the export trade, she will consume one hundred times the amount of imported goods she takes at present.

Moral. Manufacturers: Accept the opportunity offered for a new market for your goods, they are badly wanted there. Tourists: Visit the country that is endowed to profusion with every gift that man can desire or envy; a country having the most delightful climate and scenery known to the civilized world.

When the King Laughed.

One of the three occasions on which Philip IV of Spain laughed was as follows; Philip's first wife, Isabella of Bourbon, died in 1645, and the next year he married the Austrian Archduchess Maria Anna. This princess understood Spanish, but very imperfectly. Passing on her way to the capital through a certain town which was distinguished for its silk manufactures, she was presented by the inhabitants with a few dozen silk stockings. Heedless of the queen's presence, the master of ceremonies snatched the parcel out of the hands of the town councillors, flung it on the ground and exclaimed in a rage:

"Are you not aware that the queens of Spain are not supposed to have any legs?"

The queen, with her imperfect knowledge of Spanish, here began to weep, called for her father confessor, Reithardt, and told him that she meant to return to Austria. If she had known that in order to become Queen of Spain it was necessary to have one's limbs cut off she would rather have died in Germany than undergo the operation in Spain. When this incident was related to the king he burst into loud laughter before the whole assembled court.—Vermejo.

Bank of England Notes.

No note, out of the fifty or sixty thousand now issued daily, is ever issued twice. If, as a depositor, you should draw any amount in notes at the bank and pay them back into your account ten minutes afterward, they would be cancelled. So, also, any other notes received by you from any other bank in London are always new ones, crisp from the Bank of England presses the day before. The signature is cut off immediately a note is paid in, and the Cancellation Department proceeds to file them in their regular order, taking notice and keeping account of all notes which have not been returned.

One of the curiosities of this department is a twenty-five-pound note, which was paid in after being out for one hundred and eleven years. The bank-note library is also here, with albums containing old bank-notes of various large amounts, with the names of the noblemen for whom they were issued. There is also, the million-pound bank-note, a bit of paper which, in its day, was worth $5,000,000 and was issued for convenience in closing an undertaking of unusual moment. The records of this department are of invaluable assistance in checking forgery, and the cancelled notes, which are kept for a period of about five years before being burned, are constantly under examination by Scotland Yard detectives in search of stolen money, or other people whose notes have been lost. The strange stories of single notes which this department can furnish are many, and are ready-made plots for any number of romances, but they are too numerous to be told in this article.—McClure's Magazine.

Treatment of Sprained Ankles.

In these days of bicycling, skating, tobogganing, and other out-of-door amusements incident to the season, accidents of various kinds are daily occurring, not usually serious, but often painful when seemingly slight.

From time to time one hears of different means of caring for sprained ankles, turned ankles, twisted wrists, etc., but the way now in vogue seems to give better results than any in the past.

It is generally within an hour after the accident that you are called in to see the case. The patient is suffering very severely, and wanting very much to know if "anything is broken." After examining for fractures, the Southern Medical Journal recommends the part to be bathed in extremely hot water, every hour or two, for a period of fifteen minutes at a time. Have the water just as hot as the patient can bear it, and apply with a sponge or cloth, rather than allow the ankle to lie in the water. Then dry and let the part rest quietly, wrapped in flannels, when an application of hamamelis, or veratrum and hamamelis, may be made.

Before retiring, apply a flannel bandage tightly around the swollen part, only being careful that the circulation is not shut off.

It is surprising how the hot applications relieve the pain and produce absorption, and how the bandage, by pressure, prevents swelling and inflammation.

Comfort in Walking.

No one can have comfort in walking with feet that are not in good condition. More often than not, however, this comfort can be secured by bathing the feet for a few moments every morning, or else every evening, in water from which the chill has been taken, using soap and a nail-brush, and giving them thorough and careful attention. This makes the foot smooth and keeps it in a healthy condition; and if the nails are trimmed evenly, so that they do not protrude beyond the tips of the toes, it is better for them, and prevents pressure on the upper part of the toe. When the feet are taken out of the water and wiped, no moisture at all should be suffered to remain between the toes, but they should be dried with a soft towel. A crash or a huckaback towel roughly and swiftly drawn between the toes, as too frequently the bather does, roughens and inflames, and may even bring about a very painful and irritating eczema there. For, owing to the close folding of the toes together, the perspiration softens the skin between them exceedingly and renders them very susceptible to trouble.

This special bathing of the foot strengthens it finely; and those who for any reason are unable to take an entire bath daily should at least try and take a foot bath.—Harper's Bazar.

In the Senate Gallery.

She was a well-groomed, up-to-date young lady, with a big fur cape over her arm, and a magazine in her hand. She invaded the sacred precincts of the Senate gallery, evidently unaware of the sacred ground upon which she was treading. She stood in contemplative mood back of the seats, surveying the sense-soothing scene, evidently occupied in a mental debate with herself over the desirability of remaining, when the doorkeeper bustled up to her and told her in a whisper that made Senator Hill don his "specs" and scan the gallery, that it was "agin the rules to stand."

So she tripped down to a front seat, where she located, and putting her cape on the stone coping for a cushion to shield her elbows, leaned over to study the styles in bald heads. In about two minutes the attendant rushed nosily down the steps and in the same sepulchral whisper told her it was "agin the rules to put anything on the railing."

Senator Peffer was giving some information in his soft, low voice, and under the soporific influence she nearly went to sleep with her head on the back of the seat, and her half-closed eyes studying the painted plaques in the ceiling. In her abstraction she dropped her magazine. Back came the doorkeeper, with another piece of information. "She must not drop things; it disturbed the Senators."

Half a dozen Senators looked up to see if an anarchist had got into the galleries, and the girl back of her giggled. She held her ground, however, and presently opened the magazine and began to read.

Again the doorkeeper: "You ain't allowed to read in this here gallery, it's agin the rules."

She sat for a moment, wrath in every feature, glaring down at the heads below. Just as the doorkeeper sat down she turned and beckoned him vigorously. He came clumbing down, and as he bent over her she asked him in a whisper that must have rattled the weather meter in the marble room, "Can I yawn?"

The laugh that rippled around the gallery was not caused by the remarks of the Senator from Kansas, and the young lady was not again molested.—Washington Post.

An Episcopalian Immersion.

An Episcopalian clergyman, now dead, used to relate an experience he once had, which convulsed his congregation with laughter and nearly broke up his services for the day. He was the rector of a church in Connecticut.

One day as the time for the annual visitation of the bishop was approaching, and he was preparing a class for confirmation, he was sent for to visit a woman who desired to talk with him on the subject of baptism.

The woman, who was very stout, weighing somewhere in the neighborhood of three hundred pounds, informed him that she had long been attracted toward the Episcopal church, but had refrained from uniting with it, because she had strong convictions in regard to baptism and felt that she ought to be immersed. The minister told her that, although the church believed pouring or sprinkling to be valid baptism, it did not prohibit immersion, though, as it was a somewhat inconvenient method, it was not often used.

He pointed out the difficulties in the way, saying that he had no fount in the church large enough for such a purpose, and that there was no river or beach in the vicinity. In reply she suggested that he obtain permission to use the Baptist church, which had a large baptistry under the pulpit platform. This he consented to do, though with much misgiving. The consent of the Baptist brethren was readily obtained.

The next Sunday Episcopal services were held in the Baptist church. At the proper time in the service the candidate for baptism went forward, and with the minister, went down into the baptistry. All went well until it came time for the immersion. Then the minister for the first time realized his inexperience in administering that form of baptism. When he attempted to immerse the woman, his foot slipped, and they both went under the water together.

He hastily scrambled to his feet, but, to his consternation and horror, found, when he attempted to raise the woman, that she could not be moved. There she lay like so many pounds of lead floundering in the water and screaming for dear life. In vain he tugged and pulled. She could not even be started.

Finally several men in the congregation went to the assistance of the minister, and by their united efforts succeeded in bringing the frightened woman to her feet. The men were wet to the skin having been obliged to go into the baptistry. The congregation struggled with its pentup laughter, but finally it burst forth into a roar which could not be suppressed. The services were continued with great difficulty, and the minister drew a long breath of relief when they were ended.—N. R. Journal.

Deep Breathing.

Cultivate the habit of breathing through the nose and taking deep breaths. If this habit was universal, there is little doubt that pulmonary affections would be decreased one-half. An English physician calls attention to this fact, that deep and forced respirations will keep the entire body in a glow in the coldest weather, no matter how thinly one may be clad. He was himself half frozen to death one night, and began taking deep breaths and keeping the air in his lungs as long as possible. The result was that he was thoroughly comfortable in a few minutes. The deep respirations, he says, stimulate the blood currents by direct muscular exertion, and cause the entire system to become pervaded with the rapidly-generated heat.—Medical Report.

Wooden Kitchen Utensils.

After a wooden vessel is purchased, whether it is to be used for a chopping bowl, a butter bowl, a flour bucket, or for any other purpose about the food, it will generally have a disagreeable taste at first to anything that is put to it. To prevent this inconvenience, first scald the vessel well with boiling water, letting the water remain in it until cold. Then dissolve some pearl ash or soda in lukewarm water, adding a little lime to it, and wash the inside of the vessel well with this solution. After this scald it again with plain hot water and rinse thoroughly with cold water. After it is dry and ready for use, there will be no further difficulty about the taste of the new wood being imparted to the food.

The Quincy Patriot.

EIGHT PAGES.

QUINCY, SATURDAY, JAN. 4, 1896.

Sixtieth Volume.

With this number we commence the 60th volume of the PATRIOT. What changes have taken place during the past twelve months? Some events that have caused joy, others sadness. Some dear companions have passed from us and others have come to fill their places.

But how small have been the general changes of the year compared with those that have taken place in Quincy since the first number of the PATRIOT was printed by Messrs. Green & Osborne in one little square room in the same building where the daily, two weeklies and several monthlies are now issued.

The past year has been a more prosperous one for printing, as well as for almost all kinds of business in this city, if we except the manufacture of boots and shoes, than the two previous ones; although most of the industries have not been what they were six or eight years ago. But, as there seems to be some improvement each year, we think our business men may look encouragingly forward for better times the coming season.

What our laboring citizens want, is more to do, and better pay for doing it; it matters but little to them if flour or sugar is higher, if they can find enough to do, and good wages for doing it.

That the year 1896 will be better for the merchant, the farmer, and the mechanic, is the wish of the publishers of the PATRIOT; and that all will be thankful for the many blessings bestowed upon them. We close by wishing all the readers of the PATRIOT,

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

No Monument Desired.

Mr. Edwin W. Marsh has called on the PATRIOT and DAILY LEDGER in behalf of the family and relatives of the late George L. Gill, and requested that the movement for the proposed memorial be abandoned. All efforts to persuade them to the contrary being unavailing, we reluctantly acquiesce to their wishes. We are confident that the necessary funds could have been raised promptly. That many were waiting for others, but that in a few days the subscriptions would have taken a jump and then it would have been a grand popular movement. As Mr. Gill's burial place is not in Quincy we regret very much that this memorial could not have been erected here.

The treasurer of the fund will return promptly the sums that have been contributed, and thanks the contributors for the interest taken in our late friend, George L. Gill.

What other qualities are needed of a civilian that his memory should be perpetuated than those contained in the resolutions adopted by the City Council this week on the death of Mr. George L. Gill:

"In the death of this honorable and faithful public servant, this community loses one of the best examples of true manhood,—loyal alike to his God and to his fellowmen."

Church Wedding.

The marriage of Miss Nellie Maud Thompson, daughter of Mr. John Thompson of Arlington street, Wollaston, and Mr. Howard Greenleaf Kingman, formerly master of the Wollaston school and now of the Haverhill public schools, was solemnized at the Wollaston Congregational church on Tuesday afternoon at a quarter before five o'clock.

The church was filled with the guests when the bridal party entered the church, the bride leaning upon the arm of her brother, Mr. William J. Thompson, and proceeded down the left aisle where were waiting the groom and his best man, Mr. Harry W. Keith of Whitman, and the Rev. Edward A. Robinson, pastor of the church, who performed the ceremony.

Miss Mary A. Worster of Quincy, the maid of honor, was costumed in pink muslin over pink trimmed with flowers, and carried pink Catherine de Mermet roses. A pretty feature of the wedding was the little bridemaid, Marjorie Thompson, four years old, a niece of the bride, who carried flowers.

The groomsmen were Mr. Herbert A. Thompson of Wollaston, Mr. Walter Richards of East Bridgewater, Mr. Levi Nichols and Mr. Charles A. Tanner of Wollaston.

Mr. and Mrs. Kingman left immediately after the ceremony for Haverhill, where they will reside.

Inaugural Banquet.

The arrangements for the inaugural banquet complimentary to Mayor Charles Francis Adams, 2d, on Monday evening, Jan. 6, are about completed. It will be held at Faxon hall and will be served at 8 o'clock by Caterer Blunt of Boston.

After supper there will be a smoke talk and post prandial exercises at which W. G. A. Pattee, Esq., will probably preside. Among the invited guests who will be present are all of the ex-Mayors of Quincy and Col. Henry A. Thomas, private secretary of Gov. Greenhalge.

As it has been impossible to extend individual invitations to all who would desire to attend, it is announced that all who wish can procure tickets at $1.25 each at C. C. Hearn's drug store, or the committee, Mr. Joseph T. French and Mr. Walter B. Wilson.

Reception to New Pastor.

The new year was very pleasantly inaugurated at Atlantic, and the people generally united with the Memorial church people in a reception to Rev. and Mrs. Edward Norton. The new pastor in his brief connection with the society has endeared himself to the community, and everybody seems happy. On this occasion the church looked its prettiest. It was artistically festooned with evergreen, and about the platform it had the appearance of a reception room with its parlor furniture, pictures, banquet lamps, etc.

The reception committee were: Mrs. Charles L. Coe, Mrs. W. F. Cummings, Mrs. H. W. Read, Mrs. Theodore Parker, Mr. George E. Todd, Mr. C. F. Merrick and Mr. B. F. Thomas.

Four young men acted as ushers and introduced the people to Rev. and Mrs. Norton who were assisted in receiving by Mr. W. F. Cummings and Mrs. E. R. Wade.

Coffee and chocolate were poured and served with cake by Miss Moxon, Miss Coe, Miss Hall, Miss Melzard, Miss Wilson, Miss Bemis and the Misses Gray.

Mayor Quincy's Inauguration.

At the inauguration of Mr. Josiah Quincy as Mayor of Boston on Monday morning next, in the Council Chamber of City Hall, Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale has been invited to officiate, and the oath of office will be administered to the Mayor-elect by Chief Justice Walbridge A. Field of the Supreme Judicial Court of the Commonwealth.

—The new Fogg public library at South Weymouth will be upon the Torrey lot, Columbian square. An effort is being made to raise $25,000 by subscription so that the $50,000 bequeathed may be used wholly for establishing and maintaining.

Mr. John P. S. Churchill and Mr. W. M. Marden attended the annual banquet of the Clerks of Courts in Boston on Wednesday afternoon.

The insolvency case of McIntyre & Kirk of Quincy has been continued indefinitely, and that of H. C. Rodgers until the first Wednesday in April.

The ladies of the Universalist church have a food fair in their vestry Jan. 8th and 9th. All are invited and a pleasant time is anticipated.

The PATRIOT has had a birthday and is now fifty-nine years old. It feels as young and enterprising as ever and will continue to make its weekly calls as usual.

A reporter of the PATRIOT heard the millionaire Faxon offer this week $2.50 for a pretty little girl, a daughter of a distinguished gentleman of Wollaston.

Col. Francis W. Parker and George I. Aldrich, Esq., both former superintendents of schools in this city, have been invited to attend the High School reunion Jan. 24.

Mt. Wollaston lodge, I. O. O. F., has adopted resolutions on the death of George L. Gill, one of the members of the old lodge and a charter member at the reinstitution.

Commodore C. F. Pettengill of the Quincy Yacht club is making a collection of photographs of all the ex-commodores of the club which he intends to have mounted in one large picture.

Class reunions have been suggested as a side feature of the High school reunion on Jan. 24. Class banquets in the small rooms of the building previous to the general reception would be very enjoyable.

At Granite City Club Wednesday evening a pleasant party of ladies and gentlemen enjoyed an hour at drive-whist; at the conclusion it was found that Miss Abbie L. Curtis and Mr. John Curtis had made the largest scores.

About twenty friends of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Todd of Billings street, called upon and surprised them at their home on Tuesday evening, the occasion being Mr. Todd's birthday. A bountiful collation was served.

Mr. Henry Faxon was not thrown out of his carriage Tuesday as reported, but in attempting to pacify his frightened horse he was thrown down, dragged in the street, at times under the horses feet, and brought up under one of the wheels. He had a miraculous escape from serious injuries.

The directors of the Quincy Firemen's Relief Association held a meeting Tuesday evening to talk over the matter of the annual ball. A committee was appointed to see what could be done in regard to a hall and they will report at a meeting of the Association to be held next Thursday evening, Jan. 9.

The members of Tilppen lodge, No. 184, I. O. G. T., held a New Year's festival at Faxon hall, Tuesday evening, watching the old year out and the new year in. The festival commenced with a supper which was followed by Swedish games of various kinds. Then came a distribution of presents from a large Christmas tree.

The LEDGER received Monday an autograph letter from Hon. Richard Olney, the Secretary of State, requesting the insertion of an advertisement of the death of Charles King alias Charles Gibbons of Quincy, Mass., at St. Stephen, N. B. He died Oct. 9, 1895, and his friends can obtain further information by applying to the department.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Webster Newcomb entertained a drive whist party at their residence on Howard street, on Tuesday evening, the last night of the old year. It was the anniversary of Mrs. Newcomb's birthday. The guests spent an enjoyable evening. Prizes were awarded Mrs. Gray of Hingham, Mrs. Charles Johnson, Mr. U. G. Bodwill and Mr. M. E. Wight.

The members of the Debating club alphabetically arranged are as follows: R. S. Atkins, H. S. Bates, F. M. Coe, O. C. Colton, A. M. Craig, Frank H. Crane, Harold Faxon, C. E. Finch, Jr., A. R. Are you going to the Food Fair next week?

The editions of the DAILY LEDGER on Monday and Tuesday will be souvenir numbers.

Miss Lizzie Waldron, the obliging clerk at Gordon's Five cent store, is confined to the house with tonsolitis.

The officers of Francis L. Souther camp, S. of V., will be publicly installed next Tuesday evening at G. A. R. hall.

W. R. Lofgren has just completed a $5,000 house for N. E. Hollis on the corner of Tremont and West streets, Braintree.

The city of Quincy was mentioned in the Governor's inaugural address in connection with its application to enter the Metropolitan water system.

Councillor Lovell of this district is on six committees of the Council: Harbors and Public Lands; Military and Naval Affairs; Railroads; Accounts; Warrants.

The annual meeting of the National Mount Wollaston bank will be held next Tuesday, and that of the National Granite a week later.

Rev. and Mrs. Edwin N. Hardy were the guests of Mrs. L. W. Wood of the Greenleaf, at the annual banquet and reunion of the Union church, Boston, Thursday evening.

The services of the police are required nearly every morning to clear out the loafers from the new court room to make room for those who have business with the court.

Now that the idea of a monument in the square for the late Mr. George L. Gill has been given up, some suggest that a tablet or bust be put in the First church or chapel. This is a very good idea as Mr. Gill is buried at Hingham, and also because he was, during his life, a faithful Unitarian.

Rev. Edwin N. Hardy on Tuesday attended the midwinter alumni reunion of Cushing Academy in Ashburnham. In the afternoon giving an historical address before the Philadelphia society of which he was charter member. In the evening delivered a post prandial address at the annual banquet.

The officers of Justitia Lodge, No. 79, D. of R., I. O. O. F. of Boston, were installed Thursday evening by D. D. G. M. Lizzie W. Page and suite. Among those present, were Mr. and Mrs. George Boyer, Mrs. Dyke, Mrs. Washburn, Mrs. L. A. Monk, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Page, M. Lizzie Furnald and M. Jennie Davis of Amana Lodge No. 96 South Braintree, and Miss Corbett, of Mary Ruggles lodge of Wollaston.

WEST QUINCY.

Mrs. David Joy of Packard's lane has had a bed of pansies in full bloom.

Conductor George M. Hobbs of the Granite branch is having a two weeks' vacation and Arthur C. Roberts is taking his place.

The Sunday School of the West Quincy Methodist Episcopal church has elected these officers: Superintendent, Jonas Shackley; assistant superintendent, Rev. A. A. Brown; secretary, Miss Mary Trask; treasurer, Charles S. Jose; librarian, Robert Newcomb.

There is considerable interest in West Quincy over an alleged elopement last week. The parties in the case are John Bianchi and Mrs. Julius Comi.

It seems that Thursday Dec. 26, Mr. Comi attended the Italian ball, and upon his return home during the early morning hours found Bianchi with his wife, and he lost no time in ejecting him from the house, although his wife offered objections.

The next morning in the neighborhood of 7 o'clock Mrs. Comi taking her child with her left the house, and has as yet failed to return. Investigations showed that Bianchi disappeared about the same time and it is presumed that the two are together. The matter has been reported to the police who have as yet been unable to locate them.

Business was generally suspended in the stone yards New Year's day.

The family of Harry Lakin on Robertson street had a narrow escape from death by suffocation by coal gas Monday night. In the house at the time were Mr. and Mrs. Lakin, their infant child, and Miss Lizzie Ring. Miss Ring was awakened in the vicinity of 3 o'clock but was unable to help herself, but had presence of mind enough to cry out, which aroused Mr. Lakin, who with an effort managed to open a window, and in a few moments all had recovered but the baby, and it was some time before it was brought back to life. The trouble was caused by the high wind blowing the deadly gas down the chimney.

Young Men's Christian Association.

Rev. John B. Wilson, pastor of the Neponset Baptist church, will speak at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday at 3.30. Subject, "The Call and the Encouragement to Duty." Mr. T. B. Pollard will conduct the singing.

A meeting for boys is held at the rooms every Saturday morning at 9 45.

The young men's rally Sunday afternoon was unusually well attended and the talks very interesting. Mr. Gregg, of Harvard college, sang a solo.

The annual reception of the Ladies' Auxillary to the members of the Young Men's Christian Association was held Wednesday at the Association's rooms from 4 to 10 o'clock. The afternoon part of the reception was for juveniles and a large number of boys were present.

They were entertained in a pleasing manner by a varied musical programme by a graphophone. A lunch was served.

In the evening the older members of the association were present in goodly numbers and they were also entertained by the graphophone and a lunch.

—Mr. S. H. Warren of Weston, Mass., has shipped to Italy two hundred potted Marshall strawberry plants. He says there is no doubt of their reaching their destination in good condition.

WOLLASTON.

The Epworth league of Wollaston will hold a New Year's rally at 6 o'clock Sunday evening in the Methodist Episcopal church.

The special services held at the Methodist Episcopal church Wollaston this week have been well attended and have increased in interest from night to night. Next week they will be merged in union services to be held in connection with the Baptist and Congregational churches.

Mr. I. Howland Jones of Wollaston sails for home from London on the 6th inst., after an absence abroad of nearly two years. He has been studying architecture at Paris, Rome, Florence and other art centers.

There was a large attendance at the watch meetings at the Wollaston M. E. and Congregational churches on New Year's eve.

Mr. Frank J. Flood of Wollaston has been confined to his house for some time by a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism.

The 30th anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Olney of Wollaston occured on New Year's night. It is superfluous to add that they kept informally open house on that evening.

Woodbine lodge, K. & L. of H., will receive a visit from the grand protector Tuesday evening, Jan. 14.

Mr. E. S. Taylor was the winner of the silk umbrella at the Christmas bowling contest on the Duck's Nest alleys for the best one ball string, his score being 156.

The tie for the three string candle pin prize was bowled off at the Ducks' Nest Alley on Tuesday evening. Result, first frame,—Hon. H. O. Fairbanks, 89; C. F. Briggs, 89; W. I. Dewson, 86; and C. V. Starrett, 84. Second frame,—Briggs, 84; Fairbanks, 68.

One of the severest storms of the season passed over the city early Tuesday morning. At six o'clock the wind at Wollaston attained a maximum velocity of 50 miles and at the Blue Hill Observatory 83 miles per hour. This is the highest velocity recorded in this vicinity this winter.

Danced the Year Out.

The Wollaston Cycle club held its second annual ball Tuesday evening at the Town Hall, Braintree, and it was attended by about 300 who danced the old year out and the new year in.

Previous to the dancing there was a promenade concert by Tirrell's orchestra, which also furnished the music for dancing.

The grand march which was inaugurated at 9 o'clock, was led by President George W. Brown and Miss R. M. Covell, who were followed by fifty couples. President Brown had charge of the floor and was assisted by H. C. Seymour and H. W. Haskins and a large corps of aids.

MILTON.

Jesse Baxter has gone to New York where he has accepted a position with a dye house.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Carder are receiving congratulations on the advent of a little daughter which arrived last week Friday.

The East Milton Ladies' American Protective Association held a baked bean supper and entertainment at the hall in Rugby block, Tuesday evening, which was largely attended.

Although the annual town meeting is some weeks off local politics have begun to simmer a little.

Rev. M. A. Dougherty will occupy the pulpit at the White Church, Sunday.

School commenced their winter term Thursday.

The people of Milton are to petition the Quincy & Boston street railway to extend its tracks from East Milton to Mattapan, a distance of about three miles.

The Baptist Sunday School of East Milton held their Christmas concert at the church on Sunday afternoon. The room was filled, very many standing. Superintendent D. J. Brown presided. The young ladies of the schol sang twice and remarks were made by the superintendent and the pastor, Rev. H. B. Williams, but the programme was largely made up of exercises by the children under the charge of Mrs. Beckwith of Wollaston. The children never did better, and Mrs. Beckwith ought to feel proud of her great success with them.

Thomas L. Pearce of East Milton, who recently retired from the grocery business, has filed a petition in insolvency at Dedham.

Forester's Ball.

St. Francis Court, No. 25, M. C. O. F., held its fifteenth annual concert and ball Tuesday evening, at St. Mary's hall, and the only regret is that a larger hall could not have been obtained.

Suspended from the ceiling near the platform was a large motto reading "M. C. O. F., 1880, Welcome 1895;" and streamers of colored bunting were suspended from the centre to the sides and ends of the hall. Two new electric chandeliers had been added to the lighting service of the hall which brightened the effect.

The members with their guests and ladies began to arrive early, and at 9 o'clock at the conclusion of the promenade concert, there was barely room to move about.

A few moments later the first notes of the grand march, which was to open the ball, sounded and Chief Ranger W. P. Hughes and Mrs. Hughes led followed by sixty or more couples.

At the conclusion of the march the ball commenced in earnest and '96 was well on its way when the last notes of the ball had died away, the only interruption in the festivities being at intermission, when Caterer Wales served a tempting supper in the lower hall.

Chief Ranger W. P. Hughes was chief marshal, Vice Chief Ranger J. L. Heaney was floor director, and these were assisted by John Vogel, Thomas F. Ferguson, Adam Vogel, J. L Fennessey and M. J. Daley, and a large corps of aids.

Dr. Joseph M. Sheahan officiated as chairman of the reception committee and he was ably assisted by many members of the court.

Among the invited guests were: John A. Avery, James McGovern of the High standing committee; J. W. McAnarney of the Knights of Columbus; Chief Engineer Peter J. Williams; P. J. Burke of St. Gregory court; James Cotter Stoughton court; J. Callahan, Sherwood court; T. F. Crown, St. Peter's court; J. E. Tracey, Gen. Sherman court; R. C. Sheahan, Avon court; Edward Powers, Division 5, A. O. H; J. O'Dowd, Division 4, A. O. H; Richard Cole, St. John's C. T. A. John Galvin St. Mary's C. T. A. and George Berry, Granite lodge, M. A., I. O. O. F.

Letter Carriers Dine.

Branch 129 of the National Letter Carriers' association held its annual meeting and supper at the Hancock House Tuesday evening and elected these officers: President, Francis P. Loud; vice president, John D. Williams; secretary, Elmer W. Baker; treasurer, Andrew W. Gardner. The only guests present were Postmaster James F. Burke and the young men of the Quincy office. After supper remarks of an interesting nature were made by Mr. Burke and Carriers Loud and Williams.

ATLANTIC.

Mrs. Livingstone of Squantum street has returned from a visit to the Cape.

The fierce wind of Tuesday morning blew down the chimney on the Atlantic depot. It was very fortunate that no one was injured as it fell about the time the 6.19 A. M. train was due.

Miss Juliette Smith, president of the junior league work, visited the junior league of Atlantic, Wednesday afternoon. After the exercises were over the members of the league were treated to a collation and flowers; then they all tarried for games. The junior league is now divided into two grades.

There is a good attendance each Sunday at the Methodist Sunday school, Atlantic. Mrs. Shanor has taken a large class of young ladies, and Mr. T. H. Kingston a new class of young men. The prospects of this church never looked brighter for successful work.

Mrs. George B. Shanor, wife of Rev. Geo. B., is winning the esteem of all whom she meets. She is a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University, a woman of fine gifts, and a Godly zeal for church work. Her arrival is very opportune. They are keeping house on Appleton street.

A great deal of complaint has been made recently by residents of Madison and Old Colony streets about the odor which has arisen from Teal pond. There has been several cases of contagious diseases among the children in that district, and the parents state that the vile odor is the cause. This is a matter for the Board of Health to investigate, as the health and possibly the lives of many citizens and their children are exposed. The clean filling from the houses in Atlantic, if collected and deposited in the pond would in a very short time stop a common nuisance.

About fifty persons attended the watch night service at the Atlantic M. E church, Tuesday night. At half past nine the pastor conducted an experience meeting which was followed by a genuine social of three-quarters of an hour, during which the ladies served a collation. A little past eleven o'clock Rev. George Tupper, from Tennessee, preached an inspiring sermon from the words "What does thou here," closing with a consecration service. It was a most joyous and profitable service and the time sped so swiftly it seemed no more than half an hour before the "happy new year" was greeted.

Rev. Mr. Shanor, pastor of the Atlantic Methodist church, will occupy Mrs. Pratt's house on Appleton street.

Miss Eva Bassett spent several days of last week with relatives in Newton.

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Hill with their two daughters spent Sunday in Beachmont.

Mr. John T. Hunt with his family have moved into the Boisclair house on Squantum street.

Miss Viola Willis returned to her school this week. She has spent a few weeks vacation in Atlantic.

The engine of the 10.15 outward train jumped the track at Atlantic Saturday night, near the junction of the Granite branch, and as a consequence all trains were delayed several hours. None of the cars left the track and no one was injured. The trouble is said to have been caused by the interlocking switch which is being changed over.

Last Friday, Dec. 27, the friends of Mr. John Cunningham tendered him a complimentary concert and dance at Music hall, Atlantic. There was a very good attendance and the affair was very enjoyable. Those who gave their services in the concert were Mr. Joseph Callahan, reader, Mr. John Lonie, violinist and whistling soloist, the Riggs sisters of Everett, song and dance artists, Mrs. Emma Fratus, reader, Mr. Phelan and Miss Mary Bruce, duetists, the Lawler brothers, quartette, Mr. Joseph Roche, reader, Mr. Joseph Murphy, xylophone soloist, Mr. Eddie Rudderham, comedian, and Mr. Cornelius Duggan, vocal soloist.

After the concert dancing was enjoyed until 2 A. M., music for the same being furnished by Hanson's orchestra. The floor was in charge of Mr. Martin Cunniff who was assisted by eighteen aids.

Revival meetings will be held at the Methodist church each night next week, except Saturday. The pastor will be assisted a portion of this time by the students from the theological school.

DOWNS AND PARK.

About 8.30 Saturday a man representing himself as Charles F. Webster went to the Quincy Savings Bank and presenting a book in that name attempted to draw out the money. The official suspected him and kept the book and the fellow departed. Half an hour later the rightful owner of the book put in an appearance and claimed it.

The man is described as being about 25 years of age, smooth face, light complexion. He wore a light suit with a red sweater.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel C. Miller, corner Willett street and Rawson road, Wollaston Park, was the scene of an assemblage of over forty invited guests from Brockton, Quincy, Lynn and Malden, who had gathered to offer their congratulations and best wishes for the future, on Christmas eve. After several charming vocal and instrumental selections, the company were entertained at lunch in the dining room and more than one young lady expressed quietly the hope that next Christmas could see her the hostess at a similar gathering. The presents were numerous and attractive, while nothing was overlooked which could add to the enjoyment of the occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Miller will make their permanent home in Wollaston Park, and we wish them much joy and happiness through life.

SOUTH QUINCY.

Mr. Alexander Marnock, in behalf of the granite manufacturers of South Quincy has presented Letter Carrier Williams with a purse of $29.

The opening service at the new Calvary Baptist church will not be held until Sunday, Jan. 12.

The Sunapee Outing club held a very enjoyable whist party Wednesday evening at Doble's hall, which was participated in by nearly fifty of those who make their annual outing at Sunapee Lake, N. H. In the party were a number from Boston. The reunion was in charge of John Walsh, John H. Griffin and John Ross.

Whist was enjoyed until 10 o'clock, when a light lunch was served by Caterer Wales, previous to the departure of the Boston guests for home.

The prizes and those who captured them were as follows: First gentlemen's, a silver cup, Mr. John J. Toumey; ladies first, Miss Marie Dunlevy. Consolation prizes: gentlemen, a ticket to Boston, Mr. James Sullivan; ladies, a silver hatchet, Miss Stodigal.

The new year brings a change to everybody. When one gets along toward the mile stone of 70 years, it is pleasant to receive a token of respect from friends and neighbors. Such was presented to Mrs. David Joy on New Year's eve in the form of an easy chair of pleasing design. Being so overcome she could make no reply to the presentation of the chair which was a complete surprise to herself and husband. But through the paper she wishes to thank all who kindly gave towards the gift and to say that she was more than pleased. She hopes to have the use of it for several years to come, and this is the wish of all her friends.

There was an interesting debate at the meeting of the Quincy Branch of the Irish Land league Sunday evening on the following question: Resolved, "That the Monroe Doctrine is applicable to the Venezuela boundary question"

Mr. John Cavanagh and Mr. Patrick Fay spoke for the affirmative and Mr. William Faircloth and Mr. Edward Lawton for the negative.

Letter carrier Williams received a New Year's gift this week in the shape of a purse containing $61 25. Mr. Williams is a genial man and much liked by those along his route, they finding him ever courteous and obliging. For the pleasant surprise Mr. Williams is indebted to Mrs. James H. Stetson who collected the money and presented it.

It is expected that the case of Clan McGregor against William Westland will be heard Saturday morning.

Merrymount lodge of Good Templars held an enthusiastic meeting Thursday evening, visitors being present from Abbott and S. A. Wilber lodges of Boston and Klippan lodge of Quincy. The degree team of Abbott lodge worked the degree of the order upon one candidate in a manner that called forth the highest praise.

A collation was served by the entertainment committee after the work of the evening.

The meeting next Thursday evening will be an open one. There will be good speaking and an invitation is extended to the public to attend.

High School Reunion,

FRIDAY EVENING, JAN. 24, 1896.

Reception. Addresses and Music. Refreshments. Dancing.

All graduates of the Quincy High School are invited to attend the annual reunion to be held at the new High School Building on Hancock street, Friday evening, Jan. 24, 1896 at 7.30 o'clock.

The Board of Government urges each and every graduate to give this reunion the support of his or her presence and hearty interest. To once a year renew old school ties and revive old memories would seem to be a pleasant thing, and the future of the Association depends largely upon the success of this meeting. Graduates at a distance can materially aid by becoming members of the Association; the annual dues of 50 cents may be forwarded to Mr. C. Eaton Pierce, treasurer.

Tickets are limited to the graduates, but each can purchase two, so that they may have an escort. They may be procured of any of the board, at seventy-five cents each, or at John O. Holden's store, 154 Hancock street, Quincy. Please inform the Treasurer at your earliest convenience, whether you desire one or two tickets, that arrangements may be made.

Hon. C. F. Adams, 2d, Mayor-elect of the city of Quincy, has accepted an invitation of the Association to be its guest, and many of the past and present teachers of the school and school superintendents are expected.

The reunion will consist of a reception, speeches, music, and a two to three hours' dance. Light refreshments will be served at 9 o'clock. A good orchestra will be in attendance throughout the evening

All for The Cook.

Some people seem to think that the cook receives but mighty little consideration in these days of progress,—but such ideas are wrong, for the cook is getting the greatest amount of consideration, and the new labor-saving, worry-reducing, comfort-bringing Ranges, recently invented and for sale by us, are enough to tempt most any lady to try her luck at cooking.

Newly arranged consumption of heat, direct to all sides of oven, handy oven door, registered thermometer on oven telling exactly when oven is hot enough to cook meats, bread, cake, pastry, etc.; linings adjustable for wood or coal, broiler that carries all smoke and smell to chimney instead of filling your house with the same, labor saving grate, improved oven bottom, Range higher and easier for user, unique shelf for keeping food hot, and other advanced ideas.

It will please us to have you inspect this new range. Ask to see the new Family Glenwood. Satisfaction guaranteed on every range we sell or money refunded. A range on trial if you wish. Reasonable allowance for old range.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

THE SHAWMUT SPRING WATER possesses all these requirements, and when used in liberal quantities it is a most important factor in building up and restoring to healthy action the digestive organs and conducive to the health of all, more especially to children and persons of delicate constitutions. The array of testimony by doctors and others in its favor is overwhelming and shows that Shawmut Spring Water stands among the best.

Chiefs Raised Up.

Hodenosaunee tribe of Red Men of Wollaston held a council fire and raised up the newly elected chiefs with the assistance of Deputy Great Sachem J. Frank Gardner, Great Prophet George Flowers, Great Senior Sagamore Robert Bellows, Great Junior Sagamore W. E. Seshong, Great Mishinewa Frank N. Hall, Great Chief of Records Fred C. Gruver and Great Keeper of Wampum A. E. Sprague, all of the Massapoag tribe of Campello on Thursday evening. The wigwam of the home tribe was crowded with braves and palefaces and their wives, the rich regalia of the tribe and the handsome costumes of the ladies making a brilliant scene.

The raising up of the chiefs by the Deputy Great Sachem and suite was a creditable piece of work. It went along as smoothly as clock work, especially when the D. G. S. and suite took up the trail and followed it through the forest at the close of the council fire.

After the ceremony a grand pow-wow was held in the banquet hall at which all of the braves and their friends sat down and ate corn and venison and smoked the pipe of peace.

Sachem,—J. H. Jordan.
Senior Sagamore,—P. R. Glass.
Junior Sagamore,—J. P. Thomas.
Prophet,—A. H. Mackenzie.
C. of R.,—W. A. Jordan.

To Be Incorporated.

The attendance was not large in response to the invitations sent out by friends of the Quincy Cycle Co., but it included many of our progressive men who usually make a success of whatever they undertake in a financial way.

Among those present were Messrs. R. F. Claflin, Clarence Burgin, John O. Hall, John Swithin, John Vogel, John W. McAnarney, Geo. H. Brown, John H. Dinegan, Henry E. Sheldon, W. T. Babcock, W. L. Ripley, Henry L. Kincaide, A. L. Baker, James McGrath, Thomas Swithin, Frank F. Prescott, R. A. Sears, F. E. Pinkham, W. B. White, C. H. Totman, and Mr. Mack of Boston.

As a wheelman, Mr. Claflin has been thrown much in the company of Mr. W. L. Ripley who is associated with Mr. F. E. Pinkham as the Quincy Cycle Co., and he found him an upright young man doing a good business, and had confidence that he could manage a larger establishment, with the advice of a good board of directors.

The assets and liabilities of the firm were presented, also the contract just signed for 5,000 wheels, 4,000 to be delivered before June 1, and all this year. The fullest investigation was courted, and the situation looked so bright, that those present signed and subscribed liberally to the stock, and also signed preliminary papers for incorporation. It depends on others to subscribe the balance and thus establish an industry in our city which will employ about 100 skilled workmen at good wages.

Night Lunch on Fire.

Night lunch wagons do not prosper well in Quincy. Some have found they could not make both ends meet, while the one which located in the lot adjoining the LEDGER office a few weeks ago was visited by fire Friday morning. It was about eight o'clock, and the manager was in the car at the time. He thinks the stove exploded, but it probably fell instead as it is not much damaged.

An alarm was pulled from Box 23, and a prompt response and good work by the fire department quickly extinguished the blaze. Not however without a loss of about $300.

A Candle Pin Club.

The Wollaston Candle Pin club was organized at the Duck's Nest alleys on Wednesday evening. The club starts out under excellent auspices and includes some of the best bowlers in the place. Mr. George Thompson is the secretary and treasurer. The club will bowl on Wednesday evenings. The teams and members are as follows:

Team A,—C. F. Briggs, captain, Walter Jennings, George Thompson, A. G. Williams.

Team C,—M. F. Burns, captain, Charles Bates, R. B. Witham, Edgar Hunt.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and, therefore, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

Quincy Debating Club.

The debate of the Quincy Debating club Thursday evening was on the following subject: "Resolved that the Munroe Doctrine is applicable to the Venezuela question."

The debate was somewhat of a disappointment as three of the principal disputants were unavoidably absent. Mr. Fred Tupper therefore opened the debate in the negative.

He said this was a dispute over a boundary line and the first thing to look at was where they got this line. Great Britian acquired theirs from Holland, and the government of Venezuela from the Spanish. If we knew exactly what the rights of these two countries were there would be no dispute. The Munroe doctrine was simply a principle adopted when our country was small, and it was absurd when applied to this question, as it did not matter to the United States whether the land belonged to Great Britain or the United States. It would be better for Mr. Cleveland to apply this doctrine to the more dangerous matters of public interest which were political corruption and intemperance.

Stephen A. Foster, for the affirmative, said it was not a question as to whether Cleveland was wise in his message, but whether the Monroe doctrine is applicable to the question. It may not be wise to enforce it, but to say it is not applicable is not wise. Long before the Monroe doctrine the question of establishing protectorates had attracted the attention of Congress, but had not taken form. After the overthrow of Napoleon it was intimated that the alliance formed would be forced into this country, and there was also a question of boundary line between Russia and the United States. He saw no difference between a case where they wish to establish a monarchy and where they seek to extend a monarchy. It seemed to him that the Monroe doctrine was applicable where they were seeking to extend or take territory, where they had no right. Great Britain has always been a land grabber.

Mr. Youngman of the Harvard Forum also spoke in the affirmative. He said the question was, whether England has a right to that land, and as Gladstone or Salisbury say nothing about it, it is evidence that they do not have a very strong claim. They base their claim upon the Schonburgk line, and the speaker then defined at length what that line was. The only grounds Great Britian claims this on is that Englishmen have gone there and settled. Venezuela bases its claim on a treaty received from the Spanish in 1648. If England has no claim she is violating the Monroe doctrine. If Great Britian had a good case it should be willing to arbitrate.

Delcevare King for the negative said there was another doctrine that had been handed down to us by President Washington, which was the doctrine of non-intervention, and this doctrine should be applied to this question rather than the Monroe doctrine. At the time of the forming of the alliance the position of the United States was weak and the Monroe doctrine was annunciated. He was willing to admit that Great Britain had encroached upon Venezuela, but he could not see that they had encroached upon the United States. The Monroe doctrine was only laid down to consider what virtually concerned the United States and when the question did not virtually concern the United States the doctrine of Washington should be applied.

Other speakers on the question were Charles Sampson, S. A. Southworth and E. S. Litchfield.

A vote was then taken on the question which resulted in favor of the affirmative by a vote of 17 to 1.

Lamb—Hutcheons.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Taylor of Rodman street, the advent of the new year was fittingly celebrated by the marriage of Miss Mary Hutcheon and Mr. John Lamb, one of the energetic clerks of the Boston Branch grocery.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Robert Westly Peach with his customary efficiency, and was witnessed by about 80 guests.

The bride looked very pretty dressed in delicate cream cashmere, with trimmings of Duchesse lace and satin ribbon. Her veil was caught with orange blossoms, and she carried a handsome bouquet of tea roses.

The bridesmaid was Miss Agnes Taylor of West Quincy who wore a pretty dress of white lawn trimmed with satin and her bouquet was of pink carnations.

The best man was Mr. William Lamb, a brother of the bridegroom, who with the bridesmaid, performed the duties pertaining to them with becoming grace.

In compliment to the nationality of the bride and bridegroom, the wedding march was played upon the Scottish bagpipes, an inovation which may become popular in the future.

After the ceremony and the customary congratulations to the happy pair, the guests set about entertaining themselves in the manner their choice and pleasure directed. Parties to play cards, and kindred games were formed, but dancing proved the most favored means of enjoyment, alike among old and young.

About eleven o'clock supper was served which was followed by fruit and ice cream in abundance. After supper dancing was resumed and kept up with much spirit until about four in the morning when the affair which was very enjoyable throughout terminated.

The wedding presents, which were numerous and appropriate, were displayed during the evening, and were much admired.

Mr. and Mrs. Lamb will reside at 47 Liberty street, and will be at home to their friends after Jan. 5.

Szumowska—Ondricek Recital.

The only joint appearance of Miss Antoinette Szumowska and Mr. Franz Ondricek in Boston will be made at a piano and violin recital at Boston Music hall on Wednesday, January 8th, under the management of Mr. Henry Wolfshon. Miss Szumowska, it will be remembered, was the favorite pupil of Paderewski and comes from an old Polish family well known in Warsaw. Her appearance in in this city last season gained her the highest commendation, and her reappearance will be a welcome event. She is to play the Beethoven Sonata in C minor, Schumann's "Carnival," a Nocturne and and Etude by Chopin, the "Minuet" by Paderewski and Liszt's "Campanella." Mr. Ondricek makes his first appearance in a recital programme on this occasion and will play, accompanied by Mr. Luckstone, the Concerto in F sharp minor by Ernst, a Romance by Wagner, his own Fantasie 'The "The Bartered Bride" and Paganinni's "Witches Dance."

Ondricek's name is pretty hard to say There is a little tick over the r and over the c. The c is all right enough; it makes the last syllable of his name sound like check. The r is the hard part, for to Americans that letter is always a poser, but the tick over it makes the sound a cross between sh and th. Tickets for this concert with reserved seat, 75 cents, $1.00 and $1.50 now on sale. Orders by mail given prompt attention.

A beautiful New Year's day.

For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, Jan. 1, 1896.

The organization of the legislature occurred on Wednesday and the feature of general interest and highest importance was the defeat of Clerk McLaughlin for re-election after holding the office for 13 years. The result was a surprise to the clerk and to all of his friends, including Speaker Meyer, who felt confident of his re-election. The question was settled by a caucus of the Republicans in the old hall of the house on Wednesday forenoon. The battle was opened by Mr. Boutwell of Malden, of last year's house, who pronounced in favor of having a Republican clerk, notwithstanding the acknowledged superior qualifications of Mr. McLaughlin. Several sharp speeches were made on each side. In favor of a Republican clerk it was said that if the Democrats had the opportunity they would not suffer a Republican clerk to remain in the office. It was admitted on the part of the opponents of the clerk that he was thoroughly equipped for the service and that he had been accommodating to all members. On the other hand, it was presented purely as a question of business, common sense and good party policy to nominate for the place a man who would give the state the best possible service, regardless of his party connections.

But the opponents of the clerk had their way, for the vote stood 89 for Mr. Sleeper of Winthrop, when only 85 were necessary to nominate, 76 for Clerk McLaughlin and 4 for James W. Kimbell of Lynn, the assistant of the clerk. But when the election came up in the house occurred the most interest. Mr. McCarthy of Boston took the floor and said that if it were simply the question of changing one man for another he would probably have nothing to say, but this change was the outcome of a sentiment which was not the sentiment of a majority of the Republican party.

Then Mr. J. H. Mellen of Worcester, recognizing the futility of Democratic opposition, yet hoping to do something to save his friend, said that he hoped that the session would not begin with a partisan spirit which would embroil the session from the first day to the last and make the filling of the offices a grab for spoils. He reminded the Republicans of the practice of the Democrats in Boston for many years, though they had full control in city hall, of retaining in office competent and experienced men, though they were Republicans, such as the treasurer, and city auditor, and others whom he mentioned.

The ballot was ordered and out of 117 votes necessary to elect, Mr. McLaughlin had 108 and Mr. Sleeper had 122, with a few scattering.

The mischief has been done and it remains to be seen what will be the consequences of it. The case is a strong one and it will not be strange if it is repeated all over the country to the injury of the Republican party. The clerk was admitted by the men who opposed him to be thoroughly efficient, honest and accommodating. The place was demanded for a Republican solely on the ground that a Democrat ought not to fill an office in a Republican house. There was no provocation on the part of the Democrats, only an assertion of what the Democrats would have done if they had been in the place of the Republicans. Of course this will embitter the Democrats where they have the power to retaliate and it is to be expected that the Republican office-holders in Boston will now have to go, no matter how good they are, and thus both state and city will be the losers.

The other events of the opening of the legislature were just as expected. Senator Lawrence of North Adams was elected president of the senate and Speaker Meyer was re-elected speaker by a unanimous vote, notwithstanding the vote of the caucus in the morning showing that the Republicans had determined to defeat the Democratic clerk. There were the usual exhortions to faithful work, and a short session, which will be observed if they can be with due regard to public business.

There will be a great deal of legislation of the highest importance. Large appropriations will be asked for by many petitioners who want to get at the state treasury and it will be a good year in which to practise economy. There has been some strong partisan talk, this being a presidential year, and there is evident danger that the good of the public will be sacrificed for the sake of making party capital. If the people of the districts have any influence with their representatives, they ought to see that they look out for the public first of all. RULE.

Electrics Through Milton.

There is a movement to extend the Quincy & Boston street railway system from East Milton to Mattapan, and if the proposed extension is carried through it will be almost impossible to estimate the benefit that will be derived. Not only will East Milton be placed in touch with the other parts of the town, from which it is now almost isolated, but it would benefit Quincy and be a great feeder for the Quincy & Boston.

It would form a popular line for the towns the other side of Milton to the beach. Not only would it be a pleasant ride but the time consumed in reaching the beaches would be much shortened.

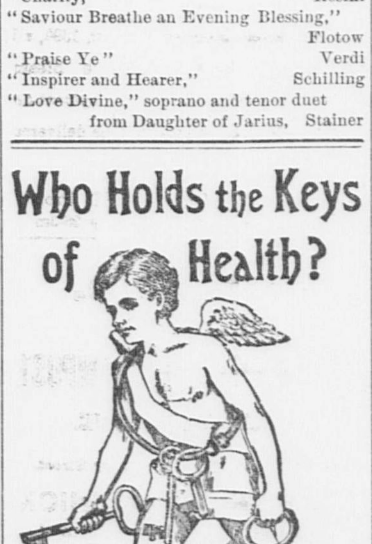

It is a well known fact that the aristocratic people of Milton are strongly opposed to street railways but if those who favor the scheme only put their shoulder to the wheel they can get the line extended, as it is understood that the Quincy & Boston favor the extension, and would readily build if a location was granted. This is the age of progression] and the advent of a street railway through the town of Milton cannot be put off any longer.

School Committee.

The School Committee of 1895 held its final meeting of the year Tuesday evening Messrs. Crane, Page, Porter, Burns, Gurney, Harlow, Hallowell and Sheahan being present.

The chairman reported that all transfers asked for had passed the Council.

It was voted to allow the association of the Alumni of the High school the use of the High school hall on Jan. 24, the date of the annual reunion.

Voted that the schools be closed New Year's day.

Permission was granted Col. G. H. French to address the pupils of the public schools on Alaska.

The following unexpended balances were reported:

Salaries,	$5 79
Fuel,	63
Transportation,	8 80

A vote of thanks was extended the chairman for the discreet manner in which he had performed his duties during the past year.

The board then went into executive session and considered its annual report.

In executive session an amendment to the rules relating to salaries was offered, which was laid on the table until the next meeting.

After the meeting adjourned the members of the board assembled at the residence of Chairman Crane where they were entertained with a supper.

A New Chairman.

The annual meeting of the Republican Ward and City Committee was held at headquarters Wednesday evening for organization.

Hon. Henry O. Fairbanks presided, and Messrs. Frank E. Badger, Charles H. Johnson and Tobias Burke were appointed to receive and count ballots.

It was voted to proceed to ballot for president.

Councilman-elect Isaac M. Holt placed the name of Charles L. Hammond in nomination, and T. H. Kingston the name of Henry O. Fairbanks.

The result of the ballot was as follows:

Whole number of votes,	31
Necessary for choice,	16
Charles L. Hammond had	18
Henry O. Fairbanks had	13

In accepting the office of president, Mr. Hammond hoped the committee would work harmoniously during the coming year, and also paid a tribute to the retiring President for the good work he had done in the past for the Republican party.

The organization was completed by the election by ballot of the following officers:

Vice Presidents,—Frank E. Badger and James Thompson.
Secretary,—Edgar G. Cleaves.
Treasurer,—Russell A. Sears.

A vote of thanks was then extended to the retiring president, Hon. Henry O. Fairbanks for his efficient services during the past two years.

Mr. Fairbanks in responding thanked all of the members of the Ward and City Committee for the support they had given him. He had endeavored to do all in his power for the success of the party and regretted that his efforts had not been successful as he desired. He was a Republican and while he regretted the result of the recent election he could not help it. He should continue to work hard for the success of the party in the future, and wished Mr. Hammond success in his administration.

President Hammond in replying said he knew that President Fairbanks had done all possible and that he would continue. His recent defeat did not hurt his Republicanism. He hoped the members of the committee would work together and support all Republican candidates in the future.

Voted that the members of the executive committee formulate rules and submit them at the next meeting of the whole committee.

Voted that the chairman of the several Ward committees and the president and secretary of the City committee serve as the executive committee until new rules are adopted.

Councilman Johnson Disgusted.

George A Sidelinger, Secretary of Republican Ward Two Committee.

DEAR SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Republican Ward Two Committee. I have been a member of this committee for five years, and during this time the best interests of the Republican party as a whole have always been the aim of the committee. At present, the party is made to bend to the call of one man who is by no means the choice of the party. I am disgusted with such a play of politics and cannot support such men or methods. I desire to thank you all for your kindness and generous response to all the demands I have made upon you as chairman. Believe me to be ever, as in the past, a loyal Republican, and hoping soon to see the party again governed by men.

I am sincerely yours,
CHARLES H. JOHNSON.

Christmas Missionary Service.

The First Presbyterian church, Water street, was filled on Sunday evening when the Young People's and Junior societies of Christian Endeavor conducted the beautiful Christmas missionary service sent out by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

Mrs. Murdock Lamont led in the responsive reading.

Masters Arthur Foster, Daniel McInnis and Arthur Phillips recited the verses of the three kings, and Misses Gracie Craig, Maggie Milne, Effie Walker, Bella Michael, Harriet Bevan, Jessie Beattie, Maggie Malcolm, Jessie and Alice Milne, Gertrude Foster and Katie McDonald responded, telling of the progress of the gospel in China, Japan, Siam, Laos, Persia, Syria, Africa, South America and other countries.

Then, instead of an address, the Y. P. S. C. E. continued the services by speeches and readings on "Missions" by Mr. John McLeod, Miss Bessie McMillan, Mr. Thomas Bishop, Mrs. James Milne, Mr. John Gillis, Mrs. Angus McNeil, Mr. Alfred Bishop and Mrs. Robert Westly Peach. Christmas missionary carols were sung during the services, led by the choir. The service was one of great interest.

The pastor announced that he would preach on the Bible doctrine of the Millennium next Sunday evening. At the morning service a collection amounting to twelve dollars was taken for the Quincy City hospital.

For the Negro People at Calhoun.

The ladies in the Unitarian Alliance work are going to send boxes of clothing and anything that is useful in the household line, like old table cloths, dish towels, holders, etc., to the colored people's representative at Calhoun. Anything, writes the lady in charge, that can be used in house work will be welcome. Things can be sent at once to Mrs. George W. Morton, No. 2 Spear street, from which place they will be forwarded.

Will any who wish to help in this needed work, send articles to Mrs. Morton? Please put in pieces for mending garments. A grand work is begun in the South, but it is only begun, and yet all these streams flow in the right channel in christian philanthropic work and there is nothing sectarian in such work

☞ Those troubled by indigestion say that the Shawmut Spring Water has been a great benefit to them. tf

Our Representatives.

The Massachusetts Legislature is again in session, the new legislators assembling on Wednesday. This senatorial district is represented by the Hon. Francis W. Darling of Hyde Park, and the Quincy-Weymouth Representative district by James Thompson and Thaddeus H. Newcomb of Quincy, and Hon. James H. Flint of Weymouth.

It is not new business for Senator Darling and Representative Flint. Both have served faithfully and well and have been returned by their constituents with flattering endorsment.

Mr. Thompson is one of the city's leading granite manufacturers, being president of the Granite Manufacturers' Association of Quincy. He is heartily in sympathy with any legislation which will increase the prosperity of our industries and our people and his constituents would be pleased to see him chairman of the Committee on Manufactures. He is also prominent in financial circles, being a director of the National Granite bank, one of the incorporators of the Quincy Savings bank, a director of the Quincy Quarry Co., one of trustees of the Presidents Hill Real Estate Trust, etc. For four or five years he served in the City Council of Quincy, and for two years was its president, making an excellent record as a legislator and as a presiding officer. He is 47 years of age, forty of which have been passed in Quincy where he commands the confidence and trust of his fellow citizens generally.

Representative Newcomb will be among the senior members of the Great and General Court, being in his 70th year. While we hear a great deal nowadays about bringing the young men to the front the State need much of the mature judgment of such gentlemen as Mr. Newcomb. As a critic of the Council of 1891 said: "He seldom avails himself of the privilege to speak, and makes no claims to oratory, but few members make statements as clearly and honestly. He impresses his hearers with belief that he has given the subject mature consideration." Mr. Newcomb is a thorough Republican but in no sense a politician. Years ago he was prominent in the old Whig party and has since served on Republican committees. His service in the City Council was a long and honorable one and was only severed at his request. He was born in Quincy, and up to his retirement recently has been engaged in the granite business. In his earlier days he was a constable and a fireman. He served in the civil war and rose to the rank of lieutenant in the 42d Mass. Vols. For nineteen months he was in a rebel prison. Good honest "Thad" will make the district a faithful Representative.

The Quincy Court.

The session of the district court was held in the new rooms in the Adams building for the first time on Saturday and previous to commencing business His Honor briefly addressed those present, stating that now the court had moved into its new rooms, he wanted it understood that those who attended court must behave themselves and there must be no tobacco spitting on the floor or in the corridor or upon the stairs.

The first case called was that of John Leary of Brockton who was arraigned for drunkenness at Quincy. He told a good story and the court released him.

John Miller was fined $5 for drunkenness at Weymouth.

The new court room proved much too small Monday to accommodate all the attendants and as a result all those who had no business with the court were politely informed that their services could be dispensed with and they reluctantly vacated their comfortable seats for a stand on the sidewalk where the county officials were hauled over the coals for not providing room for them. There was also an unusual number of prisoners in court and the dock proved much too small. Perhaps after once settled down in the new quarters things will be arranged more conveniently.

Samuel E. Brown of Quincy was arraigned for destroying a dressmaker's sign valued at $3, the property of Nora E. Brown, and was fined $5.

Richard Cotter was arraigned for assault on Luke Levangie. Case continued for two weeks.

John Miller was fined $8 for drunkenness at Quincy.

Bernard Purcell of Randolph was arraigned for drunkenness and had his case placed on probation for three months.

Frank Morrally of Weymouth was fined $10 for the larceny of half a peck of apples from John T. Hunt.

The continued case of John Rogers, for embezzlement of $80 from Daniel Ford, was called, and he was sentenced to three months in the House of Correction. Appealed.

The case of William Bennett, the juvenile, who was arraigned for breaking and entering and larceny from the store of F. F. Crane was called. He was found guilty of larceny and fined $15.

The cases against Benjamin Stover for larceny from E. B. Souther, and of Benjamin Stover and John Douglass for breaking and entering and larceny from the store of F. F. Crane, were also heard. They were placed on probation until Jan. 30.

Joseph Grant was arraigned for the larceny of a quantity of carpenters' tools from parties unknown. Grant was arrested in Boston Thursday by officers of Station 1, while attempting to pawn the tools. When questioned by the officers he said he stole them from a team at Quincy. The Quincy police were notified and Inspector McKay brought the man to Quincy. He was fined $20.

John Dyer and Frank Barry of Cohasset were fined $5 each for disturbing the peace.

The continued case of George Courley and Henry Griffin for attempted highway robbery from Justin A. Carver at Weymouth was heard. The defendants were held in $300 each for the superior court.

The liquors seized from Theodore A Hayden of Braintree was forfeited.

The Quincy Shoe Company.

A meeting of the Quincy Shoe Co. was held Saturday evening at the office of the Quincy & Boston street railway, at which the following additional officers were elected:

President,—John R. Graham.

Directors,—John R. Graham, Rupert F Claflin, Wilson Tisdale, Clarence Burgin, Herbert T. Drake, John Swithin, F. A. Bicknell.

More Hours of Recreation.

"One of the most noticeable changes that have come about in my experience," says a Maine traveler of fifty years, "is in the evening life of our towns and cities. Why, it isn't so many years ago that in any Maine city the places of business would all be open of an evening. Lawyers would be in their offices, the mechanics in their shops, the merchants in their stores, and everybody pegging away busily. Mills and factories even would run until 7.30 o'clock. Now go through almost any Maine city or village of an evening and you'll find the business wheels at a standstill. The lawyers, mechanics, merchants, in fact, almost everybody, is idle. No one now attempts to do much of an evening. Social life claims its own when the sun goes down, and either the home circle, the club or the theatre has the people. Perhaps fifty years hence we'll no longer work afternoons."—Kennebec Journal.

Everywhere We Go

We find someone who has been cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and people on all hands are praising this great medicine for what it has done for them and their friends. Taken in time Hood's Sarsaparilla prevents serious illness by keeping the blood pure and all the organs in a healthy condition. It is the great blood purifier.

Anecdotes.

First Boy—"What did yer mother do to yer for goin' skatin' on thin ice and gettin' in?"

Second Boy—"She boxed me ears."

"Did it hurt?"

"Nope. She was so mad she didn't wait for me to git me ear muffs off."—Good News.

Mr. Baggie—"Confound that tailor! These trousers are a mile too long!"

Mrs. Baggie—"How much shall I turn them up?"

Mr. Baggie—"About half an inch."—Tid-Bits.

Mrs. Crimsonbeak—"That Mrs. Bacon is a very contrary person, don't you think?"

Mrs. Yeast—"What makes you think so?"

"Why, only yesterday she gave a '5 o'clock tea' at 4 o'clock, and had nothing but cocoa."—Yonker's Statesman.

Louise—"Marie had a lovely wedding, but what made the bride and groom go up the aisle hand-in-hand?"

Blanche—"Why, don't you know? Her sleeves were so large she couldn't take his arm."

Miss Wabash—"Shall I see you at the Thornborne's masquerade tomorrow?"

Mr. Beaconstreet—"Yes; I shall go as a monk."

A Happy New Year.

BY H. P. CRANE.

A happy New Year! Do we think
With the words of the wish on our tongue,
How many fond memories they link
To the days that are long past and gone?

Do we think of the long vanished years,—
Of the memories joined with the past,—
When we dreamed,—not of anguish and tears,—
Nor thought of life's skies overcast?

Do we think of the loved and the lost,
As we joyfully sing the refrain,—
Or does our glad wish, still, some thought
Of past sorrow and anguish retain?

"A happy New Year!" Ah! for some,
That wish holds a secret regret,—
A sad recollection, that time
Can ne'er make the fond heart forget.

But the thought of the loved and the lost,
Should never bring anguish nor grief;
And a soul in the sea of pain tossed,
Should find, at this season, relief.

For the love of the Father is seen
In the birth of the life-giving Son;
And our lost have but entered the scene
Where the Father and children are one.

Notes and Comments.

—Pay your bills promptly. Our business men expect their money with the new year, and it is time for squaring up accounts. Please remit.

—The Boston Herald says: Life knows Mayor-elect Quincy, and is confident that he is going to make a great municipal chief magistrate. Besides, it notes with gratification that he doesn't eat tobacco, as Mayor Strong of New York does.

—Henry Clews, the financier, struck the bullseye when he said the government revenue should be increased so as to furnish a surplus, instead of, as now, leaving a deficit. That's the whole business in a nut-shell. With plenty of revenue the gold reserve will take care of itself.

—Congressman Barrett probably won't worry much over the snub given him by the foreign affairs committee in its disposition of his impeachment resolution. Mr. Barrett is proof against snubs. And he has got the advertising out of the matter he was after.

—That the N. Y., N. H. & H. railroad is setting the pace for the railroads of the nation is demonstrated by the great and costly improvements now or soon to be under way. The experiment with electricity from a central station at Nantasket has thoroughly demonstrated the feasibility of that method of operating a railroad and on Nov. 29th an army of workmen began work at South Braintree on car houses, etc. The scheme so far as developed is to lay two additional tracks from South Braintree to Boston, one on each side of the present double steam tracks. These two tracks are to be operated by electricity and stations will be built at frequent cross roads. Later on the same plan will be followed out in the other direction, as far as Cohasset and Brockton.—Stoughton Sentinel.

—Senator Henry Cabot Lodge has done the whole country a real service by his masterly exposition, in the Senate on Monday, of the "Monroe Doctrine." He went to the root of the matter, giving a concise and lucid history of incorporation of that principle into our American policy, and showed, incontrovertibly, its thorough application to the Venezuelan controversy. There was not the faintest trace of partisanship in the entire address; on the contrary, the Massachusetts Senator addressed his colleagues and the country from the plane of the broadest statesmanship.

—Gov. Morton has announced his intention to enter the race for the presidency. He has been assured of the support of the full New York delegation through thick and thin.

—It doesn't look exactly like a happy new year for the New York city taxpayers. The municipal budget calls for $46,400,000, which is an increase of $6,500,000 over last year.

—The cotton manufactures of Adams, Mass., are not at all worried over the panic which prevails in financial circles, but are busy making plans to erect the largest high-grade cotton mill in America next spring. The Berkshire Cotton Manufacturing Company, which now has $1,000,000 invested in Adams is erecting this mammoth structure to duplicate its present plant, and the building now in process of erection, together with its mechanical equipment, will cost the company another $1,000,000.

—The Hebrew fair in New York made $167,000—which beats the record of any fair ever held in this city.

—A Wareham writer says that it is now estimated that the total crop of cranberries this year in the Cape Cod cranberry belt is nearly 400,000 barrels as against 180,000 barrels last year. The average price secured by the grower was between $6 and $7 per barrel or 96 quarts, the largest price by far ever obtained for a crop anywhere near so large in this state. The New Jersey crop this year aggregates but about 130,000 barrels.

—The Brockton overseer of the poor raised 230 fat hogs this year, and the price falling, they sold them at 5 1-4 cents per pound, dressed weight.

—We learn that three prominent Republican manufacturers of this state have recently purchased a majority of the stock of the Boston Journal. The working force will be changed and the great New England Republican paper will be given a new lease of life.

—Louisiana sugar farmers are rejoicing over the decision of the U. S. circuit court, at New Orleans, declaring that the sugar bounty act is not unconstitutional.

—The railroad station at Abington was entered by burglars early Monday morning, but little of value was secured. They smashed a window, forced the door of the ticket office, blew the safe open and made a general wreck of the agent's office.

—Of course the friends of Angus Gilbert, the wretch who brutally murdered little Alice Sterling of Boston, are trying to have his death sentence revoked. If ever a murderer deserved the death penalty, Gilbert does.—Brockton Times.

—L. S. Raymond of Taunton says he carried the first cranberries ever grown on the Cape to a man in Hyannisport 55 years ago, before the railroad was in operation. From this sprang all the great bogs of today and quite an industry for that section.

Ex-President Harrison has engaged, it is said, 30 rooms at the Planters' Hotel, St. Louis, for the week in which the national Republican convention will be in session. Gov. McKinley has enaged, if the statistics are correct, some 70 rooms at various hotels, besides accommodations for the Ohio delegation. These two candidates for the presidential nomination are evidently taking time by the forelock. They are ahead of Reed in the hotel line.

—The trustees of the fund of $50,000, left by the late John A. Fogg, to establish and maintain a reading room and library at South Weymouth, have purchased the Torrey lot on Columbian square. Under the present law we pay full value, while last year we paid half, which makes the expense much greater. Last year there was spent 43 cents out of each dollar for administration expenses, and 47 cents went for the farmer. Under the present law and methods, 27 cents is spent for administration and 73 for the farmer. Our position is being vindicated every day. It is supported by the position taken by Italy, France, Great Britain, where the Royal Commission has just reported, after an investigation of five years, at a cost of some $90,000.

Clipping Horses.

Whether the hair should be clipped or not from riding and driving horses is a subject which has undergone a great deal of discussion. There are several reasons why clipping is advantageous. In the first place, a horse will travel faster and with less exertion if clipped, and on reaching the stable will be more easily dried out. If blankets enough are used, the horse will be left just as comfortable as the horse wearing a heavy coat of hair and will stand less chance of contracting a severe cold. An unclipped horse will perspire very freely, and it will be found almost impossible to rub the coat so as to leave to the animal dry and comfortable. Very often by being left in a half dry condition horses are rendered stiff and useless for further service. The hair may be left on the legs, and owing to its nonconducting properties will prevent the horse from having craked heels (scratches.) This treatment will be especially advantageous to express and delivery horses, as the hair will keep the legs warm and dry while the horse is standing.

Fashionable people object to the hair being left on the legs of their riding and driving horses, as it does not look well. However, if the legs of the horses are properly cared for by a competent stableman, no harm will come from clipping the hair off. Some people claim that it is against the laws of nature to remove the horse's coat at all, but these are generally people of limited experience. If clipping will add to the comfort and welfare of the horse, it would be small return for his services to neglect anything that can be done for the greatest servant God has given man.

Railroads Must Hurry.

The last report of the Interstate Commerce Commission gives some interesting data concerning the application to all railroad equipment of automatic car couplers and train brakes under the act of March, 1893.

The law requires all equipment to be so fitted by January, 1898. The figures show that about 1,000,000 cars and locomotives remain to be equipped. This means over $30,000,000 to be expended in two years—$15,000,000 a year. Many roads are so equipping cars and charging cost to operating expenses, notably, the Boston & Maine, but unquestionably the law will work a great hardship for the next two years on roads many of which are barely earning interest charges. There is a fine of $100 a day of each case violated, unless of course, roads are under the jurisdiction of the courts.—Dorchester Beacon.

A Safe Method.

The treasures of the Bank of France are said to be better guarded than those of any other bank in the world. At the close of business hours every day, when the money is put into the vaults in the cellar, masons at once wall up the doors with hydrolic mortar. Water is then turned on and kept running until the cellar is flooded. A burglar would have to work in a diving suit and break down a cement wall before he could even start to loot the vaults. When the officers arrive the next morning, the water is drawn off, the masonry is torn down, and the vaults opened.—From Harper's.

We know of but one community in the world where dyspepsia is practically unknown, and that is the Shakers of Mount Lebanon, N. Y. These good people have been studying the subject of digestion for more than a hundred years, and that they understand it pretty thoroughly, is evidenced in the foregoing fact. Their Digestive Cordial is the safest and best remedy in cases of indigestion that we know of. A trial bottle can be had through your druggists for the trifling sum of 10 cents.

The Shaker Digestive Cordial supplies the system with food already digested, and at the same time aids the digestion of other foods. It will almost instantly relieve the ordinary symptoms of indigestion, and no sufferer need to be told what these are.

How to Sleep.

How to sleep, and how not to sleep, Anna Payson Call tells us in her "Power Through Repose." The idea of complete relaxation is so well brought out, and the rest and repose that comes from it is so well emphasized, that one may well read and learn. She says: "Don't adopt any habitual attitude when you go to sleep. As you are when you drop away in the arms of Morpheus you are likely to stay for some time, and, if you tie yourself up in hard knots, before they are untied by the soothing power of slumber they will leave their impress. Round shoulders, uneven hips, protruding collar bones, to say nothing of the horrid wrinkles from squeezing the eyes shut and knitting the face into lines and furrows, are a few of the evils which result from not knowing how to go to sleep. Even young women are to listen and take warning, for the bad work is soon done, and it is hard to undo.

"Lie flat on the back, on a mattress which is not too soft, the head on a small pillow; the room must be cool, and the clothing warm but light. The eyes should be lightly closed, and the hands left easily at the sides. Don't draw the corners of your mouth down, which will make those ugly creases from the nose down toward the chin. It is easy to cultivate this sense of relaxation. Learn to imagine yourself heavy, as if you couldn't help letting a ton's weight down on the mattress. Take a lesson from the baby; he sleeps in utter physical abandonment. That is why he falls out of bed, and why, as he grows older and begins to keep the tension of waking hours through slumber time, he stops falling out of bed. Watch tonight and see how you are managing it, and if you are on your arms, are crossing you knees, putting your hands above you on the pillow, crowding your toes in between the mattress and footboard, tucking your hand under your cheek, curving yourself around like a parenthesis mark—stop all or any such practices right away and try simple, relaxed repose."

Spraying Plants.

Spraying plants with clear water is of such benefit to them, that it is strange people in general do not practise it more. There are several kinds of implements to use for the purpose, any of which will do the work nicely.

The one I use is the elastic plant sprinkler, which is also of use in dampening clothes.

There is also an atomizer on the market which can be used in the same way, this has the advantage of the other in being constructed so the perforations can be turned upward when desired, so as to sprinkle the under sides of the leaves and rid them of red spiders.

More expensive and larger sprayers are also in use and capable of doing more work. One of them works with a rubber bulb, by pressing which the water is carried into a rubber tube from which it is sprayed through a nozzle on the plants. Several different nozzles accompany the sprayer, so the spray can be made fine or coarse as is desired.

The value of spraying cannot be overestimated; it tempers the atmosphere around the plants and washes the dust from them, leaving the breathing pores free to act and prevents the ravages of red spiders.

Some years ago when I had no sprinkler and had never heard of one, I used a whisk broom dipped in water to sprinkle my plants and it answered the purpose very well.

Some plants do not like water on their leaves and they can be moved out of reach of it. None of them like it when the sun is shining hot upon the foliage, but in the early morning or evening they enjoy it.

The value of moisture around Chinese Primroses is seldom fully understood. They dislike it on their foliage, but when the pots are sunk into wet sand, the moisture causes them to grow rank and healthy, and they never have that dried-up, forsaken look that we see when moisture is lacking.

To sum it all up, the rules to follow in spraying, is to spray as often as you think the plants need it, and then to be sure they have enough moisture, spray a little more. —Vick's Magazine.

Put Off.

There is a young lady living out in the West end who teaches a class at a mission Sunday school in the suburbs. Each Sunday she encourages the children to be present on the following Sunday by giving them a hint in glowing terms of what the next lesson will be. Last Sunday, as usual, she told them that next Sunday's lesson would be about Lot's wife—how she disobeyed and looked over her shoulder, and how she was turned into a pillar of salt.

While the rest of the class were revolving the wonderful story in their minds in open-mouthed astonishment there were two soiled fingers shaking violently over the heads of the balance, and when the young lady asked for the question the owner of the fingers exclaimed:

"Teacher, did they eat the salt?"

The young lady's forethought is the better part of her wisdom. She was puzzled only for a moment. She smiled upon the tot who had given her such a close call and answered:

"Oh, you must come next Sunday and hear."—Cincinnati Tribune.

All Right.

Jones was absent-minded, and as he was about to sail for the Continent with his wife and family, a friend came down to send him off and make sure all was right. The friend was late; it was within 20 minutes of sailing time, but he found Jones smiling and happy.

"Hello, Jones!" he cried. "All right?"

"Yes," nodded Jones, "trunks, tickets, letter of credit, steamer chair—everything. Flatter myself that all is right this time."

"That's good," was the answer. "Where's Mrs. Jones and the family? Have to tell them adieu and hurry ashore?"

Castle Square Theatre.

The production of Faust at the Castle Square Theatre on Monday evening last was a veritable triumph for the management and the stock company. No opera has ever been received with such demonstrations of favor as Gounod's grand masterpiece. The company proved equal to the task set for it, the hardest it was ever called upon to perform. Mr. Persse gave a masterly interpretation of the title role. His voice was never in better condition and showed not the slightest trace of fatigue. Mr. Wolff's Mephisto was a superb piece of artistic work, in makeup, voice and gesture he was the embodyment of Satanic wickedness. Valentine proved just the part for Mr. Murray and particularly in his death scene, he was strong and convincing. Miss Lane was a charming Marguerite. From her first entrance. to her lonely prison cell, where her life goes out, she realized fully the sweetness and dramatic strength of the role. As for the production, nothing like it has been seen in Boston. The scenes are all carefully planned, set with great celerity, while the electrical effects by Mr. Murphy were bewildering in number and novelty. Faust will continue for the entire week with matinees Wednesday and Saturday. In spite of the demands of the opera and great beauty of the production, evening prices are still twenty five cents for first and second balconies; Orchestra fifty cents; Wednesday and Saturday matinees, every seat in the house, twenty-five cents.

Christian Endeavorers.

Reports were received and adopted from the president, secretary, treasurer, and the chairmen of the lookout, social and missionary committees. The president's report was as follows:

FELLOW ENDEAVORERS: There have been three regular bi-monthly meetings of the Quincy Christian Endeavor Union since the meeting in this church in May, when your present officers were elected.

The first was an "Echoes of the Convention" rally held in the First Presbyterian church, Water street, in July. The speakers were the Rev. John Pollock, of Glasgow, Scotland, and Rev. Mr. Mursell, of Derby, England. Their addresses were stirring, strong and wise. So great a privilege this union may never enjoy again. The church was well filled but the society of the Centre Congregational church was the only one aside from that of the local church which was well represented. Owing to the necessary haste in securing these speakers before there return home from the convention in Boston, your President had no time to enlist other helpers, and had to make the preparations unaided.

In September we met with the society of the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic. The Rev. Edward Kelley, of the Golden Rule office, was the speaker, and gave an earnest and refined appeal to our consciences. The Centre Congregational and Presbyterian societies were present in goodly numbers.

The November meeting was held with the Quincy Point Congregational society, the speaker being the Rev. Daniel Evans, of East Weymouth. Seldom have we listened to an adress of more sustained eloquence. The Centre Congregational society was the only one having any considerable number in attendance, beside the local society.

One special meeting was held, in December, in the Presbyterian church, the Rev. John G. May being the speaker, and the subject, "Italian Mission Work."

The societies were conspicuous for their absence, and the desired increase of knowledge of this most important work was therefore not obtained.

This leads to the statement that the Union at the Atlantic meeting undertook the expenses of the car fares of the Rev. Mr. May, who comes from Boston twice a week to conduct services in Italian in the third ward. The Presbyterian church is furnished free of charge for these meetings. A missionary committee was appointed (one from each society, with your speaker added as chairman.) The committee acted slowly, but finally, chiefly through pledges secured by the members from the Centre Congregational society, the amount necessary to date, with a small balance, was raised. I am sorry that our own society has not done better.

At the Atlantic meeting your President was empowered to have the Wollaston societies invited to join the Union. After futile efforts to get a committee together for this purpose, I gave the invitation personally, and requested the societies to elect members of the Union committees, and to be present tonight, if they should vote to come with us. We still earnestly hope that they may join our Union.

The reports of the secretary and treasurer, and of the committees will give other facts of our part-of-a-year's work. I allude to the social held in this chapel in October, only that I may personally thank the Social Committee, and especially Mrs. Alfred Baxter and the chairman, Mr. Alex Clark, for that delightful evening. I acknowledge with thanks, the excellent work of our secretary, Miss Maria Drew and of our treasurer, Mr. Walter Sampson. Let our motto be, "Better work next year."

The report of the chairman of the Lookout Committee, Mr. W. P. Bailey, was very important, detailing the work of the Union Bible classes, taught by Mr. O. C. Colton and Mrs. James M. Gray of Boston telling of efforts made toward organizing new societies, and recommending organized efforts in the No-license cause throughout the coming year.

It is thought that the members of the Union will also become largely enrolled in the membership of the Sabbath Protective League.

The president having declined renomination, Mr. Albert Hayden, of the Centre Congregational church, was unanimously elected to that office. The efficient secretary and treasurer were re-elected. The Executive committee will meet on January 13, to plan for the next meeting of the Union, and to receive the reports from the Wollaston societies upon the invitation extended them to join the Union.

Household Receipts.

QUEEN CAKES. Beat half a pound of butter and a pound of sugar to a cream; add six eggs, one by one, beating well between each; flavor with the peel of a lemon grated, squeeze in the juice of half a one, and then sift in the flour warm and dry. When well mixed bake in a moderate oven.

CELERY SOUP. Boil a pint of celery. When tender, drain. Have ready two quarts of hot milk, seasoned with salt, pepper, and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Drop in the celery. Have your tureen hot. Dish and serve immediately with whole crakers on top.

CHOCOLATE COOKIES. Beat to a cream half a cupful of butter and one tablespoonful of lard. Gradually beat into this one cupful of sugar; then add one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, and two ounces of chocolate, melted. Add one well-beaten egg, and half a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of milk. Stir in about two cupfuls and a half of flour. Roll thin, and, cutting in round cakes, bake in a rather quick oven.

CUSTARD AND BLANC-MANGE. Blanc-mange served ice cold with preserved fruits and rich cream is delicious. By making a double quantity, desert may be varied the second day by serving it with a rich egg custard. Custard baked or boiled and floating island are most delicious desserts. A pretty dish is made by splitting stale ladies' fingers or sponge-cakes—any stale cake may be used—and spreading them with some tart jelly. Cover with custard, and on the beaten whites drop tiny dots of jelly.

HICKORY NUT CAKE. Beat a half cup of butter to a cream, then add gradually, beating all the while, one and a half cups of granulated sugar, then add three quarters of a cup of water, two cups of flour, and a half teaspoonful of salt; beat until smooth. Chop one cup of hickory-nut kernels, and dust them thickly with flour. Stir into the cake the well-beaten whites of four eggs and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Line flat pans with buttered paper, add the hickory nuts quickly to the cake, pour the mixture into the pans to the depth of three inches, and bake in a moderate oven for about forty-five minutes. English walnuts may be substituted for hickory nuts.

PUREE OF VEGETABLE SOUP. Peel and cut up very finely three onions, three turnips, one carrot and four potatoes. Put them into a saucepan, with a quarter of a pound of butter, and the same of lean ham and a bunch of parsley. Place them over a sharp fire for ten minutes, then add a good spoonful of flour and mix it well in. Then add two quarts of stock and a pint of boiling milk; stir until boiling. Season with a little salt and sugar. Rub it through a sieve, put it into another saucepan, boil again, skim, and serve with croutons of fried bread. The soup ought to be rather thick.

Cologne to Cure a Cold.

The process by which a cold in the head or throat may be promptly relieved, as suggested by a French physician, is not new, but it is a revival of a most agreeable, if half-forgotten, method.

French women have long known the virtues of prompt inhalation of eau de cologne, and an old French mam'selle, who taught the young ladies of an uptown school twenty years ago, was at least one of her race to import the remedy.

Like all such remedies, the cologne water should be inhaled at once, as soon as the first symptoms of the coming attack appear. Deep whiffs must be taken, and the fumes are more potent when the cologne is poured on a handkerchief.

Four or five inhalations of from two to three minutes each are sufficient, according to the French doctor, to put to rout the most willing-to-stay cold, if the preventive is begun in time.—Reflector.

GODEY'S MAGAZINE

(ESTABLISHED 1830.)

Volume CXXXII begins January, 1896

During 1896 GODEY'S MAGAZINE will contain:

TALKS WITH SUCCESSFUL WOMEN.

Valuable hints about various branches of industry which are open to women, by women who have succeeded in them.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

Discussions of musical subjects or people. Illustrated each month with portraits, autographs, and one or more pages of music. This music alone will make a valuable collection.

This series of articles is a unique feature among monthly magazines. The papers are interesting to all readers and are of positive value to those who play or sing.

THE STAGE.

Illustrated articles upon the best and newest plays and the foremost actors, particularly the best American productions. These are much more than gossip of players. They are entertaining discussions of the dramas that are talked about. Such treatment is not found in any other magazine.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Magazine will be well and thoroughly illustrated from cover to cover. Competent artists and improved methods of making and printing the plates will be employed.

THE COVERS.

The Covers are different every month. They are designed by popular artists, and the covers for a year will be valuable as an art collection in themselves.

THE FASHION DEPARTMENT,

Which for years has given the latest fads and fashions, is of particular interest to women.

A HOME MAGAZINE.

GODEY'S is a magazine of this country and of today. It is a family magazine, with a larger scope than it had as the "Lady's Book." It is a monthly feast of wholesome, interesting reading, fit for every member of the household.

In addition to the features mentioned above, each number will contain a liberal amount of fiction, by the best writers, articles on subjects of general interest, book reviews, etc., etc.

Subscriptions, $1.00 a Year.

License Laws Unconstitutional.

BY REV. GEORGE F. CLARK.

The Supreme Court of the United States in 1887 made the following decision relative to the prohibition of the liquor traffic in the several states, vis:

"No legislation can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their servants. Government is organized with a view to this prevention, and cannot divest itself of the power to protect them."

This decision has never been seriously questioned. In fact it stands as the fundamental law of the land and is one of the most important decisions ever made upon the liquor question. It is far reaching in its effect and of universal application; and it very clearly indicates that all laws for the licensed sale of alcoholic beverages are plainly and unmistakably unconstitutional.

Every intelligent person knows full well that the public health and the public morals are seriously endangered by the laws authorizing the sale of intoxicating drinks. They are the most fruitful source of disease and crime. Hence no legislature has any right or power to place such enactments upon the statute book. It is therefore the bounden duty of every individual who would have the health or the morals of the community preserved, to demand that all such legislative permission shall forthwith be repealed if indeed the decision of the Supreme Court does not itself really repeal them, just as decision of the Massachusetts Supreme court in 1783, that a white man had no right to whip a negro, put an end to slavery in the state.

Harper's Weekly

HARPER'S WEEKLY is a journal for the whole country. It deals with the events of the world that are important to Americans.

In carrying out this policy, in 1895, Julian Ralph visited China and Japan and journeyed through the West; Richard Harding Davis took a trip through the Caribbean Sea; the evolutions of the new navy were described and illustrated by Rufus F. Zogbaum; Frederic Remington presented studies of Army and Frontier life; Poultney Bigelow attended the opening of the Kiel Canal.

In 1896 like attention will be given to every notable happening. The chief events in art, literature, and music and the drama will be artistically presented. W. D. Howells, in the new department, Life and Letters, will discuss in his interesting way, books and the social questions of the time. E. S. Martin's sprightly gossip to the Busy World will be continued. The progress of the Transportation Commission around the world will be followed, and Caspar W. Whitney will conduct the department of Amateur Sport.

In 1896 will occur a Presidential election. In its editorials and through its political cartoons the WEEKLY will continue to be an independent advocate of good government and sound money.

In fiction the WEEKLY will be especially strong. It will publish the only novel of the year by W. D. Howells, and a stirring serial of a Scotch feud, by S. R. Crockett. The short stories selected are of unusual excellence and interest. In every respect HARPER'S WEEKLY will maintain its leading place in the illustrated journalism of the world.

The Volumes of the WEEKLY begin with the first number for January of each year. When no time is mentioned subscriptions will begin with the Number current at the time of receipt of order.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money Order or Draft, to avoid chance of loss.

MEN GROPE.

A WOMAN SEES THE LIGHT.

She Best Understands a Woman's Ills.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

How gladly would men fly to woman's aid, did they but understand a woman's feelings, trials, sensibilities, and peculiar organic disturbances!

Those things are known only to women, and the aid a man would give is not at his command.

This is why so many women suffer.

Twenty years ago Lydia E. Pinkham gave to the women of the world the result of her years of study in the form of her Vegetable Compound,—a universal remedy for all female complaints.

She well deserves the title, "Saviour of her Sex." She saw the light of reason, and gave it to her suffering sisters.

All female diseases put forth their symptoms, such as nervousness, lassitude, paleness, dizziness, faintness, leucorrhœa, faltering steps, sleeplessness, bearing-down pains, backache, and consequent melancholy and the blues.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has for twenty years saved women from all this. Hear this woman speak:—

"Five years ago at childbirth I did not have proper attention. I became very weak; could lift nothing without bleeding from the womb, which was ulcerated badly. I was examined by a physician, and treated for a time, but was compelled to leave the city before I received benefit from the treatment. I decided then to give your medicine a trial. I improved rapidly on the first bottle of Compound, and now feel like a new woman. Ulcers have ceased to form on the womb as they did. I advise all women in any way afflicted with female troubles to take your remedies, and trust that my testimonial will be seen by friends who knew me when I was so sick, and that they may know I am now well, and that I owe it all to your Vegetable Compound." PAGES 5 TO 8. JANUARY 4, 1896.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

The Last Meeting of the Year Was a Long One.

Portraits of Many of the Retiring Members.

Every member was present at the last meeting of Council of 1895 held Monday evening, but many will be missed in 1896 All the portraits on this page are of retiring Councilmen. The PATRIOT regrets it has none of Messrs. Dixon and O'Brien.

Communications.

The Commissioner of Public Works, in a communication, stated that all companies had or were complying with the ordinances requiring the polls to be painted.

The Mayor requested the transfer of $225 from unexpended balances to miscellaneous fire department appropriation and $100 from receipts of parks to appropriation for parks. Councilman Adams offered the necessary order which was passed to be ordained.

The Auditor requested information as to whether he should approve bills amounting to $128 for clerk hire of the City Clerk.

Councilman Bryant moved that Auditor be instructed not to approve bills, which was voted.

The vote was doubted.

Councilman Bryant said the committee considered the matter of a clerk for the City Clerk but as his predecessor had asked for no appropriation for that purpose, the committee thought $100 sufficient, and that was appropriated.

CHARLES F. ADAMS, 2D.
Who will be Mayor in 1896.

The motion of Councilman Bryant prevailed.

The Mayor returned without his approval the order relating to the removal of poles on the westerly side of Hancock street. He found these poles were used by the fire department and Electric Light Co., and to change the fire alarm wires now would incur a large expense, also it was quite a hardship on the Electric Light Co., who had been refused permission to go on the new poles and if the others were taken down it would leave Norfolk Downs and Atlantic in darkness.

Councilman Bryant said this was no hasty matter. The Committee on Streets had heard the Electric and Telephone companies and the Mayor has evidently heard only one side. When the order was passed granting the new location it was done at the suggestion of the Committee on Streets. The order provided for the removal of the old poles. He also stated that the Telephone Co. was willing for the Electric Light Co. to use its poles. That the latter were careless and had cut fire alarm wire at Wollaston.

Councilman Johnson would like to have officials of Electric Light Co. state their case.

W. G. A. Pattee of the Electric Light Co. came forward and said the Telephone Co. had refused them right on their new poles on Hancock street, or to that effect, and that no wire was cut at Wollaston.

Chief Engineer Williams was called forward and in answer to questions by Councilman Bryant said: The wire was taken off and tied round a pole. Could not state that it was broken. Had informed Mr. Bryant that it was cut but afterward found that it was not. The Electric Light Co. had no right to touch fire alarm wires without notifying him. The Electric Light Co. had caused much trouble, but had rectified it as soon as notice was given.

Mr. Pattee was then allowed to continue and said in stringing wires it was hard to do just what was right. The superintendent had received instructions not to interfere with other wires. Last spring the Committee on Streets recommended a new location for the Telephone Co. on Hancock street but no notice was given the Electric Light Co. It so happened that the Electric Light Co used those old poles and he did not think that the Committee on Streets or Mayor knew of the condition of affairs there. It was a hardship to the Electric Light Co. If we take our wires down it cuts off Norfolk Downs, Wollaston and Atlantic from house and street lights. You also put the city to several hundred dollars expense to change the fire alarm wires. Next spring when the double track goes through probably some arrangement can be made to use those poles.

E. W. HENRY BASS
Who retires from the City Council after six years continuous service. three as President.

In reply to Councilman Bryant, Mr. Pattee said the reason this company objected to changing wires now was that the Telephone Co. forbid it and then the great expense.

The Chief Engineer was called forward again and Councilman Bryant attempted to question him as to the ability of the men employed by the Electric Light Co., but the chair ruled against him.

In reply to Councilman Phillips, Chief Williams said the poles were not unsafe at present and in reply to Councilman Bigelow the chief said it would cost $700 to change the wires; the removal of the telephone wires was a help to the poles.

Councilman Bryant said the city should be able to maintain equally as good a construction for its fire alarm wires as it wanted the Telephone Co. to do. Is it fair to reason that the Telephone Co. would not ask for a new location if they did not consider the old poles unsafe. Electric light wires are much more dangerous. Do we want poles that are unsafe?

Councilman Pinkham said Councilman Bryant states that the Electric Light Co. have a right to go on these poles but they claim they can not do so without an order from the Council. Shall we order these poles down before we give the Electric Light Co. a right to the other poles?

Councilman Bryant said that the Telephone Co. do not dispute the right of Electric Co. to go on the new poles but the Electric Co. will not stand the expense according to the agreement. The fire alarm wires have got to be moved sometime and why not now?

JONAS SHACKLEY,
Who led the fight for wooden schoolhouses

Councilman Sprague believed in protecting the home companies and that the Mayor's veto should be sustained.

Councilman Nickerson hoped Mayor's veto would not be sustained. The Committee on Streets had given this subject much time. It was no reason because Electric Co. were careless that they should be excused.

Councilman Johnson thought Mr. Pattee was right, that this whole matter was caused by a misunderstanding of the contract. The question as to whether the contract had been lived up to did not enter here Our first duty was to our citizens and he did not think Council wanted to impose any hardship. He thought Mayor's reasons were good.

Councilman Rice asked, if we order these poles down have we got to give the Electric Light Co a new location?

Councilman Bryant replied that the Telephone Co. is willing but they must come under the contract. The Electric Light Co. say we can not afford the expense.

Councilman Adams asked Mr. Pattee if he had any conversation with the Telephone Co except the letter.

Mr. Pattee,—Yes last October when they refused to allow us to use the poles.

Councilman Adams then asked Councilman Bryant if he had received any direct statement from the Telephone Co.

Councilman Bryant replied that he had last Friday, when they said they were willing if the contract was lived up to.

Councilman Adams said, if we assume that Councilman Bryant tells the truth he has something later than the letter. We should discuss this question knowing that the Electric Light Co. can put its wires on these poles. We want the best, that is, one set of poles that are safe, and we must protect the rights of the city with the utmost care. The Mayor's objections are to the expense, and that there is not time. To the first objection he thought the city should stand expense of moving its wires, and if there is not time he thought the Council would give way for a few days. There would be nothing gained by putting it off.

Councilman Spear said the whole thing originated with the chairman of the Committee on Streets, and it is not the first time he has drawn the committee into a hole. He wants to freeze the Electric Light Company out. Some consideration should be shown them.

Councilman Bigelow was glad to hear a little truth. He thought this one of those things that the chairman of committee on streets has forced onto the Council. He thought it wise to keep those wires on that side of the street for the present.

HORACE F. SPEAR,

Councilman Bryant replied that all he could say was that Councilman Spear had not attended a sufficient number of meetings of the Committee on Streets to know what it has done. The original order says old poles should be removed. When any gentleman accuses me of bringing in an order unknown to the Committee on Streets it is a falsehood. We know that the executive department has not attended to its business during the past year as it should, and he brought the order to enforce the original order.

The Council then refused to pass the order over the Mayor's veto by the following vote:

YEAS,—Adams, Bryant, Hayden, Nickerson, Parker, Phillips, Rice, Rinn, Sidelinger.—9.

Petitions.

Councilman Russell presented a petition to run a guy wire across School street, which was referred to the executive department.

Reports.

The Committee on Streets reported that order granting locations of poles to Telephone Co. and order relating to assessments of betterments on Walker street extension be referred to next Council. Adopted.

The Committee on State Aid reported leave to withdraw on petition of Catherine M. Lapham. Adopted.

The Committee on Public Grounds reported that order relating to Liberty Square be referred to the next Council. Adopted.

The order authorizing the Water Department to expend the $45,000 was passed to be ordained. Councilman Bigelow and Phillips voting in the negative.

The order granting the Quincy & Boston street railway a location for a double track on Hancock street came up for its final passage.

Councilman Rice said this was one of those important matters. There had been no discussion on this question. He believed it should be referred to the next Council and he so moved.

Councilman Bryant saw nothing to be gained by waiting. The Committee on Streets had put all the restrictions they could on the company.

The Council then voted to refer the order to the next Council.

The special committee appointed to draft resolutions on the death of George L. Gill reported as follows, which were accepted by a rising vote:

Resolved,—That in the death of this honorable and faithful public servant, this community loses one of the best examples of true manhood, loyal alike to his God and to his fellowmen. As representative to the General Court in the years just previous to the Civil war, his career was honorable and creditable; as postmaster during the war his services were most valuable to the town; as treasurer of the Quincy Savings bank, his untiring zeal and wise judgment placed it high among Massachusetts banks. His charity, his courteous manner, his unfailing willingness to aid the rich and poor alike, made him beloved by all. The City of Quincy, in meeting assembled, hereby bear testimony to his many virtues and noble character, and to his widow and family tender their heartfelt sympathy in their great sorrow. The Committee on Finance reported ought to pass an order transferring $50 from enforcement of liquor law to police. Passed to be ordained under suspension of the rules.

The joint Committee on Finance and Ordinance reported that matter of ordinance concerning auditing department be referred to next Council. Adopted.

The Committee on Finance reported amendment to order transferring $350 from receipts of interest to election expenses, changing the amount to $450. Amendment adopted and order passed to be ordained under suspension of the rules.

CHARLES H. GRINDELL,
Who championed labor measures.

The Committee on Finance reported no legislation necessary on matter of unpaid water bills. Adopted.

New Business.

Councilman Adams offered an order transferring $150 from receipts of interest to removal of snow. Passed to be ordained under suspension of the rules.

Councilman Adams offered an order extending a vote of thanks to President Bass and City Messenger Tirrell, which was adopted.

President Bass responded feelingly and said while he retired from the Council he should endeavor to attend its meetings. He also expressed thanks for the City Messenger.

Councilman Bryant moved all unfinished business be referred to the next Council. Voted.

Councilman Geary read a brief poem on the parting of the Council, after which the Council of 1895, at 10.03, adjourned sine die.

Sabbath Protection.

A union meeting of the Christian Endeavor societies of Quincy was held Monday evening at the Centre Congregational church, Rev. Robert Westly Peach presiding.

There was a goodly company of Endeavorers present despite the rain, but the general public was not very largely represented. Unfortunately also, the City Council being in session, several of the councilmen who desired to be present were kept away; and as some of the churches are now holding special meetings, their pastors could not come.

Those who were able and willing to be present heard a stirring, "factful," forceful address, full of courage and of hope. When Dr. Kneeland told of some of the losses to the cause of Sabbath observance during the last decade, and then of some of the victories since the organization of the New England Sabbath Protective League, there was a spirit of thanksgiving aroused in the hearts of the listeners.

Rev. Martin D. Kneeland, D. D., secretary of the New England Sabbath Protective League, was the speaker, in the interest of Sabbath Protection and in part he said: I consider it a privilege and honor to speak to Christian Endeavorers as I had the honor of forming one of the first societies in New York. Christian Endeavorers are true on this great question which is on the line of good citizenship. The young people are to lead the generations which are to follow. Christian Endeavorers to the number of two and a half million members stand for a better Sunday, and they are to lift the standard higher. The last part of the past week about thirty applications by corporations and others were made to the Commissioner in Boston for permits to work on Sunday, but through the efforts of the League, in every instance permits were denied, and it is a settled fact in Boston that no such permits shall be granted in the future.

The workingmen are aroused on this subject. He had told them of the privilege of worship, and had seen many attentive eyes, if not dim eyes with thoughts of the old home where mother taught them to pray.

The noblest work is denying yourself for some one else. The two great thoughts are, fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of humanity. We shall be lost unless we do something to elevate our brothers. The nations that have stood for the Christian Sabbath have prospered. The New England Sabbath Protective League has had this thought of maintaining and preserving the Christian Sabbath. One thing the league had gained last year was the closing the theatres on Sunday and he thought the league had gained the point of stopping the work on the subway in Boston on Sundays. He believes the Lord prospers us if we keep His law.

The league has only been organized about five months, and is going to organize branch societies, auxiliaries, juniors, etc. He closed by saying that the Christian Endeavor Union here was the first to invite him to speak to them, and he would like to have it stand solid for the league, and would like to see every Christian Endeavorer's name on our list who is not ashamed to be identified with the New England Sabbath Protective League.

After Dr. Kneeland had spoken, Mr. Edward Southworth said that now he understood the news item that the West End street railway company had been refused permission for track-work, etc., last Sunday. He did not know that any body could withstand the West End Company.

Mr. T. H. Wason and Mr. W. F. Cummings, Rev. C. A. Parker, Rev. Edwin N. Hardy, Rev. Robert Westly Peach, also spoke brief words of commendation of the work of the New England Sabbath Protective League.

A report of the annual meeting of the Union appears on another page including the report of Rev. Robert Westly Peach, the president.

Among Granite Men.

H. W. Adrian has the contract for a large shaft monument of medium Quincy granite for western parties. The bottom base is 7x7. The two bottom bases are to be fine hammered; the plenth will be polished on four sides and the die polished on three sides a bronze medalion occupying the remaining side of the die. The shaft is 20 feet high and the monument when completed will stand about 35 feet high.

Thomas & Miller have completed a handsome sarcophagus of Quincy granite to be erected in Pennsylvania to the memory of Thomas Henry Burrows.

Swingle & Falconer report that business for next season looks very encouraging.

It is reported that W. C. Townsend of Zanesville, O., is to assume charge of the plant formerly operated by him in Quincy. This plant is situated on the main line of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., and has a spur track running into the yard. It is undoubtedly one of the largest and best equiped cutting plants in the city giving employment to eight gangs. Since Mr. Townsend sold out several years ago the plant has been operated by several different firms who have not run it to its full capacity.

Within easy reach of the bed in Queen Victoria's saloon carriage is a handle on the floor, by pulling up which her majesty is able to apply the brakes to the whole train at any moment.

It is suggested that sounds too high for our ears would be recorded by the phonograph, and might be made audible by reproducing at a lower speed of the instrument.

Mr. Cleveland's income is said to be between $90,000 and $100,000 a year.

PLAYING DOMINOS.

Mistress Morning—well she knows
How to play at dominos
With the children, blithe and gay,
Wide awake at break of day.
First she shows her bluest skies,
Matched by Mary with her eyes,
Next she plays her breezes light,
Matched with Lucy's laughter bright.
Then she throws her sunshine true,
Matched with smiles by merry Lou,
Flowers come now, sweet white and red,
Matched by Josie's flowerlike head.
For each charm the morning throws
In this game of dominos
Something sweet the children bring,
Matching her in everything.
If the game goes thus all day,
Who will be the victor, pray?

A MIDNIGHT MIRAGE.

It was nearly midnight. The ironing was done, and the clothes lay heaped on the table in snowy piles still hot from the iron. Ann Quinn drew a chair up to the little kitchen window that overlooked the river and sat down with a sigh of pain, for her back ached. She rested her chin in her hand and stared through the faint tracery of familiar objects on the glass to the water beyond, lying dark and glossy under the stars.

"I wonder if Mis' Niles wants that chipped beef for breakfast," thought Ann Quinn, for she was both a cook and a laundress. "Guess I'll fry them cold potatoes left from dinner, too," she continued, her eyes resting on a faraway cluster of electric lights that trembled like a diamond pendant.

Presently, as she sat there, the red rim of the moon pushed itself up behind some trees on the opposite shore. Ann Quinn watched it rising, with a meditative look. "It's terrible red. Them little branches looks like they was drawn on it with a pen. I wonder what that black thing in the water is!" she broke off as a feeler of moonlight slipped across the river to where something black and long bobbed stiffly in the current. She shaded her eyes from the lamp and pressed her face close to the glass. "Looks like a man," she muttered. As she spoke the thing wheeled about and began drifting in toward the stone breakwater beneath the window. Slowly it drew near, the little moon sparks dancing in its wake. It floated into the shadow, and she strained her eyes in vain to follow it.

"Guess I'll go to bed," she said, giving one more look into the darkness. She did not go, though, for suddenly she saw a lean hand thrust over the breakwater, then another, and the next moment the figure of a man crawled out on the stone below her.

Ann Quinn started back, her heart pumping like a steam dredger, for she heard the thick splash of wet feet coming up the steps, and she saw a face pressed against the window that she had just quitted—a drawn face, yellow, pale as the handkerchief knotted about its throat.

"Let me in, Ann Quinn," said the lips, though she heard no voice. "Let me in."

She stood staring, her broad cheeks whiter than the plates on the dresser behind her, but she did not move. The man waited a moment; then he pushed up the sash and swung himself into the room.

The lamp blinked and guttered in the draft, and a door slammed. Ann Quinn quivered from head to foot. The man stood looking at her with famished eyes.

"A lifetime, a whole lifetime," he whispered at last, and his voice sounded cold and empty as the echo in a vault.

"Go away!" cried Ann Quinn. "And take your wet hand off my ironing."

"Did you do that?" he asked in a low voice. "And are you tired?"

"Yes, I did it, and I am tired," she replied, stealing her way stealthily toward the door.

As she moved, her terror lent a new, catlike grace to her awkward body. She looked almost like another woman in the swaying light—a woman with narrow, wicked eyes and lithe motions. The man stepped quickly before the door and stood there, his clothes flooding the black river water on her clean floor.

"And all this time you have worked, while I have had more, a thousand times more, than I could use. And we have lived near each other here in the same city and never knew it." He covered his face with his hands and groaned. "Our sin—what was it that we should reap such lonely years in punishment?" Then he moved toward her, his arms outstretched: "My love, my lost love! Give me one kiss, my first since that other grave closed over us."

Ann Quinn gulped, and her hair rose softly. "If you touch me, I'll kill you!" she said hoarsely, catching a knife up from the shelf behind her. The man seemed not to hear her; he grasped her in his arms and crushed his mouth on hers, and his lips were wet and cold.

Ann Quinn leaped away from him and buried the great knife in his heart. He looked into her terrified eyes, and a shadow fell on his face.

"See," he said mournfully, "you have stabbed me—again; but this time it is to late."

She looked, and there was no blood gushing from that great slash—only the drip, drip of the thick water. Then she covered her face and prayed, for she saw that the man was dead.

There was a long silence, broken by the chime of a clock in the house behind them. The man shivered. "An hour more, dear God, only an hour more!" he pleaded, and he wrung his hands, crying hurriedly: "How can I say it all! How can I make her understand!" He seized Ann Quinn's arm and shook her fiercely.

"Remember, woman! Try to remember! Have I forgotten? Have I not lived alone—waiting—and you never came?"

She brushed her rough hand over her eyes, something stirred in her torpid brain. As the summer lightning, threading the sky, will show a sudden pearly perspective of unseen cloud mass, then flash out, leaving the same blind night it found, so the soul of Ann Quinn opened for an instant beyond her wretched, work ridden world, only to close again as quickly. The man caught her look and asked, his voice tense and quivering:

"Those faded lilies of the valley, there in that cup, why did you keep them only from the flowers you threw away this morning?"

"They—they—smelled good," answered the woman, troubled, bewildered.

"Only that?"

"Yes, only that."

"Have you never dreamed of some one you loved, some one apart from this miserable squalor I find you in?"

The blood flooded her sallow face.

"What business is that of yours? Go away, I say!" she added weakly, giving him a push and catching at the table to save herself from falling.

"Tell me," he pleaded, "have you never missed me, who was more to you those few short years ago than life or honor?"

Ann Quinn looked into his eyes and laughed. There was no mirth in that laugh, though, and he shielded himself as if she had struck at him. Then he spoke again.

"Listen," he said. "Tonight in a far land my soul will be born anew. Until then the veil is lifted. But we will cheat God and love and law—you and I together. Soon my eyes will be blinded, and I shall not know you except by this. Take it and keep it always over your heart, and though you be old and bent, and though you be a little child, still I shall know you."

He thrust his hand into his breast and drew out a leather case. He opened it and pushed something toward her. She looked. It was a faded spray of lily of the valley. Then he reached into his pocket and threw a canvas bag down on the table. "Take these," he said. "There is enough here to keep you from this drudgery." He pointed to the ironing. "And now I must be gone The river calls to me."

They stood looking at each other in silence. The light swam before Ann Quinn's eyes, and everything blurred but that white face staring into hers. Nearer it came, ever nearer, and she felt her muscles quiver in resistance, then grow lax; there was a pause, a gasping breath, and she had thrown herself into his arms. The cold ooze from his wet hair trailed on her neck. Closer and closer they swayed together, locked in each other's arms; then, with a strange, thin cry, like the wail of a newborn child, the man tore himself away and leaped from the window into the night beyond. There was a heavy splash and silence.

The wind had blown out the lamp. Ann Quinn groped her way to the table, dazed and stupid. She struck a match. It sputtered and went out. Then she crawled away into a corner, her wide eyes fixed on the open window. The moon swam high, and the river ran molten silver beneath it. The little stars set, and the gray scroll of morning unrolled across the night. Still she sat there, her eyes fixed on the empty window space.

Suddenly she stood up, and she felt old and dizzy and lame. She reached out and picked up the canvas bag the man had given her. She shook it, and there rolled out on the table a great handful of unset rubies. Ann Quinn stood staring at them until the first sunbeam came sifting through the darkness, lighting them into a thousand crimson sparkles.

There was a rap at the door, and she thrust the jewels from sight. It was only the milkman, and he looked at the woman's face in disappointment. "So you've heard the news already?" he asked.

"What news?"

"Why, didn't you know they've found the body of Ellis Price, the millionaire, drowned not a hundred yards from this very spot?"

"No," said Ann Quinn.

"Yes, and they think he must have been murdered. He left home to go to the bank with some rubies he had for his niece's wedding, and they weren't on the body anywhere."

"Murdered—murdered! What would they do if they found—some one with them rubies?" Ann Quinn asked thickly.

"Why, hang him high as he'd swing," answered the milkman.

Ten minutes later Ann Quinn stole down to the riverside. She reached over and dropped a handful of stones into the water—a handful of stones that shone like blood drops. Down they sank into the gray river slime. But on the ripples above them hung something too light to sink, for it was only a dried stem of lilies of the valley.

Ann Quinn watched it drift out of sight. Then she turned back to the house to get breakfast.—Julie Closson Kenly in San Francisco Argonaut.

Mr. Switterda's School.

Early in the eighteenth century a Mr. Switterda announces that ladies and gentlemen who desire in a very short time to speak Latin, French or High Dutch fluently, and can spare but two hours a week, will be faithfully taught by him according to a very easy and delightful method, full, plain, most expeditious and effectual. "Every one," he continues, "is to pay according to his quality from 1 to 5 guineas a month, but he (Mr. Switterda) will readier agree by the great." A good contrast to the above is the plain and homely description of "a school about 40 miles from London. The master has had much success with boys, as there are almost 40 ministers and masters that were his scholars. His wife also teaches girls lacemaking, plain work, raising paste, sauces and cooking to a degree of exactness. His price is £10 or £11 the year, with a pair of sheets and one spoon, to be returned if desired."—Cornhill Magazine.

WEDDING COSTUMES.

A HANDSOME DRESS MADE OF THE NEW SWANSKIN SILK.

It Is Elegant and Rich Without Being Fussy or Overdone—The Wearing of Orange Blossoms Is Optional—Taking Fancies In Fashion.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—There are always weddings in the winter, and the dresses are prettier than ever—so very enticing that it is really not wonderful that girls rather prefer them to bloomers. To walk along the street clad in the handsomest winter costume that could be designed or purchased causes but little remark. The daintiest ball gown is only one of many, but the wedding garb—ah! it is not every one that can have one, and she who has worn one once never has a second chance to wear the bridal veil. And so wedding dresses call forth greater admiring comment than anything else, and I do not believe there exists the woman, old or young, who would not go three blocks out of her way to see a wedding outfit.

BRIDAL COSTUMES.

I went several blocks today to see one about which I shall enjoy a little talk. It was elegant and rich, without being fussy or overdone, and it is exactly suited to the stately brunette who is to wear it next Tuesday. The skirt is made with a full demitrain, the whole skirt stiffened with some firm interlining, which gives it a wide and ample sweep. The dress is made of the new swanskin silk, than which nothing could be more beautiful in plain surfaced goods. It was cut to fit the front and hips very closely, and all the fullness came from the cut of the front of the skirt and the plaits in the back. Across the foot of the skirt there was a puffing of silk mull held in by close little round clusters of orange buds and leaves. Down the front breadths were draperies of white silk mull loosely accordion plaited, headed by bunches of buds and leaves. The upper portion of the corsage, back and front, was of plaited silk mull, with a high swiss belt of the swanskin silk, embroidered with silver. The sleeves had double puffs, with cuffs and ruffles of the mull. More little bouquets of the orange buds were set on the shoulders and the stock. A narrow wreath of them encircled the little knot of hair on the top of the head, and to this was fastened the long tulle veil in the back, where it hung like the floating, nebulous tail to a comet.

Few of the brides of this season have worn any orange blossoms, or, if they did wear any, they were very few, and they were set upon the hair or at the corsage. The wearing of orange blossoms is optional. Some brides wear no flowers at all, some like stephanotia, and others carry a bouquet of fairy white orchids or white roses. Still I think orange blossoms somehow belong with a wedding gown. Bridesmaids have a fine opportunity to look exceedingly pretty, however they dress. At the wedding of next Tuesday the bride's sister and cousin are to officiate at this home ceremony. One has a white faille shot with pale pink and decorated with a straggling pattern in green and tiny scarlet blossoms. The skirt is entirely plain. There is a white ribbon belt, and a yoke blouse of the silk, with a white embroidered yoke and epaulets. The sleeves are loosely draped puffs. The stock is white silk, with a large ribbon ruff at the back. The cousin's dress was a mauve and white striped taffeta, with a full bias ruffle of the same around the bottom.

The woolen goods are exceedingly handsome, and it is impossible to select any one of the standard weaves as most popular. The marbled cheviots and the mixed basket weaves are perhaps the newest, but the quality and colorings of these excellent stuffs vary but little. Herringbone stripes, chevron weaves, small woven figures and tufted and frizzed cheviots are all among the newest winter stuffs. The satin faced broadcloth is elegant, and though apparently costly it is not, on account of the great width of the material and its wearing quality. OLIVE HARPER.

SIAMESE NEW YEAR.

Evil Spirits Supposed to Infest the Departing Year—A Night of Terror.

The Siamese "Choola Sakarat," or religious New Year, generally falls on the day after the first full moon in the month of March. The Brahmin astrologer, whose sole duty it is to point out the aspect of the sun, moon and stars, heralds the approaching full moon by setting in motion all the multitudinous gongs and temple bells in the city far and near. The people, who are always ready, waiting, for this signal, have generally finished their business for the year. Debts have been paid off, accounts closed, merchandise disposed of and all traffic of buying and selling suspended three days previous to the expected event.

The announcement made by the many tongued instruments is received by the vast population that inhabits the valley watered by the beautiful Menam river with fear and trembling, for they firmly believe that this is the witching hour when the very atmosphere of the world is alive with gods, demons, genii and hobgoblins, and forthwith the anxious, superstitious people hasten to frustrate their evil designs. They bind unspun cotton thread, consecrated by the priest, round their doors and windows, as the sacred thread is supposed to prove an effectual barrier in keeping out the malicious spirits. This done they place by the doors of their houses and huts a platter containing a pig's head and a bottle of arrack, as a conciliatory repast for the wandering ghosts that may desire to regale themselves during the night, after which the whole city, like the snail, draws in its horns and no consideration will tempt a mortal soul to venture out of it until sunrise the next morning.

At sunset every family offers to its own household genii an oblation of candies, perfumed tapers and roasted rice. As for the royal palace, 7,000 balls of unspun cotton, of seven fibers, consecrated by 27 priests, are reeled round and round the walls, and from sunset until dawn a terrific and continuous cannonading is heard from all the forts of the city to rout the evil spirits that infest the departing year.

But once this dreadful night is passed, the terror sticken inhabitants, with a long drawn sigh of relief, prepare to welcome the new year. Dressed in many colored silks, they repair first to the temples to offer praise and thanksgiving for their deliverance and to make handsome gifts to the priests, and not until they have propitiated Buddha and Buddha's earthly representatives do they think of their own merrymaking.—Exchange.

New Year's Wassail Bowl.

No English holiday was of much account that was not observed with flowing bowl. On New Year's eve the wassail bowl was filled with spiced ale and drunk in families, and poorer folk tied a bowl with ribbons and begged for money for ale to fill and refill the bowl, singing:

Wassail, wassail all over the town;
Our toast it is white; our ale it is brown;
Our bowl it is made of a maplin tree;
We be good fellows all; I drink to thee.

In some parts of England the old year is "swept out" by men and boys with blackened faces, dressed to represent sweeps; in others it is "burned out" with bonfires. Sometimes it is rung out with muffled bells that are unmuffled and rung clear after 12 o'clock.—Independent.

What Happy New Year Means.

A happy New Year! What does it mean? Are not these words often thrown out as a greeting without thought or depth of meaning? Is it a year in which to ourselves come wealth and health, prosperity and friendship; one spent in the pursuit of fleeting pleasure and filled with self centered interest? No! Rather let the wish be to each and all, as the new year dawns with all its opportunities, that the days of 1896 may be well spent—filled with thought and sympathy for those around; that in self forgetting and kindly deeds the happiness of others may be ever sought, and then most truly will each act rebound again in joy and blessing to the heart from which it springs.—Maud Booth.

New Year Means Progress.

A new year, not simply another year. Many people may be said to live the same old year over and over again. Each succeeding year is the same unit added once more to the sum of life. There is the same task performed in the same spirit with the same motive; the same imperfections of character, the same failures of conduct. The times may change and progress hasten, but if we stand still, we live only the old year once again. A new year never comes to the contented ox; he simply grows old. It is not the lapse of time or the progress of civilization, but our progress, which makes possible to us a new year. —Josiah Strong.

For the Ensuing Year.

May the new year, just opening to us, be signaled in public and in private life by the growth of noble ideas—of ideas that shall make men freer, truer, better; that shall more and more reflect the incomparable teachings of the Holy Child whose nativity we have just celebrated, and whose spirit, imitated and obeyed, can redeem the time and crown mankind with blessedness.—Christian Work.

Birth of the Year.

Of the child year! The weak and querulous gale
Mid tears of rain doth lift a kindred wail.
Blankly the sun's eye stares; the air doth lower
Dense as a listless ear. Beneath a shower
Of snow fresh fallen those branches, white and frail
As newborn limbs, lie prone, with only power
Given to endure what wind soe'er prevail.
The baby lips that pout their hungering
Do not more wistfully the nurse invite
Than every spiral leaf bud yearns for spring.
And as the young blue eyes wax deep and bright
While the soul greatens, so the glowing light
Widens by morn and eve its azure ring.

LIVING AT BIG HOTELS

COST OF LUXURY AND COMFORT IN NEW YORK.

You May Spend $500 Per Day, but if Your Tastes Are Simple You Can Worry Along For $10 a Day, Says Edith Sessions Tupper.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—The first question with all New Yorkers is, "How shall we live?" In no other city on the American continent is so much consideration given to the ways and means of living well, easily and luxuriously. From the superb brownstone mansions on Fifth avenue to the tiny flats in Harlem is living made a science and as much of an art as the circumstances will permit.

To Escape Drudgery.

The convenience of the apartment house has been thoroughly demonstrated. The condensation of labor is a boon to the housekeeper. Inventions are continually making existence more comfortable. The servant problem, on the other hand, is constantly driving people from their own homes to seek an abode where this vexation will not enter, where all the days will glide by smoothly and peacefully without one thought as to who shall prepare and serve the meals and perform the other necessary drudgery of life.

ROOM AT THE WALDORF OCCUPIED BY THE DUKE OF VERAGUA AND LORD DUNRAVEN.

But It Costs High.

Fortunate indeed is the man or woman who can afford to live in one of these famous hotels. And what does it cost to support existence under such circumstances? Take the Plaza, that huge pile of stone that rears its haughty head to look over into Central park just where Fifty-ninth street and Fifth avenue cross. A single man may get a very comfortable outside room for $6 a day. His board will cost him $17.50 a week in addition Then there are the extras—tips, laundry, wines, guests. This is considered a very low figure in the way of easy living. The Duke of Marlborough occupied a suit at this hotel previous to his marriage with Miss Vanderbilt. His rooms were on the parlor floor. They consisted of drawing room, two bedrooms, dressing room, bathroom and two closets. They were carpeted in pearl gray velvet and furnished in mahogany and brass. Malachite and Sevres vases and jars ornamented the mantels and Siena marble tables. For this elegance his grace paid $25 a day. This same suit was the home of Miss Anna Gould previous to her marriage to the little French Count Castellane. For a suit consisting of parlor, bedroom and bath $12 a day is an average price. A man and his wife would thus pay $84 a week for rooms; board on the American plan would be $17.50 each, making a total of $119 a week for bare living. The tips and extras would easily make it $125 a week.

A Superb Suit.

Across from the Plaza stands the lofty Romanesque hotel known as the Netherland. Its interior is like that of a palace, with its Algerian onyx columns and walls, its wainscotings of richly carved and polished Numidian marble and its bronze ceilings. Money has been lavish to art here, and the result is bewildering in its beauty. You may indeed room in this palace for $2 a day or may add to your sleeping room the luxury of a bath for $3. But if you wish to live in accordance with your surroundings of marble halls, point lace, carvings and exquisitely painted walls and ceilings you must expect to pay for the privilege. Suppose you are a bridegroom. You can have the bridal suit on the first floor, drawing room, private dining room, two bedrooms, bath and closets, for $300 a week. Of course, being very much in love, you will not eat much, so your board bill will not be very exorbitant.

DRAWING ROOM NOW OCCUPIED BY GEORGE GOULD.

The writer was shown a superb suit of rooms, consisting of drawing room, whose windows commanded an extensive view both up and down the avenue; private hall, three bedrooms and private dining room, occupied now by a mother and son and two servants, for which the sum of $300 a week is paid. There is a private telephone in the hall which is $150 for six months. These people entertain a great deal, their table always being laid with covers for six or eight, and their board bill is from $15 to $20 a day.

At the Savoy, that charming hotel whose interior, with its opalescent tints of wall and chandelier, is like some grotto of the nymphs in the grand transformation scene of the ballet, you can live in four or five rooms for $40 a day, or you can get the cheapest room in the house for $3 a day. Mrs. Vanderbilt, Nellie Melba and the Princess Eulalia are among the famous patrons of this hotel. Mrs. Vanderbilt's rooms are on the sixth floor and are $35 a day.

For Dukes and Such.

If you are a duke or a lord, you can have the state apartments at the Waldorf for $500 a day. These are the rooms the Duke of Veragua and Lord Dunraven occupied while in town! Possibly they got special rates on the strength of the prestige they brought with them. At all events, the rate is as quoted. And, as hotel rates go, the suit is worth the money. The rooms are fitted up to look as much like the interior of a mediæval castle as possible and are filled with priceless antiques, rugs, tapestries and superb furniture. There is one ruby velvet curtain, embossed in gold, which cost $1,800, and if you will have ruby velvet portieres and carved black tables and chairs and china that belonged to all the crowned heads of Europe you must expect to pay for these luxurious appointments.

For $20 a day you can have the Louis XVI suit, a dream of white and gold and amber brocade, powdered over with gay scarlet and pink roses; $22 a day gives you a double corner suit, consisting of parlor, ladies' saloon, with alcove bedroom, two bedrooms and bath.

The board at the Waldorf is not in excess of the Holland's or Delmonico's. One can worry along comfortably on $5 or $6 a day, exclusive of wines. The tips here are not so great as in many hotels for this reason. Each floor has a complete culinary service. There are pantries, refrigerators, heaters, silver, linen, glass and waiters who speak every language. The regular boarders thus get the same waiters day after day, and the wholesale robbery perpetrated on guests by the various hallboys in some hotels is escaped. Mr. George Gould is occupying a suit at the Waldorf this season, called the "tapestry suit," for which he pays $45 a day.

English, You Know.

If you wish to be extremely English, you will go to the Holland House, named for a famous historic mansion, run in English fashion and with English service. Here an ordinary sort of chap can live on $10 a day by himself; with wife and family on $15 or $20 a day. For $35 a day you can have a suit of four rooms and include the service of maid or valet. This valet service is a feature of the house. Every floor has a certain number of valets who get a list of the rooms occupied by gentlemen and go to them every morning to proffer their services in sponging clothing, creasing trousers, blocking silk hats and that sort of thing, you know. These valets are all Englishmen. For from $28 to $33 a day you can have a suit of rooms furnished in old rose velvet and satin, standard lamps lighted by electricity and all the modern luxuries. All these hotels, with the exception of the Plaza, are on the European plan. The Plaza has both European and American table board. The European plan is always expensive, and one can imagine the restaurant bills of any one who lives at these hotels. To live at a fashionable New York hotel requires a solid bank account, though there are many impecunious people who contrive, heaven knows how, to flourish in them for awhile like green bay trees. But the hour of cutting down always arrives.

EDITH SESSIONS TUPPER.

A GREAT JOCKEY'S VIEWS.

Fred Taral Interviewed at His Winter Home In Atlanta.

[Special Correspondence.]

ATLANTA, Dec. 23.—When I met Fred Taral, the world celebrated jockey, at one of Atlanta's swell hotels yesterday, I buttonholed him and asked him to tell me something about the future of racing in this country. Anything this quiet, gentlemanly young man has to say about the turf carries weight, for he is the premier rider of the world today and is little given to talking at any time. Said he:

"The prospects are that we shall have better racing this coming season than at any time for the last five or six years. Everything points that way now, and especially is this true of Morris park, Sheepshead and Brooklyn, the three best courses in existence. I would personally rather ride the course at the former track than on any other I have ever seen. It is wide, and all horses have a chance, which is not true of all tracks by any means. The half mile stretch there is splendid. Since the late decision, which practically knocked out Peter De Lacy, race track enthusiasts should take heart, for it means better times all around. It means better horses, and, equally important, it means that the man you bet with at the track must belong to a more superior class of sportsman than under the old regime. There are an A1 lot of jockeys in the field this season, too, which is in itself a good thing. Owners take more pains with their boys than formerly. As you may know, I have left James R. Keene and shall ride next year for Marcus Daly, the Montana copper king. I get a big salary, but as Mr. Daly made me promise not to reveal the figure I shall not do so. I remain in Atlanta a few months and begin training at Daly's Long Branch stables about April 1.

"Whom do I regard the grandest race horse living? Why, Henry of Navarre by all means. August Belmont owns him. Salvator was a good one, but I hardly think the equal of Henry of Navarre. Haggin owns him. Am I going abroad to ride? No; I had a chance, and a good one, but after the way they roasted poor Sims I decided to stay here and let well enough alone."

Taral married an Atlanta girl and spends his winters in the Gate City of the South. He was born in Peoria, Ills., 28 years ago. His father kept the Tremont hotel there for many years. He is careful of his money, and, as the whole sporting world knows, owns a handsome residence on Lenox avenue, New York city. In addition, he owns a roadhouse on the Seventh avenue drive, which brings him in a tidy revenue. As he himself says, "I'm doing pretty well."

AD. VANCE.

IN ARMENIA'S BEHALF.

Boston Business Men Consider What Should Be Done.

Is Estimated That $500,000 Will Be Needed.

BOSTON, Dec. 31.—In response to the invitation issued by several prominent citizens for a meeting at which to organize in support of the American National Red Cross in its proposed work in behalf of the suffering Armenians in Asia Minor, a number of the business men of this city assembled yesterday at noon in the aldermanic chamber at city hall.

Mayor-elect Josiah Quincy acted as presiding officer. In opening the meeting he said, in part: "We have seen the great powers stand idly by and make no efforts thus far to put to an end the extraordinary conditions prevailing in Armenia. While people of the United States have no direct interest as European countries have in the affairs of the Turkish empire, they have, nevertheless, been aroused to a sense of the necessity of some action toward alleviating the sufferings in Armenia."

Miss Clara Barton, who is at the head of the Red Cross organization, was then introduced. She said that three weeks ago she had never thought that she or the Red Cross society would be called upon to aid the Armenians. It was not until a committee from Boston solicited her aid that she had given it consideration. It was necessary that the Red Cross society should receive unanimous support, and that ample financial support should be furnished, she said. It was necessary that the society should be backed by the credit of the government and American people.

When the money asked for had been subscribed, the society had no alternative but to accept the mission. The society has been carried for 13 years, and had never appealed for money. It had always gone to a field of action with supplies sufficient to do some good when they got there.

Miss Barton, in answer to a query, said if there was anybody in this country whom the Turkish government would be likely to allow to enter Armenia, it was the representatives of the Red Cross society.

Hon. Jonathan A. Lane moved the adoption of a set of resolutions that had been drawn up. They were read by Secretary Guild, and passed, as follows:

The Resolutions.

Whereas, the appeal from the suffering Armenians in Asia Minor has stirred the hearts of our countrymen and led to organized efforts for relief; and

Whereas, the American National Red Cross has announced its readiness to take the field as soon as adequate support is assured; and

Whereas, Miss Barton, the president of the Red Cross (whom we gladly welcome as our guest today) is hopeful that the way will be open in Turkey for her and her staff to distribute our gifts in the afflicted districts of the interior; therefore,

Resolved, That the chairman of this meeting be authorized to appoint a committee of 30 gentlemen, with power to add to their number, to inaugurate a plan for obtaining subscriptions throughout the city.

Resolved, That in view of what has been done by the Boston committee of five in receiving and forwarding over $.0,000 through trustworthy channels, we would ask their assistance in this larger movement of our citizens;

Resolved, That in order to secure full cooperation in this work, the governors, mayors, boards of trade and citizens generally throughout New England, be and hereby are requested to unite with us by effecting similar organizations without delay.

Resolved, That we recommend Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co., 59 State street, as the treasurers of our funds.

The committee appointed by Chairman Quincy is composed of J. A. Lane, Alden Speare, W. F. Robinson, Eben Jordan, Jr., A. Shuman, E. H. Dunn, F. W. Breed, Frank Wood, J. P. Bates, Edwin Ginn, S. B. Capen, T. P. Capen, T. S. Wentworth, J. V. Fletcher, A. A. Pope, Franklin Haven, J. M. Sears, W. A. Gaston, C. F. Donnelly, J. C. Paige, S. S. Blanchard, C. H. Taylor, J. S. Holmes, Stephen O'Meara, Jerome Jones, E. H. Haskell, J. H. Hecht, W. H. Sayward, M. P. Kennard, A. S. Porter and A. G. Weeks.

Red Cross' Conditions.

G. H. Pullman, a member of the Red Cross society, declared that if the Red Cross went to Turkey on this mission to Armenians, it must go unhampered by any conditions attached to the funds. The society must have absolute control of them. He ridiculed the terms "venerable" and "decrepit," which had been applied to Miss Barton, and declared that no man present could surpass her in endurance in carrying on the work of relief.

In reply to questions, he said that $100,000 should be in the hands of the society before it applied to Turkey for admission. He thought that a conservative estimate of the number of Armenians who are destitute was from 300,000 to 350,000.

Chairman Porter of the original relief committee told about the formation of the Anglo-American committee of relief in Constantinople. He stated that England had already sent about $100,000, which was more than America had sent. Another question brought from Miss Barton the statement that she had no knowledge of the Red Cross being sent from any other country. The international society approved of the mission of the American branch.

Addresses were made by Mr. Gulesian, Mr. Lane, Robert T. Paine and Mrs. Julia W. Howe in support of the movement to raise funds for the support of Red Cross work in Turkey. Mrs. Howe's address in special was a most impassioned plea for civilization, for Christendom to repress the Turk and put an end to the massacre of Armenians.

In closing, Mayor-elect Quincy thanked Miss Barton on behalf of the audience for her presence and aid and also those who were with her.

Anthony Found.

BOSTON, Dec. 31. — Frederick E. Anthony, the Providence real estate broker, who mysteriously disappeared from Young's hotel, this city, Dec. 21, was last night found quietly eating a hearty supper in a Causeway street restaurant. He was taken to Young's by his relatives and left for Providence today. His friends and relatives engaged the services of the police and Pinkertons, and offered a reward of $500 for information that would lead to his location. This information was furnished last evening by A. W. Lewis, proprietor of the restaurant, who notified J. W. Tillinghast, Anthony's nephew, and Mr. Bliss, who had been active in the search. Anthony did not seem surprised to see them, and without hesitation accompanied them to the hotel. He refused to make any explanation of his disappearance, but it is understood his mind was slightly deranged.

Brookfield Bank Robbed.

BROOKFIELD, Mass., Dec. 31.—Hiram P. Gerald, cashier of the Brookfield Savings bank, has disappeared. It is believed he is a defaulter to the amount of between $10,000 and $15,000, and his disappearance strengthens this belief. About three weeks ago George W. Johnson, president of the bank, was appointed receiver. He instituted an investigation into the affairs of the institution, and soon discovered something wrong with Gerald's accounts. Attachments have been placed on his property in Brookfield, and a deputy sheriff went to Springfield and placed an attachment of $20,000 on Gerald's property in Hampden county. Gerald was town clerk of Brookfield. He ran a drug store, was interested in many business enterprises and was prominent in the affairs of the town.

Well Known In Lynn.

LYNN, Mass., Dec. 31.—Mrs. Mary A. Davidson, arrested for blackmail in San Francisco, had a rapid career in Lynn, in 1880-81-82-83-84, when she conducted a piano agency. She was finally arrested for selling mortgaged property and served one year at Sherburn. A sensational controversy with a minister and a host of creditors seeking her were other incidents in her Lynn history.

Ready For Service.

PORTLAND, Me., Dec. 31.—Steamer St. Croix, built by the New England Ship-Building company of Bath for the International Steamboat company, made her trial trip yesterday, and last night made her first trip from Portland to St. John. On the trial spin to Seguin and return, the St. Croix developed a speed of 17¼ knots an hour. She will run from Boston to St. John.

End of Libel Case.

PROVIDENCE, Dec. 31.—William P. Maroney, ex-assessor of Pawtucket, who recently brought suit against several Pawtucket people on a charge of libelling him by means of petitions for his removal from office, was yesterday awarded $309.29 in the supreme court. The case grew out of charges that Maroney used his office to further his business interests.

Brockton's Marshal Out.

BROCKTON, Mass., Dec. 31. — Mayor Whipple last night accepted the resignation of City Marshal Chase, and appointed him acting city marshal until Mayor-elect Williamson appoints his successor, when he will be assigned to night duty on the regular force until other changes are made.

Elliott's Ambition.

BOSTON, Dec. 31.—Sterling Elliott will be a candidate for the presidency of the League of American Wheelmen. In an interview last night, Mr. Elliott said that he stood squarely on the racing issue, and maintains that the league should not give up the control of racing.

No Coal Necessary.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 31.—Steamer Turret Bay sailed from Port Richmond yesterday with a cargo of 20 oil-burning locomotives, built by the Baldwin Locomotive works for the Russian government. The engines weigh 97 tons each, and are built with special fire-boxes for burning petroleum instead of oil. They are designed for both freight and passenger service on the trans-Caucasian railroad. Another cargo of the same number of engines will be shipped in January.

A Providence Failure.

PROVIDENCE, Dec. 31.—The H. W. Ladd company, one of the largest dry goods firms in Providence, and of which ex-Governor Ladd is the head, assigned yesterday afternoon. Assets, $354,613.78; liabilities, $227,589.81. The assignment was caused by business complications with the Burrows estate. It is believed the company will continue in business.

Children Will Contribute.

BOSTON, Dec. 31.—The "America" Memorial Monument association yesterday put into shape for public presentation the movement for a national monument to Dr. S. F. Smith, author of "America." The site of the monument will be in Boston or Washington. The children of American schools will be asked to contribute.

Many Relatives Left Out.

PROVIDENCE, Dec. 31.—A contest over the will of the late Judge Eli Aylesworth has begun here. Over $500,000 is involved, and no less than six different attempts to break the will will be made. Many of the judge's relatives were not remembered in the will. At the time of his death he was over 90 years old.

Saw For a Weapon.

EXETER, Me., Dec. 31.—A dispute arose here yesterday between George B. Dow and Henry Bacon, and Bacon made a murderous assault on Dow with a crosscut saw, inflicting several ugly wounds. Bacon has been arrested.

Down With Typhoid.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—The young Duchess of Marlborough is very sick in Rome with typhoid fever, a private letter received from there announces. The fever was contracted while she was in Spain.

Fatal Railway Wreck.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 31. — Two passenger trains collided last night near Coal City, 14 miles from Cincinnati. Two men were killed and seven seriously injured. Both engines were totally wrecked, as the engineers had little time to check their speed. A combination car and express car were telescoped.

A Tennessee Episode.

CHATTANOOGA, Dec. 31.—Chief Justice Snodgrass was arrested yesterday on a warrant sworn out by John R. Beasley, charging him with assault with intent to kill. The warrant was served by a country constable, and was taken out at Sherman Heights, five miles in the country, and was kept very quiet.

Holmes' Lawyer Indicted.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 31. — The grand jury has found a true indictment against William A. Shoemaker, one of the attorneys for H. H. Holmes. The bill charges Shoemaker with attempted subornation of perjury in connection with the unsuccessful effort to secure a new trial for Holmes.

Early Settlement Looked For.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—The lockout of coat tailors continues, but the arrangements made by the Brotherhood of Tailors to open two large co-operative shops, and the support promised by wholesale manufacturers, are likely to force the contractors' association to an early settlement.

MONEY TO LIBRARIES

SOME ENORMOUS BEQUESTS BY PUBLIC SPIRITED MEN.

New York's Great Consolidated Library Not So Large as Those of Boston, Cambridge or Chicago—The Most Liberally Endowed Libraries In the Country.

[Special Correspondence.]

CHICAGO, Dec. 30.—The consolidation of the Astor and Lenox libraries with the Tilden library fund gives to New York city one of the most richly endowed libraries in the United States. The Tilden fund is about $1,700,000. The Lenox library is worth $2,000,000. The Astor family gave to the Astor library more than $1,000,000. This makes the value of the consolidated library nearly $5,000,000, which is the greatest endowment in the history of American libraries. The only library which approaches these in this respect is the Newberry library, in Chicago, to which was left property which has been appraised at various amounts from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000. There are less than 60 libraries in the United States having an endowment as great as $50,000. The most wealthy of these endowed institutions are:

Newberry library, Chicago	$3,000,000
University of Minnesota library, Minneapolis	800,000
Auburn Theological seminary, New York	623,099
Boston Athenæum	537,760
Lehigh university, Pennsylvania	449,436
Library company of Philadelphia	433,700
Harvard university	392,000
Cornell university	300,000
Case library, Cleveland	300,000
Silas Bronson library, Waterbury, Conn.	262,934
Boston Public library	201,097
Peabody institute, Peabody, Mass.	163,900
American Academy Arts and Sciences, Boston	139,568
Chicago Historical society	125,639
Haverhill Public library, Massachusetts	122,905
Mercantile Library company, Philadelphia	122,000
Long Island Historical society, Brooklyn	121,000
American Antiquarian society, Worcester, Mass.	115,548
Northwestern university, Evanston, Ind	112,000
Bangor Public library, Maine	112,000
Perkins Institute For the Blind, South Boston	107,500
Apprentices' library, Philadelphia	105,500
Public library, New London, Conn.	100,000
American Geographical society, New York	100,000
Columbia college, New York	100,000
Grosvenor Public library, Buffalo	100,000

Add together all the endowments in excess of $50,000 which belong to the libraries of the United States, and you have a grand total of about $12,500,000, of which the endowments of the Newberry library, Chicago, and the consolidated Astor-Lenox-Tilden library, New York, have nearly two-thirds—that is, those two libraries together are richer twice told than all the other great libraries in the United States combined.

Endowments and Actual Value.

Of course this question of endowments, in most cases, does not take into consideration the bequests of books made to libraries or the actual value of the matter on the library shelves. Many of the great libraries of the country have been made rich without an endowment by the liberality of some bibliophile. The largest and richest libraries are not always those with large endowments. The Newberry library, with all its wealth, is still a comparatively unimportant institution. Walter L. Newberry, whose will gave to this library one-half his large estate, was a Chicago merchant who was born in Windsor, Conn., and who received a good early education and was intended for West Point. Most of the endowments for libraries and many of those for the great universities have come from successful merchants who were not graduates of the colleges.

Harvard and Yale.

The Harvard library, which stands with the Boston library among the great book collections of the country, has received its supplies from a hundred different sources. Its early benefactors were Governor Winthrop, Richard Bellingham, John Lightfoot, Sir Kenelm Digby and Richard Baxter. In 1677 the library collection was doubled by a bequest from Rev. Theophilus Gale, a learned philosopher. United States Senator Christopher Gore of Massachusetts gave $100,000 to the library, and Gore hall is named in his honor. E. P. Greenleaf, a Boston miser, left $500,000 to the college, of which a part was to be devoted to the establishment of the Greenleaf department in the library. James Walker, once president of the college, bequeathed to it $15,000 and his valuable library. Francis C. Gray, a Boston attorney, left 3,000 engravings to the library and a fund of $16,000 to maintain them, and his nephew added $25,000 to the bequest for the purchase of books.

Rev. Peter Bulkley, the founder of Concord, Mass., contributed his own library, valuable for that day, in 1659. Israel Thorndike, a Boston merchant who knew only the advantages of a common school education, presented to the library the collection of 10,000 maps and 4,000 books on American subjects made at Hamburg by C. D. Ebeling, a German scholar.

Yale received benefits for its library from varied sources. George Berkeley, a British clergyman who came to this country with a view to establishing a sectarian educational institution in the Bermudas, and who abandoned that idea because his English friends failed to make the necessary contributions, sent to Yale about 150 years ago what was at that time the finest library in the United States. Mr. Berkeley also gave to Yale college a fine farm, which is still the property of the institution. George Brinley of Boston, a collector of Americana, divided $25,000 worth of books among several institutions, and Yale was fortunate enough to get a good share of them. Jeremiah Dummer, a Boston scholar, gave to the library 800 volumes. Jared Linsley of Connecticut and his uncle Noah established funds for the purchase of books for the library. Lowell Mason gave to the library his valuable collection of music literature.

Other Great Benefactions.

Lehigh university, at South Bethlehem, Pa., was more fortunate than any other educational institution in the endowment of its library. Asa Packer, who founded the university, giving it $500,000, left by his will $1,500,000 to the college and nearly $500,000 to the college library.

Cornell college library received a gift of $100,000 from Ezra Cornell, $150,000 for a building from John McGraw of Ithaca and a collection of 30,000 volumes and 10,000 pamphlets worth $100,000 from Andrew D. White, the first president of the college.

The University of Rochester received $100,000 from Hiram Sibley, the financier who helped Morse get an appropriation from congress to test the telegraph, and who was the first president of the Western Union Telegraph company.

George Peabody was more generous to libraries than any other American. He gave $30,000 to found the Peabody institute and library at Danvers, Mass., afterward Peabody, and subsequently $170,000 to the same institution. He gave $50,000 to found a library at North Danvers. He gave $150,000 to the Peabody museum and library at Salem, Mass. These sums were in addition to the millions he devoted to the cause of education in Massachusetts and in the south.

Silas Bronson, a native of Middlebury, Conn., left an enduring monument to his name at Waterbury, Conn., in the library which he founded, and which bears his name. He gave to this library $200,000. He was a retired New York merchant at the time of his death.

Bangor, Me., owes its Public library to the liberality of Samuel F. Hersey, at one time a member of congress, who bequeathed $100,000 to found this institution. West Bay City, Mich., has to thank H. W. Sage of Connecticut for a library established with an endowment of $30,000. Charles E. Forbes, who was county attorney at Northampton, left about the same amount, his entire fortune, to found the Northampton library.

E. B. Morgan, a New York congressman, was one of the benefactors of the Auburn Theological seminary. With William E. Dodge he built, at a cost of $40,000, the structure in which the library is housed. Mr. Morgan was a philanthropist in other directions.

The Philadelphia library, which was founded by Benjamin Franklin, was indebted early in its career to James Logan, once private secretary to William Penn, for 2,000 volumes, a large library at that time. Later Logan's nephew presented to the library 1,300 volumes, and William Mackenzie gave to it 5,000 volumes more.

The library of the Long Island Historical society is indebted to George I. Seney, the banker, who gave $100,000 to it. Mr. Seney's benefactions have amounted to $1,000,000.

The Lenox library of New York, while claiming an endowment of only $300,000, was actually worth $2,000,000 when James Lenox, its founder, conveyed it to the city of New York. The Astor library was founded on a bequest of $400,000 in the will of the first John Jacob Astor. His son William B. added bequests of $550,000 value, and the present John Jacob Astor has increased the benefaction $250,000.

NANKIVELL.

The Talented Cartoonist of the Pacific Slope.

[Special Correspondence.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 25.—Nankivell is a feature of San Francisco. If you are thrown among writers and artists here, the first question put to you is, "Have you met Nankivell?"

He is a little Australian, with a wonderful head, masses of dark hair tossed about in most astonishingly artistic disorder, big, staring, green eyes, a somewhat saucy nose and a full, sensible mouth. Frank Nankivell is the cartoonist of the Pacific coast as well as an artist of great genius. He has been in San Francisco only a year, but in that time he has created a new era of art for this decidedly cosmopolitan town. His society types are as distinct as Gibson's, his studies after Aubrey Beardsley are screamingly funny, and his cartoons dealing with current news and local politics are as clever as any ever drawn in this country. Nankivell goes east soon with Bob Davis, brother of Sam Davis, the Immortal Sagebrush Liar, as he is called in this country. Davis, who is a bright newspaper man, full of original ideas, has planned a bicycle lecture tour across the continent. He has engaged the Australian artist to go with him and illustrate these lectures. The two propose to do all the big towns between here and Gotham. It is only another instance of the audacity and originality of the west.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

TOPIC.—Prayer—how to use and enjoy it.—Luke xviii, 1-14. (A meeting of preparation for the week of prayer.)

That Jesus Christ attached great importance to prayer is proved by the fact that He constantly emphasized it in His teachings and practiced it in His life. In the sermon on the mount He enforces it as one of the cardinal virtues of the perfect disciple. At the request of His disciples He taught them how to pray, giving them a model of prayer that is wonderful in its construction and has had a marvelous influence for good in the world. Again toward the close of his ministry we are introduced to two parables on the subject of prayer which emphasize two important features that should characterize our prayers—namely, importunity and humility.

1. Importunity in prayer. This is taught by the parable of the woman and the unjust judge, who heard her and granted her request simply because she persisted in her request. Thus it is illustrated to us that "men ought always to pray and not to faint." For if an unjust judge would hear the prayers of one who was in no way related to her, because she was persistent, how much more readily we may believe that the just Judge would hear the prayers of His children, if they were constantly brought before Him. Prayer is the only weapon we have by which we can move the arm of God, and this one weapon must be wielded constantly. God often keeps us waiting for our own good, but if we persist He will hear us.

2. Humility in prayer. This is taught by contrast in the parable of the Pharisee and the publican. In his self confidence and self righteousness the Pharisee offers up a self congratulatory prayer. It is not heard. The publican, on the other hand, standing afar off, scarcely lifting his eyes to heaven, smote his breast and exclaimed "God be merciful to me, a sinner." He went down to his house justified. Thus we are taught self abasement in prayer. Self exaltment leads to self abasement, but self abasement to self exaltation.

These are two of the leading characteristics of prayer, and if we use prayer in the right way we will enjoy it. Our enjoyment lies in its proper use. It is when we pray constantly and humbly that we are on the way to the spiritual rapture to be found in prayer. Let us then pray determined not to be denied. Let us pray in the humble, penitential key continually, and we will find exaltation, rapture and joy in thus communing with God.

Bible Readings.—I Chron. xvi, 34-36; Job xxxiii, 26-30; Ps. lxv, 1, 2; cxxii, 6-9; Math. v, 44, 45; vii, 7; ix, 36-38; xxvi, 41; Mark xi, 24-26; John xi, 41, 42; xiv, 13; Rom. xv, 30-32; Eph. vi, 18; Phil. iv, 6; Col. iv, 2, 3; I Tim. ii, 1-4; Heb. x, 19-22; Jas. v, 13-20; I Pet. iv, 7.

Fourteen Years of Christian Endeavor.

February, 1881, one society formed, less than 50 members pledged, one pastor interested, one church aided, one denomination represented, one city and one state wherein the society might be found. Today over 42 societies organized, over 2,500,000 members enlisted, thousands of pastors and churches in 32 denominations interested, helped and represented. Every state and territory identified with the cause, every province of Canada, almost every foreign country, all missionary lands and thriving united societies in Great Britain, Australia, Japan, China, and latest the world's union of Christian Endeavor, make it possible to say that the Christian Endeavor movement encircles the globe and it is all what God has wrought.—John Willis Baer.

Practical Christian Endeavor.

Christian Endeavor is of an especially practical turn across the water, and the societies hesitate at nothing, no matter how great the amount of work involved, that promises to bring results to the cause of Christ. One Leicester (England) society has a "baby care taking committee," whose duty it is to go with those who carry on the open air work just before the time for Sunday service. During the outdoor address they speak to the people who come to the doors to listen, and offer to take charge of any of the little children while their parents go to service in the chapel.—Golden Rule.

Prison Work In Kentucky.

Kentucky Endeavorers have done notable work among the inmates of the state prison at Louisville and many conversions have resulted. These activities began with the sending of more than 1,000 Christmas letters to the prisoners. Now two Christian Endeavor societies have just been reported at the branch prison at Eddyville. A number of conversions attended the formation of these societies. "In prison and ye came unto me."

Following His Lead.

Like Alpine climbers, our own safety is in steadfastly fixing our gaze on Him, our guide, and following step by step the path He trod, that He might know all the dangers and difficulties that beset our way. And we may be sure He will never lead us farther or faster than we can safely follow.—Rose Porter.

The True Endeavor Spirit.

The Christian Endeavor societies in distant Wales have got the Endeavor spirit. One of the societies in Cardiff last year, during the pastor's vacation, maintained all the Sunday and week evening services of the church. This society holds a regular children's service every Sunday evening.

Flowers For the Poor.

Some of the Endeavorers of Kilwarlin, Ireland, have set apart little plots in their gardens especially for the purpose of raising flowers to be sent up to Belfast for distribution among the sick poor, a noble work that might well be done by thousands of American Endeavorers.—Selected.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Edith Sessions Tupper's Observations From the Metropolis.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—The up to date Gotham woman appears to be a firm advocate of the apotheosis of the hideous in the way of ornaments. I sat opposite a woman in an "L" train the other day who, irreproachably gowned and bonneted, wore among the laces at her throat a grewsome ebony coffin as a brooch. A smart young woman who spent the summer in Paris called on me one day last week. As she threw back her velvet cape I noticed a pin thrust among the jet fringes of her bodice. It was a golden gallows tree, and from it dangled the golden corpse of a hanged man. I expressed my horror at this misguided freak of fancy. "Why, that's my mascot!" exclaimed the young lady. "I picked that up in Paris. Every other woman was wearing a gallows for good luck."

Quite a recent fad in the line of ornamentation is to have diamonds set for eyes in the head of the mink or sable of your fur boa. I know a great swell who took her $400 diamond earrings and had them set in the head of her ermine boa. The boa was stolen about a week afterward.

One of the gowns in the trousseau of Miss Emma Rockefeller, the daughter of the Standard Oil magnate, was shown me by an obliging modiste. It was an evening robe of palest turquoise satin. There was a deep bertha of cream duchess lace falling over the shoulders. This was headed by a roll of turquoise velvet, knotted here and there in butterfly bows. There was also a pointed belt of the pale blue velvet. It was a simple and exquisite robe.

There is fashion in everything, even in eggs and butter. In those quarters of the town where wealthy people dwell are the daintiest dairy shops imaginable that cater to the swell trade. Here fancy butter, with the stamp of some famous farm, sells as high as $1.75 per pound. The eggs, each in a compartment of a dainty paper box, are also stamped "strictly fresh" and retail for 50 cents per dozen. The cream and milk from these immaculate dairy shops are usually delivered at fashionable houses by a servant in livery.

Yvette Guilbert, whose advent has been the theatrical event of the week, is not a pretty woman. She is ugly, gaunt and slovenly in gait. She sings remarkably nasty songs in a Parisian accent no Yankee can understand, however much he may pretend to. I think the public will soon weary of this latest French freak. I saw her on Broadway a day or so since. She looks very like the caricatures of herself and would pass easily for a fin de siecle poster. Her eyes are knowing and her hair an extraordinary shade—a sort of delicate ginger.

That miserable, wretched little beast, the dachshund, that waddled its way for some time into fashion's ranks, has a rival now in the Aberdeen terrier. The fashionable young woman now parades Fifth avenue of a morning leading the spunky and hardy little Scotch dog, who scents an enemy in every other dog he meets, growling and snapping and carrying a chip on his shoulder. Fox terriers, French spaniels and pugs are not in it these days. In fashion, as elsewhere, every dog has his day.

The dean of Barnard college, the woman's annex of Columbia, is Miss Emily James Smith, the youngest woman to hold such a position in this country. Miss Smith is fair and girlish looking, with a most serious and intense manner. She was the second American girl to attend Girton college, in England. She is an enthusiastic bicyclist, believing it to be the ideal exercise for students; is not a suffragist, but admits that the ballot is coming to woman and earnestly desires she should intelligently prepare herself to wield it.

One sees droll things always in cable cars. I was greatly diverted a day or so since by a little episode in a Broadway car. A big, brawny fireman, in the picturesque scarlet lined blue coat of his order, stood patiently for a long time. At last he got a seat and dropped into it with a long drawn sigh of utter exhaustion, and in a moment was fast asleep, dreaming, perhaps, of last night's fire, when he battled with smoke and flame. His arm rested on the window sill, and his helplessly swaying hand dangled a pair of coarse buckskin gloves. Next him sat Miss Manhattan, gorgeous to behold. Her gown was smart, so was her hat, and, lo, the hair of her was frizzed like sixty! She sat stiff, haughty, with a well bred, ladylike expression round the mouth. Suddenly the fireman lurched a little, his hand dropped, and the buckskin gloves flapped against her exclusive back hair. That bright dream was his last. He awoke with a start, to meet a look before which a Numidian lion would have quailed and shivered. The poor fellow was so terrified that, stammering an awkward apology, he rose and went out on the front platform to cool his burning brow. Myself, I heartily wished he had knocked her bonnet off.

There is a funny little Italian restaurant down town much affected by newspaper men and women. Not long since a very well known editor took, mirabile dictu! his wife and his mother-in-law there to dine. As the cheap claret flowed the fun became noisy. At last, about 11 o'clock, a young stage dancer sprang up from the table at which she was dining with three artists, and lifting her voluminous skirts gave an extemporized series of high kicks. The editor's mother-in-law, a nice old lady, was naturally very much horrified, and afterward said indignantly: "I thought the hussy was going to put her foot on my son's shoulder. Had she done so, I should have got right up and shaken her soundly and said: 'Young woman, that is my son and he is a respectable man. How dare you?'" This story is convulsing Bohemia both on account of the prominence of the editor and the desire of the dear old lady to protect her son-in-law, who is by no means a spring lamb.

CHURCH AND PEOPLE.

Echoes of Christmas and Closing Year.

The attendance at the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, was very large at both morning and evening services. The pastor, Mr. Norton, preached strong and effective sermons at both services on the closing of the year. The choir with Mrs. Coe as organist rendered several pleasing selections.

The Wollaston Baptist church was never decorated so prettily for the Christmas season as it is this year Rev. Preston Gurney gave another Christmas sermon, Sunday, his text being taken from Luke, 2:10.

Rev. Mr. Breed took a seasonable text for a brief, strong talk Sunday evening. He emphasized the one essential fact of a necessity of finishing work begun. As this year is finished, one naturally asks, how many of plans laid out during the past year, were concluded? How many things were taken up, and soon dropped? Too well finish a work, a plan must be first formed, then it should be completed, finished. He alluded to the last words of Jesus at close of his life. "It is finished." "I have done the work thou gavest me to do." The short sermon furnished with a fruitful theme for the full congregation that listened to it. The music especially arranged, was fine. The view of the decorations from the entrance of the church showed with what artistic care they were up, as two horizontal strips of evergreen at the altar entrance, gave an impression of perspective, distance that was unusual and the evergreen festooned to the rafters lent an air to the interior that was restful and yet inspiring.

The Rev. E. C. Butler of the First church spoke before a crowded house at the Wollaston Unitarian vesper services on Sunday afternoon. The congregation was not made up wholly of Unitarians as prominent members of the Congregational, Baptist and Methodist societies were noticed among the large audience. Mr. Butler read his scripture lesson from the eleventh chapter of Hebrews.

He based his theme upon an incident happening between the Christian Knights and Ialadin in Scott's novel of the Talisman. He spoke upon the Old and the New Man, the man of the mediæval ages and the man of modern times, showing how, step by step, he had ceased to rule the world by mere brute force to the present dominative of intellect. Modern civilization has not taken place fortuitously, but in a definite manner, and under the control of natural law; that the intellectual development of the human race does not move forward like a dream, without reason or order, but that there a predetermined, a solemn march, in which all must join, ever moving, ever resistlessly advancing, encountering and enduring an inevitable succession of events; that individual life and its advancement through successive stages is the model of social life and its secular variations.

St. John's Tree.

The children and teachers of St. John's Sunday school, with their parents and friends, were present in good numbers at Hancock hall last evening. Rev. F. A. Frigulietti, Rev. John P. Cuffe, and the director of the Sunday school, Rev. Francis A. Cunningham, were also present, and as later developments demonstrated, the presence of Frs. Francis and Cunningham was much desired, as they were to be the recipients of many tokens of love and affection from those in their charge before the close of the evening's entertainment Another person who attracted a deal of attention was a tall, fine-looking gentleman of middle life, who sat in the rear of hall, known to all by fame, and to but few personally. This gentleman was none other than Samuel A. Kitson, the noted sculptor, and those who did know him wondered at his presence last evening. But the events of the evening told the tale.

The entertainment opened with a chorus from Norma by the Sunday school choir, and the young misses pleased the audience by their fine execution.

Miss Olive Smith gave a comic solo, entitled "Jennie and Joe," in which she portrayed the troubles usually besetting a "spooney" couple.

Then came the Reilleys in "Fun in a Fog," with its rich, mellow brogue, wealth of anecdote and character, and the attempt on the part of both characters to get as far as possible from the truth in enumerating their respective possessions.

Miss Enora O'Connor gave a fine solo. Miss O'Connor is a sweet singer, with a full, mellow voice, and her appearance before any gathering is always a pleasure.

The young girls of the Sunday school were next heard in a chorus.

Miss Olive Smith again pleased the audience with a recitation, and on an encore gave "Reilly and I."

At this point there was a lull in the proceedings, which was broken by Master Samuel Donovan stepping to the front of the platform, and in behalf of his teachers and fellow-scholars presenting in a neat speech to Rev. F. A. Friguglietti a bust of the venerable Archbishop Williams of Boston of heroic size, by Samuel A. Kitson. The young man's words moved the audience, and as Rev. Fr. Francis came from the rear of the hall toward the stage the audience arose en masse and applauded.

Fr. Francis was moved by the thoughtfulness and affection on the part of the Sunday School, and thanked the donors for their very acceptable gift. Those who have had the pleasure of seeing the Archbishop recently pronounce the bust a most faithful likeness, and Mr. Kitson was publicly congratulated on his success.

Hardly had the applause which greeted the recipient's thanks subsided, when Master Michael Duffy, in feeling words, presented the director of the Sunday School, Rev. Francis A. Cunningham, with a most beautiful chalice.

Fr. Cuningham was dumbfounded for an instant, but regaining his self-possession, accepted the gift in words of warm praise for his teachers and scholars.

Before he had time to reach the shelter of the stage wing, Master James Haley of the Boys' Sodality presented him with a silver crucifix. The reverend gentleman responded, and was surprised a third time by Miss Annie Roche presenting him on behalf of the Girls' sodality with a beautiful set of Brevaries. The feelings that had been fomenting through these surprises culminated in this last gift, and Fr. Cunningham, from a heart overflowing with love and gratitude, thanked one and all for their very appropriate gifts.

The chalice is of exquisite design, handwrought and of solid gold. The stem is studded with six large amethysts and at the base is a cross of California diamonds. The inscription on the rim of the base reads: "To Rev. Francis A. Cuningham from the Sunday School Teachers and Children, Christmas, 1895."

Fr. Cunningham received many congratulations from the audience, all recognizing that though the presents came from the Sunday school, still they were but evidence of the esteem in which he is held by the whole parish. His years of faithful service have borne good fruit, and the expression of last evening were but his just reward.

The entertainment closed with "Jingle Bells" by the boys, and then Santa Claus appeared and distributed choice boxes of candy.

The teachers of the Sunday school were presented by Fr. Cunningham with portraits of himself at the close of the evening.

The Baptist Festival.

The Calvary Baptist church held its Christmas festival at Doble's hall Dec. 27th. The interior of the hall was very prettily decorated for the occasion with hemlock boughs and two large trees occupied the platform. Suspended in the centre was a large star and these words: "Our classes for Christ and the church."

The entertainment consisted of vocal and instrumental music, readings and an exercise by eleven little misses under the direction of Mrs. Lloyd Jones.

Then came the distribution of presents among those present.

Universalist Church.

One of the finest Sunday school concerts ever given in the Universalist church was enjoyed by a large audience Sunday evening. A new Christmas exercise prepared by S. W. Straub, entitled "The Glorious Birthday," was carried through in a very creditable manner by the superintendent, choir and school. There was an unusually large amount of singing, and the choir under its excellent chorister, Herbert F. Nye, did nobly.

The remarks of the pastor, at the close of the exercises were both appropriate and pleasing, and the gathering returned to their home much pleased with what they had seen and heard; and with a feeling that the evening had been well spent.

Granite a Stumbling Stone.

Quincy granite figures in the Atwood-Peabody libel case now on in Boston and the following catechism is reported by the Record, Mr. A. B. Davis, the superintendent of construction being on the stand:

"What do you understand by block granite?"

"Granite cut out in square blocks by stone cutters with drills and other tools."

"How many sides has a piece of block granite?"

"Four."

This answer caused many smiles to be exchanged in the court room, which the unmathematical witness could not understand.

Witness further testified that the cellar was filled and graded by Woodbury & Leighton for $1400.

The court then took a recess of 10 minutes.

After recess Samuel Roberts, a contractor testified that he furnished part of the stone for the interior wall of the cellar, and sold it to Woodbury & Leighton.

Witness averred that the price at Quincy was $2.50 per perch for rough stone. Block granite at that time cost $4 50 to $5 delivered.

By Mr. McLaughlin—"What was the average size of the blocks in the wall?"

"About 15 inches."

"How do you define block granite?"

"It must be of three dimensions, the length, the rise and the width. In the Boston markets it is supposed to be 18 inches rise."

This witness also testified that a piece of block granite had four faces.

"Might it not have only two faces?" asked Mr. McLaughlin.

"No."

Witness did not agree with Davis in saying that block granite must be cut out by hand.

"What is grout?"

"Grout is stone that is blown out by powder blasts."

By Storey—"How is block granite made?"

McLaughlin—"I pray your honor's judgment."

Judge Gaskill—"I think that question has been answered."

An Over-Heated Stove.

It was in the vicinity of 2.30 A. M Monday when officer Bradley, while walking along Granite street meditating to himself that the lot of a policeman was not a happy one, discovered that a fire was in progress in the vicinity of Centre street.

He started for the fire with an alertness of a true born policeman and in a short space of time reached the scene and found the fire to be in a partly completed house off Centre street which was being built by Carpenter Swanson.

The officer rushed to the nearest box and at 2 55 the fire alarm bells were sounding an alarm from Box 138.

The fire department responded with its usual promptness and upon its arrival found a very brisk fire that at first looked bad for the house. There was a hydrant near at hand and the firemen soon had the satisfaction of having the fire under control.

The fire was caused by a stove, that was being used to dry out the plastering, getting too hot and setting fire to the wood work. The loss will not exceed $450.

MR. GILL'S SUCCESSOR

City Treasurer Burgin Elected Treasurer of Savings Bank.

A Sketch of the Bank and the New Treasurer.

Wise and Careful Management Put Bank Among the Best.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Quincy Saving Bank last evening Mr. Clarence Burgin, the City Treasurer of Quincy was elected treasurer to fill the vacancy caused by the death of George L Gill.

The New Treasurer.

A change in the office of treasurer of the Quincy Savings bank has not occurred since this institution and the National Granite bank became separate. In 1868 Mr. George L. Gill became an assistant to Cashier Horace B. Spear, and upon the separation in 1871 he became treasurer of the Savings bank and removed it to its present location. For a generation Mr. Gill faithfully conducted the institution and its growth has been almost phenomenal, the 2175 depositors in 1871 having increased to 7298 at the last report, and the amount of deposits from $677,394 29 in 1871 to $2,022,627.62 Dec. 1. This grand achievement is due largely to the careful administration of the late treasurer, under whose directions the investments have largely been made. The depositors have had the greatest confidence in him, and the bank has been extremely fortunate in the periodical financial panics. The following summary will be of interest:

1855,	1,656	399,751.00
1867,	1,559	387,1 4.25
1871,	2,175	677,394.29
1875,	3,432	1,210,045 47
1880,	3,344	1,025,629.83
1885,	4 406	1,144,.39.66
1890,	5,773	1,528,505.59
1895,	7,145	1,853,887.96
1895 (Nov. 30)	7,298	2,022,627.62

Presidents and Treasurers.

The offices of president and treasurer have been filled by the following gentlemen who have all been prominent citizens of Quincy. The presidents:

Thomas Greenleaf,	1845—1856
Josiah Brigham,	1856—1867
Daniel Baxter,	1867—1871
Edward Turner,	1871—1878
Israel W. Munroe,	1878—1879
Charles Marsh,	1879—1886
Horace B. Spear,	1886—1889
Rupert F. Claflin,	1889

The treasurers:

Israel W. Munroe,	1845—1855
John C. Randall,	1855—1868
Horace B. Spear,	1868—1871
George L. Gill,	1871—1895
Clarence Burgin,	1896

During the treasureship of Mr. Munroe the bank was at his store, now occupied by Sanborn & Damon in the PATRIOT building. Under Mr. Randall and Mr. Spear it was in the old banking rooms of the Quincy Stone Bank now occupied by Dr. Gilbert. In 1871 it was separated from the National bank and removed to rooms fitted up for it in its present quarters.

The bank is fortunate in having met with no losses from loans or investments, which is largely due to the fact that loans are made only on the best security. They are today well placed and strongly secured. Deposit book No. 1 is still open, as are many of those taken out in the early days of the institution.

Miss Hattie L. Burrell, a niece of the late treasurer has been his faithful and obliging assistant since 1879, and is acknowledged to be one of the best penmen and accountants in the city. Miss Mildred Estes recently entered the bank, and is a valuable assistant.

For twelve years Mr. Burgin has been a resident of Quincy and his career among us has been a brilliant one, a series of advancements in positions of trust. In January, 1884, he came to Quincy and entered the employ of the granite firm of Frederick & Field as bookkeeper and draughtsman. Five years later he formed a partnership with Mr. R. D. Gordon of this city and entered into the wholesale and retail jewelry business in Boston, which partnership still continues. During the vacations of Mr. Spear from 1892 to 1894 Mr. Burgin acted as cashier of the National Mount Wollaston bank, and conducted the affairs very satisfactorily. He has always shown an interest in matters of finance, and it was largely through his management that the Quincy Quarry Company and the Lyons Granite Company were successfully established. In August, 1894, he was appointed City Treasurer to succeed the late Bryant N. Adams and was reappointed by Mayor Hodges this year, and fills the office at the present time. The city finances were never more ably handled, or the business transacted with such promptness and system, as under Treasurer Burgin, and what is the Savings Bank's gain will be the city's loss. Mr. Burgin is also a director of the National Granite bank, treasurer and director of the Lyons Granite Company, director of the Quincy Quarry Company, a member of Rural lodge, F. & A. M; St. Stephen's chapter, R. A. M.; South Shore commandery, K. T., and other organizations. He is also prominent in the new movement to organize a Board of Trade in this city, which promises to be successful and a boon to Quincy.

Mr. Burgin was born Oct. 27, 1865, in Rudland, Vt., his parents being Mr. Thomas and Mrs. Jane (Scudder) Burgin, both from London, England. In 1870 the family moved to Springfield, Mass., where Clarence was educated and graduated from the High school. In the evening drawing schools he acquired a good knowledge of that art, and later in the employ of Charles Sidney, the architect and civil engineer; with John Lyman Faxon, the architect, and with Frederick & Field of Quincy, he became an expert draughtsman.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

DEAR SIR:—It is a great pity that a man like Mr. Henry H. Faxon, who has in the past done good work in securing the enforcement of the liquor laws shou'd every so often be subject to fits of delivering himself of the most blind and unreasoning abuse of anybody and everybody connected in any way with the machinery of the law, First it is the lawyers, then it is the judges, last year it was the present Mayor, and now it is the police.

Some people believe in Mr. Faxon for what he has accomplished in his younger days. Others who don't know him, see and read his periodical effusions, and having no knowledge to the contrary believe that Quincy is a disorderly place, a hot-bed of corruption and a paradise for rum-sellers. In this way he injures the cause of temperance and gives the reputation of Quincy as a law-abiding city, a black-eye; whereas the facts are that Quincy is an orderly city, extremely free from disturbances of all kinds, for one having so large a class of foreign labor, as can be testified to by any person going about amongst them.

There have been comparatively few arrests made this year, for the violation of the liquor laws, for the very good reason that there has been very little if any evidence that the law was being violated. In all cases where there has been a suspicion based upon any tangible evidence of such a violation, prompt arrests have been made, and convictions have followed in every instance but one. This state of things is largely owing to the fact that the liquor laws in Quincy were strictly enforced last year, as well as several years prior.

Mr. Faxon's own statement verifies this when he says in his interviews published in the papers, that he had a private detective located in Quincy during a part of the summer, engaged solely for the purpose of securing evidence against liquor sellers, who reported to him that it was impossible for a stranger to buy a glass of liquor in the town.

The trouble with Mr. Faxon aside from his desire to get himself into the newspapers and stir things up, is he expects more than the law allows; the law does not yet prohibit drinking liquor, and we can't make arrests founded simply on vague rumors without evidence that liquor is sold.

The police force of Quincy is composed of an honest, courteous and pains-taking body of men, doing their duty conscientiously, but without vindictiveness against any person or class of persons and the attack of Mr. Faxon charging them with dishonesty and incompetency, is cowardly and uncalled for in view of the facts, and is ill-befitting a man of Mr. Faxon's standing. Mr. Faxon well knows that under our city charter the Mayor is at the head of our department of police, and that any just complaint against myself or the men would be immediately investigated either by the executive or the council at the election of Mr. Faxon. The police department courts the fullest public investigation of itself. If Mr. Faxon has further to say, let him bring his charges before the Mayor or the council; I do not care to further discuss the matter through the newspapers.

JOSEPH H. HAYDEN,
Chief of Police of Quincy.

BRAINTREE EXCITED

Mr. Long Forbids Use of Long Hall for a Dance.

But It Was the Armory of Co. K and They Had Something to Say.

Capt. Morrison Takes Forcible Posses-ion and Holds the Fort.

Another of those enjoyable six to ten dances was held at Long's hall, Braintree, Saturday evening, and the unexpected excitement of dancing in a fortified citadel was huge fun.

It seems there is a conflict between Co. K, who have their armory here, and Mr. Long as to who should receive pay for the use of the hall by outsiders. Friday morning Mr. Long notified a member of the six-to-ten committee that unless he received pay for the use of the hall for the previous occasions before 9 A. M. Saturday, the party would be refused admission to the hall.

Capt. Morrison of Co. K was consulted by the dancers and he told them that he had given them the right to use the hall and he should see that they had it, and that they should be protected.

Early in the afternoon Mr. Harry L. Patten and Mr. William S. Osborne, the managers of the dance, arrived on the scene, and soon after the fun commenced. Mr. Long, as agent of the property ordered the young men out, and they reluctantly obeyed.

Mr. Long had with him several of his men from the shoe shop, and also Constable Mischler, and when the coast was clear he proceeded to nail up the entrance door.

Private Frank E. Woodworth notified Capt. Morrison of the situation, and he appeared on the scene about 4 o'clock. Approaching the building he saw that all the windows in the hall were opened, as though an attempt was being made to make the place uninhabitable.

Capt. Morrison ordered Private Woodworth to break open the door and he obeyed with a soldier's promptness. Naturally Agent Long was boiling with wrath, and with the assistance of his engineer, Mr. Elmer Holbrook, the door was again barricaded. This time by the use of a pair of tongs, and Constable Mischler was placed in charge.

Not to be baffled Capt. Morrison ordered out the company, using the telephone to summons the men. When they responded, which was in some cases but a few minutes, they were ordered into their uniforms.

Then Mr. Long and his men were ordered out, and not retiring voluntarily they were put out by force, not however, until Capt. Morrison had shown Mr. Long his permit from Col. Bancroft and Adjt. Ballard, for the rental of the hall. Mr. Long offered resistance but he had to go, also Engineer Holbrook, the constable and others.

Lieut. W. H. Whitney with a squad of men was then placed at the door to prevent the admittance of outsiders, and the crowd of spectators cheered the soldier boys.

Mr. Long went off and it seems he was after the sheriff. He also consulted Lawyer McAnarney at Quincy, and an attempt was made to get Judge Humphrey to issue a warrant, but he declined to act hastily, and decided to summons the interested parties to his office on Monday.

At the hall it was discovered that the heat had been turned off, the light disconnected, etc. Connection was secured however with the electric light, and it being a comfortable night dancers did not need artificial heat, so all was in readiness for the dance at the advertised time, and the militia remained on duty to see that the party was not disturbed.

The Law.

Section 5 of Chapter 465 provides:

"Armories provided for the militia, under the provisions of chapter 384 of the acts of the year 1888, shall not be used except by the active militia of this Commonwealth, and they shall not be loaned or let to anyone except for a proper military purpose, and then only when application is approved by the Commander-in-Chief and intermediate commanders."

The town pays rent to Mr. Long to the amount of $400, also $100 for heat and light.

Mr. Long and also the Selectmen were notified of the new law some three months ago. The company had permission from Col. Bancroft of the fifth regiment to let the hall. But the section quoted says the armories shall not be used by outsiders and shall not be loaned or let, so that Co. K may be exceeding its authority.

In Court Monday.

A hearing was held before Judge Humphrey in the district court on Monday, to see whether a warrant should be issued against Capt. W. E. Morrison of Co. K, for disturbing the peace. The hearing was held in the Judge's room and reporters excluded.

Hon. Asa French appeared for Capt. Morrison and the town of Braintree, and J. W. McAnarney, Esq., for Mr. Long.

No evidence was taken in relation to disturbing the peace but the statements of Capt. Morrison, the chairman of the Board of Selectmen of Braintree, and Mr. Long were heard.

The court refused to issue a warrant on Monday but took the matter under advisement.

The Mayor's Great-Great Grandfather.

John Adams.

President of United States, 1797-1801.

John Adams was born in Braintree, now Quincy, Oct. 19, 1735, in the most northerly of the two old mansions on Franklin street, owned by his father, and now in possession of his descendants, and was graduated at Harvard College in 1755. On leaving college, he taught school in Worcester, where he also studied law in the office of Col. James Putnam. He began the practice of his profession in Braintree about the year 1758, at the age of twenty-three years. The first writ issued by Mr. Adams was on an action of trespass for a rescue. This gave him considerable uneasiness, as he was apprehensive that it was defective, which it proved to be, as it was abated. He soon after removed to Boston, where he became eminent in his profession, and was appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; he was chosen one of the delegates to the first Continental Congress in 1774.

Mr. Adams was married to Abigail Smith, daughter of the Rev. William Smith, of Weymouth. By this marriage he became allied to a numerous and highly-respectable family connection, which greatly assisted him in his professional business.

In 1778, Congress selected him as one of the Commissioners to France; Feb. 13, he sailed in the frigate Boston, with his son John Q. Adams, then ten years of age, and arrived at Bordeaux, France, April 8. Owing to some misdemeanors of Mr. Silas Dean, the commissioners were placed in an embarrassed position; so much so, that Mr. Adams concluded to take no part with them, and returned home after an absence of seventeen months.

On his arrival home he was selected by the town of Braintree as delegate to attend a convention for the formation of a State Government, where he took an active and important part; but he was soon called away from the convention to attend to the duty of a commissioner to negotiate a treaty of peace with great Britain, and for some years he was the American Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

Mr. Adams was chosen in 1789 the first Vice President of the United States and at the expiration of Washington's term of office, as President Mr. Adams was chosen to succeed him in this high and important position. After his term of office expired he retired to his residence in Quincy. In 1820, he was selected by the citizens of his native town, as a delegate, to the State Convention that assembled to amend the State Constitution. The remaining portion of his long life was spent in literary labors, and holding correspondence with the most eminent statesmen of that period. He, with his co-patriot, Thomas Jefferon, expired on their country's birthday, the 4th of July, 1826. Mr. Adams' age at the time of his death was ninety-one years.

The Mayor's Grandfather.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS,

Charles Francis Adams, third son of President John Q. Adams, was born in Boston in 1807, and a large part of his youthful education was obtained abroad, while his father was Minister to Foreign Courts. He was graduated at Harvard University in 1825; after graduating he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1828.

Mr. Adams represented the city of Boston five years in the State Legislature, three years in the Senate, and two in the House; he also was editor of the "Boston Whig." In 1848 he was a candidate for Vice President on the ticket with Martin Van Buren.

In 1858 Mr. Adams was elected to represent the third Massachusetts Congressional District in Congress. In 1860 he was again re-elected. Mr. Adams did not serve out this term, as he was appointed by President Lincoln, Minister to England, where he sustained the high reputation his grandfather and father had established as a diplomatist. Mr. Adams remained at the Court of St. James until succeeded by Reverdy Johnson, in 1868.

Under the treaty with Great Britan signed May 8th, 1871, which treaty stipulates that a board of arbitrators shall be appointed by the respective governments to meet at Geneva, Switzerland, to settle the Alabama Claims, Mr. Adams was appointed by the United States, to serve on this commission.

In 1872 he was spoken of as a Presidential candidate, but in a letter to David A. Wells he said he did not want the nomination, but if the good people really believe they need such an anomalous being as I am they must express it in a manner to convince me of it. He was not nominated at the regular convention but was nominated for Vice President at a convention held in Louisville, Ky., Sept. 3, 1872 by the strict party Democrats but was defeated.

The same year he was also a candidate for Governor of Massachusetts but was defeated by Gov. Rice.

Mr. Adams has been quite extensively engaged in the field of literature, having edited the Revolutionary correspondence of his grandfather and grandmother, which was published in 1841; he has had published ten volumes of the works of Mr. John Adams, of which he was editor. These were published in 1856. He in later life edited and published twelve volumes of the works of John Q. Adams. In 1864, Harvard College conferred the honorary degree of LL. D. upon him.

From the 70s on until his death, Nov. 21, 1886, he lived in retirement, the summer months being passed in Quincy and the winter months in Boston.

OUR MAYOR'S FAMILY.

Among the Most Distinguished in the Country for Over a Century.

Two Presidents of These United States were Mayor Adams' Ancestors.

His Grandfather a Minister to England, and His Father a Prominent Citizen.

HON. CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, 2d,

Mayor of Quincy, 1896.

Our new Mayor, Hon. Charles Francis Adams, 2d, embodies the full intellectual power and force of character that has distinguished the Adams family for the four preceding generations. A Boston paper said a few years ago:—"We have no reigning family in America, but it may be questioned whether many reigning families in Europe have kept up to the Adams' standard of ability for successive generations. It is said that genius is seldom transmitted, and in a comprehensive sense of the term the Adamses are not geniuses. But they have shown that intellectual activity, a capacity for achievement and sterling common sense, are transmissible for successive generations."

Our Mayor is in his 30th year. He is the son of the late John Quincy Adams, and was born in Quincy, August 2d, 1866. He was fitted for Harvard at Hopkinson's school, entering college in 1884, and graduating with the class of 1888. He was president of his class, and prominent in the clubs. During his sophomore and junior years he was coach of his class crew, and in 1890 was coach of the 'varsity crew when Harvard beat Yale so badly. He and his brother George, as "the Adams boys," have also been foremost among yachtsmen. They begun racing in the Dandelion and the Cricket was their next. Then they struck out in bigger crafts and with the 36-footer Papoose, were very successful. During a yachting season in England they added experience, and they have since sailed the Gossoon, Babboon, and Harpoon, and the past season won many prizes in the little cat, the Rooster.

In 1891, Mr. Adams was graduated from the Harvard Law School with distinction, when he studied with Judge Bumpus, and has taken up law as a profession. He entered the City Council in 1893, and has since been one of its active members, the past year as Chairman of the Finance Committee. He is an Independent Democrat in politics, and although the city gave Governor Greenhalge a majority of over eight hundred, Mr. Adams was elected Mayor on a Democratic and Citizens' ticket by a good majority over the Republican candidate. Success to Mayor Adams.

An Aptitude for Governing.

Our new Mayor is a noted yachtsman, and the success which has attended him on the water should be his at City Hall, for in the words of Jonson

"Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becalm'd; but he that will Govern and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents, how to shift her sails;
What she will bear in foul, what in fair weathers;
Where her springs are, her leaks and how to stop them;
What strands, what shelves, what rocks do threaten her;
The forces and the natures of all winds,
Gusts, storms and tempests; when her keel ploughs hell,
And deck knocks heaven, then to manage her
Becomes the name and office of a pilot."

The Mayor's Great Grandfather.

J. Q. Adams

President of United States, 1825-1829.

John Quincy Adams, the sixth President of the United States was born in the north precinct of Braintree, now the city of Quincy, July 11, 1767, in the southerly of the two old houses now standing on Franklin street. He was graduated from Harvard in 1787, and practised law in Newburyport and Boston. In 1794 he was United States minister to the Netherlands. In 1796 Minister Plenipotentiary to the court of Portugal, and later to court at Berlin. In 1801 he was nominated as Representative to Congress but lacked 59 votes of an election. In 1803 he was chosen to the Senate of the United States, serving until 1809. In 1805 he was professor of rhetoric and oratory at Harvard. In 1809 Minister Plenipotentiary to St. Petersburg. In 1814 he was one of the commissioners to treat for peace with Great Britain, which was signed at Ghent that year. In 1817 he was appointed by President Monroe, Secretary of State, and ably fulfilled the duties through both terms of Mr. Monroe's administration.

On the expiration of President Monroe's term of office, Mr. John Quincy Adams was chosen by the House of Representatives, President of the United States. After the expiration of his term in 1829, he retired to his home.

In 1831, he was chosen National Representative, and the greater part of his useful life was spent in the halls of Congress, even to the day of his death. On the 21st of February, 1848, he entered the Representative Hall as well as usual, and after the session had begun its duties, he arose paper in hand to address the speaker, and was taken with shock of paralysis, and fell into the arms of an associate member. While falling he uttered these, his last words, "This is the last of earth, I am content." He was taken to the Speaker's private apartments in the Capitol, where he remained insensible until the evening of the 23d of February, when his noble spirit departed this earth, at the age of eighty years and seven months.

Mr. Adams was married in England July 26, 1797 to Louise Catherine Johnson, daughter of Joshua Johnson, the American consul to London.

The Mayor's Father.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

The Mayor's father passed away so recently that he is well remembered by us all. He was born in Boston, Sept. 22, 1833, and died in Quincy, Aug. 14, 1894. He was graduated from Harvard college in 1853 and spent several years in London while his father, Charles Francis Adams, was United States minister to England. Returning to this country he settled in Quincy, and it continued to be his residence until his death. He took a great interest in the town, and for many years officiated as moderator at the annual town meetings. He also served on the school committee and other boards.

Mr. Adams was well-known throughout the State and was noted for his fearless independence. In 1867, 1868 and 1869 he was the Democratic candidate for Governor, and in 1873 a candidate for Lieutenant Governor. In 1870, 1871 and 1873 he was in the Legislature. In 1872 a candidate for Vice President of the United States with Charles O'Connor. In 1884 he was nominated for Congress but declined in favor of Dr. William Everett. For several years he was State director of the Fitchburg railroad. He was one of the Fifty Associates of Boston and prominent in financial circles.

Mr. Adams left a widow, three sons and a daughter, who are all now living. The sons are Mr. George R. Adams, Hon. Charles F. Adams, 2d, (our new Mayor), and Mr. Arthur Adams.

Bridge Hearing.

The County Commissioners gave a hearing Thursday on the widening of the bridge over the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., near the Atlantic depot.

The city was represented by Mayor Adams, ex-Mayor Hodges, City Solicitor Blackmur, Commissioner Eaton, and H. T. Whitman. There were also present: John R. Graham, Benjamin F. Curtis, B. J. Weeks, H. H. Faxon, John F. Merrill and others, while the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., was represented by A. H. Maxwell, Esq.

As soon as the hearing opened City Solicitor Blackmur moved to view the premises and a special car was taken for that point.

A plan made by Frederick Endicott, civil engineer for the County Commissioner was presented. This plan widens the bridge to 64 feet with a truss through the centre, which would give the road ways each about 23 feet wide and the sidewalks six feet wide. The plan also proposes to raise the grade on the bridge about six inches.

The original plan made the width 58 feet and the estimated cost was $30,000, and it is thought the 64 feet width will add $10,000 or more to the cost.

City Solicitor Blackmur said, in view of the change from the original, the city was not prepared to say whether they would advocate or oppose the 64 feet bridge and he asked for a continuance that it might be considered.

Mr. Maxwell also desired a continuance for the same reason.

The Commissioners then adjourned the hearing until Saturday, Jan. 18, at 10 o'clock at Dedham.

The Food Fair.

The two days' food fair of the Ladies' Aid society had a very successful opening Wednesday evening at the Universalist church, it being attended by a goodly number.

Around the vestry, where the fair was held, were arranged numerous tables for soups and other articles of food, which met with a ready sale. They were in charge of the following ladies:

Soup,—Mrs. Ira Litchfield.
Sandwichse,—Mrs. Price Hardwick.
Mush and hygienic coffee,—Mrs. Winslow Burrell.
Cake,—Mrs. J. W. Lombard.
Candy, Mrs. Richard Newcomb.
Griddle cake, Mrs. Houlton.
Tea and coffee, Mrs. J. H. Wales, Miss Chapman, Miss Batson.
Lemonade, Miss Ross, Miss Houlton.
Peanut, Mrs. A. C. Merritt.
Art Gallery, Miss Swift.
Fancy work, the directors.

A pleasing entertainment was also given consisting of tableaux and singing, under the direction of Mr. Herbert F. Nye.

The weather Thursday evening was unfavorable, yet there was quite a large attendance especially of young people. The entertainment for the most part consisted of tableaux which were arranged by Miss Grace Cain and which were very creditably given. To her is due much of the success of the programme. In addition to the tableaux there was a pleasing solo entitled "Nothing like a freshning breeze" by Mr. George S. Waterhouse, the well known baritone, a piano duet by Miss Brown and Mr. Herbert Fay Nye, and a pleasing and clasical piano solo by Miss Brown.

The several tableaux were as follows: "Old Oaken Bucket," "Take back the ring," "Way down upon the Swanee river," "Father has been drinking again," "Blue and the Gray," "Gypsie's warning," "Only one girl for me," "Trilby," "The Postman," "Sweet hour of prayer," and "Venus."

Each tableaux was accompanied by a song or chorus, and as the curtain was raised a red light was thrown upon the scene, making it more effective. Those who contributed the musical selections for the tableaux were: Miss Fletcher, Mr. Herbert Morton and Mr. Albert Prouty.

Pleasant Trip Anticipated.

Next week George W. Prescott leaves for Florida, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Etta. Mr. Prescott is a delegate to the eleventh annual convention of the National Editorial Association which meets at St. Augustine, Florida, Jan. 21, 22, 23 and 24th.

Delegates are expected from every state in the union. Some have already started from the far West. The Florida people are doing everything in their power to make this convention one of the pleasantest the association has ever held.

All the railroads in Florida have tendered unlimited transportation, and the editors and their ladies will be taken to all the principal points of interest in the State. The citizens of the towns through which the delegates pass have arranged many pleasant entertainments for their northern visitors, and probably another such opportunity to visit the land of flowers in midwinter, may never again be accorded the members.

Serious Runaway.

There was a serious runaway accident on School street Thursday afternoon about 4 o'clock. Edwin Jones and George Stevens were engaged in moving chairs from the depot to the new Calvary Baptist church in an open wagon.

When near the residence of Dr. Sheahan the horse became frightened and ran away. When near the Catholic church the team struck the curbing and threw both of the men out. Both struck heavily, so much so that Mr. Jones' leg was broken and Mr. Stevens was cut badly about the face. The injured men were taken into the residence of Dr. Sheahan where medical aid was summoned.

After throwing the two men out the horse continued across the street, when another team was struck and somewhat smashed. The horse then cleared himself and ran as far as Pastor's drug store where he was captured. Quite a number of the chairs were smashed.

Grocers' Banquet.

It is a week of banquets for Quincy gentlemen, and a goodly number of the grocers of this city attended the annual meeting of the Old Colony Grocers' Association, held Wednesday evening at the United States Hotel, Boston.

Among those from Quincy present were: Osborne Rogers, Robert Johnson, Joseph Johnson, James O'Donovan, Walter Wilson, John W. Nash, Dr. J. M. Cutting, James Merrill, George H. Wilson, Charles Brooks, John Mason, W. H. Callahan, T. J. Lamb, Arthur H. Doble, George Prout, Joseph P. Prout.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President,—Andrew McNeal of Hingham.

Second Vice President,—Osborne Rogers of Quincy.

Secretary,—M. L. Lynch of East Weymouth.

Treasurer,—Joseph Sampson of Braintree.

Executive Committee,—Fred Humphrey of Hingham; George A. Cliff of Whitman; F. S. Chute of Rockland; Arthur Faunce of Abington, and the newly elected President.

CITY BRIEFS.

Sleighs are out.

The street railway employes announce a grand ball for Jan. 24 at Braintree.

Things are running as smoothly at City Hall this week as though there was not a new Mayor.

For the present Mayor Adams has established his office hours at City Hall from 4 to 10 P. M.

The time for filing names for candidates for officers of the Quincy Yacht Club expires on the 15th inst.

C. C. Hearn, the druggist, has added a set of rattan chairs to his office fixtures for use of patrons of the electrics.

Box 26 was tested Wednesday and found to be all right, and had it been pulled rightly Tuesday night, it would have worked.

There is considerable complaint from the outlaying wards because at the winter term of the High School the sessions open so early.

The directors of the Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Co. and Quincy Savings bank have passed resolutions on the death of George L. Gill.

The cars of the Quincy & Boston street railway are being equipped with electric headlights, which are fastened permanently to the dashers.

Flory Gould and Charles Waterhouse, two of the employes of the street railway are having a race. If you want to know what about just ask them.

Sorry to learn that Mr. William H. Fay, Secretary of the Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company, is quite sick. He has congestion of the brain, and Dr. Gilbert is attending him.

The directors of the Association of the Alumni of the Quincy High school are encouraged with the outlook for the coming reunion, which promises to be well attended.

Owing to the cold weather Saturday evening, but a few members of the Grand Army Association were present at the hall, but those who did brave the elements had a good time.

It was too cold to go to school Monday especially for many High school pupils who must travel a long distance. Three of those who went froze their ears and another his foot.

The annual ball of Mt. Wollaston lodge, I. O. O. F., will be held Jan. 30. The committee are: Noble Grand T. W. Good, E. Frank Mitchell, Charles L. Hammond, C. M. Jenness, Charles B. Huston, Henry L. Kincaide and H. O. Souther.

George W. Penniman, formerly of Quincy, has been appointed second assistant to Clerk Sleeper of the Massachusetts House of Representatives. His many friends hope to see him clerk some day, for he has the qualifications.

A reception to the "prospective" Daughters of the Revolution, in Quincy, is to be given the latter part of January by Miss Annie L. Prescott, at her home on Spear street.

Is the Quincy club responsible for the fires at the residence of Judge Bumpus? When the club gave its minstrel show for the hospital, his house was set on fire by lightning and again when the club assembles for its banquet the house takes fire.

John P. Prichard, formerly Commissioner of Public Works in Quincy, and recently Superintendent of Streets at Medford, was this week elected Superintendent of Streets in the large city of Somerville. He held the same position twelve years ago.

Dr. A. H. Gilson was elected vice president of the annual reunion of the Brimmer school boys of Boston this week. Five years ago the doctor presented the school with a flag, which did service until last spring. It was among the first schoolhouses to fly a flag when the agitation was started.

Mr. Timothy J. Callahan, a well-known young man of this city, and recently in the employ of the Boston Tool Co., as foreman, has gone to St. Louis for the benefit of his health. His many friends in Quincy hope to see him back again with his health regained.

The Massachusetts Benefit Life Association, of which George A. Litchfield of Wollaston is president, has issued an artistic two leaf calendar. The Longfellow house at Cambridge and a portrait of the poet adorn the first page, and during the last six months of the year people will gaze upon Lowell and the Lowell house. The Massachusetts Benefit is flourishing, and has a cash surplus of over one million dollars.

The following board of directors were elected at the annual meeting of the Mt. Wollaston National Bank: Charles A. Howland, Walter T. Babcock, Horace B. Spear, A. B. Packard, George L. Miller, Herbert F. Doble, Fred L. Badger, Fred B. Rice, George H. Field. The directors organized with Charles A. Howland as president.

The officers of Francis L. Souther camp 27, S. of V., were publicly installed Tuesday evening at Grand Army hall, the ceremonies being witnessed by a large number of the friends of members, as well as several of the comrades of Paul Revere Post, 88, G. A. R. After the installation ceremonies there were brief remarks by the installing officer and suite and others. A collation was also served.

In its war records of Dec. 28, the Brockton Enterprise gave a sketch of Alonzo Augustus Nightingale born in Quincy in 1842. He entered the service in April 16, 1861, as private in Co. H, 4th regiment infantry. He re-enlisted twice and was a sergeant when discharged June 16, 1865. Comrades at the front were Lewis G. Macintyre, Corp. Loring N. Hayden, Sergt. Nathaniel Wales. Mr. Nightingale died in North Bridgewater in 1869.

Sad news of the death of their mother Mrs. Georgianna Guy, in Egremont Cheshire, England, has come to Mrs. Aubrey Keith and Mrs. Walter S. Randall. Mrs. Guy resided here a number of years and will be pleasantly remembered by many friends both in the Episcopal church and outside of it. Failing strength led her back to familiar home scenes, where she has just died, leaving loving hearts this side the watar to mourn her loss. She had reached nearly three score and ten years.

The Quincy Yacht Club's annual meeting comes on February 1st this year. All bills paid and a balance in the treasury is a pretty good financial statement. There is probably not a yacht club on the coast that pays its bills more promptly than this organization. As an illustration it is said that the day after the club's last annual open regatta, the treasurer had mailed checks to every prize winner. This was such an unusual proceeding that even Capt. "Bill" Daly of the famous Satanic wrote a very flattering letter to the club expressing his surprise and gratification at receiving his prize money so soon after the event.

The extra pages today contain an extended report of the inauguration of our city government, together with the inaugural address; also the best report of the banquet to Mayor Adams.

Ex-Mayor Francis Batchelder will speak at the Congregational church Sunday, at 3.30, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. The meeting will be open to all and will be in the interests of the New State Endowment building of the State Committee.

A Rockland dispatch to the Journal, speaking of proposed street railway extensions in this vicinity says a Philadelphia syndicate is making an effort to secure the controlling interest in the Quincy & Boston road, but thus far without success. Quincy people hope it never will.

Benjamin Johnson met with quite an accident Wednesday at the Quincy depot. He stood on the ground and opened the door of a car load of hay. As he did so a large bale of hay fell out striking him on the head and knocking him down, injuring him quite severely, so much so that he has been confined to his home since.

Mr. Henry H. Faxon again offers prizes to members of the Boston Press Club, which will be awarded at the annual dinner, January 29, at the United States Hotel. Handsome unabridged dictionaries are offered both for the best and the most humorous articles of 500 words on "The Boston Subway." There will also be second prizes.

The second meeting of the year of the Quincy Teachers' Association was held at the High, Thursday night, and was largely attended by our teachers and friends. It was a night with France, the principal paper being by Mr. Frederic Allison Tupper, head master of the High, upon the "Customs and Manners of France." Each of the principals followed (but one followed a young lady home early) with three minute talks on the same subject, interspersed with vocal and instrumental numbers and readings. There was an intermission for sociability.

A quiet yet none the less pretty wedding was solemnized Wednesday evening at The Greenleaf, the two loving hearts to be made one being Mr. James Crawford of Malden and Miss Annie Stewart of Boston. The ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Preston Gurney of Wollaston took place in the spacious parlor of the house and was witnessed by the permanent guests of the hotel, who bestowed their congratulations upon the young couple and wished them a pleasant and smooth passage through life. The bride was prettily gowned in white silk. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart remained at The Greenleaf until this morning when they took their departure.

WEST QUINCY.

The Quarry railroad is building a new turnout near the Pine Tree quarry.

St. Mary's C. T. & T. A. society held a social dance at St. Mary's hall, Thursday evening which was quite largely attended.

Rev. Edward J. Fagan, a West Quincy young man, has been transferred from the church at Hopkinton to the church at Natick.

Mr. James F. Kirven, a soldier of the late war, died Jan. 3, at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Alice Kelly, of Copeland street.

Frank Hoak of West Quincy went to Boston last week with $80 in his inside pocket. While in Boston he showed his roll of bills, and as a result when he landed in Quincy later in the day he was gloriously drunk and his $80 had gone, not even enough being left to pay a fine of $5

QUINCY POINT.

Several of the passengers on the East Weymouth line of the street railway had their ears frozen Monday morning.

Rev. H. A. Youtz pastor of the Washington Street church at Quincy Point has resigned.

Councilman and Mrs. Hiram W. Phillips with their friends celebrated the twentieth anniversary of their marriage on Thursday evening last. Choice piano forte selections were played by Miss Eva D. Phillips. A collation was served. The host and hostess received many gifts.

A new and larger electric motor has been added to the Quincy Shoe Co.'s factory.

C. P. Slade is a candidate for pitcher of the Harvard University ball nine, but there are 19 after the same position.

DOWNS AND PARK.

Three new houses are in the process of erection at Norfolk Downs.

How long will it take this Council to make appropriations for new schoolhouses?

The annual meeting of the Squantum Yacht club was held Tuesday evening and these officers elected:

Commodore,—H. F. Burkhardt.
Vice Commodore,—Hamilton Flood.
Rear Commodore,—Dr. F. A. Locke.
Secretary,—J. E. Campbell.
Treasurer,—C. F. Mair.
Measurer,—W. C. Coucher.
Trustees,—Benjamin Sargent, F. P. Loud, F. J. Stewart.
Regatta Committee: C. W. Page, John Ball, W. C. Coombs, Benjamin Sargent.

COLD WEATHER. Last Monday morning was the coldest in Quincy for many years. Thermometer was from 10 to 20 degrees below zero. Many thermometers ranged from 10 to 12, but some went several degrees lower; and at the Butler house, where Rev. Mr. Wilson resides, it was 20 below. There was no snow on the ground last Monday, but has fallen two or three days since, and now there are some eight inches or more.

HOOD'S PILLS cure Liver Ills, Billiousness, Indigestion, Headache. A pleasant laxative. All Druggists.

WOLLASTON.

The Woman's Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal church met Thursday afternoon with Mrs. H. S. Coates, Beale street.

The New Year's rally held by the Epworth league on Sunday evening, January 5, brought out a very large attendance, and an interesting and profitable meeting was enjoyed.

Rev. J. H. Mansfield, D. D., will preach in the Methodist Episcopal church next Sunday evening, January 12, at 7 o'clock. This will be his third quarterly visit as Presiding Elder for the current Conference year. The third Quarterly Conference will be held at the close of the preaching service.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Simmons of Wollaston were among those present at the seventeenth annual ball of the A. Shuman & Co. Mutual Benefit Association of Boston, which proved a brilliant event. Mr. Simmons is the treasurer of the large clothing house and also of the association, and is highly respected by the firm and its 500 employes. On this occasion he was also chairman of the reception committee, and much of the unbounded enjoyment was due to his efficient management.

Mr. William C. Seelye, an esteemed resident of Wollaston and a prominent Republican, is favorably mentioned in connection with the office of Commissioner of Public Works.

The Gleaners "King's Daughters" of Wollaston will meet at Mrs. W. M. Wight's, Lincoln avenue, Monday, Jan. 13, at 2.30 P. M.

Two large hard-pine posts have been erected opposite the Wollaston station for a new tell-tale.

The old waiting shed at the Wollaston station is now the property of Mr. John Cavanagh. He is undecided as to where its future destination will be.

Mr. Thomas F. Mitchell of Wollaston is grateful to his friends for the assistance which they so kindly rendered him during his recent illness. Mr. Mitchell can now be found at his old stand.

Miss Sadie F. Emery and Miss Grace A. Pike, and Messrs. Edwin L. Gannett and Joseph Merritt, have been appointed delegates from the Wollaston Baptist Sunday School, to the Sunday School Convention, which is to be held at South Boston.

Owing to the intense cold and high wind the Wollaston Trap Club did not hold its regular Saturday afternoon shoot.

Mr. Joseph H. Lord of Wollaston lost a valuable horse last week. It was one of a pair of blacks which he had recently purchased.

At the last regular meeting of John Hancock lodge, I. O. O. F., of Wollaston, one candidate was initiated and two applications were received.

"Thoughts for the New Year" was the subject of Rev. Preston Gurney's sermon at the Wollaston Baptist church on Sunday morning. The text was taken from Solomon, 6:10. During the service the church quartette rendered "Come unto me" by Morrison and "O Thou to whom all goodness flows," and at the close of the discourse Mr. Charles F. Wilde sang the solo, "Cast thy bread upon the water."

The vestry of the Wollaston Unitarian church was packed to suffocation on Wednesday evening with an audience eager to hear and see the dramatic and musical entertainment given by the children of the Sunday School. The affair was a decided success and reflected great credit upon the ladies who managed it as well as upon those who took part.

The programme was divided into two parts, first the musical play of "The Fairy of the Fountain," second the farce, "A Sea of Troubles," with these interspersed: Song with violin obligato given by Fred Thayer and Albert Armstrong; piano duet by Luella Jordan and Lulu Phelan; violin and piano duet by Clara S. Noyes and Elmer T. Noyes; and recitation by George E. Brown.

Parts in the plays were taken by Mollie Brown, Tyler Brigham, Lawrence Loring, Helen Sibley, Isadore C. Lull, Zanetta Sprague, Lulu Phelan, Fred Hewitt, Geo. F. Whittemore, Wm. Cooke, Clifton H. Baker, Percy A. Hull, Horace Thomas, Waldron Shumacher, Eugenia M. Hatch.

Mr. Frank A. Page of Wollaston, for many years superintendent of Rice & Hutchins, Troy Street factory, is now in charge of the company's great factory at Kennebunk, Me.

Against Annexation.

President Coe opened the meeting of the High School Debating club on Wednesday. Secretary Rothwell presented her report which was adopted. Under unfinished business the debate on the annexation of Quincy to Boston was concluded.

Affirmative, — Miss Gavin, Miss A. Healey, Miss C. Healey and Miss Hay.

Negative, — Miss Leake, Miss Lord, Miss Pitts, Miss Melzard and Miss Peterson.

Miss Leake for the negative objected to annexation on the ground that license instead of prohibition of the liquor traffic would prevail.

Miss Gavin favored the movement on account of Boston's improved sewerage, and fire department.

Miss Lord spoke for the negative. She said that Boston streets were not so well kept as Quincy's.

Miss Annie Healey maintained that Boston's experience in city government was now valuable. She anticipated a reduction in the tax-rate as a consequence of annexation.

Miss Melzard appeared as the champion of the Quincy schools. She said that they were noted throughout the country. Quincy's Chicago exhibit come in for a word of praise. The Quincy schools were declared to be superior to those of Boston. She objected to Boston's license system. The police department and the fire department of Quincy were highly praised.

Miss Catherine Healy said that annexation would benefit Quincy's business interests. Building would be encouraged. The park system would be improved. Miss Healy maintained that inhabitants of Quincy should have the preference when teachers are selected.

Miss Peterson said that the Council had already decided against annexation. Miss Hay attacked Quincy's streets and sidewalks, and described her trials in getting to school through the mud.

Miss Pitts objected to annexation. Boston is large enough already. Great size in cities leads to corruption. She objected to rum-shops. She maintained that too much could not be said against the evils of license. She stated that Quincy air was not devitalized as that of Boston is. Annexation would not bring Quincy any nearer Boston. Miss Pitts thought that Quincy girls ought to begin teaching away from home. Strangers are not so critical as friends.

Miss Garrity, Miss Pitts, Miss Coyle, Miss Leake, made additional remarks.

Mr. Frank Walsh, the critic, offered an interesting report.

The Board of Decision decided unanimously in favor of the negative.

A vote of the society resulted in an overwhelming majority against annexation.

—The Republican Town Committee of Weymouth met at the residence of Judge Flint Wednesday evening and organized with James H. Flint as chairman and Frank H. Mason as secretary. No action was taken on filling the vacancy in Wards Two and Three delegations. The committee will meet again next week.

ATLANTIC.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Coe of Billings street are spending a few days in Portland, Me.

Mr. Charles Huse, of Walker street, is to move his family to Boston for the balance of the winter.

Walter Clare, who has been sick for some time, is improving and will soon be able to be out again.

There has been a great deal of sickness in Atlantic of late. Several young people have been sick with diphtheria.

George Coleman, who have been very sick with scarlet fever, has greatly improved although his hearing has been impaired during his sickness.

Frozen water pipes at Mr. Frank Jenkins' house during the recent cold weather, burst, and the water did considerable damage by spotting the plastering.

The prayer meetings held at the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, in observance of the week of prayer, have been very well attended and have proved very enjoyable.

The Ladies' Benevolent society of the Memorial Congregational church met with Mrs. Theodore Parker last Wednesday afternoon. They are arranging a sale to take place the second Wednesday in March. Committees to have charge of this sale were chosen.

Rev. Edward Norton preached to a full church Sunday morning at Atlantic, an exceedingly interesting sermon on the New Year. Mrs. Cummings and Mr. Owen sang a duet and several selections were sung by the choir. In the evening the minister carried further his talk of the morning. Communion was administered at the close of the morning sermon.

The son of Mr. Allen of Botolph street, Atlantic, who has been sick with diphtheria, is reported as convalescing.

Miss Susie Hall was unable to assist in the choir at the Memorial Congregational church, Sunday, on account of a severe cold.

A large number of boys took advantage of the weather Sunday and enjoyed several hours skating on Teal pond. They were very quiet and orderly.

Atlantic people are looking forward to the next dancing party of the Massachusetts Bay Colony Pilgrim Fathers, to be held shortly in Music hall.

The horses on the combination wagon at Atlantic are exercised daily. They are looking to be in fine condition, much better than when they arrived. This is due to the careful grooming and fine care they are receiving from the hostler.

At the seventeenth annual meeting of the Boston Bicycling club, the oldest cycling organization in this country, on Wednesday evening, Dr. W. G. Kendall was re-elected Captain for the eighth consecutive term.

The regular monthly supper and entertainment of the Ladies' Benevolent society of the Memorial church takes place on Wednesday evening next at the church. Talent from Boston are to assist.

MILTON.

East Milton is waking up. It even objects to being known as a part of the rich, aristocratic town of Milton and is looking about for a new name. It has just been struck with the force of the saying that "a man is a boy so long as his father is alive and able to assert himself." Among the annoyances and inconvenience is that of the mails, many letters going to Milton and then being forwarded via New York, Boston or some other long circuit.

They feel however that electric cars from East Milton to Mattapan would do much to unite the town; that a grand avenue is needed through the heart of the town. What a convenience such a thoroughfare with electric cars would be to High school pupils, to voters on town meeting days, and on other occasions when they wish to visit the Town hall or churches.

But what for a new name for the delightful suburb? Not Railway Village as of old or Graniteville which might be appropriate, but as a part of Milton why would not Paradise Lost or Paradise or ———? Who will start a petition to the postoffice department for the change?

Tappan Egan has received the appointment as janitor of the High school buiding.

A tailor has put out his shingle in the Rugby block.

Rev. H. C. Vrooman, recently of the Congregational church, has accepted a call to the Third Congregational church at St. Louis.

A whist party in aid of the Free Home for Consumptives will be held at Ellsworth hall, Wednesday evening, Jan. 15.

The Sunday School of the Congregational church will hold a New Year's party at Washington hall, Saturday, from 4 to 6 o'clock. There will be games, music and refreshments.

Rev. Michael A. Doherty will occupy the pulpit at the Congregational church again on Sunday.

Last Sunday was a happy day for the worshipers at the Baptist church on arriving at the church. They found a new carpet on the floor and in the place of the old seats there was an entire new set of settees of a new pattern with hat racks and book racks complete. For the first time in their history they felt as though they were in a real church. At Sunday School the Superintendent, D. J. Brown, was presented by his many friends in the church and school with five elegant books. Although taken by surprise he thanked his friends the best he could for their love and affection.

Sunday, Jan. 19th, Rev. H. B. Williams will begin a series of sermons on the Life of Christ, the subjects will be announced next week.

First Church Sociable.

Even the zero weather could not keep down the spirits of the First church at its first sociable under the administration of its new pastor. A sociable and supper were called and the programme carried out under the good executive faculty of a committee of twelve chosen alphabetically. At 6 30 nearly two hundred sat down to a substantial supper. Unitarianism and pies were synonymous, for there were the succulent mince and the enticing lemon. A corps of young men poured Mrs. Field's famous coffee.

The stay at homes missed a cheery evening for something thawed the hitherto frozen spirit of our Unitarian brethren and sisters. Was it the fresh spirit of our new young Mayor or the welcome presence of our dear old pastor and his wife? Everybody talked with everybody. The young girls were out like a flower garden. Later a few cranks who eat lenten fare, and some conservative medical men came. A new genial medical man in our midst was there. Teachers in plenty dispensed wisdom. In fact everybody was there. All seemed happy and this New Year's break in the monotony of the church life left a most pleasant impression. There is still plenty of room left in the pews Sundays.

Best Little Purgativ

I ever used," writes one lady, in regard to Hood's Pills. "They are so mild and do their work without any griping. I recommend them to all suffering from costiveness. They will certainly bring your habits regular. We use no other cathartic." Hood's Pills are rapidly increasing in favor. 25c.

SOUTH QUINCY.

Merry Mount lodge, I. O. G. T., held an open meeting Thursday evening, which was quite largely attended and interesting.

Chief Templar, M. C. Holmes, presided, and there were addresses on temperance by Mr. O. C. Colton, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Willard O. Wilye, Grand Chief Templar and W. L. Hathaway, Grand Councillor.

There was also an interesting entertainment consisting of vocal solos by Mrs. M. C. Holmes and others, piano solo by Mrs. Lawton, duet by Misses Walker and Smith, reading by Mr. Weston and fancy dancing by little Miss Mischler.

The depot platform and waiting shed on the easterly side of the tracks at the Quincy Adams depot has been entirely removed and replaced with a gravel walk.

Mrs. Jerusha Keating, who died in Waltham on Monday, was one of the first worshipers of the Evangelical Congregational church, and for a number of years a member of the choir. But few can remember when services were held in the Town Hall. Committal services were held at the grave in the old Hancock cemetery on Wednesday by Rev. E. N. Hardy, the present pastor.

The Calvary Baptist church will hold the opening services of their new chapel on Franklin street on Sunday. All are cordially invited and strangers desirous of a church home will find one whose aim is to do as their Master did.

It was 12 below zero at Brewer's corner at 6 o'clock Monday morning and 10 below at L. M. Pratt & Co.'s store at South Quincy at 7 o'clock.

An express train passing through South Quincy Friday, Jan. 3, caught one of the street railway rails that is laid between the tracks wrenched it up and threw it some distance tearing off the step of one of the cars and also tearing a hole in the depot platform.

Sunday was the last day the Calvary Baptist Church will hold their meetings in Doble's hall. The Friday prayer meeting and choir practice on Saturday evening of this week will be in the new chapel on Franklin street at 7.30 o'clock. On Sunday the chapel will be opened and services will be held in the morning, afternoon and evening, at 10 30, 3 and 7.

McDonnell & Sons have sent the PATRIOT a large artistic calendar emblematic of the artistic memorial work which they do in granite. A large cross with angel in relief is the central figure.

A new business block is being erected on Water street near the junction of Quincy street.

St. John's Society Elect.

Tuesday evening the St. John's C. L. & A. A. elected these officers:

President,—George A. Cahill.
Vice President,—John F. Foley.
Recording Secretary,—William O'Donovan.
Financial Secretary,—Thomas F. Hogan.
Corresponding Secretary,—Michael J. O'Hara.
Treasurer,—Martin J. Garrity.
Librarian,—William A. Kingstree.
Assistant Librarian,—James Cantfill.
Chairman Dramatic Board,—John P. Mundy.
Superintendent,—Andrew Mischler.
Auditors, — George F. Ferguson, James O'Donovan and M. T. Sullivan.

The appreciation of the society for the very faithful two years' service of the retiring president, Mr. Richard A. Cole, was shown toward the close of the meeting, when the unanimous thanks of the society were given him.

Resignation Wanted.

The Journal asks the resignation of Congressman Atwood of this district; the Post seconds the motion, and the Globe moves to make it unanimous.

Ex-Mayor Porter has been interviewed and says Mr. Atwood misrepresents the district, and Henry H. Faxon says:

"I think that the ventilation in the courts of Mr. Atwood's career as city architect should open the eyes of hide-bound Republicans to the evil of supporting the party's nominees, whether they be worthy or unworthy of holding public office. I trust that this latest illustration of such folly will bring conviction to these partisans, and make them more independent in future political action. If not blind to reason, they must now be convinced that the Peabody letter did not contain any exaggeration.

"I opposed Mr. Atwood from the starting point of his candidacy, and I have never regretted my position in regard to him.

"Mr. Peabody from the first has shown courage which few men possess, and the thanks of every honest voter in the district are due him."

High School Reunion,

FRIDAY EVENING, JAN. 24, 1896.

Reception. Addresses and Music. Refreshments, Dancing.

All graduates of the Quincy High School are invited to attend the annual reunion to be held at the new High School Building on Hancock street, Friday evening, Jan. 24, 1896 at 7.30 o'clock.

The Board of Government urges each and ever graduate to give this reunion the support of his or her presence and hearty interest. To once a year renew old school ties and revive old memories would seem to be a pleasant thing, and the future of the Association depends largely upon the success of this meeting. Graduates at a distance can materially aid by becoming members of the Association; the annual dues of 50 cents may be forwarded to Mr. C. Eaton Pierce, treasurer.

Tickets are limited to the graduates, but each can purchase two so that they may have an escort. They may be procured of any of the board, at seventy-five cents each, or at John O. Holden's store. 154 Hancock street, Quincy. Please inform the Treasurer at your earliest convenience, whether you desire one or two tickets, that arrangements may be made.

Hon C. F. Adams, 2d, Mayor-elect of the city of Quincy has accepted an invitation of the Association to be its guest, and many of the past and present teachers of the school and school superintendents are expected.

The reunion will consist of a reception speeches, music, and a two to three hours' dance. Light refreshments will be served at 9 o'clock. A good orchestra will be in attendance throughout the evening.

HOWARD W. BATTISON, '85, President.
MISS MABEL E. OXFORD, '93, Secretary.

How To Reason.

There's a right way and wrong way to reason. Its wrong to reason that you can get along without extra Comforters and Blankets on zero nights, for such reason may bring upon you a cold that will lead to a serious sickness.

It's wisdom, good judgment and right reason, that teaches a man he can ill afford to take chances. It's the duty of everyone to protect their health—reason demands it, and there's more reason in the goods we offer at these prices than words can tell.

New Moon Jan. 14, 5.19 P. M.

THE FINANCIAL situation of the city received foremost and careful consideration by Mayor Adams in his inaugural address. While our general debt is not large, it is unfortunate that so much falls due in one year. The total is but $264,895 61, less than two per cent. of the valuation, and considerably inside the limit of $400,000; but about $50,000, or over twenty per cent., falls due this year, requiring alone a tax of $3 per $1,000. Were the debt apportioned equally over ten years as allowed by law, the maturing debt would be but $27,000 this year, and the tax rate $1.50 less than it will be. The utmost care should be taken in apportioning new debts, to relieve taxpayers for a few years, when the water payments fall heavy, for the outlook five to ten years hence is encouraging. The tax rate has probably reached high water mark, but no material reduction is anticipated while the debt is being paid so rapidly.

No one can question but the two school houses asked are needed, and they should be completed before next September, and progressive citizens will endorse the Mayor's recommendation of brick.

As there is a balance from the appropriation for water extensions, no further appropriation seems necessary this year, particularly as the water supply runs low and the Metropolitan supply may not come for a few years.

Sewer construction should not be commenced until it is known whether Quincy is going into the Metropolitan county. It is contemplated to put sewers under county control, and probably in one system, and it should be one of Quincy's first petitions to the county, to extend to us the sewer system.

The conclusions of the Mayor regarding street lighting and electric wires commend themselves, and the LEDGER has already commented upon the proposed boulevard. The bouyant spirit throughout the message encourages the people to loyalty and pride in their city.

THE REPRESENTATIVES from Quincy in the Legislature are entitled to a new deal, for in the appointments of committees neither of the two gentlemen have an ace, face card or trump. A hasty glance over the list discovered Representative Newcomb well down in the Committee on Liquor Laws, and Representative Thompson last on the Committee on Fisheries and Game. That neither of these gentlemen are on the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs, Cities, Manufactures, Taxation, or Counties is a disappointment to the voters of Quincy, interested in these important matters. Representative Flint of Weymouth has fared very well indeed being House chairman of the Committee on Counties, and also Street Railways, and second on the House committee on Probate and Insolvency. It is the reelected members who get the best positions, and Quincy which only elects for two years generally does not take the prominent part it should.

HEARINGS ON the Metropolitan county scheme will be started by the Legislative Committee next Tuesday. The committee will probably do its prettiest to rush the matter through, but it is hoped the hearings will be representative ones. The commotion which it will cause in Norfolk, Middlesex and Essex counties seems entirely uncalled for. We have got Metropolitan parks and Metropolitan water, and if Quincy wants Metropolitan sewers it can have them, and that is all the Metropolitan business the city wants.

LAWYERS SEEM to predominate among the new Mayors of Massachusetts cities, there being ten out of thirty-one, in Boston, Quincy, Somerville, Cambridge, Lowell, Northampton, Haverhill, Woburn, Pittsfield and Waltham. There are however three druggists, while these occupations are also represented:—Baker, mill owner, hatter, mariner, builder, shoemaker, mill overseer, provisions, coal, pension agent, broker, measurer of leather, real estate, mill stock, furniture and fisherman.

Quincy Club Banquet.

The turnpike road to people's hearts I find,
Lies through their mouths, or I mistake mankind.—Dr. Walcott.

The Greenleaf is the place and the members of the Quincy Club the company, if one wants to enjoy a good time. Therefore the annual banquet of this progressive and prosperous club Tuesday evening was a happy occasion and a grand success. Young life was there, and it was a pleasure to look upon them in the pretty dining room. Mr. Hayden, the landlord, had prepared the following excellent menu, which was served in courses:

Blue Points on Deep Shell,
Consomme Royal,
Boiled Salmon,
French Peas,
Boiled Ham,
Roast Beef, Roast Chicken,
Cranberry Sauce,
Mashed Potatoes. Sweet Corn,
Queen Fritters,
Lemon Milk Sherbet,
Apple Pie,
Lemon Pie,
Assorted Cake,
Vanilla Ice Cream,
Bent's Crackers, Cheese,
Tea, Coffee.

There were two long tables side by side and the members and guests were seated as in the LEDGER diagram. Mr. John H. Bent, the newly elected president, presided. It was the pleasure of the representative of the LEDGER to have a seat at the left of genial Sam Weston, and to find him the same good natured witty gentleman that he was as one of the end men at the recent ministrel show. He has been an extensive traveller, not only in this country but in South America, including Brazil and the much talked about Venezuela. It took nearly two hours to satisfy the inner man, and then there was a social hour.

President Bent presided with grace and welcomed members and guests, and congratulated the club on its success. His wish was that it might rank among the first in the vicinity.

William S. Osborne, the treasurer, was introduced as one of the most active members. He was pleased to see those present who had contributed to make the minstrel show a success and in turn presented pipes to Sam Weston and Fred E. Jones, and a watch and chain to "Little Pete," better known perhaps to many as Warren Mitchell.

The gentlemen accepted the gift in short speeches, and Little Pete said: "I thank all the members of the club." He also sang a solo.

Brief speeches were made by ex-President J. Q. Cudworth, Russell A. Sears, Frank F. Prescott, Councilman E. G. Cleaves, Henry L. Kincaide and D. E. Wadsworth. These were interspersed with "Snyder's Band," "Ben Bolt," and the "Finale" by the minstrel chorus, and piano solos by Prof. Wrigley, and at 11 P. M. the company adjourned.

Locked Up This Time.

Benjamin Stover, the 10-year-old juvenile who has figured in no less than six thieving exploits during the past few weeks, and who when arraigned in court last week Thursday, for breaking and entering the stores of E. B. Souther and F. F. Crane, and placed on probation for a month, it being thought that he would reform, is still at it.

From all appearances he has no intention of reforming, for Tuesday afternoon, he in company with a younger brother went to the house of Mrs. Vitie at 26 Granite street and asked permission to come in and warm themselves, which was readily granted.

They seated themselves by the stove and, while left alone a few moments Benjamin's eye discovered a pocket-book on the mantel which contained $45. This he lost no time in stealing and making himself scarce. Soon after he departed for Boston where he had a good time. He bought skates, rubber boots and other articles.

In the mean time the police had been notified and knowing the habits of the boy, Inspector McKay went to Boston and soon located the boy on Kneeland street. He placed him under arrest and brought him to Quincy. When arrested Benjamin had but $10.50 of the money left.

Inspector McKay went to Boston Wednesand with the Stover boy and recovered $10 from a pawn broker. It seems the boy went in there to buy a small watch which the pawnbroker said was $10. He gave the money, but the broker instead of handing out the watch he purchased passed out a cheap watch which Stover would not take, and was informed that he could either take that or nothing. As the boy could not get back the money or the watch he wanted, he got nothing.

Benjamin Stover, the juvenile who has committed numerous acts of thieving during the past few weeks, was called. What disposition to make of his case puzzled the court somewhat. The proper place for the boy was the Lyman school, but as they have diphtheria there it was impossible to make that disposition of the case at present, but as the danger from diphtheria would be passed by the latter part of the month, the case was continued until Jan. 30 and he was ordered to recognize in $200 for his appearance at that time. Being unable to furnish the required bonds he was committed to Dedham.

The Clan McGregor-Westland case has again been continued until Jan. 25. Several of the government witnesses appeared this morning in relation to their witness fees and were informed by the clerk that they would not be paid until the case was finished, and that they were not to appear as witnesses until legally summoned by an officer.

K. of H. Installation.

The officers of Wollaston Lodge, K. of H., were publicly installed on Monday evening by Dist. Deputy Grand Master W. T. Murray of Union Lodge and suite,—Deputy Past Grand Director C. C. Merrifield, Deputy Grand Guide Geo. O. Richardson, and Grand Reporter E. Granville Pratt. After the installation a light lunch was served and speeches were made by the District Deputy and his suite, and Grand Asst. Dictator G. G. Purdy, Past Dictators Sherman, Orcutt, Battison, Roberts and Cummings. The officers:—

P. D.,—Mr. J. Battison.

For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, Jan. 9, 1896.

"Where McGregor sits is the head of the table" and though the Democratic conference has voted that Mr. Quirk of Boston shall be the chairman of their party caucus whenever one is called, it will make precious little difference. The real leader of the Democracy will be James H. Mellen of Worcester and Mr. Quirk will have only an empty name. But it is all wrong for either party to start off with so much anxiety regarding real or nominal leadership. The house is not here, nor the senate either, for the sake of forwarding the ambitions of any men, or of any party. There promises to be too much of foolish playing for political position and too little forgetfulness of persons and party in the service of the public.

The house committeeships seem to be as satisfactory as usual. The committee on constitutional amendments seems made up to assure the passage of the biennial amendment which has been taken from the files of last year and referred to this committee. As the committee was announced, only one of the senate members and only two of the house members were unknown in their preferences. It is not certain that there is but one man on the committee of eleven who is opposed to the amendment. As there is strong opposition this year to the passage of the amendment, it hardly seems like treating the minority with due consideration. Some of the strongest Republican names in the state are signed to a statement against the amendment and the effort of the business and wealthy portion of the community generally to pass the amendment will be strongly resisted by those who believe that true safety in politics consists in keeping the office holders close to the people, even though it may necessitate an election every year. Good government is the stake and many of the people are willing to sacrifice something to secure it.

Speaking of the ambition of members, there has just been a display of disappointment in the senate which will not help the member who made the demonstration. Senator Sanger of Suffolk, who was an unsuccessful candidate for the presidency of the senate, was apppointed by President Lawrence second on the judiciary committee, second on rules, first on constitutional amendments and so on. In the senate he rose to a question of privilege and aired his grievance at not getting the chairmanship of the judiciary, said that he did not want to be so near to the president as in second place on rules, and resigned all of his places, except that on the judiciary, which he deemed of most honor. But he has not helped himself by his display. Men are sent to the legislature to serve the public, not for their political preferment, and any man who takes such umbrage at a supposed slight only hurts himself.

The warlike tone of the times is echoed in the matters which are presented to the legislature. Mr. T. F. Keenan of Boston, whom the members of last year will hold in lively recollection, has offered a set of resolutions setting forth the assault upon our national dignity which has been made by England. Mr. Keenan did not want it disposed of in the prosaic way of reference to the committee on federal relations, but moved a suspension of the rules. But the house thought that deliberation was a prerequisite in such matters and sent the bill to the committee. Mr. J. H. Mellen of Worcester also put in a resolution for an inquiry to be made regarding the condition of our coast defenses and of our military forces, in view of the danger of war with Great Britain. This was referred to the committee on military affairs. He did not ask for a suspension of the rules.

The legislature has lost almost the first week of the session by a needless delay in the announcement of committees. Speaker Meyer had the idea that it would be better to abolish the committee on taxation and to put its work on the finance committee. He also wanted the name of the latter committee changed to "ways and means." But it was suspected that the cat in the meal in the proposed consolidation of committees was to make it easier to get legislation in favor of some of the speaker's taxation ideas. So there was a strong protest in the senate, after the house had let the change pass through unchallenged out of compliment to the speaker. The evils of the change were emphasized and the consequence was that the new plan has only one vote in its favor. The change of name has been accomplished, so that now there is a senate ways and means, a house ways and means and a joint ways and means, instead of the committees on treasury, finance and expenditure, by which these committees were formerly called. The change only makes more work and does good to nobody. RULE.

Young Men's Christian Asso.

The regular meeting at the rooms Sunday will be omitted, and instead, a service for men and women will be held in the auditorium of the Congregational church, Quincy. Mr. Francis Batchelder, Ex-Mayor of Everett, will speak on "The Young Men of Our Commonwealth." Mr. Batchelder is a prominent business man of Boston and a good speaker.

The monthly meeting of the board of directors was held Tuesday. The resignation of Rev. Edward Norton as director and vice president was received and accepted. The pressing duties of Mr. Norton's new charge at Atlantic made it necessary for him to resign his duties in the Association. In accepting his resignation the board voted to extend to him their appreciation of the services rendered.

It was decided to organize a class in German, under the direction of Mr. B. C. Schroeder, the well-known instructor in languages.

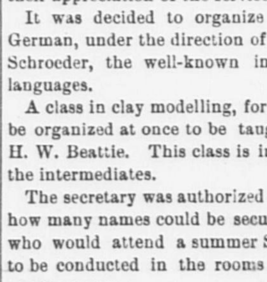

A class in clay modelling, for boys, will be organized at once to be taught by Mr. H. W. Beattie. This class is intended for the intermediates.

The secretary was authorized to ascertain how many names could be secured of boys who would attend a summer Sloyd school to be conducted in the rooms in Quincy next summer.

Special Police.

Mayor Adams has appointed the following special police:—James W. Murray, George A. McKay, John A. O'Brien, George A. Cameron, John H. Newcomb, Edward J. Sandberg, David J. Barry, Henry O. Frank Hoak was fined $5 for drunkenness at Quincy.

William Gurney was arraigned for drunkenness at Quincy. Case continued one week.

Two men, both named Charles Anderson, were arraigned for drunkenness at Quincy. One Charles had money and was fined $5, the other Charles had none and was released.

On Fire for Third Time.

The fire department had a stubborn fire to contend with Tuesday night at the residence of Judge Everett C. Bumpus on Goffe street. It was nearly 7 o'clock when a fire was noticed near the chimney in the southerly front room on the first floor.

The man employed at the house ran to Box 26 and word was also telephoned to the Central station. The man was unfamiliar with giving alarms of fire, and after he had pulled the hook he held it down. This caused one blow. He waited a few minutes and then ran to Box 23, and gave an alarm from there, and as a result, alarms were finally sounded on the the bells from Box 23 and 26.

Meanwhile the department which had been notified by telephone were hard at work at the fire. The blaze ran up between the walls and then along beneath the floor, making an extremely difficult fire to get at. Line of hose were taken up through the hallway, and another line through one of the windows, but water was not turned on as the fire had not been reached. The hand chemicals were however, used with good effect.

It was necessary to almost entirely cut away the floor before the fire was reached and it was thought several times that it had been extinguished only to have it break out again, so that it was after 9 o'clock before the recall was sounded. But very little water was used which will make the loss much less than it would otherwise have been. As it is the loss will be over $300.

Down stairs Officers McKay and Murray were on duty at the doors to keep the crowd out of the house, and willing hands soon removed the costly pictures and furniture in the lower rooms to other parts of the house.

This house seems fated as it is the third time the department has been called there within a few months.

West Quincy Fire.

The alarm from Box 47, at 7.55 Jan. 3, followed almost immediately by a second round from the same box, called the fire department to a stubborn fire in a double house on Grove street.

Good time was made but upon reaching the scene of action the whole house was enveloped in flames and they were bursting out all over the roof, and another stream of fire was coming from the chimney in the centre of the house. Three streams were quickly brought into play, one from the hydrant near the corner of Bates avenue, and two from a hydrant near the house. These streams had a telling effect, but the fire had gained such headway with the high wind that it was some time before it was under control and the inside was pretty badly gutted as well as thoroughly soaked with water.

The house was owned by Patrick McAloon and one side was occupied by Timothy Fitzgerald, the other side being vacant.

The fire apparently caught in the unoccupied part from some unknown cause. Mr. Fitzgerald was able to remove a good part of his household effects. It is hard at present to estimate the loss on the building and contents but it will probably not exceed $500.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

C. H. Porter Chairman.

The annual meeting of the School committee for 1896 was held Tuesday evening, Mr. Porter being the only member absent.

After the introduction of the new to the old members, Secretary Lull called the meeting to order and Mr. Page was elected temporary chairman and Mr. Gurney temporary secretary.

Ex-Mayor Charles H. Porter was upon ballot elected permanent chairman and H. W. Lull secretary.

Mr. Lull was also elected Superintendent of Schools at a salary of $2,400.

As the newly elected chairman was not present, the board adjourned until next Tuesday evening.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The Council of 1895 made quite a record for itself, having held during the year 39 meetings.

The shortest meeting of the year was held Nov. 18, the council being in session eight minutes. Other short meetings were held on the evenings of August 30 and Nov. 12.

The longest session was held on the evening of June 3, when the Council adjourned at 11.30 having been in session 3 hours and 55 minutes. The next longest was on the evening of May 20 when the Council was in session for 3 hours and 40 minutes.

During the year 164 orders were introduced the most of which were passed. There were also four resolutions introduced and the number of petitions received, outside of those for licenses, was 92.

Of the matters considered by the Council the more important were those in relation to the sewerage system, metropolitan water supply and school houses.

The New Council.

Only six of the Council of 1896 are without experience in the legislative branch of our city, but Messrs. Claflin, Cleaves, Field, Little, Murray and Rideout are among our intelligent citizens and may be as conspicuous as some of the older members.

Messrs. Bryant and Rinn each enter their fourth year, having been in the Councils of 1891, 1892, and 1895. Mr. Anderson served in 1893 and 1894, and Mr. Lamb in 1894 and 1895. All the others have served one year, Mr. Holt in 1892, Mr. Badger in 1893, and the balance in 1895.

J. Q. A. Field is probably the oldest in years, and Fred B. Rice the youngest.

A Mysterious Hand.

A few evenings since a box in the first tier at the opera was observed to be empty, though the entire house, with this exception, was crowded to excess. Two spectators, who had not seats to their liking, went to the door of this box, but could not obtain admission. The ouvreuse, who has charge of opening and shutting the box doors, insisted that the box held but five, and that the five were already within.

The gentlemen regained their seats, fully determined to lay their complaint before the chef de controle. With this view they begged those around them to observe that the box was empty.

"Perfectly empty," cried all unanimously.

But just then, as all were gazing, what was their terror at beholding a white hand, apparently detached from any body, moving along the edge of the box, and holding an ivory opera glass. This hand, isolated and flitting about in the darkness produced a terrible effect. The two gentlemen, pale with surprise and affright, remained immovable and speechless. Presently other white hands made their appearance, one of them holding a white handkerchief and going through the motions of wiping a forehead.

The house was of course very dimly lighted, which aided the excitement and delusion. But no sooner was the gas turned on than those nearest to the mysterious box burst into a shout of laughter. The occupants of the box were five negroes, completely dressed in black, with their coats buttoned up, and elegantly gloved in white. Hidden by the darkness, they had remained invisible in the shades of their "loge," or "open box."—Boston Home Journal.

Eye for Examination.

It is reported that a short time ago, an order was issued on one of the lines of the Pennsylvania company for all section men to come to the office on a certain day, and have their eyes examined. The following day, a number of men appeared, and passed the examination.

Just before the man who had charge of the tests left the office, a messenger boy came hurrying in with a small package neatly tied up and addressed to the eye inspector. The latter opened it, and was surprised to find a glass eye wrapped up in tissue paper, and also an old-fashioned silver watch. The contents of the package proved a puzzle to the inspector until he unfolded a hastily scribbled note, which on being deciphered, was found to read as follows:

"Oye inspector. Dear Sir: The day before yesterday at nune I got word to cum down and have me ise looked after for culur blindness as ye call it. I had 45 ties and 10 rales to put down beyond the sand cut, and as jerry Sullivan and Dominick Coolly were laid up since the wake that wuz holded over the ded corpus of Danny Doherty my hands were too short to spare me. 'Twas lucky that the rite oye that was first in my aed was put out with a blow of a pik and me glass oye that is a perfect figger of the eye that was not put out is sent to you together with my watch for hexamination. I could spare the glass oye beter than the oye in the head, and if she is culur blind Il get one that aint. Yours Truely, Anthony Driscoll."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Sure Cure for Burglaries.

Residents of suburban towns whose lives are made unhappy by burglars should try this scheme. Save up all the newspapers that come into the house, and, before going to bed, strew them before windows through which access might be had to the house, and also before the doors of sleeping rooms and near the house safe or silver closet. An old time burglar who has reformed and has no further use for the knowledge himself says that there are three things a night thief dreads. One is a baby, the second a little whiffet dog that can sleep with both eyes open and barks when a needle falls, and the third is a newspaper. Almost always the paper rattles or crackles when a foot touches it. Unless a burglar is so desperate that he will risk his own life, he will leave the moment he strikes a house strewn with newspapers.

Winter Dreams.

CLINTON SCOLLARD.

All the voices of the wind
Sank to slumber with the sun;
Lest the ways of night be blind,
Burn the beacons one by one
Where the bastions of the sky
In their ancient wonder lie.

Wide the solitudes of snow,
Flawed by no assailing breath,
Slumber in the spectral glow,
Wan as is the face of death;
Fixed in fear the woodland seems,
And the air is full of dreams.

One of this aerial brood
Fate has bidden comrade me:
Suddenly my sombre mood
Kindles to expectancy,
And there beat within my brain
Presages of April rain.

Oh, for all the dreams of night,
If this transient one has power
So to touch the source of light,
So to set the gloom aflower!
Then, mayhap, to stay my need,
In my heart were spring indeed.

Notes and Comments.

—Girls we wish to call your attention to the fact that 1896 is a leap year, and this leap year has a peculiar feature, in that it will be the last for eight years.

— There is talk of establishing a daily paper at Hyde Park. Some one must have money to burn. There would certainly be no possible chance in that field, so near Boston, of ever reaping a harvest of dollars and cents, and a man of sense and dollars won't waste his time and money in such a venture.—Dedham Transcript.

—The Beverly Citizen says that every window glass factory in the United States will shut down Jan. 11 for four weeks.

—The Norfolk County Superior Civil Court is in session at Dedham, before Judge Blodgett, this week. The jurymen from Quincy for this term are George A. Mayo, Charles F. Colby and John Joss.

—A victim of domestic infelicity, who is in the habit of dreaming, should never go to sleep in church. A congregation near Quincy (that probably means Weymouth,) was somewhat startled one Sabbath when a venerable member yelled, "Here, now, drop that skillet, old woman!"—Massachusetts Ploughman.

—James Means & Co. have closed up their shoe manufacturing business in Brockton. Means was the originator of the $3 shoe, and made a large fortune from his specialty, being a bold and persistent advertiser.

—During 1895 the number of deeds mortgages and other real estate transactions recorded by the Registry of Deeds for this county footed up the total of 11,481.

—The Massachusetts buildings at Atlanta, Ga., is to be turned over to the Daughters of the American Revolution in that city.

—The twenty-second of February will be the next holiday, excepting in the states where Lincoln's birthday—February 12—is celebrated.

—Several Weymouth fishermen have bargained with wholesalers in Boston to take their smelts the entire season for 16 cents per pound.

—Nevada has a toboggan slide which starts from an ice palace on a mountain and lands in an orange grove in a valley.

—The Supreme Court has decided that a smooth worn ten cent silver piece is still a legal tender, to pay debts with, and a common carrier who refuses it is at the risk of paying a heavy fine.

—Brockton is to have a passenger station plant that at the present time at least is equalled by very few in the entire country and eclipsed by a still smaller number. It will cost in round figures $300,000. —Hingham Journal.

—The New York Herald offers a prize of $100 to the woman who best answers this question: "How far may a woman go to encourage a man to propose marriage?" This is apropos of leap year. What smart lady in Quincy can win this prize?

—Chicago proposes to make the street railroads furnish seats for all passengers, or else a 3 cent fare for all who stand.

—Recent uttrances on the part of certain college professors, says the Pawtucket Chronicle, ought to open the eyes of some people to the danger of employing Englishmen, or Americans with English proclivities to teach young Americans.

—One of the large insurance companies of England states in its annual report that the La Grippe has cost it more in the last two years than in the previous 43 years altogether.

—This scheme for a "metropolitan" county will not be wanted by many people. It would provide a few more offices, greatly increase taxes and help to wipe out local pride and local self government. In placing the parks, water supply and sewer systems under State control, the suburban towns and cities have surrendered about all that is expedient in the way of managing their own affairs, and no wonder that they are beginning to get uneasy. —Boston Record.

—Rumor has it that the N. Y., N. H. & H., and B. & A. R. R. are to build the largest railway passenger station in the world on Kneeland street, Boston, before long. The New England station at the foot of Summer street will be given up, and the temini of the three great roads brought together on the Kneeland street line. The new station, if built, will cover fourteen acres of land, it is said, and measure 650x800 feet, costing $3,000,000, the most expensive railway station on the continent.

—Another peacemaker has come—the improved Gatling gun, which, operated by an electric motor, will fire 1800 shots a minute. Inventions in this line, says the Salem Daily Gazette, should be encouraged by all who look for universal peace. They are more effective than all the oral or written arguments in the world.

—The Ploughman says: "Many a young man's best capital is his poverty, while the man who has more to start with often ends with less."

—The possibilities of modern warfare were indicated by Thomas A. Edison, in an interview during the war scare. Mr. Edison declares that he would turn his wonderful inventive skill and electrical research to the purpose of war and the extermination of men only for the preservation of his own country, but if the occasion arose he thinks he could present some devices which would revolutionize warfare and practically make it impossible. Mr. Edison is no visionist, and when he says that a whole invading army could be electrocuted in a twinkling simply by the pressure of a button, the possibilities seem enormous. Two or three men, he claims, with dynamos and the assistance of streams of running water conducted by hose pipes, could besiege a city or exterminate a host.

—A remarkable article has been published by a New York paper, in which a man earning $1.75 per day was made to tell what he would do if he were a millionaire, while Collis P. Huntington, the railroad magnate, guessed at his actions should he find himself reduced to $1.75 per day. The rich man declared that he would try to accumulate another fortune by spending a little less than he earned, but the poor man declared that he would devote his time and much of his fortune to charitable work. He very sensibly declared that he would never give the poor money outright, but would help them to earn it, and he would try to reform only the children. A man with such a head as that should be made the almoner for some wealthy man—Mr. Collis P. Huntington, for instance. —Boston Home Journal.

—Quite a number of the holidays of this year, including Washington's birthday, Ardor Day, Decoration Day and the Fourth of July, come on Saturdays.

—A woman in Biddeford, Me., banged her husband over the face with a shovel, and was arrested for the offence. She was fined $3 and costs; and as she was without money, her husband had the satisfaction of opening his pocketbook and paying the fine.

—The Boston Record says, "Give us a girl of the type of Miss Sophie Carpenter of Germantown, Penn.!" She is going to marry a foreigner, a Mr. Gorgigianna of Florence, some time next June; but she is not going to be hauled away from her own land by a foreigner. She will remain in her native country, and the young man from Florence comes over here and becomes an American.

—Enoch Robinson, for two generations superintendent of the Old Collony Iron Works at East Taunton, died recently, aged 87. As foreman of the forging department of the Bridgewater Iron Works, Mr. Robinson made the axels of the first cars run in America; those from the Quincy quarries to the river, where the experiment was first tried. He lived to see the great railway system of America develop from that feeble beginning.

—Brockton broke the world's record for shoe shipments last year by shipping 444,763 cases, which is 20,727 cases more than in 1894. This makes Brockton the greatest shoe manufacturing centre in the country.

Rough on the Toe.

A lady, greviously tormented with a corn on one of her toes, was advised by a friend to anoint it with phosphorus, which in a weak moment she did, but forgot to tell her husband before retiring at night. It had just struck twelve when the husband awoke, and was startled to see something sparkle at the foot of the bed. He had never heard of a firefly in the locality, nor did he never remember seeing such a terrible looking object as the toe presented. Reaching carefully out of his bed till he found one of his slippers, he raised it high in the air, and brought it down with terrible force upon the mysterious light. A shriek and an avalanche of bed clothes, and all was over. When at last he released himself from the avalanche he discovered his wife groaning in the corner. He had struck the phosphorated toe!

Animal Food.

Pat Shinnegan works on the Allen place, and his mind is no poetic mind, although he believes in license, and whatever come, into it receives a literal construction that sometimes makes it unrecognizable when it comes out again. In fact, Pat's mind is a very sausage machine of a mind.

Now it happened that Pat felt unwell for some days, and so, as his employer is an M. D full fledged, albeit somewhat young in years, Pat applied to him for a remedy. The doctor asked the symptoms, felt the pulse, examined the tongue, and did what ever else professional etiquette demanded. Then said he:

"Patrick, you're run down a bit, that's all. What you need is animal food." And Pat departed quite contented.

About two days afterward the doctor happened to think of his case, and called on Pat in the stable.

"Well, Pat, how are we getting on with the treatment?"

"Oh, shure, sir," said Pat, "Oi manage all right with the grain and oats; but it's domned har rd with the chopped hay.

Nantucket is famous for auctions. They are held in the public square. Meat auctions, furniture auctions. There are few things one cannot buy at auction if one bides one's time. Whenever an old home is broken up or a resident leaves the island, the unwanted effects are closed out at auction for whatever they will bring.

At the last one I attended a refrigerator was put up.

"Too late. The season's over," shouted some one in the crowd.

"But there'll be another, and perhaps a hot one," said the auctioneer.

"But one may die before that," said the other.

"Well," replied the auctioneer, "if you die you'll be sorry that you hadn't bought a refrigerator and taken it along with you!"—Harper's Magazine

Anecdotes.

"Now you may tell the court the circumstances of your husband's disappearance," said the lawyer to Mrs. Persimmons.

"Well, sir," replied the good lady, "he went out one morning, and it wasn't more than half an hour till he never came back."

Mr. Jagsby—"My, dear, allow me to introduce Mr. Bagsby."

Mrs. Jagsby—"I am delighted to meet you, Mr. Bagsby. But do you know, Mr. Bagsby, that I have so often heard you helping Mr. Jagsby to get the front door open when he had come home late at night that it is almost the same as meeting an old friend."—Indianapolis Journal.

Elder sister—"Come, Stanley, take your powder like a little man. You never hear me making any complaint about such a little thing as that."

Stanley (peevishly)—"Neither would I if I could daub it on my face. It is swallerin' it that I object to.—Brooklyn Life.

"Excuse me, sir," said a perfect stranger, walking into Top's sanctum; but does your paper carry any life insurance?"

Top answered him with another question: "Do you happen to carry any fire insurance yourself?"

"Why, no, I—I—" stammered the intruder.

"Well, if you go out quietly you won't be fired. But, if no——"

The stranger took the hint forthwith.

Greater Boston.

The Metropolitan District Commission, of which Hon. William B. Rice of this city is chairman, has made a voluminous report to the Legislature, and we submit the bill first with comments following:

SECTION 1. The territor referred to in this act as the metropolitan district is as follows, to wit: the municipal areas of Boston, Chelsea, Revere, Winthrop; Arlington, Belmont, Cambridge, Everett, Lexington, Malden, Medford, Melrose, Newton, Somerville, Stoneham, Wakefield Waltham, Watertown, Winchester, Woburn; Lynn, Nahant, Saugus, Swampscott; Brookline Dedham, Hyde Park, Milton and Quincy.

SECT. 2. On the thirteenth of May, eighteen hundred and nin-ty-six, there shall be submitted to a vote of the duly qualified electors of the aforesaid cities and towns, at a special election held for that purpose, the question, Shall a new county be formed of, the cities and towns which make up the metropolitan district? On this question the electors voting shall vote yes or no.

SECT. 3. It shall be the duty of the secretary of state of the Commonwealth to prepare and provide properly printed ballots for the purpose of taking the aforesaid vote, to canvass the returns of votes cast made by the city and town election officers of the said metropolitan district, certify the same and make an official declaration of the result. In order that the proposition may be declared adopted, it will be necessary, first, that in a majority of the municipalities of the said metropolitan district a majority of the votes thrown shall be affirmative votes; and, second, that a majority of the votes cast in the entire said metropolitan district shall be affirmative votes.

SECT. 4. If a sufficient number of the electors of the metropolitan district, voting as aforesaid, shall vote in the affirmative, the governor, by and with the consent of the council, shall, on or before the fifteenth of July, eighteen hundred and nine-six, appoint a commission consisting of five citizens of the metropolitan district, one at least residing in those parts of each of the counties of Suffolk, Middlesex, Norfolk and Essex that are within the said metropolitan district, which shall be known as the metropolitan county commission.

SECT. 5. The said metropolitan county commission shall prepare and report to the next general court, in the form of a bill, a method of county government for the metropolitan district, this to include the powers now exercised in the said district by existing county officers, whether exercised concurrently with other boards and officers or otherwise, as well as those now vested in the metropolitan sewer commission, the metropolitan park commission and the metropolitan water commission, together with such other public duties as in the opinion of the said county commission are general rather than local in their character. The method of county government thus prepared shall consist, so far as its legislative functions are concerned, of a county council, in which reasonable representation shall be accorded to each city and town in the said metropolitan district.

SECT. 6. The said metropolitan county commission shall also arrange for the transfer of the county property located in said metropolitan district to the proposed new county, shall indicate the terms and conditions under which such transfer may be made, and shall also report upon the increased accommodations needed in Boston to carry on the court business and registries of deeds of the said proposed new county.

SECT. 7. Pending final action upon this question, the county commissioners of Norfolk and Middlesex are prohibited from making more than ordinary and necessary alterations and repairs upon the county buildings situated within the borders of the aforesaid metropolitan district: provided, that nothing herein contained shall prohibit the continuance of work on new buildings under contract for construction at the time of the passage of this act.

SECT. 8. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

The investigation is generally satisfactory upon the point that it does not recommend annexation, the commission having found that unpopular. But one county of the Metropolitan district, as proposed in the bill above, may be equally unpopular. We question very much whether the city of Quincy desires to drop from the "largest municipality in Norfolk county" to the insignificant position it would occupy in the new county. Now Quincy has a population of 20,712 in a total of 134,819 in the Norfolk county, over one-seventh. It also has about one-seventh of the voters—4,325 in a total of 31,565. In the new county there would be 982,037 people, over one-half residing in Boston, and Quincy with proportionate representation would have only one in fifty.

Concerning Norfolk county the report says:

"Norfolk county has twenty-seven towns, of which five, Brookline, Dedham, Hyde Park, Milton and Quincy, are in the Metropolitan district. The county extends from Cohasset on the northeast, to Bellingham, at the Rhode Island border, on the southwest. Except so far as some of the more distant towns are in a lesser degree tributary to Boston, the five municipalities in the metropolitan district have little interest in common with their county associates. Bellingham and Wrentham have a closer natural affiliation with Providence, R. I., than they have with Quincy and Brookline. This last-named town has been, by the annexation of West Roxbury to Boston, entirely cut off from Norfolk County it has no direct and convenient means of access to the shire town, and little if any interest in the rest of the county; so that the fact that under such conditions it has continued for the last twenty years to remain without protest in the county, shows both the force of habit and the all but complete decay of the old theories and methods of county administration. The other four municipalities—Dedham, Hyde Park, Milton and Quincy—are more closely grouped together and more nearly connected with the rest of the county; but their connection with and interest in it are not to be compared with their connection with and interest in Boston. While the latter relation is constantly growing, as they become, with improved means of transportation, more and more the residences of those whose living is made in Boston, the strength of the former tie is constantly decreasing.

"If the municipalities making up the metropolitan district are to contribute largely to the maintenance of the county courts, it is not asking to much to have these courts so located as to serve their convenience. By consulting Appendix C, it will be seen that in certain classes of court work a very large part of that performed in the three counties is carried on on behalf of the municipaltites of the metropolitan district.

"In Norfolk County the five municipalities of the metropolitan district, out of the twenty-seven which make up the county, furnished fifty per cent, of the deeds recorded in both of the years above referred to, and thirty-eight and thirty-six per cent. respectively of the probate matters registered.

It may be said that on the basis of population these comparisons are about as they should be, for sixty-three per-cent. of the inhabitants of Middlesex County are in the metropolitan district, as are also forty-five per cent. of the population of Norfolk County and twenty-one per cent. of the people of Essex County. If, however, the court business of about two-thirds of the people of Middlesex County and nearly half of Norfolk County can be better served by having their county court houses located in Boston, instead of in East Cambridge and Dedham, a strong reason exists, apart from others, for making the change. When it is further shown that this change can be made and yet afford the rest of the counties, with their great areas of comparatively sparsely settled territory, quite as convenient shire towns as they now possess, a serious objection to the change, which might otherwise come from those living in these counties outside of the metropolitan district, should be removed."

In geographical area, Boston, Dedham, Newton and Lexington are the only ones in the district with more square miles. Possibly the Quincy portion of the Blue Hills reservation is included when our figures are placed at 16 26 square miles.

Household Receipts.

CUSTARD PIE. Bake, in open shells custard of one pint of milk, three eggs, three tablespoonfuls of sugar, and one teapoonful of vanilla.

COCOANUT PIE. Bake in one crust, two eggs, one-half of a cupful of milk, the grated rind of one-half of a lemon, butter the size of a walnut, one cupful of powdered sugar, and one-half of a small cocoanut grated.

OYSTER STEW. Bring a quart of milk to the boiling point, using a double boiler. Then, add oyster liquor and a pint of oysters from which all bits of shell have been removed. The oysters are cooked when the beards of the oysters begin to ruffle. Put into your tureen with butter and salt to taste.

CELERY SOUP. Put a head of celery with a small onion in a stew pan of boiling water. When tender drain and pass through a sieve. Now dilute it with some of the water in which it was boiled and season to taste. Beat up a couple of eggs with a gill of cream and stir into the soup over the fire till hot, but not boiling.

EXCELLENT BAKED HASH. Chop any pieces of cold cooked meat, put it in a frying-pan, add to every pint of meat one cup of stale bread crumbs, one tablespoonful of butter, salt and pepper to taste; now add sufficient gravy or water to thoroughly moisten, but not sloppy; mix well and bake in a hot oven twenty minutes.

BROWN STEW OF BEEF. Take a pound of shin or other cheap part of beef, and half a pound of beef kidney, and cut it into pieces. Dip them into flour and fry in dripping; when a rich dark brown, remove them and fry four sliced onions. Place the fried meat and onions in a saucepan, well covered with water, and simmer gently for two hours. Then add three pounds of parboiled sliced potatoes, and simmer all together for half an hour longer. Remove the beef and kidney, arrange it on a dish, season the gravy, and pour it over the meat.

Revenged.

A few days since two young ladies hailed a tram-car, entered it, and found only standing room. One of them whispered to her companion:

She looked down the row of men and selected a sedate gentlemen who bore the general settled appearance of a married man. She sailed up to him and opened fire:

"My dear Mr. Green! How delighted I am to meet you! You are almost a stranger! Will I accept your seat? Well, I do feel tired, I heartily admit. Thank you so much!"

The sedate gentleman, a total stranger, of course, looked, listened, then quietly rose and gave her his seat, saying as he did so:

"Sit down, Jane, my girl; don't often see you out on washing day! How's your mistress?"

Glycerine for Coughing.

A foreign medical journal is authority for the statement that a tablespoonful of glycerine in hot milk or cream will at once relieve the most violent attack of coughing. This is a simple, easily obtained and harmless remedy. Equally simple and quite as effective is the use of glycerine spray through an atomizer. This is applied directly to the inflamed or irritated surfaces, and gives almost instant relief. In attacks of influenza, colds in the head, sore throat, and like trouble, glycerine mixed with three times its bulk of water, boiled and cooled, is an invaluable remedy. A little practice will enable the patient to fill the lungs with the spray, and the soothing and cooling effect is remarkable. Mixed with an equal bulk of sulphurous acid, glycerine is an unfailing remedy for throat troubles of all kinds, and being harmless, can be used by all people. It must however, be freshly made, as it keeps but a short time after mixing.—N. Y Ledger.

The Goose Make a Hit.

"I have just been approached by a fellow with a stockyard show," said Manager Will Sykens to a New York reporter.

"A stockyard show is my name for those plays that involve barnyard scenes with the usual living occupants. The genius I speak of provides for live cows, calves, pigs, chickens and the whole domesticated animal kingdom.

I have had enough of that sort of thing, and I will tell you why. A few years ago, when I was her manager, Maggie Mitchell tried a rural drama at Hooley's in Chicago.

The barnyard scene was duly loaded with real live stock and poultry, and here the emotional climax of the play was designed to occur.

Miss Mitchell had the center of the stage in an impassioned soliloquy, when a big gander wiggled out of the pen and calmly waddled down to the front. Whatever was in the bird's mind I can't say, but it calmly poked its head into the footlights. The gas jet nipped its bill, and with one almighty squawk the creature flopped into the middle of the audience.

The house went crazy. It would have cured the man who "never smiled again." I was wild with rage, but I had to laugh, while Eugene Field, who sat by me in the box, beat his hat to rags on the rail.

Miss Mitchell wept, and the piece was killed because we could not star the goose."

Here is a diamond, here a piece of charcoal. Both carbon; yet between them stands the mightiest of magicians—Nature. The food on your table, and your own body; elementally the same; yet between the two stands the digestion, the arbiter of growth or decline, life or death.

We cannot make a diamond, we cannot make flesh, blood and bone. No. But by means of the Shaker Digestive Cordial we can enable the stomach to digest food which would otherwise ferment and poison the system. In all forms of despepsia and incipient consumption, with weakness, loss of flesh, thin blood, nervous prostration, the Cordial is the successful remedy. Taken with food it relieves at once. It nourishes, and assists nature to nourish. A trial bottle—enough to show its merit—10 cents.

New York Fashions.

EVENING GOWNS.

Many elegant evening gowns are now made with a sharp point back and front, the skirt laid in gathers all around and in such examples, the sleeves are markedly smaller. Independent corsages of chiffon worn with white satin skirts, are however extremely popular and here the waist is round, while a great number of evening dresses still show the blunt points that have been fashionable for so long a time. The greater number of low necks are cut square, but some are round and lavish adornments of flowers are eminently in order. Small blossoms are employed and in graceful carelessness, fall over sleeves or in shoulder bouquets, rise high in captivating coquettishness. Garlands encircle the neck; extend from shoulder to waist across the bust; trim berthas or in small bouquets or singly, nestle among folds of lace or chiffon, and for such adornments, forget-me-nots, violets, wild roses or orchids are chiefly in favor.

FUR

is also a choice trimming on evening dresses and at a notable gathering of the 400, two debutantes wore satin dresses, one white trimmed with sable and the other pink trimmed with mink, both furnished by C. C. Shayne, the well known fur dealer. Even wealthy people too, are now availing themselves of his annual New Year reductions, since it is common for our millionaire women to own a half dozen elegant fur garments, besides an assortment of collarettes, muffs, etc., while judicious buyers who value what is good, but must make a dollar go as far as it can, often delay until after the holidays, in order to obtain special bargains. A combination of two kinds of fur in the same garment, has proved quite successful and constantly one sees a Persian lamb cape with ermine or chinchilla collar, especially the latter or a muff of different fur from the cape or jacket.

JEWELRY.

Greenish gold is a late introduction and articles made of it are bought up eagerly by novelty seekers, while frequently olivines that belong to the green garnet family, are set in finish. Opals are now in great demand and pearls as well and the three varieties of stones just mentioned, have a special showing in designs of insects, frogs, crabs, birds or animals that lead both in pins and brooches. Pearl collars in small strands connected by gold at intervals, are in extraordinary favor and competing with them, are single strands of larger pearls. Flexible bracelets are displacing rims and where a finish of gems appears, they are set around the arm and not clustered in the centre.

Great liberty is noticeable in arranging the hair, which at the back may be high or low while in front, it may be parted in waves on the sides, or those who wish, can retain the bang cut to suit themselves. The Pompadour style is also seen and is becoming to ladies who have classic features.

"Laura E." The S. H. and M. bias velveteen skirt bindings are all that is claimed for them, but in making your selections, be sure that the correct letters are on the label, since there are endeavors to imitate with a purpose to deceive.

"Etta." Slippers of glazed kid or satin for evening, to match the dress, are most fashionable and it may be presumed that gloves to correspond, are of dressed kid, since there is always a harmony between gloves and shoes. White gloves for evening are much more worn than anything else, but black are seen sometimes, even with light toilettes.

"Miranda" A pretty front trimming for your dress, would be a lengthwise band of three or four inch wide chene ribbon, with full chiffon or lace ruffles on either side.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

THE SHAWMUT SPRING WATER possesses all these requirements, and when used in liberal quantities it is a most important factor in building up and restoring to health action the digestive organs and conducive to the health of all, more especially to children and persons of delicate constitutions. The array of testimony by doctors and others in its favor is overwhelming and shows that Shawmut Spring Water stands among the best

License Laws Unconstitutional.

BY REV. GEORGE H CLARK.

On this question of the liquor traffic the people are too quiesent or indifferent. They ought to continually cry aloud against this corruption of the health and morals of the community. If all who are opposed to the licensed sale of alcoholic beverages would publicly avow their belief that the permission of such sale is entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the legislature, the complete overthrow of the whole licensed system would, we think, be speedily and thoroughly accomplished. All license laws have been placed upon the statute book of the State by the votes of the legislative members; and if the Supreme Court's decision does not repeal them, then they can only be repealed by the men elected to the legislature favoring their abrogation. Of this there can be no question. But until such a result is reached, let every true friend of sobriety unhesitatingly proclaim that it is unconstitutional for any legislature to undertake to "bargain away the public health or the public morals" by authorizing the sale of this terrible foe of mankind. Instead of granting liberty for the sale of their baleful beverages, the traffic in them should be declared a crime and a nuisance, and therefore to be vigorously suppressed.

Digestible Food.

One of the biggest mistakes about food, which people make, is to forget that the true value of food to anybody is the measure of its digestibility. Half a pound of cheese is vastly more nourishing, as regards its mere composition, than half a pound of beef, but while the beef will be easily digested, and thus be of vast service to us, the cheese is put out of court altogether for ordinary folks by reason of its indigestibility. We should bear this rule in mind when we hear people comparing one food with another in respect to their chemical value.—London Hospital.

NEW CITY GOVERNMENT.

Hon. C. F. Adams, 2d, Takes Oath of Office as Mayor of Quincy.

Seldom, if ever, was there a larger attendance at an inauguration of a City Government of Quincy than that of Monday, every available seat being occupied and many being obliged to stand, while in the gallery were many ladies. Hon. Charles Francis Adams, an uncle of the Mayor, was an interested spectator to the ceremonies.

Promptly at 12 o'clock Mayor Hodges, Mayor-elect Adams and City Clerk Keith took seats on the president's platform. City Clerk Keith administered the oath of office to Mayor Adams.

A roll call of the Council was then taken all members being present. The oath of office was administered to them by City Clerk Keith.

An alphabetical list as they appear on the roll call with year of service appears below :

NAMES.	YEAR.
Anderson, Luther S.,	Third.
Badger, Frank E.,	Second.
Barker, Herbert S.,	Second.
Bryant, Charles M.,	Fourth.

Russell, John,	Second.
Sidelinger, George A.,	Second.
Sprague, Eugene H.,	Second.

The City Clerk then introduced Mayor Adams, who delivered his inaugural address, which occupied some 15 minutes.

It is printed in full below with some additions and changes since printed in the DAILY LEDGER, which were made just before delivery:

GENTLEMEN OF THE COUNCIL:—It is a pretty custom which allows the Mayor to bid you all welcome on the first of the year, and to express a hope that the new year will see substantial improvements in the condition of our city, and the prosperity of our citizens; and to give his own pledge that he will serve the city honestly, faithfully, and with equal care for the interests of every locality and every man. It is also proper to take note now of the questions which must come before us during the year, and to review the condition of our finances, in order that we may determine wisely how best to meet the requirements of the city with the limited means at out disposal.

Personally, however, I could wish that it was the custom for the retiring Mayor to give advice from the fullness of his experience, and that my time for offering suggestions could be postponed till greater experience in administration brought more mature judgment.

FINANCIAL.

The financial condition of the city does not materially alter from year to year, and we are still confronted with underlying conditions which necessitate a policy of strict economy. We realize with pleasure that our general debt has been reduced some $46,000 during the year, but we should not forget that this happy result has been to some degree accomplished by postponing heavy expenditures which must now be undertaken. This year the construction of two new school houses is imperative, and with other public improvements which are most urgent the city will probably be compelled to borrow not less than $80,000. On the other hand, some $50,000 will mature and be paid. We must, therefore, anticipate an increase of bout $30,000 in our general debt. Such a prospect need not cause serious apprehension as the debt will even then be well within the legal limit; nor would it cause uneasiness if that were the only financial burden our citizens had to face.

Both our large water debt, and our prospective sewer debt, though not included in the debt on which the law has set a general limit, must for some years to come add materially to the burden of general taxation. In the last year the water debt has increased $20,000. For the extension of mains and other work, $45,000 has been expended; $25,000 has matured and been paid. In a sense this department is self-sustaining, since the revenue received is more than sufficient to pay the expenses of maintenance, yet for some years to come a considerable part of the maturing debt must be paid by general taxation. This year that amount was approximately $25,000. What it will be in the future must depend largely on the principle on which water rates are assessed. It would be some hardship, no doubt, if rates were put so high that the present water-takers were called on to pay all the expense resulting from the acquisition of a plant and supply which belongs to the city, and must ultimately benefit every citizen; yet with the natural increase of revenue we can look forward confidently to the time when without injustice the general tax-payer will be relieved of this burden. For some years to come, however we must raise by taxation a part of the maturing water debt.

The city, moreover, will probably begin this year the construction of a sewer. It would seem proper that the debt so incurred should be assumed by the city, and paid, as it matures, in part by an assessment of betterments on the lands directly benefitted, in part by the city as a whole. When we remember that these two elements, and a playground debt of $48,000, should be added to the direct burden of our general debt; and remember further that the total burden of all our municipal debts, amounting now to nearly $1,000,000, and soon to be largely increased, falls in one way or another on a community which is neither very large nor very rich, and a community so situated and constituted that its current expenses must of necessity be large, it is plain that the situation demands great care and conservatism. If we spend unwisely the burden of taxation will bear heavily on all and tend to drive away such industries and individuals as can afford to move; yet unless we spend wisely in improvements our city will fall behind others in the march of progress, and will lose the very basis of prosperity. Each year we should provide not only that the condition of our streets and our public property be fairly maintained, and that our schools and institutions keep pace with our growth; but, moreover, we should do our share toward such lasting improvements as are necessary in order that our city may keep pace with the growth of the country about us; always, however, bearing in mind that our ambition must be measured by our means. We lack no element necessary to a future of great prosperity. If we move wisely and prudently; if every man does his full duty to our city, to its government, and to its industries, we may look forward with confidence to that future.

GENERAL DEBT.

General debt, January 1, 1895	$311,091 00
Minus amount paid 1895	52,451.00
	$258 640 00
Plus amount added, 1895	6,255.61
Net debt January 1, 1896	$264,895 61

A decrease of $46,196, or 15 per cent. in the last year, and $74,835 since December 30, 1893.

WATER DEBT.

Water debt, January 1, 1895	$705 000
Minus amount paid 1895	25,000
	$680,000
Plus amount added 1895	45,000
Net debt January 1, 1896	$725,000

An increase of $20,000 or 2.8 per cent. in the last year, as against a decrease of $10,000 the preceding year.

PLAYGROUND DEBT.

Play ground debt. January 1, 1895	$49.000
Minus amount paid, 1895	1,000
Net debt January 1, 1896	$48,000

For current expenses we may raise either $12 per $1000 of the assessors' valuation of the last year less abatements, or a like amount on the average valuation of the three preceding years. By the first method our limit this year is $207,864, by the second $203,124. I see no reason why the current expenses of the coming year should exceed those of the past except by as much as is necessary to represent the natural growth of the city. It will not be very difficult then to keep within the legal limit just stated. I doubt however whether any of the appropriations of the past year can be reduced without injuring the effectiveness of the public service, and the possibility of improvement lies in an increase of that effectiveness rather than in a reduction of cost.

SCHOOL HOUSES.

The necessity of two new school houses is recognized, and needs no new presentation. It is to be hoped that this year no disagreement will prevent the accomplishment of a work which has become a public economy, as well as an absolute necessity. I may perhaps be excused from reviving the well-worn arguments as to the best material for these school-houses. Enough to say that in my opinion true economy demands the use of brick. Were it otherwise a brick building is so far superior in safety, utility, and dignity, as to justify a somewhat greater cost.

I trust the Council in taking this matter up will not without further investigation be satisfied that the plans submitted last year are the best to be had. It will be wise to allow further competition at least, and it is a grave question whether it is not better to directly employ the best architect to be had. The best opinions I have been able to consult all indicate that architects of high standing do not enter these competitions, and that experience proves that better results are usually obtained by working out the problems to be overcome in consultation with an architect of wide experience, and tried ability, rather than to accept the chance shot of one of half a dozen inexperienced men. Nor should we overlook the advantage of having the supervision and advice of an experienced architect during the work of construction. The ultimate cost for plans is obviously the same in either case, unless we include the possibility of loss through the work of one inexperienced man.

WATER SUPPLY.

Now that the city has definitely decided to enter the Metropolitan Water System, it becomes necessary to determine how we can avoid the danger of a lack of water during the next three years. As to the best mode of securing a further supply I am not as yet able to make any recommendation. It is possible, however, that by enforcing such regulations as will prevent any improper, or wasteful, use of water, the necessity of securing a further supply may be avoided either permanently, or until we are better able to determine what course is best to pursue. Though it is really beyond the Mayor's province I would suggest that those who use water for lawns and gardens and such other uses, as may be called luxurious in distinction to necessary domestic uses, ought to pay the expense which such use brings upon the city; and if it should appear that the cost of supply could be saved by limiting for a time all unnecessary uses, it would be less hardship to do so than to call on the city as a whole to assume a burden for the benefit of a comparatively small class.

STREETS.

The requirements of our streets and side-walks present, as usual, preplexing problems. The difficulty of a proper maintenance of our system on the comparatively small appropriation available is well understood. There are many permanent improvements which are much needed. Hancock street, our main thoroughfare needs to be re-located, widened in places and rebuilt. Adams street has equal claim for a small appropriation to finish what has already been done. The widening of Coddington street would do much to develop a large section. Much else could be suggested, but in view of the unusually heavy expenses necessary this year in other directions it is perhaps not wise to undertake anything not absolutely urgent. On the whole the condition of Copeland street seems most to justify and demand immediate attention. The heavy teaming which passes over this road makes its condition serious, and the remedy difficult and expensive. Nothing short of a paved surface can long stand the wear, and for this reason it would be false economy to patch the present road, or build one of ordinary construction. For a similar reason if the matter is taken up at all I trust it will be considered in a broad way and that such changes of location and grade will be made as the probable future needs of the street and locality seem to require. The cost of paving and curbing the whole street would alone amount to about $26,000, and if on careful consideration the burden of the whole work seems too great for one year, I trust at least a part of this important work will be undertaken in the near future.

SEWERAGE.

During the past year legislation has been secured, a commission appointed, and some preliminary work done toward securing the adoption of a sewerage system. The need of pushing forward this work requires no argument. So far as the general plan is concerned the function of the city government is limited to passing on plans which of necessity are prepared by experts, but in the matter of determining the best and most equitable method of meeting the cost of construction a more direct and equally heavy responsibility rests upon us. Since a sewer will add to the prosperity and value of the city as a whole perhaps more than any other public improvement which we could today undertake, it is but just that a considerable proportion of the cost should be assumed absolutely by the city and ultimately paid through the medium of the general tax levy. The remaining cost must be assessed as a betterment on those lands which are specially improved in value by the sewer, due care being taken to make the terms of payment as little burdensome as possible. Their principles are recognized in our enabling Act, but we must still act with care for if too great a proportion is assumed by the city an injustice is done to the owners of personal property to which no benefit accrues, and to those whose real estate is so remote as not to be directly benefitted. On the other hand an equal injustice would result if the present abutters alone were called on to assume the burden of a work which with future extensions will bring a direct benefit to every piece of land in our city. The exact proportion in which this division of cost should justly be made, and the most equitable and practicable method of assessing the betterments, are questions to which I wish to give further study before making any more definite recommendations.

STREET LIGHTING.

There has been much just complaint for years past of the quality of our street lights. If the city can secure legislation under which we can construct an electric lighting plant for strictly municipal purposes, without purchasing the plant of the Quincy Electric Light and Power Co., the Council would do well to carefully investigate whether cheaper and better service could not be secured by the construction of a municipal lighting plant. While I do not as a rule believe that it is wise for a city to undertake such work, yet in this case it seems probable that facts will be found which will justify such action.

MISCELLANEOUS.

I would suggest that in order to avoid the danger and unsightliness which has resulted in other cities from the great multiplication of electric wires, that the Council not only adopt the principle of not allowing more than one set of poles in any street, but further will see to it that as far so possible all dangerous wires be buried. This method is being adopted, and must prevail, in all cities of considerable size. We will save much difficulty and expense in the future by securing its early adoption here.

The Auditor has already advised certain changes designed to secure a more perfect system of accounting, and in consultation with the City Treasurer has prepared an ordinance to carry into execution these ideas. This I shall shortly submit to you with whatever recommendations I have to offer.

There will be a hearing on January 9th before the County Commissioners as to the widening of the bridge over the Old Colony location at Atlantic. Unless otherwise instructed I shall deem it my duty to urge a decree ordering that this work be undertaken at once.

A bill is now before the Legislature authorizing the Metropolitan Park Commission to construct a boulevard from the Neponset Bridge through Atlantic to Squantum and thence along the shore of Quincy Bay through Merrymount Park, up the course of Furnace Brook to the Blue Hills Reservation in West Quincy. The inestimable importance of this work to our city as a whole cannot fail to strike every citizen, and it seems a public duty to do all that is possible to secure the passage of this bill.

The City Hospital is asking for legislation to enable the city to give more than $1000 each year to its support. If successful the city ought to be willing to do something more for an institution which may well be ranked as a blessing to all, and especially to those whose limited means would prevent their receiving proper care were it not for the Hospital.

One word more let me say. We all want to see Quincy well governed and prosperous. We all vaguely feel that it is a duty to take a personal interest in the affairs of the city. No one realizes more keenly than I that an administration can only really prosper and benefit the city if it enlists the support and personal interest and advice of representative men of all industries and occupations, and from all sections. Realizing this, it will always be a pleasure to give all information in my power to any who may seek it, and I shall welcome all suggestions and information honestly given. Gentlemen of Council, I trust our relations will be intimate and friendly, and I believe that they will be so, for differences can be but momentary when our one motive is to secure the welfare of our city.

On the vote for President of the Council Charles M. Bryant was unanimously elected having received 22 votes. Mr. Bryant voted for Mr. Nickerson.

President Bryant thanked the members for the confidence. He realized the responsibility and would try and merit the thanks of all.

Christopher A. Spear was unanimously elected Clerk of the Council, and also Clerk of Committees.

Upon motion of Councilman Anderson, the election of two trustees of the Hospital and a manager of Woodward fund were deferred until the next meeting.

Upon motion of Councilman Lamb it was voted that the old members who desired should retain their seats. This Councilmen Geary, Russell, Nickerson, Barker, Parker, Sprague, Hayden, Lamb and Rinn did. The drawing of seats resulted as follows :

Rinn, 1; Claflin, 2; Phillips, 3; Sprague, 4; Parker, 5; Cleaves, 6; Field, 7; Anderson, 8; Rideout, 9 ; Murray, 10; Russell, 11; Holt, 12; Sidelinger, 13; Lamb, 14; Hayden, 15; Little, 16; Barker, 17; Rice, 18; Pinkham, 19; Badger, 20; Geary, 21; Nickerson, 22.

Councilman Pinkham offered an amendment to the rules of the Council increasing the number of members, on the Finance Committee to 7 members and the Committee on Public Buildings to 5. This was referred to a special committee consisting of Councilmen Bryant, Pinkham, Rice, Claflin and Nickerson.

Councilman Nickerson offered an order that the Treasurer be authorized to borrow $100,000 in anticipation of taxes. This was referred to a special committee consisting of Councilman Nickerson, Rice and Claflin.

Upon motion of Councilman Pinkham it was voted that when the Council adjourn it be until Monday, Jan. 13.

Adjourned at 12 55.

President Bryant

Has been prominent in the City Council for the past two years and was also an active member in 1891 and 1892. With the exception of Councilman Rinn, who has served the same years, none of the new Council have given more years to the city. Whatever the subject before the Council, he has been well informed and has entered into the discussions. As chairman of the Committee on Streets, perhaps the most laborious of the Council, he has not shirked his duties, and the reports generally were adopted.

Mr. Bryant was born in Lowell, Nov. 29, 1857. When fifteen years of age his parents moved to Bridgewater and he attended the Bridgewater academy and later Chauncey Hall school, Boston. He then entered the paper business and is now treasurer of the A. Storrs & Bement Co. of Boston, a prosperous corporation.

The Councilman drives a natty turnout, and is fond of polo, golf, bowling and other sports. He married in 1881 and resides on Fenno street in Ward Five.

Quincy Club Officers.

President,—John H. Bent.

Vice Presidents,—Ivers M. Lowe, John Q. Cudworth, Warren Edwards.

Secretary,—Arthur W. Loud.

Treasurer,—William S. Osborne.

Assistant Treasurer,—W. R. Thomas.

After the election of officers a collation was served by Caterer Nash.

Three applicants were elected to membership and one application was received. The club is in a very prosperous condition and should it continue to grow as rapidly in the future as in the past not many years will have elapsed before Quincy will have a club to be proud of.

W. C. T. U. Annual.

The W. C. T. Union held its annual meeting January 2, 1896, when the following named persons were elected officers for ensuing year:

President,—Mrs. A. A. Harlow.

Vice Presidents,—Mrs. Henry Barker and Mrs. Charles L. Pierce.

Secretary,—Mrs. Charles A. Spear.

Treasurer,—Miss Lucretia A. Pierce.

Committee on Literature,—Mrs. Henry Barker, Mrs. Charles A. Spear.

This union desires a large membership that it may insure a large no-license vote forever in this our granite city.

THE NAUGURAL BANQUET MONDAY EVENING A HAPPY OCCASION.

No Republicans or Democrats There But Citizens Interested in the City and Its New Mayor, Hon. C. F. Adams, 2d.

EX-MAYOR PORTER.

REPRESENTATIVE NEWCOMB.

EX-MAYOR FAIRBANKS.

Not since the first inauguration in the city of Quincy has such good fellowship prevailed as is now characterized. Hon. Charles F. Adams, 2d, has been installed as Mayor of our city for 1896, and it was shown at the complimentary banquet on Monday evening that he has the encouragement of our best citizens, our business men, our influential and prominent citizens.

From 7.30 to 8.30 there was a very social hour, Mayor Adams and President Bryant of the Council dividing the congratulations, while everybody was in good spirits, and grasped the hand of his fellow citizen with a warmth which was pleasant to see.

About 8 30 seats were taken in Faxon hall, the tables being arranged as in the diagram below, the head table on the Canal strect front. It will be seen that there were no spare plates.

An excellent banquet was served by Blunt, the menu being as follows:

Roast Turkey, Roast Chicken,
Fillet of Beef and Mushroons,
Escalloped Oysters,
Lobster Salad, Chicken Salad,
Chicken Croquettes and Peas,
Apple Fritters,
Mashed Potatoes, Olives,
CREAM.
Vanilla, Strawberry, Chocolate,
Sherbet, Bisque Glace,
Frozen Pudding,
CAKE,
Almond, Citron, Lady, Currant,
Maccaroons, Cocoanuts,
Nuts and Raisins,
Oranges and Bananas,
Tea and Coffee.

Post prandial speeches followed; W. G. A. Pattee, Esq., the chairman of the Water Commissioners, being the toastmaster.

W. G. A. Pattee, Esq.,

The presiding officer in opening the post prandial exercises said: We come here regardless of party affiliations to pay our respect to one who has been selected to occupy the office of the chief executive of this city. He has taken the oath to fulfil the duties and how much greater they are than they were at the time of incorporation of the town of Quincy in 1792. At that time it was a board of Assessors. They found a population of less than 1000 and a tax of £15, 17s. They had few roads to care for. They had no system of water works or sewerage. Their cares were very small compared with the present time. Our great growth and large population was not thought of. They would have looked at our tax levy with amazement. How will it be 100 years hence. We now have a population of 20,000 and a valuation of $16,000,000. Large number of miles of streets, large water works and in the near future a sewer system; in fact the interests of a large growing city are placed on the shoulders of the executive. We are apt to condemn the Mayor for slight acts of omission, but do let us aid the Mayor in every way we can; not find fault, but try and encourage him. We are all striving for good government and we should aid and assist our Mayor in every possible way. We should try to prevent corruption from entering our municipal affairs. Quincy has been free from this in the past and let us form a solid phalanx against corruption, stamp it out in the beginning. And now, Mr. Mayor, the citizens look to you to carefully fulfil the duties of Mayor and you will follow the noble example set before you by your ancestors.

Mayor Adams

Was greeted with applause long continued and three cheers. He said he wished he could adequately express thanks for the kindly greeting. He never hoped to hold office for the mere sake of holding it, but because of the example of his ancestors who for 150 years had been interested in the town he did have an ambition to serve the city well. I have done my best in the past and shall endeavor to honestly and carefully fulfil my duties. It was pleasant to see Republican friends and Democratic brothers assembled.

Quincy was destined to grow and prosper, and all citizens should endeavor to advance its prosperity. How and what can we do? A city is like a man, it is judged as it shows ability. As we citizens work for the city it will grow. It remains with us to make Quincy, not the city government. There were two lines of development. One to increase our industries; another to make it attractive for those who live here and work elsewhere.

It is useless to discuss the benefits of the industries here. We have them and now we want more, for development and improvement. We must also make it more attractive as a residential city. There was now a bill in the Legislature for a boulevard along the banks of the Neponset river, Quincy bay and up the Furnace brook valley to the Blue Hills reservation. It would be of great benefit in attracting people to live in Quincy. The Metropolitan district has done much on the north of Boston, and our Representives should work for this boulevard.

Ii would be better for our capital to invest at home than in the West. Quincy woulds be better off had it done so in the past, and so would many of us. If no personal gain it would be doing our duty, and we would not suffer. A Board of Trade had been suggested, but that also depended on us; the spirit of the men behind it. He hoped it would be taken up enthusiastically. We should develop city patriotism, which had made many noble cities. Quincy was not a mere suburb but should have civic pride, and the time would come when Quincy would take high rank among cities of the State—[Applause.

Ex-Mayor Charles H. Porter

Said it was pleasant for him to be here to congratulate the citizens of no mean city on the selection they have made for Mayor. He has served you well and faithfully and has reached the honor bestowed upon him by the attention of whatever came to him to do. He can well refer to the motto on the wall—"What I do I will do well." We can in truth say, whatever he does he will do well. Good government is something to be proud of and when he was Mayor he found no man so ready to assist him as the City Solicitor during those two years.

It is my fortune to still be in the harness of one of the important boards of the city, the School Committee, which expended $82,000 of the money raised last year and this year it will ask for nearly $85,000. We shall ask for two schoolhouses. We need them, and can fill them. Quincy has 3400 enrolled pupils and the first of May will see nearly 3,700, and the High School has 338. Waltham, a little larger than Quincy and a million and a quarter more wealth has 2700 school children and expends $20,000 less than we, but the assessment per capita is less in Quincy than in Waltham and twenty other cities. I do not expect many to read over the school report but there was no part of our government that came so near our homes as our schools, and I would like to have you read the report of our superintendent.

I had but one thought in going from a town to a city government and that was to make the step so easy and agreeable that you would never know the difference, and see no breaks, which was done.

I hope at the end of the year when again our honored citizen comes up for endorsement that he will be reelected for the office I am sure he will well fill. I wish him God speed and I will give him my best, purest and honest support.

Ex-Mayor Fairbanks

Said: What truer greeting, can I tender to our honored guest, than to express the wish that I know is in the heart of every loyal citizen of Quincy, that the all-ruling Providence bless him with health and strength to carry forward the sacred trust he has today assumed. The cares, duties and responsibilities of the executive, rest upon him now. How shall I make my work a success is in his mind tonight. True it is that our honored Mayor has the benefit of the experience of his predecessors, but they may be called only beacon lights along the course, for after all no one can sail exactly over the same course. New problems like new dangers will constantly occur, requiring new ideas and new treatment. "Make your ideal high, try to reach it and make that ideal real" are the words of rich inspiration to a noble mind, who is imbued with a true desire to serve with success his city, his State or his country.

Our poet Longfellow has well said—"The talent of success is nothing more than doing well. You can do well without a thought of fame,"—and that Mr. Mayor should be the ambition of every official who is to receive from your hands the honor of an appointment. Every office may be more or less important in one sense, and yet it is harmony of the whole system which will bring the merit of approval.

Mr. Mayor, the city is now standiug on the threshold of a new year. A year full of importance to our growth and prosperity. The book of records is open to you, and may every page be written with credit and to our city's honor.

Mr. Pattee regretted he could not introduce the third Mayor but he understood his physician advised him to stay at home.

Ex-Congressman Everett

Felt obliged for the opportunity to say a few words and join in the congratulations we were so eager to express to our Mayor. It was only quite lately that he had informed himself of the close yoke of this old town with his family. He then traced the family of Adams, and continuing said, we are glad to have him for Mayor and we are proud of the work done by his ancestors for this town and for the nations. Dr. Everett then took the several Adams' in turn and told what public positions they had held. From the very beginning of Mt. Wollaston you have had eight successive generations of Adams' called upon and rendering good service in answer to the call. It is not that our Mayor is a descendent of an Adams but that his great gandmother was a Brooks and my grandmother was a Brooks. The Brookses were always right, even when they were a minority of one.

He claimed the Mayor as one of his own as he was under his training. He also claimed three of the councilmen as his boys. Luther Anderson, Walter S. Pinkham and Fred B. Rice, and they carry out fully the old saying "as a child is trained so they will grow." When other places beyond old Braintree need a chief magistrate they have to come to Quincy to get them. Where would Harvard College have been if it had not been for old Tutor Flint. If John Hancock of old Braintree had not been in the chair there would not have been any Declaration of Independence, and when Boston wants a good man for Mayor they come to Quincy for him.

Turning to Mayor Adams, the speaker said: They did not elect you for your name or connections, but for what they have seen of you as a man and they believe in you. In our city exceptional trust and authority are given to the Mayor. To that place you have been chosen as a man in whom they can trust. "To thine own self be true and it must follow thou cannot fail to be true to any man."

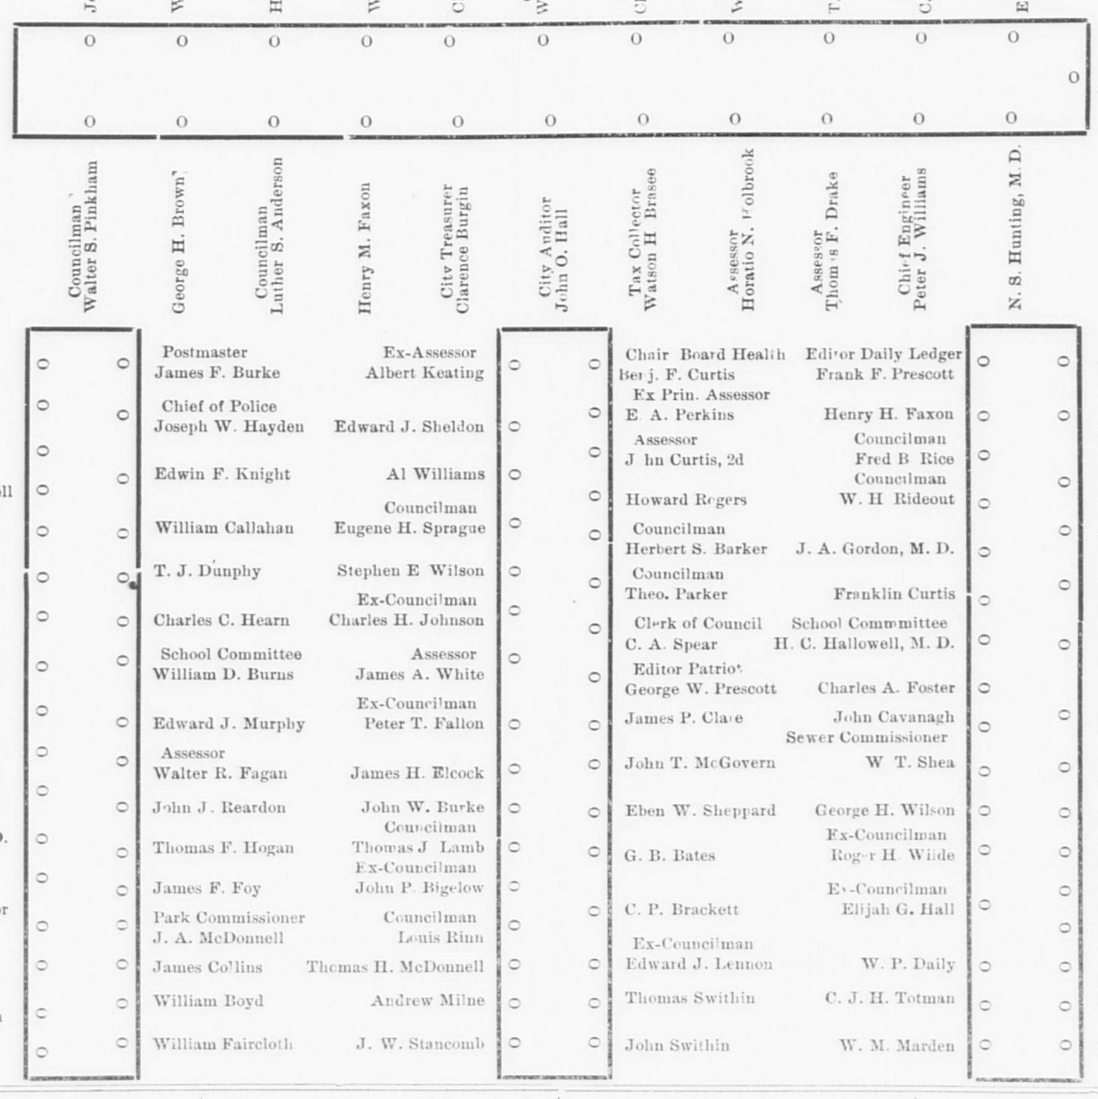

Representative Newcomb.

Who followed Dr. Everett, was tempted to accept the saying—A still tongue denotes a wise head. As I come to do honor to our Mayor it is a pleasure to me to meet my fellow citizens as citizens, not as Republicans or Democrats. Good to extend hearty words of congratulations. I believe when a man is elected or accepts office he is the servant of all the people. It is the only way to have good government.

Boulevards have not come up in the Legislature yet, but I shall do the best I can when all matters of interest to Quincy are introduced. It was my privilege and honor to be an aid at the funeral of the Mayor's great grandfather. When I look over the long line of ancestors I find the same sterling integrity flows in the blood of our new Mayor.

President Bryant

Said: This gathering will tend to bring about the purification of municipal politics. Every citizen of Quincy is like a stockholder in a corporation who is called upon annually to elect a board of directors. We have probably elected the youngest man as Mayor but he has the oldest head. You will never find him wanting in any place of trust you put him. He did not believe that any Mayor had the good will of a Council as our present Mayor. He believed that the Council would strive with him and give the city the very best government that Quincy had ever had since she became a city. There was a feeling among citizens that when anything was up for the benefit of the city that some one was looking to get something out of it, but what does it matter if they do if the whole city is to be benefited. Quincy should appoint a committee so that when the boulevard comes before the Legislature they can push it along. He hoped that when anything came up that was to be located here that everybody would put their shoulder to the wheel and work for it.

Councilman Claflin.

We all wish our new Mayor success in the office to which he has been chosen. We are gathered here on a purpose to say so. His path cannot be flowery—for there are difficulties in the way that will tax his resources to remove. He has the moral support of the city, and I think he will in all cases be accredited with the best of intentions, whether he always appears to have taken the wisest course or not. And there will be further a belief, that he will not jeopardize our interests by neglect of proper attention to the questions that arise

Since the inception of our city government we have been under the guidance of most excellent and wise executives. Mayors Porter, Fairbanks and Hodges have, each in his turn, carried the city forward in ever increasing prosperity and we think the work will continue.

But let me say right here, that while I compliment Quincy upon her good sense in selecting this year for the office of Mayor so promising an incumbent. We are all aware that there are a a few more left who at least consider themselves good timber for the office of mayor. So that while we are happy in our choice we do not necessarily look forward to the day when perhaps our Mayor may go higher, with an unspeakable dread lest the office be unworthily filled. Nature abhors a vacuum, and the vacant chair will readily find an occupant. Of course I do not start out from view that a great deal in the matter of success depends upon the measures enacted in the Council upon which His Honor will pass I have been told that this year there were some very fine specimens of Councilmen in the City Council and I believe it to—men pure incorruptible and eloquent, and I think that when when they get their sealegs on, as it were, they will show that they are right on deck. But I think I will wait awhile longer before saying more about them, for it is perhaps unwise to get expectations at too high a pitch.

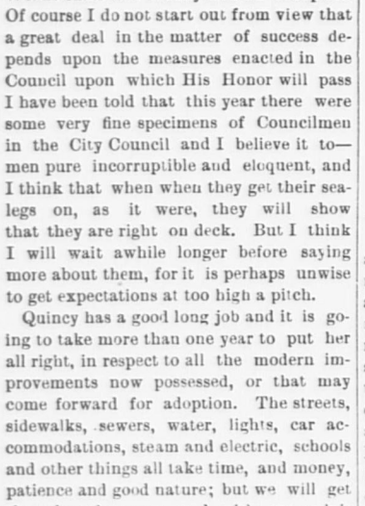

Quincy has a good long job and it is going to take more than one year to put her all right, in respect to all the modern improvements now possessed, or that may come forward for adoption. The streets, sidewalks, sewers, water, lights, car accommodations, steam and electric, schools and other things all take time, and money, patience and good nature; but we will get there just the same, and with our pulpit orators, our legal fraternity, one to teach in the right way, and the other to demonstrate that we always are in the right way; while the Debating Society will turn out scores of orators to fill the air with sweet sounds. Quincy is bound some day to be the perfect paradise that poets have dreamed of.

Mr. Pattee hoped the guests would remain, although the hour was late as there was one who wanted to be heard. He introduced

Henry H. Faxon, Esq.

Mr. Faxon said with all the flow of oratory they have not stole all my thunder. We have assembled on this auspicious occasion to rejoice over the fact that our Mayor was elected by a spontaneous uprising of the best citizens, irrespective of party.

It was the first election since our incorporation as a city in which party ties were utterly disregarded, and it shows that the independent voters exercised their political rights in earnest.

I desire to congratulate His Honor, the Mayor, that he has been relieved of the arduous and frequently disagreeable task of selecting proper persons to fill important city offices, this work having been cheerfully performed for him by the friends of those who are eager for the official plums. I, too, have made a suggestion in this direction, but shall be delighted if the mayor can name a man better qualified for the position.

I have no doubt that the chief executive is aware of the difficulties which he will encounter in assuming his office. Any man can say "Dare to do right," but it requires a political hero to practice it.

Under our city charter the mayor is vested with unlimited power in making appointments. If all who have been proposed, were entrenched in office, it would necessitate the enlargement of City Hall to accommodate them, and, as a tax-payer, I should object to this additional burden. Therefore I sincerely hope that the mayor will exercise his prerogative in the selection of honest and capable officials without regard to party affiliations or political friendships.

My earnest desire is that this administration may be the most successful in the history of our municipality.

This concluded the banquet.

The Best Place to Live.

Mr. Frank F. Prescott of DAILY LEDGER contributed to the Sunday Globe symposium, and in a limited space told why Quincy was the best place to live in around Boston. Much more might have been said, but we understand he was limited to 300 words, and the field was well covered. The article is reproduced:

As a prominent citizen expressed himself the other day, it is a pleasure to live in a city where there is something solid and enduring. The Quincy granite largely used in monumental work, has brought our city into prominence, and our works of art are found all over the country. Quincy people, therefore, feel at home everywhere, for their good works have preceded them.

Our institutions and our men are as solid as the granite hills, and our churches multiply and flourish; our national, savings and co-operative banks prosper; our street railway system extends reaching into the remotest parts of the city and also into surrounding towns; and our daily paper, the only one in Norfolk county, now in its eighth volume, shows Quincy to be nearly a decade in advance of Brookline, Milton, Everett, Medford and such places. When Boston wants a good mayor it induces our citizens to take up their residence at the "hub" and three Josiah Quincys have presided over its destinies. And our public school teachers, because of their proficiency get many of the plums in Boston to the discomfiture of some of her legislators.

A no-license majority for 14 consecutive years, backed by public sentiment and a rigid enforcement of the law, has accomplished much toward making Quincy the model city that it is, and the principle so thoroughly inculcated within us may never be overthrown.

But the man with a family of small children selects Quincy for his residence because of her school advantages. Public schools unexcelled, supplemented by the Woodward institute for girls, the Adams academy for boys, the Thayer academy for both sexes, free evening schools and the educational classes of the Young Men's Christian association.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

DRAWN BY NED.

The Old Mule's One Experience at Sledding Was All He Wanted.

One day last winter when the snow was hard the boys in our part of the town had a fine time coasting down a long hill. For a change they decided to capture Ned and make him draw them through the streets.

Ned was an old donkey owned by no one. He lived by picking up what stray bits he could find on the streets and sheltered himself in an old shed. After some hunting they found him taking his lunch from an ash barrel. They let him eat what he wanted so that he might be as good natured as possible. One boy ran home and brought some pieces of old rope. Then they made a rough kind of harness.

Ned was kind enough to stand still while they harnessed him. Then they fastened their sleds together, with Joe Brown's in front, for he was to drive.

Joe took up his cord reins and gave the word to Ned to "get up." The donkey only turned and looked back at the dozen or more sleds to which he was tied. I think he decided that the load was too much for him. Joe used a switch on him, but he hung his head and stood quite still. After waiting some time the boys grew tired and began to untie their sleds. Ned looked back and then made a sudden start. He trotted down the road at such a rate that the boys had quite a chase to get on.

Ned found it easier than he expected, or else he wanted to make up for lost time, for he drew them up one street and down another for a half hour. Then he began to slacken his pace, but Joe urged him on with his switch. Poor Ned thought there was to be no end to his task. An idea seemed to strike him suddenly, for he rushed down the street at a great rate.

On one side of the street was a deep ditch. When Ned came to it, he leaped across it, dragging the sleds at such an angle in such a way that they all tipped over, leaving the boys in the ditch.

Ned then started on with the empty sleds, making straight for his old shed. The boys found him there eating a whisp of straw. They took his harness off and hung it up in the shed. But that was the first and last time they used it, for Ned would never let them put it on again. To this day, if any one goes near him with a piece of rope, he will take to his heels.—Our Little Ones.

The Tardy Santa Claus.

I am a little Santa Claus
Who somehow got belated;
My reindeer didn't come in time,
And so of course I waited.
I found your chimneys plastered tight,
Your stockings put away,

I heard you talking of the gifts
You had on Christmas day.
So will you please to take me in
And keep me till November?
I'd rather start Thanksgiving day
Than miss you next December!
—Kate D. Wiggins in St. Nicholas.

A Lesson In Patience.

One of the happiest little boys I ever saw is a cripple and will never walk. His lower limbs are paralyzed, and the little fellow is wheeled round in a chair made for his especial use. When I saw him, I thought how awful it must be for a 7-year-old boy not to be able to run and play like other children, and, without thinking, I asked: "Isn't it lovely here? Don't you wish you could run and jump?"

"Yes," said the little fellow. "I might like it, but I'm happy where I am, and perhaps I'd get hurt. Little boys do."

Then I felt rebuked, and the little boy, whistling and singing in his chair, playing with whatever is given to him, the minutes of the hours by which the days are toad, like sunbeams, lighting and gladdening life's pathway, has been a lesson to me ever since I first saw him. —Washington Star.

New Kind of Spelling Bee.

A new kind of spelling bee is what the following game is called: One of the company begins the game by naming a letter of the alphabet, and the next must name another, which in connection with the first will help to make a word, but which will not complete it. The next adds another letter, and so on, each aiming to put in a letter which will not finish a word.

This goes on until some one inadvertently completes it. Then the unlucky one is compelled to pay a forfeit. To illustrate: The leader begins with i. The next adds m, the next a, another g, and the next, instead of adding e and completing the word, says i. The following one gives n, and the next, by a happy thought, does not give e, but says a, and then follow t, i, o and n, when the word has been completed, in spite of all.

Slight Mistake.

Ethel had formed the very unbecoming habit of saying 'H'm?" when she did not quite understand, and her aunt had been teaching her to say "Beg pardon?" instead.

The following day she was overheard talking with some of her little playmates.

"My auntie says you mustn't say H'm?' " she explained. "You must say 'Baking powder.' " — Youth's Companion.

GEMS IN VERSE.

A Flight From Glory.

Once from the parapet of gems and glow
An angel said: "O God, the heart grows cold
On these eternal battlements of gold,
Where all is pure but cold as virgin snow.

"Here sobs are never heard, no salt tears flow;
Here there is none to help, nor sick, nor old;
No wrong to fight, no justice to uphold.
Grant me thy leave to live man's life below."

"And then annihilation?" God replied.
"Yes," said the angel, "even that dread price,
For earthly tears are worth eternal night."
"Then go," said God. The angel opened wide
His dazzling wings, gazed back to heaven thrice
And plunged forever from the walls of light.
—Lee Hamilton.

Marc Antony.

'Tis vain, Fonteius! As the half tamed steed,
Scenting the desert, lashes madly out
And strains and storms and struggles to be freed,
Shaking his rattling harness all about,
So, fiercer for restraint, here in my breast
Hot passion rages, firing every thought.
For what is honor, prudence, interest,
To the wild strength of love? Oh, best of life,
My joy, bliss, triumph, glory, my soul's wife,
My Cleopatra, I desire thee so
That all restraints to the wild winds I throw!
Come what will, come life, come death, to me
'Tis equal if again I look on thee.
Away, Fonteius! Tell her that I rage
With madness for her. Nothing can assuage
The strong desire, the torment, the fierce stress
That whirls my thoughts round and inflames my brain
But her great ardent eyes—dark eyes that draw
My being to them with a subtle law
And an almost divine imperiousness.
Tell her I do not live until I feel
The thrill of her wild touch, that through each vein
Electric shoots its lightning, and again
Hear those low tones of hers, although they steal,
As by some serpent charm, my will away
And wreck my manhood.

Oh, Octavia!
This lying galls me, and 'tis worse than vain!
Life is too short to waste in love's pretense,
In the bleak shadow of indifference.
And you—what are you but a galling chain?
I hate you that I cannot hate you more;
Even hate for you is only cold and dull—
Cold as your heart and dull as is your sense.
Were you but savage, wicked to the core,
Less pious, prudish, prudent, made to rule,
I might have loved or hated more, but now
Nothing on earth seems half so deadly chill
As your insipid smile and placid brow,
Your glacial goodness and proprieties.

Tell my dear serpent I must see her, fill
My eyes with the glad light of her great eyes,
Though death, dishonor, anything you will,
Staid in the way! Aye, by my soul, disgrace
Is better in the sun of Egypt's face
Than pomp or power in this detested place!
Oh, for the wine my queen alone can pour
From her rich nature! Let me starve no more
On this weak tepid drink that never warms
My lifeblood, but away with shams and forms!

Away with Rome! One hour in Egypt's eyes
Is worth a score of Roman centuries.
Away, Fonteius! Tell her till I see
Those eyes I do not live; that Rome to me
Is hateful. Tell her—oh, I know not what!—
That every thought and feeling, space and spot,
Is like an ugly dream where she is not,
All persons plagues, all doings wearisome,
All talking empty. All these feasts and friends,
These slaves and courtiers, princes, palaces;
This Cæsar, with his selfish aims and ends,
His oily ways and sleek hypocrisies;
This Lepidus, and, worse than all by far,
This mawkish, pious, prude Octavia,
Are bonds and fetters, tedious as disease,
Not worth the parings of her finger nails.

Oh, for the breath of Egypt, the soft nights
Of the voluptuous east, the dear delights
We tasted there, the lotus perfumed gales
That dream along the low shores of the Nile
And softly flutter in the languid sails!
Oh, for the queen of all, for the rich smile
That glows like autumn over her dark face,
For her large nature, her enchanting grace,
Her arms, that are away so many a mile!
Away, Fonteius! Lose no hour; make sail;
Weigh anchor on the instant; woo a gale
To blow you to her! Tell her I shall be Close on your very heels across the sea,
Praying that Neptune send me storms as strong
As passion is to sweep me swift along
Till the white spray sing whistling round my prow
And the waves gurgle 'neath the keel's sharp plow.
Fly, fly, Fonteius! When I think of her
My soul within my body is astir,
My wild blood pulses, and my hot cheeks glow!
Love with its madness overwhelms me so
That I—oh, go, I say! Fonteius, go!

Mrs. Lofty and I.

Mrs. Lofty keeps a carriage.
So do I.
She has dapple grays to draw it.
None have I.
She's no prouder with her coachman
Than am I
With my blue eyed, laughing baby
Trandling by.
I hide his face, lest she should see
The cherub boy and envy me.

Her fine husband has white fingers.
Mine has not.
He could give his bride a palace;
Mine, a cot.
Hers comes home beneath the starlight.
Ne'er caresses she.
Mine comes home in the purple twilight,
Kisses me
And prays that he who turns life's sands
Will hold his loved ones in his hands.

She has those who love her. Station
None have I.
But I've one true heart beside me—
Glad am I.
I'd not change it for a kingdom;
No, not I.
God will weigh it in his balance
By and by,
And then the difference he'll define
'Twixt Mrs. Lofty's wealth and mine.
—Mrs. C. Gildersleeve.

Unnecessary Sympathy.

I always felt sorry when I met Jim.
Poor fellow, he's married now,
And his life is a serious thing to him,
For he lives by the sweat of his brow.

And the cares of a family weigh him down,
And he slaves to run the house.
Why, Jim was the gayest boy in town,
And I'll bet he's as poor as a mouse.

And because he looked so worn and sad
I tried, whenever we met,
To talk of the good times we'd had,
In hopes that he might forget,

Till I said I was living at the club.
Then I felt a deep chagrin
Lest he should think I was trying to rub
His misery farther in.

But he exclaimed: "That's a horrible life!
No child to climb on your knee,
No quiet home and the loving wife"—
By Jove, he was pitying me!
—Harry Romaine in Life.

Woman.

O woman, woman, thou shouldst have few sins
Of thine own to answer for! Thou art the author
Of such a book of follies in man
That it would need the tears of all the angels
To blot the record out!
—Lord Lytton.

Sincerity.

Pathless the gulf of feeling yawns.
No trivial bridge of words
Or arch of boldest span
Can leap the moat that girds
The sincere man.
—Henry David Thoreau.

A BROWN LEAF.

In the woods today a leaf fluttered down;
It was wrinkled and old and bent and brown,
But it met the wind and began to play,
And I watched it until it whirled away.

And I could but wonder, when time and grief
Should have made me old and bent as the leaf,
Would my heart be as young and full of glee
As the brown leaf playing in front of me?
—Frank H. Sweet in Ladies' Home Journal.

A GEORGIA COLONEL.

Colonel Joseph George Washington Mills is the king of Red Clay, one of the mountain kingdoms that lie a-straddle of the state line which divides Georgia and Tennessee, and is one of the most noted characters of that mountain region.

In the seventies Colonel Mills was a Republican, residing in Atlanta, and ran for congress on the Republican ticket about the time of the political upheaval that brought on such radical changes in the state government. He was a victim of existing circumstances, and without waiting until the ballots were counted he gave up the fight in disgust.

Not long afterward he removed to the remote corner of the commonwealth where he now resides and possessed himself of the historic town of Red Clay, including the ancient council house where Andrew Jackson and the chiefs of the Cherokees met for the last time preparatory to the removal of the tribes to their new territory in the west. He is full of anecdotes, and his stories carry one back to the days of the old Georgia militia, of which he was one of the commanding officers.

"I shall never forget," said he one day, "my first experience as a drillmaster. I was elected captain of a company down in Cobb county, the muster roll of which included the warlike denizens of the forest depths in the neighborhood of Lost mountain. Hunters, traders, trappers, squatters and crackers of low degree were included in this organization. I knew the character of the men that I had to deal with, and as my father was Major General Enoch R. Mills, then commanding the justly celebrated Georgia militia, I felt that I must keep up the dignity of my office by arraying myself not only in authority, but in all the gorgeous habiliments of a high official in the Georgia militia.

"I called to mind an old friend of my father's, Captain Howell, who lived over in Gwinnett county and who had recently resigned the command of his company. He possessed a gorgeous uniform, with the most fetching epaulets that I ever beheld, and I made up my mind that I would apply to him for the loan of his paraphernalia to wear at my first drill, which was to occur on the following Friday. It was in the heat of the summer, after crops were laid by, so I mounted my gray pony and rode to the home of Captain Howell, who extended to me an exceedingly warm reception. 'Lend you my coat and epaulets?' said he when I told my mission. 'Of course I will. I will do anything for the son of General Mills, who is my warm personal friend, sir, I am proud to say. Try on the coat and let us see how it fits. Aha, it is the very thing. Take it, with my compliments, sir, epaulets and all, and may you wear it with the same distinguished honor with which your esteemed father has won the uniform of a major general of the Georgia militia, sir. Here is my sash, also, sir.' And he handed me a silken sash as long as a fence rail, with a gold fringe on it like an old fashioned window curtain. After bidding him an affectionate adieu, I mounted the gray pony and started back home.

"'Hold on there,' shouted Captain Howell after I had ridden a few paces. 'Here is something else that you will need, Captain Mills.' And he overtook me and handed me a copy of Scott's tactics. I present you with this, sir, as the highest authority in the land. It has been carefully compiled by General Winfield Scott after the most approved methods and usages of the greatest commanders of the age, sir. It is above and beyond all statutory law and is second and subservient only to the constitution of the United States, sir. Only follow its instructions and carry out its regulations and your future is assured, Captain Mills.'

"With the uniform and sash carefully packed in my saddlebags and that copy of Scott's tactics in my left hand I rode off down the winding road in the direction of Lost mountain, where the citizen soldiers of my command were pursuing their peaceful avocations. A casual inspection of the cover of the book showed me a military officer in full regimentals, and as I opened it and began reading my heart swelled and my bosom glowed with military enthusiasm and patriotic ardor.

"About 2 o'clock in the afternoon I arrived in the heart of the forest around Lost mountain, and it occurred to me that as I had never drilled a company of soldiers I ought to engage in some preliminary tactics and not make a display of my ignorance to the men whom I expected some day to lead to glory. So I turned aside into the forest, and after riding for 200 or 300 yards through the densest woods I ever saw I dismounted at the root of a fallen tree and tied my pony.

"Divesting myself of my coat, I put on the emblazoned and epauletted garment presented to me by Captain Howell and invested myself with the glowing sash and its tinseled tassels floating in the wind. Taking position close to the fallen tree, where I thought it would be utterly impossible for any one to come upon me without my discovering his approach, I assumed a haughty and commanding posture, and with a copy of Scott's tactics opened in my hand I began drilling the imaginary squadron.

"'Carry ahms!' I called in stentorian tones.

"'Order ahms!'

"'Right shoulder ahms!'

"'Present ahms!'

"'Recover ahms!'

"Having gone through with this part of the evolutions to my entire satisfaction, I began on that portion of the manual which referred to loading and firing the old flintlock muskets then in use by the Georgia militia.

"'Draw rammer!'

"'Bite off cartridge!'

"'Charge cartridge!'

"'Recover rammer!'

"'Open pan!'

"'Prime pan!'

"'Close pan!'

"'Make ready!'

"'Take aim!'

"'Fire!'

"'Cease firing!'

"'Carry arms!'

"'Well done, comrades,' said I, in a congratulatory voice to my imaginary squadron. 'You do remarkably well for men who have seen so little service.' Then bracing myself against the log I called out:

"'Attention, company!'

"'By the right wheel!'

"'Forward! March!'

"Then I began to imitate the tramp of soldiers, 'hep, hep, hep. Closer order there, men, closer order! Close up the rear rank! Steady men, steady! Halt, comrades!' said I, taking a step forward. 'You must learn to keep step. Keep your eyes front and follow your guides and hold your muskets in position. This will prevent so much confusion.

"'Forward, march! Hep, hep, hep, hep.'

"'Halt!'

"'Stack ahms!'

"'Break ranks!'

"'Comrades,' cried I, in a voice trembling with enthusiasm, 'it affords me pleasure to compliment you upon your proficiency and the care and attention which you have given to these tactics, which are taken from the methods and usages of the greatest commanders of the age. I feel that I can rely upon each and every one of you to do his full duty toward his commander and his country when occasion offers. I feel from your gallant and soldierly bearing and exemplary conduct today that your bosoms are inspired with that patriotic devotion to home and country which are the mainspring of every soldierly virtue. In the flash of your eyes and the bearing of your manly forms I behold that pride of patriotism which should animate our country's defenders, and I know that, should any foe invade our country and attempt any usurpation of our liberties, you would spring to arms and march in the defense of your country and your firesides to death or glorious victory.'

"'Captain Mills,' said I, imitating the supposititious voice of my first lieutenant, 'we have listened with the profoundest pleasure to your words of kindly commendation, which we trust we shall merit in our future conduct. We hope to do full justice to all your expectations, and in the days to come instead of Captain Mills we hope to hail you as Major General Mills, commanding the Georgia militia.'

"'Lieutenant,' said I in a trembling voice, as if too much overcome for utterance and drawing my bandanna handkerchief from my hat, 'I cannot express the feelings of deep gratification which your words have inspired in my heart. I only hope that our relations may be always as pleasant as they have been on this occasion of our first meeting as commander and faithful followers. It is now with feelings of the deepest interest in your future welfare that I bid you goodby.'

"'Captain Mills,' said I, again imitating the lieutenant, 'we all join in returning to you our most hearty good wishes. Comrades, three cheers and a tiger for Captain Mills of the Lost Mountain volunteers.'

"When the echoes of that cheer had died away, I pulled off my military coat and sash, carefully wrapped them up and placed them in my saddlebags along with a copy of Scott's tactics, and donning my everyday overcoat I started to mount my horse. I had one foot in the stirrup when I heard a little rustling in the foliage of the fallen tree.

"Turning around, I stood face to face with the tallest mountaineer that I ever laid eyes upon. He rose slowly out of the crotch of the tree, and it seemed to me that he grew taller and taller as he straightened himself. He was red whiskered, red faced and cross eyed, and his flaming hair fell in wild profusion from under his coonskin cap. In his hand he held one of the old fashioned squirrel puncher rifles that glistened in the sun as he fixed me with his stern and baleful gaze.

"'Well,' said he, catching a deep breath, 'I've seen fools, I've read of fools, I've heard of fools, but of all the goldarned fools that ever I saw you are the goldarned infernalest.'

"By that time I had recovered my composure to some extent, and reaching in my pocket I pulled out a $2½ goldpiece, the only money I had.

"'Look here, my friend, I don't suppose that you feel any particular interest in telling about this thing. You just take this and say no more about it.'

"'Well,' said he, sighing regretfully, 'as I am not in the fool killing business I reckon I'll take you up. But I feel that I am missing a mighty fine opportunity.'

"I mounted my horse and rode off, and that cross eyed mountaineer kept his word. But never in all my experience have I had such a close shave as I did on the occasion of my first drill."—Chicago Record.

Different Views.

"Do you ever go to church?" asked a city missionary of a woman who had applied to him for assistance.

"No, I don't," was the reply. "The fact is, I ain't fit things to wear. My husband's been out o' work so long I've run out o' things, and, anyhow, me and my husband have such diff'rent views I'd have to go alone if I went at all."

"What are your views?"

"Well, I'm a Methodist, and my husband, he's one o' these here Knights o' Pythias."—Youth's Companion.

NEW MEN IN CONGRESS

THIRTY-FOUR REPUBLICANS FROM SIXTEEN SOUTHERN STATES.

Phenomenal Career of Congressman Settle of North Carolina—An "Independent Protectionist"—The New Member and the Speaker—Free Silver In the South.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—Taken by classes, the southern Republicans in congress are by far the most interesting class, being so very new and, as it were, so very unexpected. In fact, the south has been Democratic so long that many have forgotten their history. Hon. George H. Noonan has been referred to as "the first Republican congressman from Texas." He is an able man and a very solid one, but not the first of his party from that state. In the first years of reconstruction the cotton states, from Roanoke to the Rio Grande, were almost solidly Republican, and when the first Democrat from Texas, Captain Connor, entered the house in 1870 Ben Butler made such a furious fight against him that he would certainly have been ousted if he had not been a Federal veteran. Indeed it was not till 1875 that the Democrats had a majority from the old south. But this is only a reminiscence.

New Men From the South.

From the 16 states once called the south there are in this congress 34 Republicans, but 23 are from the five border states and 3 from the old Republican stronghold of east Tennessee. In the Fifty-third congress there were 7, of whom 3 were from the border states and 2 from east Tennessee, leaving from the real south only the colored Murray of South Carolina and Hon. Thomas Settle of North Carolina. As the latter gentleman is the sole Republican survivor of the Fifty-third congress from the south and is credited with having engineered the fusion which captured North Carolina he has attained a rather dizzy prominence, but he bears it well. He has had a phenomenal career, indeed, as a precocious youth. He was admitted to the bar at 20, elected district solicitor at 21, elected to congress at 27, and now, at the age of 30, is in his second term and the recognized leader of his section.

The new men from the south have borne their honors most becomingly, but some of the gangs which followed them here have amused old spectators by their refreshing innocence.

Hon. Alonzo Craig Shuford of the Seventh North Carolina district is a trifle aggravated by the fact that the newspapers and the first official list of this congress set him down as a Republican, whereas he is a Populist of the most pronounced sort, believes in the whole Omaha platform and is half sorry there isn't more of it to believe. North Carolina has indeed been badly misrepresented in the papers. The Democrats declared from the start that the so called Populists were Republicans in disguise and, when the terms of the fusion were carried out in the election of senators, that there were "virtually two Republican senators, as Marion Butler was one." In truth, the boot is on the other leg, as we say in Paris. It would be much nearer correct to say that there are two Populist senators, for, though Mr. Pritchard is ranked as a Republican, he is certainly the mildest one on finance that I have run against since greenback days out west.

HON. A. C. SHUFORD. HON. W. F. STROUD.

An Independent Protectionist.

Hon. Richmond Pearson of the Ninth North Carolina district ran as an "Independent Protectionist," and so records himself in the directory, but aside from tariff tenets I doubt if he could be classed. Still more paradoxical is the position of Hon. Romulus V. Linney, who was elected as a Republican, and so classes himself, but has already introduced a bill for coining all the silver bullion produced in the United States and expects to make the fight of his congressional life on that line. He also wants all the silver bullion now owned by the government coined into dollars at the old ratio, and all the national debts paid half in these dollars and half in gold. He is a very ruddy and stocky gentleman of 54 and looks exactly like a successful farmer, but is a lawyer. He is also a very pleasant talker, and his war reminiscences would make a very readable article. "I joined the Confederate army at 17," he says, "and got my disabling wound at Chancellorsville. I well remember that as I lay wounded Lieutenant Colonel Hill, Lieutenants Mansfield Campbell and Lieutenant Robert A. Bullock, all of my company, lay dead just in front of me. As to politics, I was always a Democrat till I read Cleveland's first message and saw that there was to be war on silver. Then I left the party and have fought it ever since."

Now, isn't that a rather queer sort of Republican, who left the Democratic party because it was opposed to silver? Hon. Harry Skinner and Hon. William F. Stroud of the First and Fourth North Carolina are, like Mr. Shuford, Populist from the start, the former a lawyer, the latter a farmer. With very rare exceptions, members go into caucus with the party by which they were elected and support its measures, but were it not so I should set down the whole North Carolina delegation in both houses as silverite and Populist. Perhaps the busiest man among the southern Republicans is Hon. Walter Evans of the Louisville district. He is a spare, wiry sort of man, and as his life has been put in at hard work his constituents and a very large section of the south outside of his district seem to have taken it for granted that he can stand anything. Another hard worker apparently is Hon. George H. Noonan of San Antonio, Tex., who represents 37 counties of the most diverse climate, people and productions. He was judge of the district court for 33 years, and his Democratic friends attribute his election entirely to the high character he sustained in that office and his resulting popularity. Judge Noonan, however, will not listen to such an explanation, but thinks it was all on account of the Wilson bill putting wool on the free list. His big fight will be for restoring the McKinley rates on that staple.

Gains For Silver.

Among the very distinguished new men from the south is General James A. Walker, the only Republican from Virginia, and it adds not a little to his rank that he carried his district by some 3,000 against Cyclone Jim Marshall, who carried it by some 5,000 in 1892. It is worth noting that General Walker is also a radical silver man, and it may be said in general that the big percentage of extreme silver men among the new Republicans is one of the surprises of this congress. He talks it, too, with more than the average freedom, and is very confident that an overwhelming majority of the Republicans of the south would vote for the free coinage of silver at once if it were put to a popular vote. The general, as everybody knows—for he is a man of national reputation—was one of the most brilliant soldiers in the Confederate army, having commanded the famous "Stonewall brigade" and Early's division in the latter part of the war.

I have been much interested in the reasons given by those southern Republicans for their being here and for the general political revolution of 1894, but, after all, it seems that the enthusiasm of the politician nearly always overcomes the judgment of the man, for each is confident it was due entirely to the particular feature in which he takes most interest. Hon. J. H. Huling of West Virginia, for instance, attributes it altogether to the tariff and the slight which the Democrats put on the industries of his state, while the North Carolina men think "treason to silver" had a good deal to do with it. "The man who beat Billy Wilson" is the popular title for Hon. Alston Gordon Dayton, who has been a great success as a lawyer, but admits to some surprise at his sudden promotion to a congressman. Of course he thinks the tariff did it all, and that West Virginia is to remain Republican.

SUMMER FRUITS IN WINTER.

How Their Freshness Can Be Kept Unimpaired For Months.

[Special Correspondence.]

PARIS, Dec. 23.—Whose mouth does not water at the thought of a dish of strawberries for New Year's? Not the expensive and tasteless hothouse kind, but the natural berry, just as it is picked from the fields. Again, who would not be glad to have real muskmelons, watermelons, peaches, grapes and other fall and summer fruits in the dead of winter? These questions of course answer themselves.

Most persons, however, will be inclined to look at this style of turning winter into summer as something likely to happen when the moon turns to green cheese, and not before. Yet one of the noteworthy achievements of this wonderful age of exploration of the secrets of nature seems to be the discovery of a cheap and effective process whereby fresh fruit can be kept just as it was originally picked for a term of several months. This good news has just been made public in this country, where scientific horticulture has reached a high degree of proficiency. The joyous tidings will be welcome to the multitude of fruit growers throughout the United States and the still larger multitude of private consumers. The fruit growers can get materially better prices for their enormous crop, and the private consumers can enjoy table luxuries, oftentimes of great value for the preservation of health, such as are now denied them.

The process by which these beneficial results are to be achieved is a simple one. It was first put in practice by A. Petit, chief of the laboratory of horticultural research at the National Horticultural school of Versailles. He observed that pears and apples kept for several months, even when rotting had begun, in an atmosphere saturated with vapors of alcohol and water, without showing the slightest sign of mold. Convinced that he was on the track of important results, he embarked on a course of systematic experiment, choosing grapes as the fruit to be treated because of their great tenderness and liability to decay.

Bunches of grapes cut fresh from the vines were placed upon beds of wood shavings in a receptacle that was for all practical purposes a cemented brick box closed as nearly hermetically as possible by a common wooden door. A partly open bottle containing 61 cubic inches of alcohol was also placed in the brick box. To make the experiment complete equal quantities of grapes were placed in two similar brick boxes without any alcohol, the wooden cover of one being kept open and that of the other kept closed. The boxes were all located in a cool place.

The result of the experiment showed that at the end of nearly two months the grapes subjected to the alcoholic vaporization remained full, firm and of unimpaired flavor. Seventeen cubic inches of alcohol—more than one-fourth of its entire contents—remained in the bottle. On the other hand, the grapes in the brick boxes which were destitute of alcohol became hopelessly moldy and rotten in less than three weeks.

IN THE SOCIAL SWIM.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—On the 1st of January the busy social season at Washington begins, and social observance is more a business at the national capital than in any other American city. It is, in fact, more a business than a pleasure, and few people who are not familiar with the details of social life at Washington know what a stupendous task a woman undertakes when she joins the fashionable set. This season the society woman must crowd the fulfillment of all her social duties—of entertaining and being entertained—into less than two months. If she did not make a business of it, she would never fulfill her chosen mission. In the season which is about to open every hour which the society woman can spare from sleep will be needed for social duties, and she will be fortunate if she does not owe nature a big debt when Lent comes. As for being a mother to any one, that is something for which she will have no time, and if she is a true representative of her type no inclination.

There are few busier women in the social ranks than the wives of the United States senators. They are not necessarily leaders because of their husbands' high official positions. On the contrary, they occupy a middle ground socially even under the most favorable conditions. In fact, unless they come to Washington with other claims to social prominence their husbands' official positions count for very little. The wife of the senator from a large eastern city, who has the advantages of good birth, culture and wealth, has little difficulty in becoming not only prominent, but a leader in society, while her sister from the interior, who has led a quiet, domestic life at home and perhaps by her struggles and economies in early life has helped her husband to his high position, is seldom heard of or seen outside a small official circle. The fact that the senator's wife occupies this middle ground makes her, if she has social aspirations, all the keener to secure her place, and to do this she must follow to a most absurd extreme the unwritten social law of Washington. No feature of that law is more impressive than that which regulates precedence in calling. The senator's wife must call on the president's wife and the families of the cabinet officers. The latter calls must be made on cabinet day, which has always been Wednesday. She must call at the homes of the justices of the supreme court, on the wives of all the more recently elected senators (whom she is prone to patronize), and she must leave cards on those members of the corps diplomatique who are married—or represent themselves to be. She then draws the long satisfied sigh of the good and faithful servant, and having given of her time and strength and of her graciousness she fixes her day and prepares for the less blessed mission of receiving.

In this she must yield her own preference to the comfort and convenience of that tyrant, society.

If she wants to be popular in the exclusive resident set, she must join a reading club or a Shakespeare class or manage to become one of the patronesses of the Children's hospital ball.

When she sees her name even at the end of a list which is headed by Mrs. Cleveland and Lady Pauncefote, she feels that life holds little more that she could desire.

And now, with her mornings devoted to the readings and the hospital society, she starts on her career. She gets home from her morning's occupation in time to dress for a fashionable luncheon at 2—a luncheon at which she picks up the small gossip of her set, and where scandal goes up one side of the festive board as the salad is passed down the other. From this she rushes home, laden with flowers and her luncheon souvenir, in time to make additions to her toilet and start on a round of calls, stopping in at a "tea," where she has a clasp of the hand and a word from her hostess as she walks through the almost deserted parlor into the dining room beyond, where the crowd is always to be found struggling for a fried oyster or a glass of punch. She makes her way around, a word here, a smile there, a glass of punch in a corner, and then she is off. Another word with the deserted hostess, who must keep her position at the door, and away she goes to a similar "function" on the same block. She makes from 15 to 20 calls in an afternoon, "shows" at several teas and gets home in time to dress for a dinner at the house of another senator or a member of the cabinet. From this she goes to a White House reception, where she stays a short time, stopping on her way home for a moment at another less pretentious but more exclusive entertainment given by some one who is not in the official circle.

This is a typical day in the life of a society woman in Washington. Is it any wonder that one was heard to say at the end of last season that her acquaintances would crowd a church, but her friends would not fill the pulpit?

PRETTY BALL GOWNS

THEY OWE IT ALL TO THEIR DECIDED SIMPLICITY.

Striking Lace Effects—Continued Popularity of Button Trimming—Black Woolen Goods—The Gown For Gentlewomen. Short Lived Novelty Goods.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—Just now the feminine mind is fixed upon two important things—one is the lovely ball gowns and the other the warm and fur trimmed outdoor coats and wraps. Of the two the ball gowns probably have the greatest interest, for they are devoted to pleasure only and are allied to music, flowers, bright scenes and perhaps to "Him." The "H" of a young lady's secret thoughts is always spelled with a capital. He is the only "H" to her, and for "Him" she wishes to look charming. The ball dresses of this season are very pretty, and they owe their beauty to their simplicity. Baby waists and straight gathered skirts are the rule and the elaborate ones are the exception. Many artificial flowers are worn, belts, berthas and garlands being one style of employing them. There are almost no floating sprays. Whatever flowers are used are set very close to each other and have scarcely any foliage. The prettiest and most serviceable of dancing gowns are those made of silk mull. It is tough and keeps fresh longer than anything else, and when it is white, ivory or cream it can be made into a new one by a fresh set of ribbons or a different lace or flower garniture.

Point applique lace is imitated so closely now that it requires an expert to know which is the real, and it is laid over velvet and plush, cloth and silks and is used with fur to trim almost everything. A very odd way to apply it is to take a rich and heavy insertion, and with a fine scissors cut off both edges. This leaves the pattern without any straight border. The lace is then sewed down to the garment, and the effect is very striking. I saw a matinee jacket of pearl gray swan's down flannel, and this was gathered to a round yoke of black velvet, which was bordered with an inch wide band of chinchilla. The choker collar and the bottom were bordered with the fur. The garment was shirred in to fit the waist. The sleeves were bishop shape, but were taken in just above the wrists under a velvet band. The lower part of the sleeves was turned under, forming a sort of puffed fall. The band of insertion was set along down the front and around the yoke, collar and sleeves, adding a rich effect impossible to describe.

While buttons as trimming are so popular one must admit that there are other modes of finishing a costume that would better please those of quiet tastes. Among those, one favorite is to have bindings and other devices of astrakhan. This always looks rich and is always in good taste, and it can also be made very dressy. I saw a waist that was exceptionally dressy, and it was made of plain gray cheviot. There was a wide belt, with buckle, and a pale pink shirt front, with silver buttons and a black necktie. The waist was in form of a short nondescript jacket, neither Eton, figaro nor bolero, but a little of each. There was a rolling collar, and this had a wide border of close astrakhan. The bottom was bordered with it, and there were three narrow bands down the front of the jacket, but only two in the back, and these simulated side seams. There were two narrow bands around the bottom of the skirt. Altogether the suit was a very stylish affair.

Black woolen goods are decidedly fashionable now, whether one is or is not in mourning, and are always the gentlewoman's gown. Nothing can be more truly elegant than a nice piece of any one of those materials made up well. And black has an advantage over all colors—it can be worn anywhere and on all occasions. With the application of English crape any black gown may be made into a mourning dress if the owner is so unfortunate as to require one. Bands, panels, waists and sleeves of crape may be added in any modish manner with comparatively little trouble.

TOPIC.—The peril and the power of ambition.—Luke ii, 52; Deut. viii, 11-20.

Ambition is an inordinate and eager desire of preferment, honor, superiority or power. The peril and the power of ambition are illustrated in the lives of many of the worlds most illustrious men. The power of their ambition has been so great that, regardless of the just rights of others, regardless of the laws of God, they have sought only to accomplish their purposes, and when position and power have been attained God has been forgotten, and no claims that even He has had upon them have been considered.

In the first Scriptural reference we have pointed out to us a laudable ambition and the gracious results of it. We are told that Jesus grew in favor with God and man. Christ was in the true sense ambitious. He was filled with an inordinate desire to do the will of God. We cannot be filled with too much of this kind of ambition. Paul also had a worthy ambition. He expressed it when he said, "We labor that whether present or absent we may be accepted of Him." We cannot be filled with too strong a desire to serve God and to so labor that we may be accepted of Him. This should be the one ambition of our lives, and if we make it that we will not only grow in favor with God, but also with man, as Jesus did.

In the second reference there is a solemn warning against forgetting God in the time of prosperity. The children of Israel could not but see the hand of God in their guidance and direction in the wilderness, but in the land of Canaan it would be different. There the blessings of prosperity and wealth would come from God through second causes, and there might be a temptation in the pride of their hearts for them to say, "My power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth." This is the great danger of prosperity—that it may make us proud and ambitious, that we will take all the credit to ourselves and forget that we are indebted to God for all things.

False ambition always leads to destruction. God solemnly warns us against it. It has ruined some of the world's greatest men, and is supposed to have caused the downfall of the angels who fell from heaven. True ambition—a burning desire to serve God—receives His blessing and favor and the favor and confidence of men. Let us then "labor that whether present or absent we may be accepted of Him."

Bible Readings.—Gen. xi, 1-9; I Kings i, 5-53; Ps. xviii, 27; Prov. xvii, 19; xxix, 23; Isa. xiv, 12-20; Jer. li, 49-53; Ezek. xxxi, 10-12; Math. xviii, 1-3; xx, 20-28; xxiii, 1-12; Luke xiv, 8-11; xxii, 24-26; Rom. xii, 10; Phil. ii, 3-12; II Thess. ii, 1-4; Jas. iv, 5-10; I Pet. v, 5, 6; III John ix.

THE ENDEAVOR PLEDGE.

There Is No Excuse a Christian Can Give For Not Keeping It.

From the beginning of the Christian Endeavor movement some one has wanted to try his hand at tinkering the pledge. "The pledge is too strong," or "The pledge couldn't be lived up to," or "Something must be changed to adapt it to the peculiarities of our society." It is amazing how many "peculiar" societies there are in the world.

There are not so many of these pledge tinkers as there used to be, but we hear of them every now and then, even in these days. Now there is not much objection to altering the phraseology, if the meaning is not changed or the strenuousness of the pledge is not weakened, but this is the very thing that most pledge tinkers desire to do.

Now I should like to whisper in their ears that the revised Christian Endeavor pledge was prepared very carefully and prayerfully. Days of time were spent in weighing each word, so that every one might be the right word in the right place. The strength of every phrase was considered and special pains was taken not to have a single letter or syllable in the pledge which the youngest and weakest active member could not keep.

Twice, in the heart of the pledge, at the risk of tautology, and perhaps to the detriment of the queen's English, the phrase is substantially repeated, "Unless prevented by a reason which I can conscientiously give to the Lord Jesus Christ." That is the only excuse which the Christian ever ought to be willing to give for the nonperformance of any known duty. This is twice admitted and insisted on in the heart of the pledge, and it fully excuses any conscientious Christian, if he has any excuse worth giving. A Christian Endeavor society that fully understands what the pledge means in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred will vote against altering it. What is needed is a careful study of the pledge. Have a meeting to explain it and talk about it and to understand its thorough reasonableness.

My earnest advice to pledge tinkers is, "Don't."—Secretary Baer.

Points For Endeavorers.

Boston, Lowell and Woburn each reports a Greek Christian Endeavor society.

Many of the Indian Christian Endeavor societies of the west are organized into a separate union called the Dakota Christian Endeavor union.

There is hope that Christian Endeavor will soon gain a foothold in the land of the czar.

"C. E.," says a Junior worker in New Zealand, "stands for 'Children Especially.'"

The Old-Time Fire.

FRANK L. STANTON.

Talk about yer buildin's
That's het up by steam—
Give me the old oak fire
Where the old folks used to dream;
The rickety dog-irons,
One-sided as could be;
The ashes banked with 'taters
That was roast n' there for me;
The dog on one side, drowsin',
Or barkin' nigh the door;
The kitten cuttin' capers
With the knittin' on the floor,
An' me, a little tow-head,
By mammy's side at night,
With both my cheeks a-burnin'
From the red flames leapin' bright.
These steam-het buildin's make me
Jest weary fer the blaze
That was a heap more comfortable
In my childhood's nights and days.
An' I'd give the finest heater
In the buildin's het by steam
Fer the old-time chimbley corner
Where the old folks used to dream!

Miscellany.

THE NARROW WORLD.

Something had happened!

There was such a rosy flush on her cheek, so bright a gleam in her eye, and on his face such an utter abandon of joy, that any one—even a man—could have guessed the truth.

Fortunately they had chosen the hill road, the least travelled of all the ways that lead down from the Montecito valley into Santa Barbara, and for the first half hour after the event they met no one.

It was what the inhabitants of the channel city call a "genuine Santa Barbara day." The sun shone warm and bright, and a soft perfumed breeze came out of the west. There was June in the air, although the calendar was set for midwinter. The birds sang in the trees above them, the squirrels chirped from the hillside, and their horses, wandering at times from the road, sank to the knee in a waving sea of flowers.

"First of all," she said, breaking the silence of a whole minute, "you must tell my father."

"Certainly," said the young man. "Who's afraid?"

"You have never seen papa do the role of the cruel parent," said the girl; "he can be quite a dragon. As you are a kinsman, however,—

"A fifth cousin," cried the young man with a laugh.

"Well, fifth cousins are better than nothing, aren't they?"

"Truly; how else should we be here today?" Then the young man added with peculiar and significant emphasis: "I am inclined to pride myself on that little scheme."

The girl brought her horse to a sudden stop and turned her clear brown eyes, half opened under their long lashes, upon her companion.

"That little scheme," she repeated, slowly. "I don't understand."

The young man laughed uneasily. "Why, Catherine," said he, "you don't mean that you have believed in the entertaining fiction about our great-great-etcetera-grandfather?"

"Old Ebenezer Strong?" exclaimed the girl. "How dare you call him fictitious, when I saw his portrait at my own grandfather's."

"As your ancestor, my dear one, he is an undoubted reality—but as mine, I regret to say, he is merely a figment of your worthy father's imagination. In short—I would fain break it to you as gently as possible—we are not fifth cousins at all, but just plain ordinary"—

"Not fifth cousins!"

"No, darling; and if you are going to faint, please fall on this side, with your head right here on my shoulder."

"I won't! Wretched boy, how could you deceive poor papa so?"

"I didn't deceive him. He deceived himself. From the very beginning of our acquaintance he seemed determined to locate me somewhere on the Weston family tree, and you aided and abetted him in the attempt."

"Richard Strong how can you!"

"I have a sweet and gentle disposition, and when he asked me if I was not descended from Ebenezer Strong, of West Brighton Centre, and you looked at me so appealing"—

"I didn't any such thing!"

"Why shouldn't I assent I have doubtless had several hundred ancestors named Strong, and I took the chances that some one of them rejoiced in the prenomen of Ebenezer. It is just the sort of name that my forebears were given to putting upon themselves, as an effective and continuous mortificatinn of the flesh. A horsehair shirt, now, would be nothing to it."

"You may laugh, if it pleases you," said the girl, severely, "but if papa had known you were not a relative we should not be riding alone together. He generally disapproves of the Eastern people who spend the winter at the hotel."

"If you really feel that I have been guilty of false pretenses," said the young man, drawing his horse a little nearer, "suppose we begin all over again."

"Keep your distance, sir!" exclaimed the girl, steering to the opposite side of the road. "If we are to start afresh, let it be from the very beginning, three weeks ago."

"Now, as to your father," resumed the young man. "I think I understand him pretty well, because my one and only parent, the govenor himself, is constructed on much the same plan. Wherever he goes he is continually in search of the lost tribes of the Strong genealogy. The last letter I had from him in Colorado, where he is spending the winter, contained the announcement that he had unearthed four or five new cousins—choice specimens, I doubt not, that he will expect me to meet and embrace on my way home.

"Perhaps it was wrong," he continued, after a moment of reflection, "to play upon that little peculiarity of your father's, to get into his good graces, but you must consider the extraordinary provocation, dear. It seemed like my only chance—are you sorry I took it?"

She looked her answer, but did not speak it, and then, avoiding the hand extended to seize her own, she struck her horse a light blow and dashed down the road ahead.

A long, even canter in silence followed, and they were well into town before the conversation began again. Then, fearful of observation, they spoke in commonplaces.

They turned into State street, and stopped at the post-office, the morning's mail having constituted the chief cause for the trip to town. Richard Strong dismounted, and presently appeared with a letter in his hand.

"None for you," he said. "This is for me, from the governor. I'll wager it has something in it about cousins."

"Let me see," said the girl, holding out her hand. He tore the letter open and gave it to her. Then be swung himself into his saddle, and they started slowly down the street.

Suddenly the girl gave a faint cry.

"Papa has been writing to him!" she exclaimed.

"Writing to him? What for?"

"He has asked him to pay us a visit on the score of relationship, and your father——"

"Well?" said the young man, excitedly.

"He says he will start immediately—the very next day."

"Let me see the date of the letter. Ye gods! It has been delayed! He must have got here this morning!"

"The train has been in two hours," she said, glancing at her watch.

"I must see him immediately," said her companion, nervously turning his horse first one way and then another. "Who would have dreamed that both the old boys would take that cousinship so seriously?"

"I did, sir. I knew from the very beginning that it would make trouble some time."

"From the very beginning?" repeated the young man, pausing in his excitement long enough to note the force of this chance admission. "So you acknowledge, do you——"

"There's the hotel 'bus," cried the girl, hastily changing the subject. "Perhaps the driver can tell us something."

A long, empty vehicle was passing them on it way up the street. Strong called to the driver and he stopped.

"Did you bring up a tall gentleman this morning, with a white mustache and goatee and gold eye glasses?"

"Yes, sir. Your father, don't you mean?"

The young people exchanged startled glances.

"How did you know?"

"He was inquiring for you, sir, as soon as ever he got to the hotel; and when he found you were gone, he went and hired a buggy."

"A buggy—what for?"

"He asked the way to Judge Weston's place in the Montecito. He said the judge was a near relative of his."

"A near relative!" groaned the horrified Strong, while his companion turned away her face, although whether to conceal a look of anguish or a laugh will never be known.

The omnibus proceeded on its way.

"We must hurry," said the young man, spurring his horse to a canter. "The less time they have together before explanations are made the better."

"What do you think they will do?" asked the girl.

"I don't dare to think. You see on everything except this family tree business our respective parents are as far apart as civilized humans can be. Your father, now, is an elder in the church, while mine has lost all the religion he ever had; and he has never recovered from the habit of using swear words acquired during years of service in the regular army."

"Oh, dear! Oh, dear!"

"Then, again, Judge Weston is an ardent Republican."

"And is your father a Democrat?"

"Worse than that—he is a Mugwump."

"How interesting! I have always longed to see one of them."

"And my father believes that Bacon wrote Shakespeare's plays."

"Heavens! Let us ride faster. Papa will have slain him before we get there."

"Really, Catherine," said the young man, when they had slackened their pace to climb the hills, "it would not surprise me if they positively refused to enter into partnership as fathers-in-laws."

"Never mind, Richard," said the girl, smilingly. "Father has never yet refused me anything, when my happiness was at stake—as it is now."

Strong struggled his shoulders. "Mine has," he answered. "He is made of flint, the old general; and if he should take it into his head to say no, it would be awkward in ways I don't like to mention."

"Never mind," said the girl, smiling again and lifting her veil to the rim of the jaunty sailor hat.

And a moment later the young man felt much encouraged, and the gallop was resumed.

On a slight knoll surrounded by a grove of live-oaks, and faced with an avenue of old palms, there stood the ample residence of Judge Weston. As the young people came through the gate and entered upon the graveled roadway, they observed two elderly gentlemen emerge from a small forest of rose bushes, and start briskly down the path toward them. Presently the shorter of the two took his companion's arm, and they walked along in evident peace and amity.

Judge Weston assisted his daughter to alight. "Catherine," said he, "this is General Strong, the father of our young friend."

The general bent low in an old-fashioned obeisance, and Miss Catherine instinctively made him a courtesy out of the minuet.

"Father!"

"Dick, my dear boy!"

"See here," exclaimed the judge suddenly. "You were mistaken, Richard, in what you told me about old Ebenezer Strong."

The young man braced himself for a struggle.

"And to think, Dick," cried the general, reproachfully, "that you never once mentioned to the judge that your great-great-grandfather, Hezekiah Strong, married a Weston."

"And that brings us even nearer than we had supposed," added the judge. "Fourth cousins instead of fifth."

"It was stupid of me to forget that," said the young man, huskily.

"And now that I have seen Miss Catherine," said the general, taking her hand and passing his arm about her waist, "my only regret is that the relationship is not several degrees nearer yet."

Then Catherine looked at Richard, and he told what had happened on the way to town. Straightaway there was a great amount of handshaking and a good deal of kissing done in broad daylight under the palms.—Charles Dwight Willard, in The Land of Sunshine.

A Queer Corn Popper.

"Here are six ears of pop corn left. We'll use them tonight," said grandma; and she gave them to Rob, telling him to put them with the corn popper.

Grandma didn't tell Rob where that was, for she kept forgetting that he had not been there since he was a baby, and did not know where things were kept. Off the little boy went, and nothing more was said about the pop corn until evening. Then grandma said:

"If Rob will go down cellar and get some apples, I will get the corn and the popper."

Back she came with the popper, but no corn.

"Didn't you put it with the popper, Rob?"

"Yes, ma'am, but not with that one; it's in the one that stands by the tall clock in your room."

"What, Rob?"

Off went Rob to the room so full of queer things; a tall clock, a bed with curtains, and the spinning wheel grandma's grandma used. And what do you think he brought back? A warming pan with six ears of corn in it. How everybody laughed, until grandpa said:

"Never mind, Rob. It does look like a corn popper, doesn't it? I'll tell you what they used that for. It was to warm up cold beds for little boys, and we'll warm yours tonight with it. Bring it to me, and I'll explain it.

"This stout brass pan held the hot coals. Then this cover with so many little round holes shut down to keep them in, and this long handle made it easy to slip the hot pan up and down between the cold sheets. How I did like to see my mother put the hot coals into the warming pan! It was cold going to bed in those days. That was long before there was a furnace in the house. We had fireplaces down stairs, but no fires up stairs. As soon as we finish our apples and corn, we'll try the warming pan."

Sure enough, when it was bedtime, grandpa and Rob tipped the cover back on the hinge. Grandpa put in a few ashes, so the pan should not become hot enough to scorch the sheets, then some live coals; and Rob put down the cover.

And they warmed three beds that were already warm just to show Rob how little boys were made comfortable cold nights a hundred years ago.—Youth's Companion.

To Renovate Feather Pillows.

Fill the wash boiler nearly half full of water, put over the fire and keep the fire up at a brisk rate. Then fasten several sticks across inside of the boiler, not touching the water. Take two old white pillow slips, sew up the ends all but a few inches, then open the feather pillows the same number of inches, sew the two together where they have been opened, and shake the feathers into a clean slip. In this way you will avoid having feathers scattered all over the house. When you have emptied both pillows, sew up the seam in the slips again, and lay one pillow across the sticks in the boiler. By this time the water will be boiling rapidly. Put on the lid and let it steam from one to two hours. It is best to steam one pillow at a time. In the meantime open the seam of the old slip covers and shake them out thoroughly and put to soak.

It is best to buy new ticking for your pillows, but if you cannot conveniently do so wash and iron the old covers and use them again. If you should, however, get new covers, then you can use the old ones for kitchen towels.

When the pillows have steamed a sufficient length of time, take them out and fasten on the clothesline with pins. Let them drip until dry. They can be left out one night if necessary. You will be surprised at the fluffiness of your pillows when you get through with them. Select a warm bright day for your work.—American Agriculturist.

He Sent the Letter.

He slowly approached the stamp clerk's window at the postoffice with a letter in his hand and asked:

"Do you trust?"

"Not any one on earth," replied the clerk.

"If I should frank this envelope, same as Congressmen, would it go?"

"No sir."

"Isn't this government a paternal one, and willing to furnish a stamp to a needy person and collect later on?"

"No sir."

"But there must be a way I can send this letter to Washington?"

"Yes; post it without a stamp and it will go to the Dead Letter Office there."

"Ah! I see. It's to a friend of mine in that same office, and of course he'll get it. 'Scuse me, sir, but I'm a bit off this morning, and not as clear headed as I might be. You have saved me a stamp, sir—a two cent stamp—and I feel grateful and will always remember you. That's the way, of course, and here she goes. What could I have been thinking of to stamp a letter going to the Dead Letter Office.

Had Something to Maintain.

"So your house was burglarized the other night?" querried one of the women, as the pair waited at the corner of the street for a car.

"Yes." You saw it in the papers?"

"I did. How much did you lose?"

"Well, we are not quite sure, but it will foot up at least $100."

"But the papers say about $1,000."

"Yes, I know."

"And it was only about $100?"

"About that; but, you see, what could we do? Why the family next door had a burglar in the house and put their lose at $300 and he is only a clerk getting $15 per week and has no social standing whatever!"

"Oh—of—course—I see—y-e-s!" said the innocent-minded woman whose house had never been burglarized and then began to talk of the latest thing in winter hats and wonder if puff sleeves had come to stay.—Boston Home Journal.

A Simple Night Lamp.

In every home it is sometimes necessary to have a night light, and it becomes indispensable where there are invalids or young children. A lamp when turned low diffuses an unpleasant and unwholesome odor in a room. Gas is also objectionable. There are pretty little affairs called "fairy lamps," but many of these do not work well and are found to offer disagreeable features. A cheap and simple night lamp, which can be arranged by one person, is made by floating a piece of candle on a small, thin disk of wood or tin in a bowl of water. It will last for several hours. Indeed, it can be made to burn slowly by sprinkling fine salt around the wick, and will go out when it burns down to the water, into which it drops and is extinguished without giving out any noxious smell.

Climate and Air.

Purity of air. This is very important. The German surgeon Langebeck believed consumption due most of all to foul air. The temperature of air is quite an indifferent matter. Let it be cool or warm, if only it be fresh. Do not fear night air. Keep window of sleeping-room open. Often night air is purer than day air.

Ventilation is very essential. Some physicians in California have their consumptive patients sleep out-of-doors, not even having a tent. Dr. MacCormac believed open doors and windows would banish consumption.

Of course the climate must allow of such fresh air treatment. If the food, bedding, etc., of a hospital be good, but the air bad, many will die; while most of the patients in a hospital with inferior food and other provisions, but with excellent air, will live. Comparisons of this kind have been made; so of prisons, houses of correction, etc. Air is more important than any other one factor. The care now given in the construction of most of our hospitals, etc., as to thorough ventilation; show a general consensus of opinion as to the therapeutic importance of air, pure air, and plenty of it.

One great reason why a change of climate is good, is that it enables the patient to be more out-of-doors, causes him to exercise more. He is away from his ordinary work and finds pleasure in spending the time in strolling about. If he can fish and hunt, so much the better. The great object is to get the fresh air and to exercise the body.

Dr. Charteris, in a lecture at the Glasgow Royal Infirmary, was very frank in this matter. He said: "The benefits of warm climates and of well-known health resorts for phthisis simply consists in this, that out-door exercise can be indulged in those with greater impunity and with less chance of, in any way, lowering the vitality."—Healthy Home.

Annie Laurie.

Most people suppose "Annie Laurie" to be a creation of the songwriter's fancy, or perhaps some Scotch peasant girl, like Highland Mary and most of the heroines of Robert Burns. In either case they are mistaken.

Annie Laurie was "born in the purple," so to speak, at Maxwelton House, in the beautiful glen of the Cairn—Glencairn. Her home was in the heart of the most "pastorally," lovely of Scottish shires—that of Dumfries. Her birth is thus set down by her father, in what is called the "Barjorg MS.:"

"At the pleasure of the Almighty God, my daughter Anna Laurie was borne upon the 16th day of December, 1682 years, about six o'clock in the morning, and was baptized by Mr. George —— minister of Glencairn."

Maxwelton House was originally the castle of the earls of Glencairn. It was bought in 1611 by Stephen Laurie, the founder of the Laurie family. Stephen was a Dumfries merchant. The castle was a turrented building. In it Annie Laurie was born.—McClure's Magazine.

Too Much Starch.

Dr. L. M. Holbrook thinks we eat too much starch, and would substitute for much farinaceous food nuts and fruit. He speaks strongly in favor of nuts.

Nuts must be thoroughly masticated before they can be swallowed. They are dry and stimulate the flow of saliva, and this going into the stomack keeps back for some time its acidity, and so the digestion of starch can go on for 30 or 40 minutes, indeed so much longer time than it otherwise would. Epicures have long known that nuts at the end of a heavy meal actually promote digestion. Those who overeat often take them for this purpose. The reason is plain. They produce a copious flow of saliva, and this going into the stomach at just the right time helps to digest the starch before the gastric juice has been secreted. Then, in addition, many nuts are highly nitrogenous, and nitrogenous food is often taken in too small quantities. Nevertheless it would be unwise to infer that a dessert of nuts would relieve one from the consequences of overeating.

Women and the Public Schools.

A proper understanding of the possibilities of public education would convince every woman that she has a sacred duty towards it. School buildings are public property, whose doors every citizen has a right to enter and whose arrangement is a matter of vital interest to every home. If you cannot gain a place on the school board bring your influence to so bear that the tide of public opinion shall carry you to your desired haven. Let us make use of the power undeniably within our reach and by the wisdom and thoroughness of our administration in that which we have in hand demonstrate our ability to triumph in any sphere we may hereafter find for ourselves. Do not let us depreciate power already possessed as of small value, for no field outside of home offers such pressing and immediate demands upon women or promises such results as our public schools. Emily Huntington Miller.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

There was a goodly number of spectators at the meeting of the City Council Monday evening and every member of the Council was present at roll call.

Upon motion of Councilman Pinkham the report of the special committee on rules was taken up and the rules for 1895 were adopted with a few changes: the increasing the Committee on Finance to seven members and the Committee on Public Buildings to five members.

A communication was received from the Mayor fowarding the jury list, which was read and ordered posted.

Petitions.

Councilman Russell presented a petition for incandescent lights on Trafford street. To Committee on Streets.

A petition was received for an arc light on the corner of Standish and Old Colony avenues, Wollaston. To Committee on Streets.

Several petitions for minor licenses were received and referred.

Councilman Sprague presented a petitions of the Quincy Electric Light and Power Co. to erect six poles on Newport avenue. To Committee on Streets.

Reports of Committees.

The special committee on the order authorizing the City Treasurer to borrow $100,000 in anticipation of taxes, reported favorably and the order was passed to be ordained under suspension of the rules.

Hospital Trustees.

New Business.

Councilman Nickerson offered an order requesting the Mayor to petition the Legislature for special legislation to enable it to establish a municipal lighting plant for municipal purposes only, without first purchasing the plant of the Quincy Electric Light and Power Co. Adopted.

Councilman Nickerson offered an order granting the Quincy Electric Light & Power Co. a right to attach its lines to the New England Telephone Co.'s poles on the easterly side of Hancock street and instructing the Commissioners of Public Works to see that they were placed there inside of 60 days and that the Telephone company remove the polls on the westerly side of the street and all poles on the easterly side not in use. Adopted.

Councilman Field doubted the vote but the order was adopted by a vote of 18 to 1.

The Committees.

President Bryant announced the following committees:

Finance, Accounts, Claims, Contracts and Salaries,—Claflin, Anderson, Nickerson, Field, Pinkham, Rice, Rideout.

Streets, Ways, Sidewalks, Bridges and Lights,—Rinn, Nickerson, Lamb, Field, Hayden, Cleaves, Russell.

Sewers and Drains, Water Supply,—Rice, Pinkham, Phillips, Parker, Murray Geary, Badger.

Fire Department and Police,—Lamb, Sprague, Geary, Cleaves, Barker.

Ordinances, Licenses, Printing, Rules and Orders,—Sidelinger, Holt, Barker.

Legislative Matters, Elections and Returns,—Anderson, Sidelinger, Russell.

The Council adjourned at 8.05.

Supper at the Greenleaf.

On the adjournment of the Council, upon the invitation of President Bryant, the entire body proceeded to The Greenleaf, to discuss one of Hayden's best suppers; and then to have an informal talk upon the best methods of forwarding the business, for the current year.

The post-prandial exercises opened by a very lucid address by President Bryant upon the proposed subject. He contended that many matters in the Council of small consequence, that heretofore had been referred to Committees—could at once be referred to the Mayor, and if at a later stage were recommended to the Council by His Honor, could then be acted on, thereby saving time and needless trouble to the committees.

The members, very generally, expressed themselves upon the subject matter, and all expressions were in hearty sympathy with the President. The purpose of the President evidently was to bring the Council back to the original idea of the framers of the charter, and make the Council a working, rather than a talking body. Not to shut out all or any proper debate, but to prevent endless discussions over small and insignificant subjects.

A pleasant side-play afterwards ensued, upon the school question, and while there was some divergence of opinion, everything said and done was of the most agreeable character, and voting the President their cordial thanks for his handsome entertainment, they parted at about ten o'clock, feeling better acquainted with each other, and satisfied that the time had been well spent.

The President has certainly scored one success and it is the belief that through the year many others will follow.

Cubans Taxed to Death.

Some of the causes which have led up to the revolt in Cuba against Spanish rule, are very clearly set fourth in the address of the Cuban revolutionists to the people of the United States; and they show conclusively that Cuba has greater reason for revolting against Spain than the American colonies had for taking up arms against England in 1776. In the words of an exchange:

Cubans are taxed at the rate of $16.18 a head for every man, woman and child on the island. Only 3 per cent. of this money is used in Cuba. The rest goes to bolster up the rotten old court at Madrid. At the same time the inhabitants of Spain itself are taxed less than half as much as the Cubans. Cubans have not a word to say in the passage of any law. They are governed from Madrid. They are bound hand and foot and gagged. No import duties are allowed on Spanish products taken to Cuba. But every thousand cigars shipped from Cuba must pay to Spain an export duty of $1.80. Spain pays a bounty on the sugar raised in Spain. But if Cuban sugar is shipped to Spain, it must pay a duty of $6.20 on every 200 pounds. There are three other separate, several taxes on every pound of sugar raised or exported from Cuba. Under these restrictions the life is gradually being squeezed out of both the tobacco and sugar industries of Cuba. Tobacco statisticians give the cigar trade only half a dozen years more to live at all. What would any people with a spark of manhood do under such circumstances? Death itself is preferable to slavery like this.—Milford Journal.

The Quincy Patriot.

SIX PAGES.

QUINCY, SATURDAY, JAN. 18, 1896.

Metropolitan Boulevards.

Mayor Adams petition to the Legislature, to authorize the Metropolitan Park commission to construct a boulevard from Squantum Head to the Blue Hills reservation skirting the shores of the picturesque Quincy Bay through Merry Mount Park and up Furnace brook valley to the reservation making one of the most magnificent seashore and upland roadways in the country, is a step to be commended. It interests the poor man as well as the rich man. It places under public control the valuable franchises of the shores of Quincy bay for time immemorial. It does away with private ownership and trespass signs. It opens its beaches and waters to the people. It will be the people's promenade.

For several years this plan has been under contemplation. It was warmly advocated by Messrs. Charles Francis Adams, Chas. H. Porter and William B. Rice, Park Commissioners, in their report for 1892, and was heartily endorsed by Mayor Fairbanks, both in his inaugerals, and since in speeches before the public.

In 1892, Mr. Charles Eliot now of Olmstead, Olmstead & Eliot, the eminent landscape architect, made plans and a report of this proposed boulevard to the Park Commissions. Mr. Eliot said in substance that "the city of Quincy is most favorably placed. Behind her rise the rocky ridges of the Blue Hills, beside her on either hand flow the Neponset and Weymouth rivers, and at her feet is spread the bay. The situation is peculiarly symmetrical. The peninsula of Squantum, besides the mouth of the Neponset, is matched by that of Hough's Neck, besides the mouth of Weymouth Fore river. Hangman's island lies nearly in the middle of the space embraced by the two peninsulas; and Black's creek, the only considerable break in the shore line of the bay, again lies near the middle, both of the bay's curve and of the city. Just here, too, there appears another fortunate feature in the geography of Quincy, namely, the deep valley of Furnace brook, a stream which seems to have been made to flow where it is on purpose to provide the inhabitants of the interior region of West Quincy and East Milton with an easy and beautiful route to the central portion of the bay shore.

"The existing Adams street follows first one side and then the other side of this valley, by a route which involves many ascents and descents; but when the city shall have taken possession of the bottom of the valley, as it should for sanitary reasons (if for no other), it will then be possible to lay out a road which by following the stream, will avoid all ups and downs, and by which Black's creek and the bay will be reached very pleasantly and easily.

"Descending now this valley of approach, the tide is met at the old dam of Black's creek about half a mile from the open bay. Here there is a charming view down the creek, comprising a distant glimpse of the bay, with perhaps a sail or two, the winding creek itself and its accompanying salt meadows, two or three boats moored in the creek, and for a frame a varied bank of oaks, pines and cedars on either hand. There is no better composed landscape in all the neighborhood of Boston; and certainly there is no prettier."

Mayor Adams has shown commendable foresight in having the construction placed in the hands of Metropolitan Park Commission. This will not throw the whole of the burden upon the city but will place it upon the Metropolitan Park district, thus making Quincy's share of the expense small.

In connection with this boulevard the development of Merry Mount park will naturally come up. As has already been pointed out in the LEDGER, the city is now at liberty to begin work upon it. But it is hardly possible that anything substantial will be done for a few years, outside of developing the plans. Not a sod should be turned or a tree trimmed until eminent landscape architects like Olmstead, Olmstead & Eliot of Boston, formulate the plans which are to be carried out by future commissions. To give this development over to mediocre landscape gardeners would make a botch of what our citizens desire to have in the future,—one of the most beautiful public parks in the country.

Under judicious management this can be accomplished at a minimum expense; under ignorant management it can be made to be a burden and an eyesore to the city for years to come.

Chapel Opened.

The new chapel of the Calvary Baptist church at South Quincy is practically completed and the formal opening of the edifice was held Sunday, all of the services being largely attended.

The morning service consisted of an invocation by Rev. C. A. Parker, scripture reading by Rev. W. H. Eaton, secretary of the New England Baptist society of Boston; prayer by Rev. Mr. Parker; solo by Mrs. H. L. Harding; sermon by Rev. Mr. Eaton who preached from St. John, xii—31:32.

There was also singing by the choir and an offering for the building fund.

In the afternoon the exercises consisted of scripture reading by Rev. Robert W. Peach; prayer by Rev. E. N. Hardy; solo by Mrs. H. L. Harding, and brief addresses by Rev. E. N. Hardy, Rev. Robert W. Peach and Rev. Alexander Blackburn, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist church Cambridge; singing by the choir and an offering for the building fund.

In the evening there was a short address by Miss Florence Crosby, a missionary, and a service of prayer and praise.

Ladies as Yacht Members.

There has been so much interest aroused by the statement in Monday LEDGER that an article would be inserted in the warrant for the annual meeting of the Quincy Yacht club proposing the admission of women to membership that we print the proposed amendment in full. It reads :—

"Any woman is eligible for election to the club as a flag member, and shall, upon election, pay annual dues but no initiation fee.

"Such membership shall carry only the following privileges :—

"The right to fly the club burgee, to enter a yacht in club races, and the use of the club house and floats."

The New York Yacht Club was the first yacht club to adopt this amendment to its by-laws. If the Quincy Yacht Club adopts it it will be the second club in the country that has taken so radical a step.

The many friends of Ben Johnson will be pleased to know that he is recovering from his accident at the Quincy depot a few days ago.

The report that a collation was served at the Sons of Veterans installation proves to have been erroneous, and the members who went home early feel better.

The petition of C. F. Adams, 2d, and others for the Metropolitan boulevards was presented to the Legislature by Representative Thompson and was referred to the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs.

In the insolvency court at Dedham, Wednesday, adjourned third meetings were held in the cases of J. D. Taber and Mirianne Taber of Quincy, and a first meeting in case of G. V. Bates, W. A. Knowland being appointed assignee.

The Greenleaf Whist club met Thursday evening. The first prizes, a china card receiver and a silver souvenir spoon, were won by Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Drake. The consolation prizes were awarded to Mr. Harry Badderly and Miss Bliss.

Probate court for Norfolk county was held at Dedham Wednesday, and the wills of Eldridge Sprague late of Holbrook, Warren Cobb late of Sharon and Margaret Ford late of Weymouth were allowed. Administrations were granted on the estate of Thomas Wells late of Quincy; Patrick Kelley, late of Milton; and others.

The Quincy Yacht club is to be congratulated upon having secured Henry G. Peabody of Boston, the famous photographer, to deliver his illustrated lecture on the North Shore, at an early date. The views are beautiful, equally in brilliancy and finish any of John L. Stoddards. Mr. Peabody recently lectured before the Newton club.

Master Everett Winslow celebrated his 13th birthday at his parent's residence on Baxter street, on Monday evening from 7 to 10 o'clock. There were about 25 of his playmates present. During the evening singing and game playing were enjoyed, after which they all sat down to supper. Miss Jennie Harris in behalf of his friends presented him with a gold ring.

Sunday will be the anniversary of the death of Bishop Phillips Brooks, and it will be observed in Christ church with special services and sermons. In the morning the Rector's subject will be "The Candle of the Lord;" and in the evening, "Dr. Brooks Teaching about Freedom." At the evening service all seats are free.

There is a well founded rumor that a new block is to be erected on the site of the old Tirrell homestead on Hancock street near the Wilson building. It is understood that the old building will be either sold or torn down and a new building erected on its site. There will be stores and a bowling alley on the lower floor and a large hall in the second story.

"Mayor Quincy danced." Some will say that he showed his wisdom by postponing his dancing until after he was elected On that matter we offer no opinion. But we say that if he did not pay the fiddler, he neglected to comply with a rule that, according to popular parlance, has been in vogue since a time that long ante-dates the sprouting of his honor's ancient and honorable family tree.—Boston Advertiser.

Owing to illness only the immediate relatives were present at the wedding of Mr. Wilford Franklin Woodsum of Braintree and Miss Hettie Loraine Phillips of Union street in this city on Thursday Jan. 9. The bride wore the slippers worn by her grandmother sixty years ago. Miss Lillian Gay of Baxter street was maid of honor and Mr. Charles R. Richards of Braintree was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Woodsum are to reside in Braintree, in a handsome new house just completed for them.

Rev. Robert Westly Peach and Rev. E. N. Hardy exchanged pulpits Sunday morning. At the Congregational Mr. Peach took his text from St. John 4:24—"God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." He contends God is a spirit whom no man has seen with earthly eyes. That we can perceive him, and draw nigh to him. We should stand in fear—in awe—of Him. God manifested himself to us in his son. We can approach Jesus with familiarity. He is the mediator.

Representative Newcomb has offered in the House this week a petition (with accompanying bill, House, No. 112) of the Quincy and Boston Street Railway Company that it may be authorized to purchase or lease the property and franchises of the Braintree Street Railway Company and of the Randolph Street Railway Company. On motion of Mr. Newcomb the 9th joint rule was suspended and the petition was referred to the committee on Street Railways with instructions to hear the parties, after such notice has been given as the committee shall direct.

Hon. Francis Bachelder, ex-Mayor of Everett, spoke twice on Sunday in the Congregational church. In the afternoon the meeting was under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. Secretary Colton read the scriptures, T. H. Wason offered prayer and A. D. Albee led the singing. Mr. Bachelder is much in demand as a speaker by the Y. M. C. A., and he gave convincing proof of the good work the Association was doing. A collection was taken for the benefit of the State Endowment building. A double quartette from the choir of the church sang selections and Rev. E. N. Hardy offered the benediction. In the evening Mr. Bachelder gave an evangelical talk.

WEST QUINCY.

E. H. Doble & Co. have their ice house filled.

Eaton Bros. have commenced to cut their ice.

Mrs. James Bowker of Weymouth has been the guest of Mrs. Martha P. Hall of Crescent street this week.

Mrs. Mary F. Dexter, formerly of West Quincy, but now of Lynn, spent Tuesday afternoon, calling on friends in this city.

The alarm from Box 46, at 6.48 Sunday night, was for a fire in the old hose house on Copeland street, which is now occupied as a shoe store by John Dolan. The fire for some unknown cause started beneath Mr. Dolan's work bench, and although there was considerable smoke there was but little fire, and it was extinguished before much damage was done. It was a hard pull for the Central station apparatus but they made fairly good time.

M. J. Mitchell and Daniel Hanlen have purchased all the interests in the granite firm of Reed, Mitchell, Hanlen & Co.

The young men of the Epworth League of the West Quincy Methodist church are arranging for an entertainment to be given early in February.

Officer Canavan has the sympathy of his many friends in the loss of his infant son, who died Sunday.

The funeral of Richard Barry, who was killed at Cashman's quarry Saturday was held from St. Mary's church, Monday. The burial was at Gloucester.

Monday afternoon two young West Quincy lads went gunning near the gravel pit, and while handling the guns in a careless manner, one of them was discharged and a boy named Joseph Kelley had a narrow escape as the shot grazed his breast, some of it entering the flesh and lodging in the flesh near the heart. The boys went to the residence of Dr. Davis where the wound was dressed by Drs. Davis and Hallowell.

QUINCY POINT.

The death of Mrs. Amey, wife of Mr. Samuel Frank Newcomb, from typhoid pneumonia, on Saturday last was a shock to this community, where she had resided so many years. Mrs. Newcomb has been ill for about a week, but no doubt was felt of her recovery until Friday, and many of her warmest friends did not even know of her last illness. Her loss to his portion of the city will be greatly felt, and is to her family irreparable. A husband, one daughter, Miss Amy F. Newcomb, and two sons, Mr. Arthur W. and Mr. Herbert H. Newcomb, mourn the loss of a devoted wife and mother. Funeral services were held on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, from her late residence 38 Howard street, Quincy Neck, was largely attended. Rev. H. A. Youtz and Rev. George Benedict conducted the service. A quartette composed of Mrs. R. H. Newcomb, Mrs. L. M. Hersey, Mr. M. E. Wight and Mr. Chas. Tower sang two selections. The interment was at Mt. Wollaston.

There was a bowling match at the Crow's Nest alley Tuesday night between Brown's team and the Quincy Point team. There was a large number of interested spectators present, and as the crowd gave evidence of being unruly, two of the spectators were requested by the proprietor to act as specials. The match was progressing finely, and Brown's team was leading by 135 points, when some evil-minded person erased the score which caused a dispute, and the match was declared off. From this time out there was more or less disturbance and Officer Barry was called in to clean out the crowd.

The annual meeting of the Quincy Shoe Co., to have been held Tuesday evening, was postponed on account of the absence of Mr. Graham, who is a little under the weather.

The Quincy & Nantasket Steamboat Co., appeared as remonstrants Tuesday to the petition of the Boston & Nantasket for permission to build a wharf opposite Surfside on Weir river at Nantasket.

Woman's Alliance.

At the meeting of the Woman's Alliance in the chapel of First church Monday afternoon, a most interesting and scholarly paper on the Exodus was read by Mrs. Butler, wife of the pastor. Mrs. Butler took up the subject in an ethical vein, dwelling upon the individual characteristics of the Jewish people, showing how to this day they remain intact. She spoke of the most exalted qualities in this chosen people and made a comparison of the main factors in contemporary races and countries. She drew deep spiritual lessons from her analysis of this historical biblical book.

Her delivery of the fine paper held her audience, as did a second paper in Mrs. C. H. Porter's best vein. Mrs. Porter opened her paper with, "I take the Scriptures as my authority," she dropped the analytical part and in simple, forcible language told the story of The Exodus in her own fashion.

The Alliance voted to send some money to a colored boys' school near Washington. Mrs. Morton, secretary and treasurer, has received many donations for the box soon to be sent for the colored women in Alabama; household articles and clothing. There is a little more room, but the box will soon be sent.

Daughters of the Revolution.

Having issued invitations to the ladies who have made application for membership to the Daughters of the Revolution, to meet the Regents of the Massachusetts Chapters at my home on Monday, Jan. 27, from three to five, I wish also to invite any ladies to attend, who are interested and eligible to membership, and who would like to join a Quincy Chapter which is soon to be formed. The object and purposes of the Society will be discussed, and the meeting promises to be very interesting. ANNIE LINCOLN PRESCOTT.

At the annual meeting of the Hull Yacht club Saturday evening William H. Crane was elected commodore. The annual dues will hereafter be $20.

WOLLASTON.

The Epworth League of Wollaston will hold a social and reception to new members on Wednesday evening, Jan. 22, at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sutermeister, Belmont street, at 7.45.

A meeting of the Wollaston Trap Club was held at the Wollaston hotel Thursday evening and the following officers elected for the ensuing year President H. T. Whitman; secretary, H. W. Marsden; treasurer, A. G. Olney; executive committee H. M. Federhen, Jr., Albert Keating. C. W. Tucker, F. N. Bates and W. P. Whitmarsh.

Sunday, January 19, will be observed as "Missionary Day" at the Methodist Episcopal church at Wollaston. The pastor will preach on Missons both morning and evening. The topic of the morning sermon will be "The Triumph of Christianity Assured" In the evening the topic will be, "Who was the Man of Macedonia?" Rev. Mr. Wilder has issued a Missionary letter to his people this week.

An exceedingly enjoyable sociable was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid society at the Wollaston Unitarian church on Thursday evening. There were vocal solos by Mrs. Fred. Merrill, Mr. Albert R. Moulton and Mr. E. Walter Arnold. Cocoa was poured by Councilman Sprague's class. The committee having the sociable in charge consisted of Mrs. Chandler W. Smith, Mrs. George A. Loring, Mrs. Mary W. Brown, Mrs. Henry O. Fairbanks and Mrs. E. Walter Arnold.

The "Old Folks" of the Wollaston Unitarian society gave a very successful dancing party at the K. of H. hall on Wednesday evening. Councilman Sprague was in charge of the arrangements.

A former resident of Wollaston had a narrow escape at Neponset recently. He had been suffering from a severe cold and got up in the night and took a dose of what he supposed was cough medicine. It proved however to be a powerful liniment and he had a narrow escape from losing his life.

A few days ago a well known Quincy young lady walked into the public telephone station at Wollaston and asked the genial Mr. Fay if he would telephone a message to Quincy for her. Mr. Fay said that he would be pleased to accommodate her. It may be well to interject here that he always receives pecuniary consideration from people using his telephone. The message was telephoned, but what was Mr. Fay's astonishment to receive, instead of the customary fifteen cents, a pretty smile and nod as the young lady backed out of the door with "I thank you very much, sir, for your kindness." She supposed that a "public" telephone was for the public to use gratis.

The police stopped the coasting at Wollaston just in time. On Wednesday afternoon a lady was walking down Winthrop avenue. Suddenly she felt something like a comet strike her. She went up into the air and came down whack upon a boy and a sled, but principally upon the boy. The lady fortunately escaped with only a slight shaking up, the boy's body acting as an air cushion. He felt as though he had been run through a wringing machine. It was some minutes before he got the wind pumped back into his little stomach.

G. A. Litchfield of Wollaston has been elected a director of the Lincoln National bank of Boston.

The paper firm of Bigelow & Taylor of Boston, has been succeeded by Mr. Edmund S. Taylor of Wollaston, under the style of the E. S. Taylor Paper Company.

The Elliot club of Wollaston met on Wednesday evening with Mrs. James J. Lord. Papers were read by Mrs. A. M. Jameson, Mrs W. E. Simmons, Rev. Jas. E. Bagley, Mrs. W. G. Corthell, and Mrs. Tribou. The subject for the meeting was "Recent Book Publications."

Mr. Al. Williams and his little daughter Arra went for a promenade on Sunday afternoon on the ice in Quincy bay. There was one air hole in that broad expanse of ice. Mr. Williams found that air hole. It had a wet lining. After considerable scratching around he managed to crawl out. Mr. Williams will hereafter take his Sunday promenades on terra firma.

A few days ago a Wollaston man of sporting proclivities offered to bet a dollar with a member of the Wollaston Trap club that be would not dare to carry his gun to church on Sunday. The Trap club member promptly took up the bet and on last Sunday morning meekly walked into church and down the aisle to his pew with his gun neatly strapped up in its Victoria case. He won the dollar.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Mrs. Eliza J. Timmerman of Wollaston were held at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Arthur Sibley, Grand View avenue, on Monday noon. They were exceedingly simple and were conducted by the Rev. James E. Bagley, pastor of the Wollaston Unitarian society, assisted by the Rev. Charles W. Wilder of the M. E. society. The interment was at the Garden cemetery, Chelsea, where brief services were held at three o'clock by the Rev. Mr. Wilder.

The Unity Club met in the vestry of the Wollaston Unitarian church on Friday evening, Jan. 10, and discussed "Transportation; past, present and future." Mr. Charles S. Comins was the director.

Democrats Organize.

The Democratic Ward and City Committee met Thursday evening for organization. Every ward was represented and the committee elected the following officers for 1896:

Chairman,—William B. Orcutt.
Vice Chairman,—Thomas J. McGrath.
Secretary,—George D. Cahill.
Treasurer,—John A. Avery.

The executive committee consists of the chairman of the several ward committees which will organize sometime during the month.

☞C. F. Dadmun the Butter, Egg, Grocery and Flour dealer at 76 Kneeland street, Boston, in wishing the PATRIOT a happy new year, says the PATRIOT has made him many business friends the past three years and they have told friends of him, who have told others of his cheap cash store. He evidently appreciates all his friends. 18-2w

ATLANTIC.

William Fanning of Atlantic, who has been confined to his bed for three weeks, is slowly improving.

The ladies of the Methodist society gave a profitable and enjoyable supper and social in the chapel Tuesday evening. Rev. Joseph F. Duvar a young Portugese from Boston was present, and in an amusing and entertaining manner spoke concerning his experience in trying to preach the gospel to his countrymen around the North End of Boston. Some had presented him with the images they had brought over from the old country and many of these he had with him and remarked upon. He has accomplished a great work among his his people in the city, and has organized them into a Methodist Episcopal church, starting with forty-four members, and a Sunday School and Epworth League. They hold their services at 72 Marginal street, East Boston.

The Compass Whist club met with Mr. Stephen O. Moxon, on Tuesday evening. Mrs. Carver and Mrs. Hall took the ladies' prizes, and Mr. Hall and Mr. Moxon captured the gentlemen's.

The "Brownies" whist club met with Miss Josephine Kelley on Tuesday evening. Miss Wilder and Miss Moxon won the honors.

Mr. Litchfield of the Quincy school is at home sick.

The foundation for a new house has been commenced on the Atlantic Land Co.'s property.

Mr. Edward Colbert, clerk at T. Gurney's store, froze one of his ears quite severely during the cold snap of last week.

The snow has been very well cleared from the sidewalks in Atlantic.

The Y. P. S. C. E. meeting was exceptionally interesting. Mrs. Matthews gave a lengthy and interesting talk on "Ambition," which was very much appreciated by all those who attended. The singing of the choir at the morning service was excellent. Miss Susie Hall presided at the organ.

Rev. Mr. Huntington of Milton preached at both morning and evening services at the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, last Sunday. The church was very well filled at the morning service but on account of the threatening weather there was not such a large congregation in the evening.

Last winter it was rumored that the young ladies of the village were going to take the gentlemen on a leap year sleigh ride this winter, and promised them a fine boat sleigh, with lots of furs and an abundance of other good things, but they do not seem to say much now that the time has arrived. The young gentlemen are feeling sort of blue, as they have been accustomed to put confidence into whatever the "fair sex" say. It is early yet, so the party may be made up later, but arrangements should be hurried as much as possible so no one will be disappointed.

Mrs. Atkins of Clive street is very sick.

The reunion of the Q. H. S. Alumni Association, which is to take place at the new High school, Quincy, on the 24th, promises to be well attended by Atlantic people, as several of the graduates have expressed their desire to attend. We would say for those who have not already secured the necessary ticket of admission that a limited number may be obtained in Atlantic of Mr. P. A. Hall, on Walker street. We also wish to urge the attendance of all graduates at this reunion, as it will certainly be very enjoyable to renew old acquaintances of school life. Some provision will undoubtedly be made for transportation to Atlantic after the affair, if not already made.

While the snow lasts, three horses will be used on the combination wagon at Atlantic, one leader being pressed into service.

The people of Atlantic are considerably alarmed over the cases of diphtheria in that section. Inquiry at the office of the Board of Health reveals the fact that there is no occasion whatever for alarm. There are but two cases of diphtheria in the ward and they are only mild cases but the patients are reported as convalescent and there has been but one death. The board is taking all necessary precautions and there is no further cause for alarm.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Memorial church held its regular monthly supper and entertainment at the church on Wednesday evening. The entertainment consisted of the following programme:

Piano solo, Miss Florence Wilson.
Reading, Miss Hathaway.
Bass and tenor duet, Messrs. Hall and Owens.
Piano solo, Miss Bennett.
Reading, Miss Hathaway.
Piano solo, Miss Wilson.
Reading, Miss Hathaway.

New Depot.

Next to a new depot in Quincy, railroad patrons from this city would be pleased to see a new union depot on Kneeland street, Boston. Now two trains often make-up on one track, and there are many things that are not as convenient as they should be. Thursday's Herald has interviews with several on the proposed depot, and we reprint that of Charles F. Adams:

"The matter does not seem to me to call for any lengthy treatment. Any person desirous of forming a judgment as to the necessity and advantage of a union station on Kneeland street can do so by observing the operation of that now on Causeway street. The advantage is so great, both as respects convenience and economy in transfer, that whoever judges by the test of actual experience will hardly fail to consider the question as one altogether closed."

Police Station Inspected.

There were twenty-four lodgers at the police station Monday night, and as usual when that number of lodgers are accommodated, the cells were all full. The larger part of the knights were laid out on the floor like sardines in a box, and the aroma that arose was something horrible. Chief Hayden thought this a good opportunity for the Council to inspect Quincy's bastille, and as soon as that body had adjourned the newly appointed committee on Fire Department and Police accepted the Chief's invitation, and took a look at the array of occupants, and it is unnecessary to add that several of the Council committee, who had delicate constitutions, were obliged to hold on to their noses as long as they remained. A new police station may result.

Appreciating Confidence.

"A lively holiday trade" has been the report from all lines of business this year, and while one might suppose that people generally would devote their dollars to strictly holiday purchases, and that such a common place, utilitarian matter as dentistry would receive no attention at the festive season, the Boston Dental Association report their Boston Parlors as literally "working night and day" during this period.

They take occasion this week to turn their advertisement into a card of thanks for this liberal patronage from readers of the PATRIOT and others, which they regard (and very justly) as an expression of confidence.

Appreciation is good for the soul. It is a wholesome quality, and like the measles, its "catching," too—and the frank, appreciative tone of this "card of thanks" is such as must make anyone feel the better for reading it.

☞The annual almanac of the Boston Post has reached us—an excellent compendium of the latest really valuable data in politics, sports and public statistics. It is well worth its price and deserves a good sale.

SOUTH QUINCY.

The Meadow Brook Ice Co. has commenced to house ice.

Jonathan B. Foster, of Foster Bros., is confined to his home with a severe cold.

Mrs. Joseph Walker and her daughter Susie, who have been visiting in Quincy the past six weeks left Saturday for San Francisco, Cal., by the Southern route. Their visit here was enjoyed equally by them and their friends, the Walkers formerly residing here.

Harry O'Neil, who has been in California about seven years, is here on a visit of a few months. He will be remembered as a president of the Stone Cutters' Union, and an enthusiastic cricket player.

L. M. Pratt & Co. have issued a cute calendar.

Rev. Fr. Cunningham took a number of his Sunday School children on a sleigh ride Monday afternoon.

Craig & Richards have commenced work on the foundation for an enlargement to their office on Water street. The addition which will be 22x26 will be built by W. R. Lofgren.

The regular meeting of Clan McGregor, No. 5, O. S. C., was held on Monday evening with two hundred members present. One candidate was initiated and one application received for membership. Since June 1st, 1895, there have been 42 initiated into full membership, which makes 272 names on the roll. After the regular business, the new officers were installed by Grand Treasurer David Halliday, assisted by the officers of Clan McLeod, No. 101, of Hyde Park. After installation exercises, a light lunch was served by a committee. A social hour was then spent on the good of the order, after which the visiting clansmen departed for home with good wishes for Clan McGregor.

Work has been resumed in many of the stone sheds but it is rather quiet yet in the quarries.

J. T. French took a party of young people from the Presbyterian church on a sleigh ride Wednesday evening. They went to Hyde Park and had a glorious time.

Presbyterian cottage meetings were held last evening at Elder Sutherland's, Franklin and Water streets; Elder Howie's, 12 Liberty street, and Elder Cantlay's, 7 Prospect Hill. All are invited.

MILTON.

The subscription party Wednesday evening at Ellsworth hall in aid of the Free Home for consumptives was largely attended and a grand time enjoyed, and as a result quite a goodly sum realized. After a few hours of whist, prizes were distributed and refreshments served. Those successful in receiving prizes were as follows: First gentlemen, a pair of gold link cuff buttons, Mr. Henry Briley; ladies first, a Parisian fan, Miss Dollie McCue; gentlemen's consolation, a clay pipe, otherwise known as a "T. D." Mr. William Hayes; ladies consolation, a German beat, Miss Kittie McCue. Mr. Briley's score was 26 points and Miss Dollie McCue 19 points.

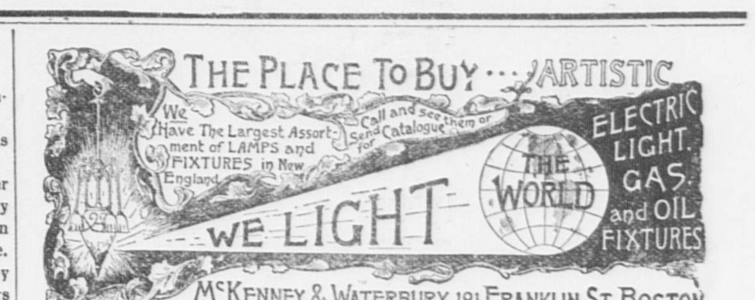

The East Milton school which has been known as the East school is to have a new name. It will be called "Belcher," after one of the first families of that section.

Firemen's ball last evening at Town hall.

The third of the subscription parties was held at Ellsworth hall, last Friday evening, and was largely attended.

The scheme to change the name of East Milton was rather a surprise to most people who are of the impression that the scheme must have originated to boom some land.

Rev. Henry B. Williams, the pastor of the East Milton Baptist church, will give Sunday morning a preparatory sermon on "Christ's dual nature," being the first of ten pictures from the life of Christ. These services are held at 10 30 o'clock. Evangelistic services Sunday evenings at 7 30 o'clock. Prayer meetings Friday evenings at 7.30.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our appreciation of the very liberal response to our special holiday offers in the PATRIOT the past few weeks. We appreciate especially the confidence thus manifested in us and our work.

Coming here as a firm new to Boston (though old Bostonians ourselves and long established in 15 other large cities) such gratifying support at the first was perhaps hardly expected. It is no new experience for us, however. All our offices have started firmly and proved increasingly successful, our clientelle embracing some of the most prominent families of each city and becoming a permanent patronage—which is

Our Best Endorsement.

We have now come to Boston, and the same business principles and methods which have built up such a business as is ours today—the largest of its kind in the world—will govern the management of our Boston office.

NOTE. Watch this space regularly for our "Dental Dissertations" or "Talks on Teeth"—a new chat every other week.

Reception. Addresses and Music. Refreshments, Dancing.

All graduates of the Quincy High School are invited to attend the annual reunion to be held at the new High School Building on Hancock street, Friday evening, Jan. 24, 1896 at 7.30 o'clock.

The Board of Government urges each and ever graduate to give this reunion the support of his or her presence and hearty interest. To once a year renew old school ties and revive old memories would seem to be a pleasant thing, and the future of the Association depends largely upon the success of this meeting. Graduates at a distance can materially aid by becoming members of the Association; the annual dues of 50 cents may be forwarded to Mr. C. Eaton Pierce, treasurer.

Tickets are limited to the graduates, but each can purchase two. so that they may have an escort They may be procured of any of the board, at seventy-five cents each, or at John O. Holden's store, 154 Hancock street, Quincy. Please inform the Tr asurer at your earliest convenience, whether you desire one or two tickets, that arrangements may be made.

Hon. C. F. Adams, 2d, Mayor-elect of the city of Quincy. has accepted an invitation of the Association to be its guest, and many of the past and present teachers of the school and school superintendents are expected.

The reunion will consist of a reception speeches, music, and a two to three hours' dance. Light refreshments will be served t 9 o'clock. A good orchestra will be in attendance throughout the evening.

High School Debate.

At the meeting of the Quincy High School Debating Society on Wednesday. Mr. Coe, president, took the chair. Miss Rothwell's report as secretary was accepted.

The entertainment was as follows:

Piano solo, Miss Bemis, '97. The musical selections are always welcome, and give an agreeable variety to the programmes. Yet the advantage is not wholly on the side of the audience, for the performers gain confidence, and thus become more and more competent to entertain audiences whether large or small. There must be a great deal of musical talent at the High school. Let this talent be brought out.

A motion was made and carried empowering the President to appoint a committee of three to revise the constitution.

The debate followed: "Resolved, that the United States ought not to tolerate any European interference in American affairs."

The affirmative was taken by: Miss Marion Pitts, '96; Miss Ramsey, '96; Miss Rothwell, '96; Miss Sweeney, '96.

Negative, — Mr. Anderson, '96; Mr. Chapman, '96; Mr. Coe, '96; Mr. Northcote, '96.

Miss Marion Pitts opposed all foreign interference, on the ground that the permission of such interference would result disastrously.

Mr. Anderson remarked that foreign nations might well interfere with Southern lynchings.

Miss Ramsey spoke of foreign jealousy of the United States. England takes unfair advantage of weaker American governments. If England is allowed to tyrannize over smaller American powers, she will become very arrogant.

Mr. Chapman declared that foreign governments had a right to interfere when they were wronged. The United States was accused of being quarrelsome.

Miss Rothwell opposed England's encroachments. London Truth has come out in favor of the American side. Unpublished despatches greatly aid the American side. The Monroe Doctrine is the stronghold of the South American republics.

Mr. Coe showed that Canada, Mexico, Central America, and South America are included in the term "American." The United States ought not to have the responsibility of attending to all American troubles.

Miss Sweeney feared numerous wars, if interference were tolerated.

Mr. Northcote thought that the Monroe Doctrine did not appeal to our present circumstances. British government is much more stable than that of South American republics.

Further debate was postponed from lack of time.

Wollaston's New Doctor.

Dr. C. H. Lanphear has bought the practice of Dr. Homer Clark, at Wollaston, and was to have been introduced by him to his patrons, but various matters prevented, and Dr. Lanphear has been obliged to make his bow to the public, and enter upon his practice unaided by Dr. Clark.

The doctor comes to us well recommended from his former field of practice, in Florida, and also is well endorsed by well known parties in Boston, Worcester and Southbridge, and he trusts that at least those who were patrons of Dr. Clark and Dr. Rice will sustain him. Although a native and resident of Massachusetts, the past four years have been spent in Orlando, Fla., (on account of health). The following unsolicited testimonial is from the Orlando Daily Reporter:

"Dr. C. H. Lanphear, is now prospecting in Massachusetts. He will probably locate somewhere in that state, just where, he has not yet determined. The doctor has been a resident of Orlando for several years and has many friends here. He has built up a good practice, and enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him."

While attending to the general practice of a physician and surgeon for past twenty years, he has given special attention to obstetrical cases and diseases of women and children.

The District Court.

Several drunks whose cases had been continued were called and again continued.

Joseph Burke was fined $5 for drunkenness at Braintree.

John F. Murphy and William J. Mininim were arraigned for breaking and entering the house of Herbert L. Washburn at Cohasset and the larceny of a quantity of plated silverware valued at $38. Both men pleaded guilty and were held in $500 each for the grand jury.

How to Get a Hall.

Must a syndicate come to Quincy to erect a large hall for the city. Everett has been in much the same box as Quincy, but its wants are to be supplied as will be seen:

In Everett, with its 19,000 people there has long been no public hall of proper size or convenience. But now the Mystic Associates, a real estate syndicate that once proposed to build a city hall for the place, has sold its lot next to the Central engine house, on Broadway, to Boston parties, who will build the hall forthwith. The papers between the parties are said to have been passed, but the plans are kept private for the present.

☞ That is a very distinguished compliment which the New York Sun's book reviewer pays to Mr. Brooks Adams for his essay on "The Laws of Civilization and Decay," lately published by Macmillan. The reviewer does not hesitate to say that, in respect of knowledge and insight, this essay deserves to rank in the class which is headed by the works of Montesquieu.

AN ANALYSES of the new committees of the City Council shows that politics and location did not enter into the selection, but rather fitness for office. Four of the eight chairmanships go to Ward One members, but two of these were elected at large. With one exception, the old members receive the chairmanship, but no one will question the fitness of Councilman Claflin to be at the head of the Finance Committee. That he was elected as a Democrat did not matter with the Republican President. It would have seemed more equitable, however, upon a committee of seven to have given each ward a representative. The committee of five on Public Buildings should also have been divided more equally among the wards, for all parts of the city should be interested in the kind and cost of schoolhouses. Wards Two and Three now have no representatives, and were the matter of schoolhouses referred to a joint committee of Public Buildings and Finance, Ward Two still would have no representative among the twelve. If the twelve, a majority of the Council, are unanimous what would a protest from Ward Two avail? Neither has Wards Two or Three a representative on the Committee on Fire Department and Police. The Committees on Streets and Sewers have a representative for each ward as required by the rules. In the list as a whole the wards appeared very equally divided. There were 42 places to fill and Ward One has 10; Ward Two, 6; Ward Three, 7; Ward Four, 6; Ward Five, 6; and Ward Six, 7.

The Metropolitan county scheme should not be forced upon us without full investigation. We have noticed however, that many suburban cities oppose the movement. The Essex County Commissioners point out some objections. They say:

"One of the bad features would be that the records of Lynn, Swampscott, Saugus and Nahant which it is proposed to set off have been kept in this county for two centuries and unless copies of them were made for the new county, persons looking up titles might have to visit both places to settle a title. It might be thought that it would be an easy matter to place copies of these records in the other county, but when the records were changed in Middlesex county it cost $50,000, and to make the change here would cost still more.

What is true of the Essex county towns is also of Quincy, Milton, Hyde Park, Dedham and Brookline in Norfolk county. The appendix of the report of the District Commission gives the information that these Norfolk county towns had recorded 3928 deeds in 1893, and 3,807 in 1894, but this was done as easily at Dedham as it could be in Boston. With probate matters Quincy, Hyde Park and Dedham, each with local sessions, would not be better accommodated, nor as well. The change would not only be detrimental to the towns quoted but to the balance of Norfolk county, which might be divided among other counties. Norfolk is now one of the smallest in territory.

NO ONE should fear that the new city government will do more dining than city work. If it does considerable of the former it will not be at the expense of the taxpayers, while the good feeling engendered will make a most harmonious government for 1896. President Bryant did more to cement friendship among the Councilmen by his banquet than all the meetings of the year could accomplish, and now they are ready for work. The press was not invited to the executive session but it has a good report of the doings in another column, while banquets are every day pastimes for newspaper men, so that all is well. Success to the new Council.

THE ARTICLE in Monday's LEDGER on the operation of the tariff on granite, was to the granite men of Quincy most interesting, and the best object lesson that they could have. As one manufacturer says, it was never intended that that Aberdeen Journal should have come across the water. The loss to Scotland by an increase of the tariff on granite imported into the United States will in a very great measure be Quincy's gain. It is better to have work and good wages rather than no work and cheap goods in our stores.

In the Beginning.

Of a new year, when the winter season of close confinement is only half gone, many find that their health begins to break down, that the least exposure threatens sickness. It is as well then as all other times, and with people even in good health, that the following facts should be remembered, namely: that Hood's Sarsaparilla leads everything in the way of medicines; that it accomplishes the greatest cures in the world; has the largest sale in the world, and requires the largest building in the world devoted exclusively to the preparation of the proprietary medicine. Does not this conclusively prove, if you are sick, that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine for you to take?

Letter From the State House.

[Special to the QUINCY PATRIOT.]

BOSTON, JAN. 15, 1896.

The chief political event of the session, next to the amendment for biennial elections, is the division of the State into senatorial and councillor districts. According to the new census of 1895 there are 560,802 voters in the State. They are divided by counties as follows: Barnstable, 7,620; Berkshire, 20,186; Bristol, 42,495; Dukes, 1,236; Essex, 77,282; Franklin, 10,332; Hampden, 31,568; Hampshire, 11,888; Middlesex, 109,577; Nantucket, 886; Norfolk, 31,565; Plymouth, 26,956; Suffolk, 122,102; Worcester, 66,109. There has been prepared for the use of the legislature a document giving the number of voters in the several councillor, senatorial and representative districts as they were established by the divisions of 1886 and as they stand today. Striking changes have occured. While nearly every district in the State has gained somewhat in population, yet a few have lost absolutely, as well as relatively, while there have been great differences in the rate of growth. The consequence is that the legislature will be utterly unable to follow the present lines in the case of any system of districts, whatever may be true of individual cases. The entire system will have to be recast thoroughly.

A cursory inspection of the tables of voters reveals the fact that the towns will suffer seriously compared with the cities.

The greatest changes in population are in the vicinity of Boston where the first Middlesex senatorial district has gained from 10,711 voters in 1885 to 18,095 in 1895. But the Cape senatorial district has actually lost from 10,355 in 1885 to 9,742 in 1895. The political power of the towns is therefore waning, while the cities and large towns are gaining. It would not do to remedy this by giving the benefit of the doubt in any case of surplus population to the towns, for the tendency of the times is toward the cities and any inequality to favor the towns would increase rapidly during the coming ten years. To be exactly just, the committee ought to study the movement of population and try to make the districts as uniform as possible for the most of the coming term of ten years when when there can be no change. This division will have an effect upon town politics. It will reduce the chances of the small towns for representation in the legislature and very likely will prevent some of them from having a representative more than once in the ten years, instead of twice as they now have. This will be so even under the system of annual elections. With the biennial system established a town might not be able to secure a representative in the legislature more than once in twenty years. It is certain that some of the small towns would not have more than this proportion. It would not be strange if this factor would be of material consequence in the coming contest, for the small towns will naturally oppose their obliteration as stoutly as possible.

The number of voters in the first Norfolk Senatorial district rose from 11,930 in 1885 to 15,502 in 1895. The figures for the fifth Norfolk representative district from 5,603 to 7,364 while all but 109 of this last increase was in the city of Quincy.

The annual report of the State Board of Education is an exceedingly interesting document and some of the points which it brings out are worthy of the attention of the State. Toward the end of the report Secretary Hill quotes from Prof. W. T. Harris of Massachusetts, formerly superintendent of schools in St. Louis in high praise of the Massachusetts school system. Prof. Harris says that the total amount of school education that each inhabitant of Massachusetts is receiving on an average is nearly seven years of 200 days each, while the average given each citizen in the whole nation is only four and three tenths of such years. No other State is giving so much education to its people as Massachusetts, and yet all the education given in all its institutions does not amount on an average to so much as seven eighths of an elementary education of eight years. Even Massachusetts is not overeducating the people. But there would seem to be some connection between the fact that, while her citizens get nearly twice the national average amount of education, her wealth-producing power as compared with other states stands almost in the same ratio, namely (in 1885), at 73 cents per day for each man, woman and child, while the average for the whole nation was only 40 cents."

Commenting on these figures, Secretary Hill says: "Consider for a moment what is implied in this ratio of 73 to 40. It means for every man, woman and child in the state as average wealth-producing power of 33 cents a day in excess of the average of the nation at large, or more than $100 a year. It means that the 2,500,000 people in Massachusetts produce $250,000,000 a year more than they would produce if they were only average earners. This is 25 times the annual expenditure for schools"

The number of person in the State of school age, from 5 to 15 years, is 408,898, an increase for the year of 8,573. The number of persons of all ages in the public schools was 412,593, an increase of 11,984. The average membership in all the public schools was 341,671 an increase of 13,216. The average attendance for the year was 313,693, an increase of 14,624. The percentage of attendance, based upon average membership, was 92. There were 1,046 men teachers, and 10,981 women, an increase of 37 men and of 276 women. The number of teachers who have attended normal schools was 4,368, an increase of 146. The average wages of the men teachers were $128 55 per month, a decrease of 86 cents, while the average for the women was $48 38, a gain of 47 cents. There are 252 high schools in the State, a decrease of three. But there was an increase of 54 in high school teachers and of 2,212 in high school pupils. There are 54 cities and towns sustaining evening schools having 747 such schools, with 1,166 teachers and 29,268 pupils,—22,277 males and 6,991 females.

The amount raised by taxation and spent for public schools, including only wages and board of teachers, fuel and janitors' services, was $6,949,943, an increase for the year of $297,637. There are 59 incorporated academies, having 5,484 pupils, who paid $406,486 for tuition. There were 59,204 pupils in private schools during the year, of course being largely in the parochial schools. The following significant words are given regarding the parochial schools: "When it is seen that private schools, chiefly parochial, reduce the cost per pupil as based on the number of children between 5 and 15 from the State average of $19 98 to half that sum, and even less in many places, a glimpse is obtained of the heavy pecuniary burden such schools must impose upon the people who maintain them, and who, in addition thereto, help also to maintain the public schools. The sentiment of the common wealth, as expressed in its constitution, gives no hope of relief, through the division of the school money, from this self-assumed burden. The sacrifice that prompts people to bear it is impressive. Their right to bear it no one questions. The wisdom of private schools under certain exceptional conditions is admitted. Nevertheless, it remains a regrettable fact that people of all political and religious views and of all stations in life cannot more generally stand on a common public school platform, unitedly pledged to do their utmost, in the interests of the noblest citizenship, for the physical, mental and moral welfare of all the children."

The question of the State House front is reopened from the very foundation by a bill which has been presented to the house for a public competition for plans for the solution of the problem of the State House front. This solution may take either the form of a reconstruction of the present front, or it may involve a complete demolition of the old building and a reconstruction from the foundation. It seems to be settled that the old building will not ever be used again in its present condition. If its walls are permitted to stand, the interior must be thoroughly remodeled and the external be changed to correspond with the extension. It looks now as if the saving which has been done for the last two years was only temporary. The construction of the new part next to the Bulfinch front is progressing rapidly now that the roof is on and the workmen are thoroughly protected from the weather.

The matter of introducing vertical writing in the three lower grades, and algebra in the grammar grades, was brought up and referred to the committee on text books for investigation.

The Superintendent was granted a leave of absence to attend the meeting of the school superintendents of the United States to be held in Florida in February.

A plan was presented to the board for a nine room brick school building but no action was taken as to accepting said plan.

Adjourned at 8 40.

K. & L. of H. Installed.

A more lively, gay and happy party is seldom seen, than that which assembled at Plumer's hall, Wednesday evening, the occasion being a social time and the installation of officers for the current term of the Knights and Ladies of Honor, No. 313, in the presence of the wives, husbands, daughters, sweethearts and friends of the members.

After the meeting was called to order, and singing of the opening ode, the installation ceremony was performed by D. D. G. P. Sarah A. Barry and suite of Charlestown, assisted by M. Lizzie Furnald of Maple Lodge as Grand Guide. The officers installed:

P. P.,—Mary A. H. Crane.
P.,—Wm. W. Penniman.
V. P.,—Lizzie A. Monk.
Chaplain,—A. Cora Curtis.
Secretary,—Angie D. Loud.
F. S.,—Francis P. Loud.
T.,—Harriet W. Tirrell.
Ge.,—Fannie M. Newcomb.
Gr.,—Charles Crane.
S.,—B. H. Sherwood.

Speech making was next in order which was listened to by one hundred and fifty who had gathered for a good time and learn of the great good and benefit that derives from the Knights and Ladies of Honor. A fine collation was served, furnished by a committee under the directions of M. Lizzie Furnald as chairman, and all was heartily enjoyed. Instrumental music was furnished by sister Hayden and Miss Thomas, and then dancing was in order. It was enjoyed until the wee small hours. Mrs. Effie Rhines kindly presided at the piano. When all returned to their homes they felt satisfied that an evening had been highly enjoyed, and well spent, and all wished that they would meet again soon. Two new names for membership were secured.

Installation and Banquet.

Monday eve the officers of John Adams Council, R. A. of Wollaston were installed, District Deputy Grand Regent H. F. Roberts and suite. with Regent J. C. Sylvia of Agassiz Council No. 45, North Cambridge acting as Grand Guide. The officers for current year are as follows:

Regent,—R. F. Ross.
Vice Regent,—Geo. W. Brown.
Orator,—E. J. Cummings.
Chaplain,—J. C. Bates.
Secretary,—H. C. Burrell.
Collector,—Chas R. Sherman.
Treasurer,—Frank W. White.
Guide,—A. J. Colgan.
Warden,—C. D. White.
Sentry,—F. W. Bowker.
Past Regent,—J. N. Emerson.

After the council was closed, all sat down around the banquet table and after satisfying the inner man, listened to very eloquent remarks by the grand officers and members of John Adams Council.

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Feel a Handful of H-O Oatmeal

that is being packed, and you will find it crisp and hot. There is a pleasant, nutty flavor all around. It is this steam-cooking that makes H-O sweet, and destroys the sour, musty taste so common to ordinary oatmeals.

Suppose it does cost a penny or two more?

Independence in Politics.

Resolved, That independence in State and municipal politics is preferable to party allegiance.

Harold B. Faxon opened the debate for the affirmative. He told how independence in politics had acted in the recent State and municipal elections. To secure independence in voting, thought must be given. In Cambridge the Library Hall association weighed each candidated for office and selected the best men. In North Adams the voters threw aside all party lines and only one candidate was nominated. It was to be deplored that people stick to party lines. Independence in voting does not mean that you are a Republican or Democrat, but it means picking the best men for the place. Municipal politics are the ones that touch the home life and a voter feels a personal interest in them that he does not in National politics. All great progress is made by the development of the individual, and not by the party. You can not get the development by working for a party. To secure nearly independent voting you should do away with the feeling of a party. You must lay aside all personal motives and work for the community and not for the individual. Party politics is to be deplored.

James M. Knowland, opening for the negative, said: Our government was a representative one. We elect men to represent us, not to be independent. We elect him because he believes in the same great principle that we do. The question comes up how is the independent voter to know who the best man is. In local politics he may know but in State affairs he has to find out through the newspapers and in nine cases out of ten, as he looks down the list, he does not know anything about the men. The proper thing was to be independent in the party. Go to the caucuses and have his say there. What caucus can the independent attend? Most of the so-called independents stay away from caucuses and instead of voting for the man they had a hand in selecting, they have to vote for men someone else has picked out. This was the great objection to the Independent. There were good honest men in both parties, and we should go to the caucuses and select the best men. Independent must therefore be a man without principle. It was impossible to divorce State and National politics. A man could not do as much good by being an independent as he could to join some party.

Stacy Southworth, for the affirmative, said it was a well known fact that politics were controlled by politicians whose only worth was the number of votes they could command. Independence was the purification of politics. In support of his argument, the speaker cited New York, where Tammany Hall had been turned down by the reform movement. It was not party allegiance that overthrew Gorman in Maryland. New York could not credit the election of Morton to party politics. In municipal affairs he cited the recent election in Quincy, when it was the independent in politics that elected Mr. Adams. The recent libel trial of Atwood showed what kind of a man we had elected by party politics to Congress. The voters of this district, who voted for Atwood were not doing right by his party or his district, and until we get more independence in politics never will corruption be overthrown and politics purified.

Charles Sampson, for the negative, said to get advancement we must have a purpose, and as the Independents have no purpose they must vote for a Republican or Democrat. An Independent can not go to a caucus. When an Independent votes for a Democrat or Republican he is voting on party lines and not on an opinion of his own, but of someone else. Newspapers were causing the most trouble in politics. At the last municipal election there was a ring that wanted Mr. Hammond, and another that wanted Mr. Moxon, and if either of these men had been elected it must have been by support of the party. In closing the speaker declared that it was the ignorant men of Quincy who elected Mr. Adams on the name of his father.

A vote was then taken on the merits of the debate which resulted in nine for the affirmative and one for the negative.

The debate was then thrown open to the house and was participated in by D. King, Stephen A. Foster, Alex. E. Craig and E. S. Litchfield.

A vote on the merits of the question resulted in eight for the affirmative and five for the negative.

SATURDAY, JAN. 18, 1896.

Specked Apples.

Old Farmer Grump, with thrifty care
Had safely stored away
For Winter use his apple crop—
Enough to last till May.

"We'll not begin," said Farmer Grump,
"To eat 'em yet awhile;
They've got to last the Winter through—
There's none too big a pile!"

And so they lay, 'neath lock and key,
Till the ripest showed decay
"Begin on em," then the farmer said,
"Begin on 'em right away!"

"We'll kinder sort 'em out," said he;
"And use for sass the wust,
And every one who goes for 'em
Must take the specked ones fust."

And so they used the specked ones first,
As Farmer Grump had said.
But though they ate some every day
The specked ones kept ahead.

And they not only ate them first,
But all the Winter through
If that's their way, I've naught to say,
And naught, I'm sure have you.

Now farmer Hearty also had
A well-filled apple bin,
But as he stored them in he said,
"Now listen: we'll begin

"To eat the best of 'em right off,
And keep on so each day,
For some of 'em will not keep long
Though some may last till May."

And so his household, one and all,
Enjoyed the fruit while sound;
And eating still the ripest first,
Had some when May come round.

Now, boys and girls, it's out of date
To hitch a moral on—
I'll leave it to your common sense
To see if there is one.

Notes and Comments.

—Imperious Cæsar! $262,000,000, not to mention the interest which will have to be paid on the bonds, added to the public debt, in a time of profound peace, in less than three years! That record will be sufficient to keep the Democratic party from ever being trusted with the control of this government again. The experience has come high, but that is usually the way with the most useful experience.—Pawtucket Gazette.

—The Plymouth Co-operative Bank has declared a dividend of 3 1-8 per cent. on the past six month's business.

—The directors of the Nantasket Beach Steamboat Company have voted to build a new boat for the company, with a capacity of about eight hundred passengers, to run between Nantasket, Pemberton and Boston.

—The Supreme court has recently reported this finding in the case of the Commonwealth vs., James Meskell: "One may be convicted of unlawfully keeping intoxicating liquor for sale without proof that he actually sold any liquor or offered or exposed it for sale."

—According to "Bradstreet's" the total number of business failures in the United States during 1895 has been 13,013, an increase of over 2 per cent. over 1894, and the total amount of the liabilities of bankrupt concerns has been nearly $160,000,000, an increase of 6 per cent. over last year.

—Brother White of the Mansfield News is always saying kind words. In his last number he has the following item: "The QUINCY PATRIOT, venerable by age, and respected and admired for years for its general excellence as a family paper, commences the New Year with the first number of volume LX. The PATRIOT was long since firmly fixed in prosperity, but it attracts to itself new friends and new strength as the years roll on.

—The latest effort of the advocates of woman suffrage in Massachusetts is a petition for equal suffrage which is now being circulated throughout the state for the signatures of both men and women. A thorough canvass is to be made with the purpose of making the petition imposing in size when presented to the legislature.

—Mayor Quincy seems to be a single-taxer. A good many of his constituents would like to go a little further still and have no tax at all.—Somerville Journal.

—Thirty-two cities in Massachusetts and five in Rhode Island inaugurated new city governments last week, and nearly all of the mayors in their inaugural addresses urged that a check be placed upon municipal expenditure, and that the pay-as-you-go-policy be adopted. The fallacy that a public debt is a public blessing is clearly losing its hold upon the New England mind.—Beverly Citizen.

—Evidently a concerted movement is to be made on the legislature this winter for the purpose of "liberalizing" the laws on taxation. The newly elected mayor of Boston in his inaugural delivered this week, takes very strong grounds in favor of such changes in the law. Mayor Quincy in his inaugural said that "false theories" of taxation must be absolutely abandoned, and advocated placing of taxation upon real estate.—New England Farmer.

—The Cape papers give warning to the public to be on the lookout for a smooth-tongued professional-looking man who claims to be a doctor, who is making a rapid tour of small towns and has frightened many into the belief they were to lose their sight by cataracts and has been giving washes of lavender water as a warranted cure at a cost of $25 each.

—The Boston and Albany railroad has adopted a device that other railroads will not be slow to accept. Whenever a train for any reason is forced to stop at an unusual spot, a new invention is to be used. A fusee attached to a pointed rod, which is to be stuck into a crosstie between the tracks. It is ignited by the simple process of unscrewing a friction cap, whereupon a bright red light, which neither wind nor rain can extinguish, burns for 15 minutes, making an illumination visible for a full mile.—New York World.

—The Quincy PATRIOT states that night lunch wagons find it difficult to make both ends meet in that city. In Charlestown they prosper, but that probably is because they make both ends bread and the middle meat.—Charlestown Enterprise.

—One of the remarkable things is that a woman in Brookville, Maine, thirty-seven years ago received a present of a lamp, two chimneys and a globe, and though in constant use are all yet unbroken.

—Both steam and electric cars are running on the same track between Louisville, Ky., and New Albany, Ind.

—The Gazette published at Hyde Park is the oldest as well as one of the best papers published in Norfolk County. It was located for many years at Dedham, but when the new and wide awake town of Hyde Park started, it was moved there, and has been a valuable aid to that flourishing town, which will soon be a city.

—The first agitation against the action of the Biennial Election League has made itself felt in the formation of the Annual Election League of Boston. It is largely composed of members of the Knights of Labor and the Central Labor Union, which organizations, to a man, are said to be opposed to biennial elections.

—The town of Weymouth has borrowed $10,000 on a loan for ninety days, at the rate of 6 per cent. interest. It was rather high rate for a town like Weymouth to pay, but they happened to want during the recent financial panic.

—Brother Mosley of the Norfolk County Gazette, about the sixtieth volume of the PATRIOT. says: "With the issue of Jan. 4, '96, the valued and venerable Quincy PATRIOT commenced its 60th volume. Our contemporary has always been a clean and wholesome local journal and a welcome visitor in every intelligent household in its community."

—Seven states now have Masonic homes in full working order: Illinois, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, New York, Pennsylvania. Ohio is building a home.

—It seems to be a decided fact that Thomas B. Reed of Maine is the popular choice of the leading Republicans of New England of all the Presidental candidates so far brought forward.

—Thomas Goss, aged 84 years, skated three miles on the Kennebeck River last week, took dinner with a friend, and skated home again.

—During the last six months the Massachusetts highway commission has had $700,000 to expend. During that period there has been laid out and substantially completed 89 miles of state roads, so well and thoroughly done that they afford the most striking object lessons of the utility of the commission. The law under which this work is carried on provides that a hearing shall be given by the commission once a year in each of the counties of the state for the general discussion of roads and road making.

Court Finances.

Clerk John P. S. Churchill of the East Norfolk District court has submitted the following financial report to the comptroller of the treasury of Norfolk county for the year 1895:

Received from defendants in fines, $4,483.23; complainants in bastardy cases, $10.50; sale of writs in civil actions, $40.05; entry of actions in civil cases, $322; other civil fees, $153.56; naturalization cases, $254.

Paid to county treasurer $543.48. To treasurers of cities and towns as follows: Quincy, $851.41; Weymouth, $203,87; Randolph, $211.10; Milton, $125.77; Cohasset, $123.46; Holbrook, $107.56; Braintree, $36.47; total, $1,659.64. To complainants or informants in criminal cases $20; to other persons, $38.40; to officers, $2,733.12; witnesses, $1,268.70; certified to town treasurers other than Quincy $788.32

Women May be Admitted.

The executive committee of the Quincy Yacht club held a meeting Saturday evening to arrange for the annual meeting to be held the first Saturday in February. Commodore Charles F. Pettengill presided, and Secretary J. S. Whiting reported a small surplus in the treasury, and that a debt of $150 had been paid. The past year had been one of the most successful in every way that the club had ever had, and the prospects for the coming season were very encouraging.

The question of admitting women to membership in the club came up and created quite a discussion. It was finally decided to submit the question to a vote of the club at the annual meeting, and an article to that effect will be placed in the warrant.

Company K Ball.

Company K will hold its annual ball in the armory, Friday evening, Jan. 24. The committee in charge of the affair consists of Capt. Morrison, Lieut. Kincaide, Lieut. Whitney, Sergt. Colbert, Sergt. Wright, Corp. Mohan and Private Phillips.

The reception committee will be Col. A. C. Drinkwater, Col. C. H. Porter, Hon. Asa French, Prof. C. A. Pitkin, Mr. E. E. Abercrombie, Representative Will W. Mayhew, Mr. I. Morrison, Mr. H. W. Davenport, Mr. George D. Willis, Mr. D. E. Wadsworth, Mr. L. L. H. Johnson.

Music will be furnished by Baldwin's Cadet band, assisted by Harry Daggett, piano accompanist, of Boston. The caterer is to be T. D. Cook and the decorations will be done under the direction of Col. Beal of Boston.

Poisons engendered by food fermenting in a dyspeptic stomach are the direct cause of rheumatism, gout, bronchitis, liver and kidney complaints, asthma, pneumonia and many nervous ailments.

These results are prevented by the use of the Shaker Digestive Cordial, a remedy discovered and prepared by the Shakers of Mount Lebanon, N. Y. It is in itself a food and has power to digest other food taken with it. Thus it rests the diseased stomach and finally masters the worst cases of dyspepsia. It acts promptly and fresh strength and increase of weight soon follows. The first dose, taken immediately after eating, abates the pain and distress so dreaded by dyspeptics. Trial bottles—enough to prove its merit—10 cents.

Helps Scotland—Hurts Quincy.

"The total output of the monumental yards of Aberdeen, Scotland, for the year is estimated at £250,000, of which £60,000 worth went to America."

The above is a quotation from a review of the granite industry of Aberdeen, Scotland, from the Journal of that city. We read further, that there is "marked activity" at one yard; another "at the present time has more orders on hand than he has had for some years, and will be very busy right through the winter. His output for the past year is greatly in excess of that for 1894." A third has been "particularly busy;" at another "The year just closing has been an exceptionally busy one." Similar reports follow, and it is plain that at least one city has prospered because of tariff legislation in America. And other granite centres abroad have profited likewise.

The granite manufacturers and stone workers of this country know the poor state of the business here without being told. Will they secure favorable legislation from this Congress? See what the same Scotland paper says of the proposed increase of tariff. What helps them hurts us.

"The announcement that the Committee of Ways and Means of the Congress at Washington propose to amend the present tariff on imported goods, by increasing it from 15 to 60 per cent. on certain specified kinds, has not only roused a considerable amount of agitation in America, but has also created a feeling akin almost to consternation in certain branches of industry in this country. To the various branches of the granite trade in Aberdeen, for example, the proposed tariff will give a great blow, if it does not indeed temporarily paralize it.

"The present duty upon granite imported into America is 30 per cent. and it is now apparently proposed to increase it by 15 per cent. making the total 45 per cent., or 5 per cent. higher than the highest tariff ever previously imposed. There seems to be some doubt, however, if the full increase of 15 per cent. will be added to the existing 30 per cent., because in the recommendations to Congress it is added that "Every dutiable item in the Wilson tariff is to be raised provided that it does not exceed the rate given in M'Kinley's schedule." As the tariff for granite under that schedule was 40 per cent. (although there was a previous proposal to make it 50), it is argued that the qualification mentioned in the above quotation must be taken into account.

In that case the increase of the tariff to 40 per cent., while it would operate certainly injuriously on the trade in Aberdeen, would not, in the opinion of some, be Absolutely Disastrous.

If, however, the total increase amounts, as some appear to think it will do, to 45 per cent., the effect will be ruinous to those engaged in the American trade, so far as grey granite is concerned. It is estimated by one competent authority, who is intimately connected with the American trade and knows it from long experience on the spot, that the loss to Aberdeenshire by the proposed new rate would not be less than £70,000 per annum so long as the rate continued to be imposed. Apart, however, from the almost immediate check which would be given to the export trade from Aberdeen, there is the further danger that a not inconsiderable part of the existing trade might cease.

"On the last occasion on which an increase in the rate was made the effect was not so serious as it would now be, because at that time the Americans were more dependent upon us than they now are. They have been working up their extensive raw material, and having got into the way of using it, the demand upon this country has slackened; and even supposing the high rate is only temporarily imposed, it is feared the diversion of the trade may become to a large extent permanent.

"These remarks mainly apply to the trade in grey granite, of which there is abundance in the States, for the new duties will scarcely permanently affect the exports from this country of red granite, of which practically we have the monopoly. The cost of the raw material in America is much less than with us, and where is in our cheaper labour, which even with the existing tariff, enables us to compete successfully with them. Besides the injurious effects of the new rate that will be produced on the yards where the raw material is manipulated, the quarries in our neighborhood must inevitably suffer severely, if some of them do not actually have to close. The profits which the wholesale dealers are making out of Scotch granite are very small, and have been diminishing, with the result that more than once they have threatened to throw the trade up altogether, and, in these circumstances, it will readily be seen that a very small disturbance of the equilibrium would turn the balance the wrong way.

"The effect upon the trade in Aberdeen, supposing the new tariff were passed, would not be immediate. It has been generally the custom for American orders to be placed some months before they are executed; and on a previous occasion when the 40 per cent. rule applied during a period of three years, the actual time in many cases during which the trade was directly affected was about eighteen months. It is doubtful if so long an interval would elapse this time; but, at any rate, it would not affect the spring orders. It is the custom apparently for the agents of American purchasers to pay visits to the yards in the dull time at the end of the year, and take delivery only in March and April, so that the new order of things, if it comes into operation, will not affect the work of the winter. Probably, indeed, there might be a rush of orders to begin with before the new rule was applied. In the end, however, matters would assume the much more serious aspect we have indicated. The outlook in the meantime is not very encouraging, but it is sincerely to be hoped the crisis may be averted."

Historical.

The old Fairbanks house was erected in Dedham, Mass., shortly after the year 1633, the materials having been brought from England. Miss Rebecca Fairbanks, the present occupant, has presented to the Quincy Historical Society one of the original diamond shaped panes of glass with a section of its leaden sash. Mr. Josiah A. Fenno has kindly framed the same from the remnant of a San Domingo mahogany plank which was used in the manufacture of Ex-President John Adams' coffin; the same having been made by Mr. Fenno's grand-father, Josiah Adams. Many of our residents will remember Mr. Adams, who resided many years in the building now in the rear of Durgin and Merrill's Block, it having been moved to make room for that structure. The house was erected about the year 1816 by Mr. Adams, it having formerly stood on the old Adams farm near Pine hill, the building having been given to him by his father, Deacon Josiah, and his uncle, Ebenezer Adams. It was taken down and rebuilt by Mr. Adams. Mr. Adams was well known as the "pump man," he being a manufacturer of that ever useful but now out of date article.

Household Receipts.

SWEET FRITTERS. One pint of milk, three tablespoonfuls of sugar, two teacupfuls of floor, three stiffly beaten eggs, one-half of a saltspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Drop in a kettle of hot lard and fry brown. Eat with sauce.

BEEFSTEAK PIE. Take two and a half pounds of the best part of a shin of beef that has been cut off of the bone lengthwise in thin slices. Place a cup in the middle of a pie dish. Put in the slices of meat, rolling them, putting inside a bit of fat, with a little flour, moistened with water and plenty of seasoning, such as salt black pepper, cayenne pepper, and three hard boiled eggs cut in slices. Make a good paste, using dripping instead of butter, and with it cover the top of the dish. Bake in a slow oven for two hours and a half.

OYSTER OMELET. Put the yolks of three small or two large eggs in a basin, season them with salt, pepper, and cayenne, add a couple of drops of lemon juice; open, drain, and mince six small or four large oysters, and mix in with the eggs. Add a tablespoonful of minced parsley, whip the whites of the eggs to a foam, and stir into the yolks thoroughly, fry delicately, and serve with a cut lemon.

SHAKER INDIAN PUDDING. Bring one quart sweet milk to a boil; to one half pint of cornmeal add cold milk to mix smooth, turn into the hot milk and let it thicken a little. Let this cool, then add a little salt, molasses and ginger to suit the taste and turn into a two quart dish and fill up with cold milk; bake two hours.

Fatal Quarry Accident.

Richard Barry, foreman at John Cashman's quarry had a frightful fall Saturday afternoon from the effects of which he died a short time after.

The unfortunate man had been at work in the quarry cleaning off snow and when desiring to come up he caught hold of the hook on the fall and was hoisted up hanging by the hook. The hook was icy cold and that coupled with the weight of Mr. Barry so benumbed his hands that when the top was reached and he had tried to swing himself onto the bank he lost his hold and fell back into the quarry, striking with a dull thud nearly a hundred feet below.

Other workmen hastened to his rescue and as there was still life in the body, it was placed on a sled and taken to E. J. Murphy's drug store, where Drs. Sheahan, Dion and Ash were quickly summoned, but the unfortunate man had breathed his last before they arrived, his death probably being due to internal injuries. The remains were taken in charge by Undertaker Brown.

Mr. Barry was about 46 years of age and resided at 74 West street. He leaves a widow and five children.

The Question of the Day.

The Metropolitan County scheme—it certainly is a scheme—is the burning question of the day, and at present dwarfs into insignificance the Venezuelan boundary line dispute and the new bond issue. It is a scheme that had its origin in Marcus Cook's "Greater Boston hobby," which hobby was the original starting point from which sprang the Metropolitan District Commission, a commission whose labors have cost the State and its taxpayers "a pretty penny," and all to try and foist upon the people within a radius of ten or a dozen miles of Boston something they told the Commission at the hearings held they did not wish, and for the consummation of which they distinctly had no desire. The Commission seems to have been composed of men with a fad—a Greater Boston—and, while not daring, in the face of the great opposition encountered at the hearings held, to run wholly counter to the current of public opinion, yet go so far as to attempt to drive in a Greater Boston entering wedge by advocating the formation of a Metropolitan County. Their action in the matter is one deserving censure rather than praise, since, knowing the drift of public opinion to be against any scheme that would by its adoption tend to give a death blow to the people's greatest safeguard against fadists and corruptionists—local self-government—they advocate a scheme of the nature embodied in their report. To have been fair in the matter, they should have reported to the Legislature the plain facts as they found them.—Dedham Transcript.

The Liquor Business.

BY JOHN B. FINCH.

What does the dram-shop manufacture? It has always manufactured drunkards, first, last, and all the time. A dram-shop keeper is as distinctly a drunkard maker as the man that makes shoes is a shoemaker. That is all he ever did make; that is all he ever will make. Show me a first-class sample of dram shop work. Could you induce a liquor dealer to come up here and hold it up? What does he say? You say to him "you make drunkards." His very first excuse is, "I will not have any old drunkards hanging around me." If it is a good thing to make a drunkard, a drunkard must be a good thing after he is made.

Suppose the minister should come here and give you as a reason why his church should be endorsed, that he did not have any old Christians hanging around his prayer meetings. Would not that be a good advertisement for the Christian religion?

Go down the street. A new wagon is standing by the curb. You stop to admire it, and at last say: "I wonder who made it." "I did sir," answers the wagon maker. You look at the man. How proud he is as he contemplates his finished work.

While visiting a country fair with a friend, I was standing by one of the stock pens looking at a calf. "Wonder who raised the calf?" said my friend. "I did," answered a farmer, standing by. As the farmer spoke he straightened up as much as to say, "I am proud of my work."

As you pass along the streets of our cities, you frequently see other work nearly finished, sitting on the curb or wallowing in the gutter. Stop and ask, "Whose job is this?" Will the drunkard makers defend their work? Can you separate a workman from his chips? If the liquor business is respectable its products must be respectable. The liquor business has its own work and acts to meet and defend; this much, and no more.

Removing Glass Stoppers.

The bothersome stopper will not come out. It has become so fixed in the mouth of the bottle that no amount of pulling or twisting will move it. But here are some satisfactory methods of removing it without all that impatient tugging. The most effectual plan is to wrap a rag wet with very hot water around the neck, and let it remain a few seconds. The heat will expand the neck of the bottle, and before the heat penetrates to the stopper itself, it can be easily removed. Or, wind a string once or twice around the neck of the stopper, and holding the bottle between the knees, pull alternately on one end and then the other end, thus creating friction and consequently heat. Or, a little camphene oil dropped between the neck and the stopper of the bottle will often loosen it so that it can be removed in a few minutes after applying it.

Castle Square Theatre, Boston.

The third and last week of "Faust," began on Monday evening last, before an overflowing house. It has been a most remarkable series of performances. Never before has it been possible for an opera company to present Gounod's masterpiece for three successive weeks, that honor has been reserved for the Castle Square Opera Company. For next week, Mr. Rose announces a production of another popular opera, one whose ballads have been played and sung in every home. Il Trovatore is in many respects the equal of any grand opera; its music is tuneful and full of the vibrating emotions of human feeling. The anvil chorus is perhaps the best-known number of any opera, and is frequently heard outside the theatre. For the 300th performance, which occurs on Tuesday evening Jan. 28, Mr. Rose announces a celebration entirely novel. Slips containing the repertoire of the company have been distributed to the theatre's patrons who designate their favorite opera and the act which they prefer. These slips are received at the theatre and a record kept of the votes. The performance on Tuesday evening, Jan. 28, will consist of the operas, an act from each, that have polled the highest vote. Following Trovatore, there will be given a season of Gilbert and Sullivan operas and it has been decided to devote several weeks to their production.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

THE SHAWMUT SPRING WATER possesses all these requirements, and when used in liberal quantities it is a most important factor in building up and restoring to healthy action the digestive organs and conducive to the health of all, more especially to children and persons of delicate constitutions. The array of testimony by doctors and others in its favor is overwhelming and shows that Shawmut Spring Water stands among the best

LIGHT AND SHADOW.

You who judge by what you see,
Often fail to judge aright;
Stars are shining solemnly,
In the day as in the night:
All the day they lie concealed
By the glory of the sun,
But at eve they stand revealed
In the azure, one by one.

So the daylight of a smile
May but veil the human face
Hiding for a little while
Doubt and care and sorrow's trace;
So, when shadow clouds of woe
O'er a happy face arise,
Still beneath the shadows glow
Stars of joy in gentle eyes.

Life is arched with changing skies,
Rarely are they what they seem;
Smiles we have, and also sighs—
Much we know, but more we dream;
Look beneath the outward show,
To the shadow or the light,
And from what you surely know
Learn to see and judge aright.

—Exchange.

EXCHANGE OF ROLES.

All his life Charlie Stanhope had been quite ready to admit that his morals were somewhat faulty. Sometimes he admitted it genially, sometimes with a mild self reproach, but always with the air of being quite irresponsible for his failings, and indeed he was one of those men whom scarcely any one judges hardly. Good looks, a pleasant smile, an easy affectionateness and a generous hand are excellent covers for very serious faults if a too fervid liking for the good things of this life, including wine and women, is to be counted among them.

"Hang it, you know, a pretty woman can always make a fool of me," he used to acknowledge, "and I positively cannot help it. Lilian knows it too."

Lilian was Mrs. Stanhope, and she certainly had abundant reason to know it. Charlie had married her in a fit of infatuation for her beauty and amid the ominous prophecies of their friends as to their future happiness, and if the husband and wife had been philanthropically inclined they might have had the satisfaction of knowing that they still afforded a thrilling topic of conversation to their social circle.

In the course of five years of married life there had been much for Lilian to forgive, and Charlie had a habit of suddenly confessing himself to her and receiving absolution for his sins, under the shadow of which for a month he would live irreproachably, forswear his club, going to no supper parties and escorting his wife to afternoons and balls and reverting altogether to the husband-lover of their honeymoon. In very truth it is not too much to say that he loved and respected his wife above any living creature; only it was not in his nature to be faithful to any woman.

"You are a saint, Lilian, my pure white lily," he often said in his fits of remorse, "and I'm a black brute, not fit to kiss the hem of your dress."

And he thoroughly believed it, too, for the time being.

So when one morning he came down to breakfast and opened and read a certain letter that was lying on his plate he only experienced a furious anger against the author of it. It was written in a hand awkwardly sloped the wrong way and obviously feminine, and bore the ominous signature, "A Well Wisher," and contained nothing but a savage and coarse attack upon his wife, coupling her name with that of a man who had just been notoriously expelled from a smart club for cheating at cards. Charlie's handsome face flushed darkly, and he muttered a savage oath under his breath.

"What devils some women are! Can't they even leave Lilian alone? She, of all women in the world, to be written of so! It's that jade, Maud Bellair, I'm certain. She has never forgiven me for refusing to introduce her to Lilian. Well, I may be a blackguard myself, but my wife shall never speak to such women. She must never know of it. It would half kill her, and if I showed it to her she might, perhaps think I suspected her. I suspect Lilian! Great heavens, what would the world be coming to—and to couple her name with Hugh Dacre's! It's a pity she didn't try to invent something a little more probable."

His faith in his wife was not shaken for an instant. No devout worshiper would think of dethroning his pure, white idol because some miscreant throws a clod of dirt at it, but the words of the letter fascinated him, as things impossible and monstrous do, and he was so absorbed in it that he did not heed a footstep coming through the open door, and started violently when a hand was laid on his arm and Lilian's voice said:

"Whatever are you scowling at so ferociously?"

"Oh, nothing of any consequence—a stupid letter," he said confusedly, trying to crumple it up; but his wife put her finger on it.

"Are you so anxious I shouldn't see it?" she said reproachfully.

"It isn't what you think at all, Lil," he said, guessing her suspicions. "It's not a letter from a woman—at least—I mean it's of no importance."

"Let me see it, then," she persisted gently, trying to draw it away.

"Oh, don't read it, dear. It's an abominable, shameful letter! I wouldn't have you pollute your eyes by reading it," he said, taken off his guard. "I entreat you not to read it!"

"Why, you must think I am something more than a woman to refrain after that," said Mrs. Stanhope, smiling as she drew it from his reluctant fingers.

She was a very lovely woman, slender and fair, with pathetic gray eyes and a serenely sad mouth, and the smile gave just the last touch her beauty wanted.

"Don't think I heed it for an instant! I know well enough who's done it," said Charlie nobly, but she held up her hand for silence, as she quickly read the sheet. He could see her eyes traveling from line to line; could see a flush quickly rise to her forehead, and as swiftly change to whiteness.

"Ah, Lil, my darling! I knew you could not stand it; I oughtn't to have let you read it," he said, catching at her as she swayed slightly, but she freed herself and stood facing him, with parted lips.

"Then you don't believe it?" she said slowly.

"Believe it! My God, what a question from you to me! My queen, my saint! As if I'd believe all the world against you!" he broke out, passionately. "I've been a bad lot myself, but do you think I don't know a good woman when I find one?"

"You'd believe me against all the world," she echoed, "but if I joined the world against myself what would you believe then?"

"I don't know what you mean. Don't jest on such a subject, and, trust me, I'll make the woman who wrote those lies smart for it."

"But they are not lies," said Lilian Stanhope slowly. "It is the simple truth."

He looked at her in utter bewilderment. What did she mean? What was she talking of? Was she out of her mind?

"You don't seem to understand," she said quietly. "Every word in that letter is true."

He did not answer, but still stood gazing at her. She had crossed over to the mantelpiece and stood with one elbow resting on it, her face turned toward him. The sleeve of her morning wrapper had slipped down, and he could see the curve of her round, white arm. Perhaps he would still have believed her if she had not suddenly smiled such a smile as he had never dreamt of on her face.

He did not know what he said—perhaps he only made some inarticulate cry—but he sank into a chair and hid his face in his hands from that look.

Neither of them spoke. It seemed to him that minutes were merging into eternity. The ticking of the clock on the mantelpiece was like the strokes of a hammer on his brain. His heart seemed shrinking under the touch of redhot iron.

Lilian vile! Oh, it was incredible, impossible, some hideous dream!

He raised his head again to look at her. Surely a lifetime had passed since that smile, and yet the clock had only marked three minutes.

"I am glad you know," said his wife. "I was so tired of pretending to be good." And she stretched her arms as one laying down a heavy burden. "I wonder you have never guessed it before."

"Guessed it! I—I reverenced you too much to insult you by a thought."

"You mean virtue was my role, and it was for you to play sinner. Oh, you were too egotistical. You wanted always to play lead."

"Oh, what did it matter how much I sinned? I was never good. But you. You have been a saint in heaven to me."

"No woman is ever a saint, and, remember, I have been your wife five years. I was good once, but your love has been a liberal education for me."

Her whole bearing seemed altered. The sweet sadness of the mouth had changed to mockery; her voice rang clear and hard. Every word struck home to his soul as nothing had ever done in the course of his gay, successful life.

"Then I have damned you and myself," he said hoarsely.

"Don't talk so primitively. We have been educated out of all that now," she answered. "There are hundreds of husbands and wives in our own case."

"But this man—Dacre"—he brought out the words as if they burned his lips. "You—you can't love him?"

She shrugged her shoulders carelessly. "Love? What does it mean? He was sufficiently amusing. Did you love Lady Fancourt, Miss Bellair and—but why extend the list?"

"I? That is quite another thing. A man"— But he stopped short under the scorn of her eyes.

"What will you do? You can't divorce me. You could never appear in court with such a record as yours," she went on. "I don't see, myself, why this should make any difference to us. We know the truth about each other now and can be mutually complacent."

The vileness of such words on her lips was unbearable to him. He sprang up and caught her by both arms, studying every line of her face with savage intensity.

"Are you going to kill me?" she said, shrinking a little. "I did not take your confessions so tragically."

"I can't believe it. I can't understand it," he muttered. "You, who were worlds above me, to have sunk so much beneath me!"

"I think we are on a level footing now," she retorted. "Our sin is of the same quality."

"But I know myself for the blackguard I am, and you—oh, Lilian, don't you realize what it is for you?"

She shook her head slightly. A sudden hatred of him had sprung up in her, and instinctively she knew that nothing she could do or say would wring his heart as did her callous bearing.

He looked at her for an instant with despairing eyes and then caught her to him as if he would kiss her, but recoiled, and, loosing her, dashed roughly from the room.—St. Paul's.

Seems to Be a Long Lived Set.

A list of the losses which the Royal society has suffered by death during the past year shows that the pursuit of science is not unfavorable to longevity. The list comprises 19 fellows and seven foreign members, and the average lifetime of these 26 men was a fraction over 76½ years. The average age of the seven foreign members was 79 years and 5 months, the oldest being Franz Ernst Neumann, 97, and the youngest Henri Ernest Baillon, 67. The 19 fellows had an average lifetime of 75 years and 7 months, the oldest being Bisset Hawkins, 98, and the youngest George Edward Dobson, 47. The fellows were not all scientific men, one of them being Lord Aberdare, 80, and another, the Earl of Selborne, 83, but statesmanship and law also seem to favor length of days.—London News.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

HOW SUZANNE KEYSER WON THE MEDAL AT THE INSTITUT RUDY.

Philadelphia has many people and many things to be proud of, but it is not generally known that one of its fair daughters has won such distinction as has never before fallen to the lot of an American. This young woman, not yet 22 years of age, is Miss Suzanne Keyser, the daughter of Mr. Charles S. Keyser, the well known lawyer. So quietly has she reaped her unusual honors that few outside of the circle of her most intimate acquaintances are aware that she, an American born and English speaking maiden, went to France, and in Paris, its literary and artistic center, won the medal for dramatic ability at the Institut Rudy against at least 300 competitors, all of whom were French.

How she won the medal which never before has crossed the ocean is told by her in a bright, pleasing fashion, essentially girlish and very winning in its utter absence from any trace of egotism.

"I have always loved to recite, and to be trained by some member of the Comedie Francaise seemed to be the height of my ambition. Therefore when papa took me to Paris I made up my mind that I should at least aim for what I had always been dreaming about. Therefore one morning we went to see

SUZANNE KEYSER.

Dupont Vernon at the theater, and I told him I wanted to become one of his pupils. He looked me all over, shrugged his shoulders, gave me a little piece of poetry and said, 'Come to my house tomorrow and recite that to me.' When tomorrow came, we went to see him. As I entered he said in a sort of patronizing fashion, 'Don't be frightened.' Up to that minute I had no thought of being frightened, but just then a big lump came up in my throat which had never been there before. For a minute I felt I was going to break down, but I conquered the fear and did the best I knew how. When I was through, he rose, kissed me on the forehead and called me his pupil. For a year I studied with him—ah, he was such a man, the best and cleverest teacher in the world. Racine Moliere—all of the poets and dramatists I lived with constantly, each day being more perfect in my French, of course. When my course with him was concluded, I went to the Institut Rudy as a sort of finishing touch. A year more there, and the time came for me to go home. On Thursday I said goodby to my fellow students, as I expected to sail on Saturday, and back to the pension that had been my home for so long I went to finish my packing. The old lady who kept it, and whom I had always supposed disliked me, was very affectionate, kissing me on both cheeks, and I could also see that she was more than ordinarily excited.

" 'Put on your best gown, mademoiselle,' said she, and I, puzzled all the while at her demeanor, obeyed. My astonishment was greater when we started off in a fiacre, the bus or tram being usually good enough for us. Soon we drew up at the Francaise; but, instead of going in the front way, I followed her to the stage entrance. Her my teacher met me, and kissing me on the forehead said, 'In three minutes, mademoiselle, you are to make your debut.'

"You can imagine my feelings as he told me what to do, and after I had got out before that vast audience and given a tragic scene from one play, a bit of comedy from another and finished up with the little poem I had first recited in Paris I felt as though I was the most dismal failure in the world. There was an awful silence, and no one seemed to look at me or care about me. Then a of a sudden there was a great clapping of hands as a man stepped forth and handed me this medal. I didn't know it was for me and didn't want to take it, but then M. Vernon came to my side and in the midst of the enthusiasm told me how he had entered me in the competition without my knowing it, how the judges were not willing that an American should compete, and the condition was to have me go on totally unprepared to make things fair in their own minds. Yet, after all, in their own language, and because they really judge me the best, the medal was handed to an American girl, whom every one, even the judges, up to that moment had regarded as French." — Philadelphia Times.

Young Old Maids.

At a very smart wedding a few days ago it suddenly occurred to me that the eminently lovely bride walking down the aisle was not a day under 30 years of age, and yet she had never been thought of as anything but a young and beautiful woman, and the term "old maid" would have been as likely to be applied to the man at her side as to herself, and I could not but think how notably in this regard "the old order changeth, giving place to new."

Maidens who have passed their thirtieth year may now claim that they represent the most perfect and advanced type of maidenhood and look down upon girls who marry before 25 as very much more akin to savages, for it is a well known fact that the age of marriage advances with civilization. Among the Australians and other savages girls marry at 11, 10 or even 9 years of age; among semicivilized Egyptians, Hindoos, etc., the age is from 12 to 14; southern Europeans marry their girls between the ages of 15 and 18, while among the nations who lead modern civilization the age is a constantly rising one—from 17 or 18 of 50 years ago the average has risen to between 21 and 25. And does it not follow, by inexorable logic, that girls who wait until 28 or 30 are forerunners of a still higher civilization?

It is not only a fact that women marry later in life than they used, but it is equally true that everywhere the more mature woman is to the fore. The young and inexperienced bud has ceased to be the reigning queen of the hour. She has been forced to yield her place to the maturer woman, the woman of cultivated mind and manners, of broader experience and wider knowledge.

All this is only the natural result of evolution. With her deeper interests, wider outlook, enlarged sympathies, she scarcely feels the relentless march of the years, and with all the new light upon her physical care and condition she can easily look as young as she feels. Rouge pots, wigs and hair dyes have happily gone their way, and fresh air, exercise, baths and diet have taken their place. —New York Sun.

Discrimination Against Women.

It is not difficult to find an excuse for the refusal of the men of Massachusetts to give the ballot to women. So long as the masses of female citizens of that or any other state are indifferent on the suffrage question their fathers, husbands and brothers will not insist on loading them with political burdens or duties. This may or may not be the best policy, but it harmonizes with human nature and is likely to stand. The advocates of equal suffrage should see, in recent events in New York and Massachusetts, that their work lies among the women; that a desire for the ballot on the part of a majority of the women is a condition precedent to their getting it. Appeals to legislatures, to constitutional conventions and to party conventions will have little effect while the women remain in a don't care state of mind.

But the fact that the women of Massachusetts do not vote except for school officers is not a good reason for discriminating against them in public employments. Indeed their exclusion from any participancy in making laws, assessing taxes and deciding what amounts of money shall be expended for this, that and the other purpose ought to inspire the voters and their official agents with a desire and purpose to carefully guard the rights and interests of the nonvoting sex. But it does not appear to have done so. On the contrary the women in all parts of the state are treated unfairly in the one public employment in which they are and always have been conspicuously successful—that of a teacher.

Justice demands that a woman be paid the same wages as a man for teaching in the public schools. It is not just to pay women only $48 per month for work in public schools for which men receive $128.—Exchange.

A Successful Woman Barber.

Mrs. Anne Howard has opened a barber shop near the Brooklyn bridge, where all the work is done by women—done most delicately and delightfully. "I believe it would be a good idea to have a couple of colored women to polish boots, too," she said to a New York reporter. "As soon as men get over the strangeness of it they like to have a woman take care of them. I learned how to shave out west, where most of the new ideas come from these days. I have two shops in Chicago that are doing a good business. In one of them, while I was working there with four others just before coming east, we took in $125 a week, and the business is growing.

"I am going to open a shop in New York before long—that is, as soon as I am well started here. Rents are so much higher over there in any location that I should care to have that I thought I had better be settled in Brooklyn first. My trade here is better every day. Wednesdays and Saturdays I am very busy. I shall have two more women here within a week or ten days. Of course it isn't as easy to find really good women barbers as it is to find men, but I know so many that I shall not have any trouble.

"The men in this business don't like the idea at all, and every now and then I receive anonymous letters from some man barber or other. All I have to say for the writers is that while they were writing they were not doing anything else, and that they haven't done me any harm."

Philadelphia has a college for barbers, where women are admitted. Some of them better take Mrs. Howard as an example and start out for themselves.—Philadelphia Press.

Ideal Dress of the Working Woman.

Mrs. Martha Strickland is not only a lawyer and a lecturer on parliamentary law, but a warm advocate of physical culture and correct dress. This talented woman, who is yet young and charming and graceful, carries out her ideas regarding correct dress in an artistic and picturesque way that is decidedly pleasing, even to very fastidious people.

In appearance she is of medium height and plump. Her face is full, the expression pleasant, with a mouth and chin that denote firmness and strength. Her eyes are of deep blue and light up with animation when she talks. Recently when asked to give her idea of the working woman's costume she said:

"The ideal dress of the working woman would banish the skirt, but even if such abolition were possible we would desire for all other occasions to retain the skirt. The masculine idea in feminine dress is one which is thoroughly inartistic. It is true men's dress is more convenient than that of women, but this is its sole advantage, for it is hopelessly ugly, and why women should imitate it in any respect I cannot imagine. They have not adopted its utilitarian features, but have taken those which are most undesirable. Naturally the corset is an obstacle in the way of dress improvement, by wearing loose, plain waists, which is a slovenly fashion, not an artistic one. It was a bad expression of a good kind, and the corseted figure has this advantage, that it is a good expression of a bad kind. So we prefer the smooth fitting corseted waist of the two, for we all like skill."—New York World.

The Limit of Women's Work.

Now come the questions, What should be the limit of women's work? Where should they draw the line? This, at any rate, it is safe to answer, "At that point where their work ceases to do good." As soon as a woman feels she is in a position in which the best and noblest of men cease to look upon her with reverence, then she may be sure she has overstepped the limits of womanly dignity and reserve, and that there her influence will not be pure, elevating and noble.

There is plenty of real work for all of us to do beyond the sphere of home, in the fields of art, science and literature, and also, like Florence Nightingale and many other brave women, as nurses and comforters of the sick, the wounded and the dying.

Women's influence is sometimes said to be greater now than in past times. It is more palpable certainly, but I doubt whether more potent, for, as we know well for centuries, the hand that rocked the cradle ruled the world. The difference is that nowadays women are not content to work quietly as mere wire pullers. Instead they like to see and be seen, and to have the credit of their deeds.

The old idea was that "men must work and women must weep," but the newer idea that women should work, too, according to their talents and opportunities, seems more rational and healthy and is calculated to make them weep less. Let them give over weeping by all means, but in all their work let them remember that "woman is not undeveloped man, but diverse," and therefore not to try to be like men, and also not to think that nothing is too high or too sacred for them to meddle with.—Home Notes.

Equality.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor, a member of the English house of commons, has views upon an ideal society. In his perfect nation men and women will enjoy social and political equality.

"What I want to see," says this ardent champion, "is that women should be placed in such an economic position that marriage will not be entered into by her as the last and the only means she has of getting a livelihood. Every woman should be taught to be self supporting if she belongs to those who have to live by their own exertions, and, indeed, whether she does or not, she ought to learn to help herself, for even settled facts may disappear. In the wealthier classes woman should be given the highest education she is capable of receiving, so as to be an intellectual companion to her husband if she desire to have one—and to herself if she choose to live alone." But the admirable common sense of these statements is somewhat counterbalanced by the fact that in Mr. O'Connor's ideal "every girl will be married at 17 and every man at 21."

Journalism at Wellesley.

Wellesley college should produce some brilliant additions to the journalistic ranks within a few years. One of the courses in English offered during the junior year is in newspaper work. It is for students who have done superior work. Practice in reporting, condensing editing and writing of editorials, topics and reviews, with the study of current events, makes this half year's work of great value to those who have proved their ability for it.

Gave All Her Scanty Savings.

Miss Caroline Rustad of Whitehall, Wis., a Scandinavian spinster, 65 years of age, has turned over to Banker J. O. Melby $200, nearly all of her scanty earnings for the last 12 years, to be sent to the suffering missionaries and Armenians in Turkey. The old lady insisted on making the donation, and so Mr. Melby forwarded the money to the Lutheran Missionary society at St. Stravagar, Norway.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Dr. Josephine Cunin.

Dr. Josephine Cunin, gold medalist, Bishops, 1895, has been one of the few successful candidates for the degree of L. R. C. P. at Edinburgh, taking highest honors after a sojourn there of three months. Dr. Cunin is at present in Paris.

Miss Helen Culver has given $1,000,000 to the University of Chicago. It is always gratifying to the friends of equal rights when coeducational colleges and universities are thus generously remembered, especially by women.

The rage for lace in woman's finery extends nowadays literally from head to foot, for lace slippers and low shoes made of stiffened net and trimmed with lace rosettes are shown for ballroom wear.

Five minutes' soaking in ammonia and water will clean the dirtiest frying pans so that rinsing and wiping are all that will be needed.

Use a wire frame for boiling potatoes and see how much of vexation it saves and how satisfactory the result.

THE STATE OF UTAH.

TAKEN INTO THE SISTERHOOD AFTER THE NINTH KNOCK AT THE DOOR.

Sketch of "The Vale of Deseret"—An Old Story Related by One of Her Gentile Pioneers—A Great Problem Solved and a Great Commonwealth Transformed.

[Special Correspondence.]

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 1.—Utah is one of us. After the longest territorial childhood in our history, 45 years, the commonwealth founded by the exiles from Nauvoo by presidential proclamation becomes the forty-fifth state in the sisterhood. Nine times have the denizens in the vale of Deseret knocked at Uncle Sam's door before hearing the welcome "Come in!" and in the meantime 13 states have entered, every one of which was behind Utah at the start. Salt Lake City had 5,000 inhabitants when Yerba Buena was startled by the gold discovery and began its rapid transformation into San Francisco; the site of Denver was a sagebrush desert 11 years after Brigham Young and the 143 Mormon pioneers located Temple block; the Indians owned all of Kansas, save the military reserves, when the gray granite foundations of the great Mormon temple were just above ground, while settled Iowa was but 40 miles wide, Minnesota was a Sioux hunting ground, all west of it and north of the Kaw was unorganized territory, Arizona was but a narrow desert strip, and Oklahoma had not been dreamed of. Children born of English parents in Salt Lake City have long been grandmothers, and a native of that city, son of a Manxman and Mormon president, is soon to be Utah's first senator. But what a strange, wild history lies between, and in these 45 years how many blunders and follies were committed as well as acts of heroism and sublime self sacrifice!

A Look Backward.

Oh, snatch some portion of those acts from fate,
Historic muse, and to the world relate.

I shall not write the history, of course. The world knows it, for there have been something over 300 books written about the Mormons. But there are many side facts, with the reality of history and all the glow of romance, which should be set down to impress young Americans as to the wonderful growth of our west and the power of our institutions to solve a great problem and transform a great commonwealth. The superstitious might find strange suggestions in the odd numbers—45 years of territorial life to become the forty-fifth state, 9 applications to secure admission, 13 other new states coming in ahead and 3 territories claiming to be fit for admission. Equally suggestive is the anomalous fact that when the original Utah was split down the middle and the western half of the Great basin was rushed into the Union as the state of Nevada our most farseeing statesmen expected that it would grow rapidly, and, by successive additions, be able to absorb and control Mormon Utah, whereas it is the only American commonwealth which is declining in wealth and population. On the eastern side of the Great basin many mountain streams, fed all summer by the immense icebergs and snowdrifts in the Wasatch mountains, create broad, fertile valleys among the foothills and run far out into the basin before being lost in "sinks" and salt marshes. On the western side the few streams scarcely issue from the hills before they are lost in the loose red earth, and scientists have declared that if the Ohio river were turned into the northwest corner of the Great basin not a drop of it would reach the Colorado, so drying is the air and so absorbing the earth. With our present knowledge it is not possible to see how Nevada can sustain itself as a state.

When the 12 apostles and 2,000 Mormon pioneers crossed the Mississippi on the ice in February, 1846, and started on their hard journey, there were not, save in Texas, 20,000 white Americans in all the country west of the Council Bluffs meridian. All the preceding winter every available room in Nauvoo, even the great temple, had been turned into a workshop. Green timber had been boiled in brine to hasten its seasoning.

Twelve thousand wagons were ready when the first party started, and others followed as rapidly as they could be organized until, by the 1st of May, 16,000 Mormons were on the way. The advance parties suffered terribly. "All night," says a woman who made the journey, "the wagons came trundling into camp with half frozen children screaming with cold or crying for food, and the same the next day and the next, the whole line of march. The open sky and bare ground for women and children in February are things only to be endured when human nature is put to the rack of necessity, and many a mother hastily buried her dead child by the wayside, only regretting she could not lie down with it herself and be at peace."

By this early start, however, they reached the Missouri in time to break sod and plant crops, and their camp was soon spread on both sides above and below the present Omaha and as far west as Columbus, Neb. There they were visited by Colonel Thomas L. Kane of the United States army, and at his suggestion Brigham Young raised the famous Mormon battalion of 500 men for the Mexican war. They marched in the Kearny and Doniphan expedition and from the lower Rio Grande across the desert and mountains to San Diego. Major John D. Lee, afterward notorious for his part in the Mountain meadow massacre, told me while I was at his retreat on the Colorado in 1872 how he and Major Howard Egan went with the battalion to Santa Fe and received there the bounty and first payment, amounting to $20,000, which Lee and Egan took back to Brigham Young to be used in outfitting for the journey to Utah. The battalion was put in the command of Colonel Philip St. George Cooke, and long afterward the Mormons used to tell, with a glow of pride, that his attachment to these soldiers was so great that when he entered Salt Lake City, in 1858, with the United States army he rode with his head uncovered. A company of 246 pioneers had already been sent around from New York under Colonel Samuel Brannan. They reached Yerba Buena in time to aid the revolution against Mexican rule, and, the discovery of gold following soon, Brannan remained and became a very wealthy man, while the Mormons scattered and worked their way through to Utah.

When Brigham Young Was a Lion.

It was on that day in 1857 when all the people were gathered about Big Cottonwood lake, 24 miles from the city and 10,000 feet above sea level, when the music was loud and the dancing at its merriest, Brigham leading the head cotillon with his favorite wife, Emeline Free, that Elder A. O. Smoot rode into the assemblage, having come from the Missouri river as fast as his strength would bear, and announced that President Buchanan had sent a new set of officials for Utah, and that with them was a great army, now rapidly nearing Utah. Many a time have I sat by cabin fires in remote villages of Utah and heard old men and women tell how the people rose as one man and how Brigham was then truly the lion of the Lord. He took the stand and said: "God has granted my wish, and the devil has taken me at my word. I said the day we reached Utah that if the minions of hell would leave me ten years I'd be ready for them. They have taken me at my word, and they will see that I am ready."

He promptly ordered out the militia, issued proclamations, and the so called Mormon war began. It was during the three years beginning with 1855 that most of those acts were committed which anti-Mormon writers refer to as the "church murders." The first year the crop failed, and the next winter the people had to dig thistle roots and segoes for food. A spirit of wild fanaticism followed and a fearful period, known as the "reformation," during which the "blood atonement" doctrine was preached and occasionally enforced. The same year 2,000 Mormons started from the frontier in August to travel to Utah with handcarts. Winter came early while they were in the heart of the Rocky mountains; 300 of them died, and many more suffered the loss of an eye or a limb or otherwise by cold and hunger. In the meanwhile a mob had driven the United States judges and other officials out of the territory, and gentiles and dissenting Mormons fled in every direction. The army came late in 1857 and was barred out till the next summer, but its location in the territory proved the beginning of Mormon prosperity.

Mines were opened in adjacent territories, and the Mormons had a good market for their surplus at famine prices. Our civil war came on, a hard winter closed the Missouri river, Indians dominated all other routes, and flour in Montana rose to $110 per barrel. The Mormons literally coined money. During one peculiarly hard winter some 4,000 miners came to winter in the city, and I have heard old Mormons and merchants estimate that their average expenditures there were $5,000 per day for four months. After the war came the Union Pacific railroad, and when I crossed the plains, although the terminus of the road was near Cheyenne, the Mormon settlements were in a highly prosperous condition by reason of freighting and furnishing supplies to the advance working parties.

A Great State.

A dumb war followed between the United States officials and the Mormons till, in 1882, congress passed the Edmunds act, and the final assault on polygamy began. Its origin, according to the Mormons, was in a revelation to Joseph Smith, given July 12, 1843, but it was not openly avowed by the church till September, 1852. In 1862 the first law of congress against it was enacted; it was strengthened in 1874 by the Poland act, but it was not till the commission was appointed under the Edmunds act that anything practical was done. The Mormons yielded gracefully, and now the only use of the Edmunds act is for the prosecution of negroes in Washington who are living according to the old law of the plantation instead of the statutes.

During all these late years mines have been opened and railroads built, and great flocks of blooded sheep bred in the mountain pastures, and gentile churches built, and gentile influence established, and now the once Mormon commonwealth comes into the Union with 84,970 square miles, 260,000 people and politics based on the interests of silver, lead and wool. Long may she wave. And as one of her gentile pioneers, who edited a paper here when pistols and clubs were in order and had considerable of his blood spilt for an editorial indiscretion, I think I may say without egotism, "Welcome, sweet sister, and all the more welcome because of your wonderful transformation."

Over the Moonlit Sea.

St. John's Anniversary.

The St. John C. L. & A. A., must have a larger hall, as its present quarters are too small to accommodate its many friends. St. John's hall Tuesday night was crowded when the twelfth anniversary of the association was celebrated.

Among the guests were noticed Mayor Adams, Rev. F. A. Friguglietti, Rev. F. A. Cunningham, Rev. John J. Garrity, H. W. Lull, Superintendent of Schools; Frederic Allison Tupper, head master of High school; Charles A. Foster; Frank F. Prescott, city editor of DAILY LEDGER; F. F. Green; Edward Powers, president of the Hibernians; John A. Avery, chief ranger of the Forresters; Dr. J. M. Sheahan, W. T. Shea, Dr. J. H. Ash, Postmaster Burke, John T. Cavanagh, D. E. Wadsworth, J. C. Dorgan, and J. J. McAnarney.

After music by an orchestra, Mr. C. A. Ryan of Charlestown was introduced and gave a lecture on Rome, illustrated by the stereopticon. The views were particularly clear and good, but Mr. Ryan had been substituted for Dr. Supple late in the afternoon and was not as familiar with the lecture, and was also not in good voice.

President George A. Cahill made a short address, practically an abstract of the sketch of the society which follows.

The reverend fathers were not present at this point and Mayor Adams was introduced. He believed that a society of this kind, which developed the physical and mental powers of its members, was productive of good in a community. He spoke words of encouragement.

The entertainment which followed, included a solo by Miss Curtis; selection by the Young Ladies' quartette, Misses Eleanor and Annie Roche, Misses Mary and Fannie NcNally. Recitation, Miss Katherine Meany; violin solo, Mr. John Lyons; song, Daniel Padula; comic sketch, Mr. Henry Biganess; solo, Mr. William Short; song by Miss Roche and remarks by Rev. Fr. Cunningham and Rev. Fr. Friguglietti.

The musical programme was arranged by Miss E. McNally and Miss Margaret Garrity was accompanist.

The special guests and those who were to remain for the dancing were invited to go below, where sandwiches, ice cream, cake and coffee were served.

Dancing commenced about 10.30 and was continued until 3 A. M., in charge of President Cahill and competent aids.

During a lull in the dancing, Signor Galen Vinton Bowditch sang the "Star Spangled Banner," and was liberally applauded. Mr. Short, too, in response to the dancer's request, gave his famous "Paradise Alley."

The reception committee were Rev. F. A. Cunningham, George A. Cahill, Richard A. Cole, John F. Foley, Timothy J. Carey, John P. Mundy, Michael White, Thomas J. McGrath, John W. Walsh, John Sullivan, Miss A. S. Gavin, Miss Frances Talbot, Miss Nellie O'Brien, Miss Margaret O'Hara, Miss Kittie Walsh and Miss Jennie Walsh.

The anniversary committee were Rev. F. A. Cunningham, Miss Eliza C. Sheahan, Miss Mary McNally, Timothy J. Carey and Thomas J. McGrath.

Sketch of Society

Early in the month of January, 1884, the idea originated with the Rev. A. F. Roche that an association composed of the Catholic young men of the parish ought to be organized. He finally consulted with a few young men and explained the advantages to be derived from such an association. The suggestion was quickly impressed on the minds of these young men, and immediately a meeting of all the Catholic young men of the parish was called, and on the 14th of January, 1884, about one hundred young men answered to the call, and met in the basement of St. John's church. An organization was affected and from that date the association has taken an upward course, until today it has a membership of 125. At this meeting a committee was appointed to draw up a constitution, and to report the same to the next meeting.

On the 21st of January another meeting was held, and the committee brought in a report of constitution, and after a few changes were made it was adopted. The preamble to the constitution states the objects, which are, the advancement of the members, morally, mentally and physically; and the name of the St. John's Catholic, Literary and Athletic association was adopted.

Rev. A. F. Roche was chosen director of the association, and it was by his untiring energy, and under his zealous and watchful care, his wise and able counsel, that the association steered clear of shoals and quicksands, and sailed on a smooth and unruffled sea. And while his wise counsel was always needed, the members also acted in a manner entirely creditable, remembering always that they were Catholics and living according to Catholic teachings, and also upholding the principles of its constitution, and strictly adhering to the article which requires the members to attend Holy Communion in a body twice a year. The perpetuation of the association was thus assured.

The present hall of the society was built in 1885. Rev. F. A. Cunningham is the present director.

Won Handsomely.

W. R. C. New Officers.

The following officers of Paul Revere Woman's Relief Corps were installed Tuesday evening by Past Department President, Mrs. Augusta A. Wales, of Dorchester.

President,—Mrs. Almeda L. Gourd.
Senior Vice,—Mrs. Angie D. Loud.
Junior Vice,—Mrs. Fannie Newcomb.
Treasurer,—Mrs. Laura E. Holt.
Conductor,—Mrs. Henrietta Gourd.
Guard,—Mrs. Mary Alden.
Assistant conductor, — Mrs. Blanche Lillicrap.
Assistant guard,—Mrs. Holton.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies, Mrs. Isabelle Souther, the retiring president, was presented with a gold badge by the installing officer in behalf of the members of the corps, and Mrs. Wales was in turn presented with a bouquet of red roses by the incoming officers.

A collation and remarks by the Department President and others closed the meeting.

—The Weymouth Union National has elected as president, G. H. Bicknell; vice-president, E. P. Worcester; treasurer, H. A. Nash; directors, J. P. Lovell, B. S. Lovell, F. D. Thayer, Francis Ambler, G. J. Richards and T. H. Humphrey.

No Dudes Wanted.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

In your issue of the 9th inst. there appeared an article signed by "R," relative to the appointment of a Commissioner of Public Works, and advocating the selection of a city graduate of some technical school. I will remind the author of the communication that while an educational training is an excellent qualification for such a position, a man who will make a successful Commissioner of Public Works must also be possessed of practical experience in building roads and be familiar with a diversity of other perplexing business problems connected with the office.

Our first Mayor experimented with an educated dude in such a capacity and it was a signal failure.

A man of unerring judgment in business affairs is needed in this position, one who will select such foremen as will require the men under their charge to attend strictly to the city's work and not spend their time in drinking intoxicating liquor and recovering from its effects. I refer to this because, if reports were true, a most disgraceful condition of affairs prevailed at Squantum when the city's employes were at work there. Loafing and drinking were indulged in, parties left their labor, visited Boston, procured fresh supplies of intoxicants and returned to make drunk those who had remained behind. There were various kinds of disturbances and one of the men was so intoxicated that he was seized by his maudlin companions and placed in the tool-box and covered with coats in order to get him out of the sight of the Commissioner who was on the road approaching the scene. If this was true, and I do not doubt it, what kind of a foreman was there guarding (?) the city's interests?

A poem which was sent to me commemorating this hilarious occasion contained the following verses:

"It was after election the racket begun,
A friend of big Denno went after the rum,
Down to the corner, though it is far away,
With tax-payer's money to squander that way.

Will. Eaton came down the very next day
To talk with big Denno along the highway;
The tip it was given, I very well know,
It was into the tool-box his chum had to go.

When Denno came in he looked all around,
Half dead in the tool-box his chum was there found;
He hugged and embraced him and put on his coat
And tightened the buttons up close to his throat.

When tax-payers will hear this,
And voters likewise,
They will rise up in vengeance
And swear by the skies.
To the coming election they will flock, you know,
Then it's into some tool-box the rummies will go."

I am well aware that the men are not plenty who are capable of discharging the duties of the office of Commissioner of Public Works, the most important position in our municipality, but one thing is certain that whoever he may be, it should be emphatically stated and clearly understood that he is not to engage in any other business. The salary of $2000 is ample to secure a first-class man, one who will be found early and late attending to his work. "R" remarks that "very few engineers are politicians and are backward in soliciting office." This may be so, but the rabble of the political wire-pullers soon teach them the art, especially if there is a $2000 salary in the contest.

HENRY H. FAXON.

QUINCY, January 14, 1896.

K. & L. of H. Installation.

Woodbine lodge, No. 277, K. & L. of H., held its regular meeting in Brasee hall, Wollaston, Tuesday evening. The principal business of the evening was the installing of the officers for the ensuing term, by D. D. G. P. L. C. Tibbetts and suite of South Boston, in the following order:

P. P.,—George W. Brown.
P.,—George W. Bennett.
V. P.,—Ellen A. Reed.
C.,—Edith E. Neal.
Sec.,—W. P. Chase.
F. S.,—W. A. Battison.
Treas.,—W. B. Gould.
Guide,—Fannie G. Lord.
Guardian,—J. F. Neal.
Sentinel,—J. C. Bates.

The grand officers, and a delegation from Maple lodge were present. After the ceremonies a fine collation was served,—and a social time enjoyed. All returned home feeling more than pleased with the evening's entertainment.

New Officers.

The Quincy Paving and Edgestone Co. have elected these officers:

Clerk,—Clarence Hall of Portland.
Assistant Clerk and Treasurer,—Fred L. Badger.
Directors,—John Q. A. Field, George H. Hitchcock, E. F. Carr, John Cashman, P. T. Fallon, J. H. Elcock, W. R. Fagan, M. P. Wright, Fred L. Badger.

The new $15,090 building for the Westford Academy will be of red brick and granite.

Metropolitan Hearing.

Mr. William B. Rice, one of the Metropolitan District Commissioners, appeared on Tuesday at the informal hearing at the State House on the Metropolitan county report. In response to an invitation by Chairman Sprague he made a statement of the work of the commission and the considerations that had led it to make the report now before the Legislature. "The Commissioners do not feel it a part of their duty at this time," he said, "to press their report either on the people or the Legislature. The Commissioners, after full examinations and investigations, have made a report that is unanimous. We feel that many people have come to erroneous conclusions in regard to the recommendations we have made. Our report is not radical in its recommendations, as many think, nor do we ask that anything therein recommended be adopted before the people have a chance to pass upon it. In forming our conclusions and formulating our report we consulted the greatest benefit of the whole district."

During the hearing Mr. Forbes of Milton of the committee asked Chairman William B. Rice if he could assure the people of these outlaying municipalities that this was not a step toward a closer union, a greater Boston. Mr. Rice replied that he could. "It is not an entering wedge," he said, "but it will on the contrary blunt any other entering wedge." He thought the adoption of this plan would be the end of a greater Boston.

There was objection to placing the Metropolitan water system under county control, and Mr. Rice did not favor taking it from the Water Board. Did not think new county would suffer if it looked after its parks, etc.

Another hearing will be given next Tuesday at 10 A. M.

Bicycle Company Organized.

A second meeting of those interested in incorporating the Quincy Cycle Co. was held Jan. 10th, at the rooms of the Quincy & Boston street railway. Rupert F. Claflin presided and W. L. Ripley acted as secretary. By-laws were adopted, after which it was voted to organize, which was done, the following officers being elected:

President,—Eben W. Sheppard.
Clerk,—W. L. Ripley.
Treasurer,—John O. Hall.
Directors,—Rupert F. Claflin, Clarence Burgin, John Swithin, W. L. Ripley, Eben W. Sheppard.

It was announced that all but $8,500 of the capital stock had been subscribed.

The Late Adam O. Brown.

Mr. Adam O. Brown of Neponset, formerly a well-known and respected citizen of Wollaston, died at the City Hospital, Boston, of accidental poisoning Wednesday, January 8. The deceased was very prominently indentified with the local order of the Carpenter's union for a number of years and was very much interested in the labor question. He often represented the local union in the Mass. District Council and was appointed to a number of prominent positions in the interest of his fellow workmen. After the local union had dissolved a year ago, he became a member of Union number, 33, Boston, and was chosen as a delegate to represent the same at the convention of the Mass. District Council at the time of his death.

He was also a member of the Knights of Honor lodge, 926, of Wollaston, and was very much esteemed in the lodge.

He served in the U. S. navy on board the ship "Alaska," from 1872 to 1877 and at the time of his honorable discharge he was a commissioned officer. He contracted the small pox in Bordeaux, France, and was transfered to the Brooklyn Marine hospital where his time expired and he received his honorable discharge at the conclusion of his sickness.

He wrote many interesting stories of actual sea-life for the N. Y. World and other papers and magazines and also a number of articles on socialism and labor questions of all kind under the name of "Workingman."

He was buried at Mt. Wollaston, on Friday of last week. His age was forty-six years and he leaves a widow and one chi[ld].

Odd Fellows' Installation.

The new officers of Manet encampment, I. O. O. F., were installed at the last meeting, as follows:

C. P.,—W. H. Cobb.
S. W.,—Hiram W. Campbell.
H. P.,—Aubrey R. Keith.
J. W.,—Alex. Shirley.
S.,—Frank W. Folsom.
T.,—Edward B. Souther.
O. S.,—N. B. Furnald.
I. S.,—James W. Arbuckle.
1st W.,— T. Walter Good.
2d W.,—Arthur W. Woodward.
3d W.,—Reuben Townsend.
4th W.,—George W. Hawes.
F. G. of T.,—Charles A. Gragg.
S. G. of T.,—F. B. Gould.
Trustee for three years,—N. B. Furnald.

—Yaning's drug store at Holbrook was entered by burglars Tuesday night and about $300 of goods carried off.

Shawmut Spring Water.
How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.
THE SHAWMUT SPRING WATER possesses all these requirements, and when used in liberal quantities it is a most important factor in building up and restoring to healthy action the digestive organs and conducive to the health of all, more especially to children and persons of delicate constitutions. The array of testimony by doctors and others in its favor is overwhelming and shows that Shawmut Spring Water stands among the best.

Poetry.

A Sleigh Ride.

Misty moonlight, sleighbells' tinkle,
  Endless wastes of ice and snow,
Gray hills, like an old man's wrinkle,
  Keen airs hissing as they blow.

In the sleigh a man and maiden,
  Faces rosy, eyes alight,
Lips with whispered secrets laden,
  Deep and sacred as the night.

Cold—how cold! Steed, prythee hasten,
  Wake the storming silver bells,
Up the hillside, down the basin,
  In the frosty wooded dells!

Nay, the road's too short! Go slowly;
  Warmly clad are lover-kind.
Wrapped in one another wholly,
  What reck they of frost and wind?

SUSAN ANN'S METHOD.

When Susan Ann Bilton married Joram Nellums she thought that she was doing big things, for Joram was very forehanded and there wasn't a thriftier farmer in all Squan Neck neighborhood than he was. Of course, people said that Joram Nellums was so close that a dollar couldn't be dragged out of his pocket with a team of cattle; but Susan Ann said that was because they hadn't so much as he, and didn't know how to accumulate.

As far as Susan Ann was concerned, she was an old maid who took in sewing and made enough by it to dress herself well and live in the only hotel in the town of Squan Neck. It wasn't much of a hotel, as hotels go these days, but it sheltered Miss Bilton very comfortably, and being an independent woman who liked to have her own way coming and going, she found it eminently satisfactory. It cost her possibly as much as two dollars a month more to live there than if she had gone to Mrs. Wiggin's boarding house, but Susan Ann was not close when it came to her own comfort and convenience. It was a great lift to her, no doubt, when she married Joram Nellums, for now she was to be mistress of her own house and the finest farm in the country.

Many a younger woman than she would have been glad to have become Mrs. Nellums, and it cannot be denied that on the first Sunday that the new Mrs. Nellums walked down the aisle of the church she carried her head a few notches higher than the meek and lowly doctrines taught in the edifice every Sunday really required of her. That was the woman in her, however, and it may be excused under the circumstances. It was a great thing to be Mrs. Joram Nellums, and Susan Ann Bilton was not the only woman in Squan Neck who thought so, although Susan Ann was the only woman who knew what it was from actual experience.

The happy couple went away on a bridal tour to be gone two weeks, and it was a sore disappointment to Susan Ann when Joram cut it just half in two, giving as an excuse that the business of the farm had very unexpectedly called him back. Like an obedient wife she accepted his explanations and his promises that they would go to the city as soon as the crops were laid by, and they would stay there as long as she cared to stay.

For a month after their return Susan Ann laid great store by her exalted position in Squan Neck society, but somehow there was an ever present lack of opportunity to use it to excess. Joram was busy, or Joram was tired, or Joram had something else that prevented, or forty dozen other obstacles with Joram back of them interfered with her plans. Thus a year ran on, and by that time Susan Ann was doing kitchen work and housework and there was some indication that she would be doing the washing next, with a fair prospect that tailoring for Joram and one or two of the farm hands would be added to her other duties. Occasionally Joram had something to say about economy, but he never accused her of extravagance.

"You ain't very savin', Susan Ann," he said to her one day, "but I'm willin' to agree that you ain't a great spender."

About this time the fact began to dawn upon her gradually that there was a difference in the manner of Mrs. Nellum's every-day life and that of Miss Susan Ann Bilton. She would wonder sometimes if making dresses and getting paid for them, with the privilege of spending her earnings as she pleased, was not in some particulars almost as satisfying as doing two women's work for Joram Nellums without pay.

At the end of two years she discovered that the wedding clothes that she had provided herself with had come to the ragged edge, and a new dress at least and bonnet were absolutely necessary. So when Joram sat down to breakfast one morning in a good humor, for the breakfast was a good one, done entirely by herself, she told him that she wanted something to wear, and gave him a little memorandum of what was needed.

"Jeeroosby, Susan Ann," he exclaimed, "I can't stand this. I've always said you wasn't much on savin', but this is upsettin' everything. Why, what you've got down here will cost as much as thirty dollars."

"What if it does, Joram?" she replied amiably, "haven't I worked for it? You haven't bought me anything since we got married."

"And I ain't bought myself anything, have I?" he asked, after the manner of the kind of man he was.

When breakfast was over Susan Ann was not much nearer the desired goal than before, and she was in a bad humor besides, with an addition in the shape of a disappointment in Joram she had been trying for a long time to stave off.

At the end of a week he gave her ten dollars and told her that he could not spare another cent.

"You must remember, Susan Ann," he said, "that I ain't a millionaire. And even if I was, I wouldn't encourage extravagance in a woman. It's born in 'em anyway, and if they git half a chance with money they never know when to stop letting it go."

Three months after this lecture from Joram, she got another when the necessities of the case drove her to him to get a pair of shoes.

Then Susan Ann sat down to think over the situation, and it is safe to say that she did some very tall thinking. Some women might have wept, but Susan Ann was no weeper. If she had tears to shed, she did not intend to shed them in a cause of this kind. Something harder than tears was the remedy and Susan Ann was not long in getting at it.

That night at supper Joram didn't like the coffee. It was more like beans, he said, but Susan Ann hadn't much to say, and Joram thought she was sullen because he had talked judiciously to her on the subject of extravagance.

The bad coffee continued a week and then Joram noticed that the meat was not as good nor was the bread, as it had once been. He complained, but Susan Ann hadn't much to say.

On the following Sunday when they started out to church, Joram thought Susan Ann was a sight to behold, but he didn't say anything for fear she might come back at him about the dress and shoes.

It was the first time since they had been married that Joram had not felt a pride in the appearance of Mrs. Nellums and it made him think just a little. On the way home he spoke of it and suggested that as he had made a little something on wheat the week before, maybe he could let her have that money for a new dress.

"Indeed, no, Joram," she replied, "I don't want it. I only thought I did. I can get along just as well with what I have at present and we can save that. Every little counts, you know, Joram, and we are too poor to go to needless expense."

He insisted mildly that she should take the money, but it was not difficult for her to convince him that it was extravagant, and he said no more about it.

The dark bread and the weak coffee and the bad meat continued and there were added other things less attractive to the palate than formerly, and one day when he wanted to know why she did not use the meat in the smoke house that he knew was as good as any that had ever been cured, and he prided himself on curing meat, she surprised him by putting quite a sum of money down by his plate and telling him she thought it was more economical to eat less expensive meat. Joram began to talk, but she was so pleasant and practical in her arguments that he hadn't the heart to argue and gave up to her.

He also put the money in his pocket.

One day when he went into town on his wagon some boys made rude remarks about the clothes he wore, and when he told Susan Ann about it and said maybe he had ought to get something better, she flew all to pieces and gave the naughty boys such a raking over that Joram was sorry he had said anything about it, and went on wearing the same old clothes.

A dozen or more times during that winter Joram sat shivering before a miserable fire because Susan Ann insisted that fuel was too expensive, and that they must save until they had plenty to indulge in luxuries.

Day by day the table became poorer and poorer; the good china was put away and the old cracked kind brought out; the little silver things that had been given them for wedding presents were locked up, and Susan Ann was cutting down expenses in a way that nobody would have expected of her.

Several nights Joram almost froze for lack of cover, but Susan Ann was cheerful and told him that newspapers were warmer than blankets if he would only make up his mind to think so.

He kicked, however, on this and was only pacified when she gave him $20 that she had received for the fruit she had put up and didn't care to use. He thought it was extra stock that she had, but later when he wanted some and she told him she had sold it all, and there wasn't anything for desert now but dried apples. Joram became rather demonstrative and it was all her good temper could do to keep him from boiling over.

All this time Joram was doing some thinking as well as Susan Ann, and between shivering at night and half starving during the day, he was getting in a condition to go to a lunatic asylum.

One day the final crash arrived. When Joram came in from work the big easy chair he had paid $25 for in a freak of extravagance just before he was married was gone and with it all the carpets.

"What does this mean, Susan Ann?" he asked, trying to appear cool. "Are you house-cleaning?"

"Why, Joram," laughed Susan Ann, "how you talk. You know this ain't house-cleaning time."

"Well, where's the chair and carpets, then?"

"Here they are, Joram," and she gave him $100. "Besides the money I got a cheaper chair and cheap carpets in their place, and they'll be here in the morning. Now go on and wash your face and hands; supper's ready."

Joram obeyed and went to supper; and it was the meanest supper he ever sat down to. That evening he shivered before the fire of slack and rubbish and that night he had too little cover, but he could hear the money jingling in his pockets.

At breakfast he appeared looking as blue as an ague patient and shaking like two.

"Susan Ann," he said, "I'm going to town this morning. You haven't sold the horse and buggy yet, have you?"

"No, Joram," she answered, "but there's a man coming to look at it today. We don't need it, and it costs a mint of money to keep a carriage anyhow."

"What time's the man coming, Susan Ann?" he asked submissively.

"He said he'd be here at 10 o'clock."

Joram Nellums gulped as if something were choking him, and he looked at Susan Ann.

"Susan Ann," he said slowly, "here's a check for $1,000 and you can tell the man that's coming to go to the devil. I'm going to take you to town in the buggy and we are going to buy everything we want and have a nice time, and when we come back, I'm going to make you the cashier of the business and you can do as you darn please. Economy's all right, Susan Ann, but there's a limit to it that somehow I never see before until you showed it to me."

Then it was that Susan Ann broke down and cried, because she thought the occasion appropriate, and the tears that fell from her face fell upon the face of the check in her hand, but Joram actually laughed and kicked up his heels like a boy.—Detroit Free Press.

Telling Age by the Coiffure.

The common objection among womankind to letting their age be known is not shared by the ladies of Japan, who actually display their cycle of years in the arrangement of their hair. Girls from 9 to 15 wear their hair interlaced with red crepe in a semi-circle around the head, the fore head being left free with a curl at each side. From the age of 15 to 30 the hair is dressed very high on the forehead and gathered up at the back in the shape of a butterfly or fan, with twistings of silver cord, and perhaps a decoration of colored balls. Beyond the milestone of 30 a woman twists her hair around a shell pin placed horizontally at the back of the head. Quite differently, again, a widow arranges her coiffure, and the initiated tell at a glance whether she desires to marry again or not.—Boston Commonwealth.

To Be Boss.

When Mr. Simpkin's three tons of stove coal were delivered the driver of the cart dumped the whole load upon the sidewalk and drove away.

Simpkins knew nothing of this state of affairs until the policeman gave his bell a vigorous pull, and then ordered him, in terms more forcible than polite, to clear the obstruction from his sidewalk in double-quick time. But as Simpkins had a lame arm, and was therefore unequal to the task, he looked about for a helper.

Just then Pat Clancy, a genuine, self-consequential son of Erin, came shuffling down the street. Simpkins hailed him, and, after considerable fine bargaining, it was agreed that Pat should put in the coal for fifty cents. Then Pat went home for his shovel.

When he returned he was not alone. A burly Italian came with the Irishman, and as they reached the pile of coal Pat yelled to his companion. "Hurry oop, noo! In wid it!"

Simpkins watched operations from his parlor window. The Italian worked with all his might, while Pat only looked on and gave frequent orders. Finally when the work was finished Pat was seen to pay the other sixty cents, and then he rang Simpkin's door bell.

"Look here, Pat," said Simpkins, "you don't expect me to pay you more than fifty cents for that job."

"No, sorr!"

"But you paid that other fellow sixty cents. Don't you see there's no money for you in such an arrangement?"

"Sure, Oi know that, sorr. But, begorra, its wurrth tin cents to be boss."

Throwing Shoes at Weddings.

The custom of throwing shoes at a wedding as it exists with us is very old in England and Scotland. The usual saying is that it is thrown for luck, and that is the idea in this country; but originally it meant a renunciation of authority over the bride by the parents. It was formerly a custom among the German for the bride, when she was conducted to her bed chamber, to take off her shoe and throw it among her guests. Whoever caught it, in the struggle to obtain it, received it as an omen that he or she would soon be happily married. Train, in his History of the Isle of Man, says: "On the bridegroom leaving his house, it was customary to throw an old shoe after him, and in like manner after the bride on leaving her home to proceed to church in order to insure good luck to each respectively; and if by strategem either of the bride's shoes could be taken off by any inspector on her way from church, it had to be ransomed by the bridegroom."

In Kent, England, after a couple have started on their tour, the single ladies are prawn up in one row and the bachelors in another. An old shoe is then thrown as far as possible and the ladies run for it, the successful one being the first female who it is supposed will be married. She then throws it at the gentlemen, and the one who is hit by it is deemed to be the first male who will enter wedlock. Generally it is considered the older the shoe the better.

The Famous Thief at Yale.

The despatches give the account of a case at Union college, where some of the students have been caught in stealing from their fellows, and the despatch intimated that, as thieves, the young scamps could not be surpassed. But we believe they could have been stolen from and in every way discounted by a fellow at Yale thirty years ago.

He was caught with goods in his possession that had been stolen from his classmates, and the plunder was all taken to the police headquarters. Of course, none of the students would testify or complain against him, and the scamp was told that he could go if he took himself out of the university and the city.

He went to the police, stated that in the raid that had been made upon his room everything that belonged to him had been seized, and that he supposed he had a right to claim his own property. To that the police agreed, and the fellow then helped himself to everything in the lot of stolen stuff that he particularly wanted to keep, the police helped him pack it up, and he then left for parts unknown. When the victims called at "headquarters" in the morning, the police learned how they had been fooled.—Buffalo Commercial.

Photography for Drunkenness.

We commend this story to the attention of our temperance contemporaries, "merely adding," as Mr. Richard Swiveller would say, that "if it isn't true, it's very good": "A woman in Salemville, Pa., determined that her husband should know how he looked when he was drunk. She knew how he looked well enough, and needed not that any man should tell her. Her children also knew by sad experience, but the man himself had a very imperfect idea of the state of his case. So once, when he came home and fell into a maudlin slumber, she sent for a photographer to come forthwith, and on his arrival she set before him his work. She ordered the photographer to photograph her husband as he sat in the chair. The photographer did his work and did it well; and when the photograph was finished and laid beside the husband's place at breakfast it was a revelation, and the sobered gentleman experienced a decidedly new sensation. There was no need of explanation; the thing explained itself. There was no chance for contradiction; the sun tells no lies. There was no room for argument; a reform has taken place."—Scientific American.

Value of Ice Cream.

Those persons, and their number is legion, whose fondness for this summer dessert is such that they are designated ice cream fiends, will be glad to know that the value of ice cream as a remedy for certain intestinal troubles is being advanced. Some, indeed most, physicians permit it through typhoid fever, always insisting it shall be of the purest make. To the story recently going the rounds in print of the entire cure of a case of ulcer of the stomach by the sole and persistent use of ice cream may be added that of a woman. She suffered from a serious affection of the eyes, directly traceable to digestive disturbances, and her physician finally put her upon ice cream as a sole diet. For eleven months she literally lived upon ice cream, with the result to effect a complete and apparently permanent cure. The theory is is that the cream furnished ample nourishment, while the diseased intestines, chilled by the low temperature of the food are prevented from getting up inflammation during the process of digestion carried on by the healthy parts.

Bad Handwriting.

One of the most important things for boys or girls to learn to do is to write plainly, so that those who have to read what they write are left in no doubt as to their meaning. Several amusing stories of the embarrassment which has followed not learning to write legibly are told. One of these is of a Massachusetts clergyman who nearly got himself into a peck of trouble because of the bad quality of his handwriting. It was more than a century ago that this clergyman had occasion to address a letter to the General Court of Massachusetts upon some subject of great interest at the time. When the letter was received the Court ordered the clerk to read it, and were filled with wrath at what appeared to be these words in opening.

"I address you not as magistrats, but as Indian devils."

"What!" they cried. "Read that over again. How does he address us?"

"Not as magistrates, but as Indian devils," repeated the clerk. "That's what he says."

The letter was passed around, and the judges were by no means pleased to see that the clerk had apparently made no mistake. Very angry at what they believed to be an insult, the judges passed a vote of censure upon the clergyman, and wrote to him demanding an apology. He came before them in person, when it turned out that where the judges had read Indian devils he had written individuals—which, of course, made an apology unnecessary; but the reverend gentleman was admonished to improve his handwriting if he wished to keep out of trouble.—Harper's Young People.

Perspiration.

"What, in winter!" Probably half the population knows not what it is to perspire sensibly except during the heats of summer.

Yet if proper care is taken, it would be a good thing for everybody to sweat a little every day.

The two great results of exercise are perspiration and stimulus to the digestive organs. Most people have a good word for the latter; but the intimate connection between perspiration and good health is not generally understood.

An observant man who has once got into the habit of taking exercise until he sweats, soon finds what a wonderful effect it has on health and happiness, on body and mind. Sweating is a way of getting rid of the waste material of the body, which must be got rid of somehow. It is a "chuckerout," so to speak, of undesirable lodgers.

The coadjutors of the skin in its beneficial work are the lungs, the liver, and the kidneys. The more work the skin does the less remains for these other organs to do; the more vigorously and easily will they perform their own tasks of getting rid of waste, be it carbon, watery vapor, or waste food. Hence sweating relieves the intestines. But more than that it clears the head. How many gloomy humors and brooding cares have been dispelled by its genial working? How it cleanses a man's view of life and leaves the body in a tranquil, purified condition, ready for mental labor, or nourishment, or calm sleep.—Healthy Home.

Why We Like Dogs.

And why do people keep such lots of dogs themselves and go in such numbers to see other people's dogs? queries Popular Science News, and then proceeds to answer. Because the dog is at once the sincerest flatterer and the most successful cheerer that the human race ever had. A good dog always gives us the feeling that we men and women are a sort of gods. No other animal does anything of the kind. The cat treats us as an inferior, and the horse will treat us as a dear friend, not a divinity. The dog, moreover, imparts something of his peculiar gayety to us in a way that is irresistible. He mingles his suggestion of gayety with his flattery; for he not only leaves his dinner untasted to walk with us, but the mere fact that we are apparently giving ourselves the pleasure of a walk raises him into such a delirium of delight that the sight of it puts all our dumps and blues to such reproach that we shake them off in very shame. And when we don't walk, but sit moodily at home, the dog curls up lovingly at our feet, and looks up now and then into our eyes, and "glides into our darker musings with a mild and healing sympathy." Yes; there is solid reason for the fondness of men for dogs, and it will never come to an end until either men or dogs become very different beings from what they are now.

Is Light Bad for the Eyes?

A paper was recently read before one of the American medical associations in which the ground was taken that too much light is exceedingly bad for the eyes of school children. This is a rather peculiar theory in view of the fact that the Creator of the universe made eyes and then made light so that people could attend to their various duties and pleasures. The trouble is not too much light, but the wrong kind of light. Out of door life is conducive to perfect vision. The sun of midday rarely affects the normal eye unpleasantly. It is the reflected light, the filtered light, so to speak, the bound in and hampered and diluted light that does the mischief. The light that strikes sharply on one point and reflects to another is the sort of light that does the harm. It is recommended that light be regulated and modulated to suit the eyes of the children, but it is a question whether this will have the desired effect. What is necessary is that light be steady and plenty of it without glaring or reflecting.—New York Ledger.

He Agreed With Her.

A witty and popular New York clergyman, whom everybody knows by reputation, had a laughable and at the same time unpleasant experience recently.

One Sunday not long ago he was going up the steps of his Fifth avenue church when he was asked by an old lady (who of course, did not know him,) to help her up the steps. With his usual courtly grace he complied with her request. On reaching the top steps she halted breathlessly and asked him who was going to preach that day.

"Oh, Lord!" exclaimed the old lady, "help me down again. I'd rather listen to a man sharpening a saw. Please help me down again. I reckon I won't go in."

The clergyman smiled and gently assisted her down the stairs again, remarking as he reached the sidewalk: I wouldn't go in either if I wasn't paid for it."—New York Journal.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

Every member was present at the second meeting of the City Council Monday evening.

There was quite a gathering of spectators present to hear the appointments but they came not, and but little business was transacted by the Council.

A petition was received from Anna C. Wright for State aid, which was referred to the Committee on State Aid.

Councilman Sidelinger presented an order requesting the Mayor to have an edition of at least 100 copies of his inaugural address printed for distribution and the use of the Council. Adopted.

Upon motion of Councilman Anderson it was voted to proceed to the election of a Manager of the Woodward Fund; nominations to be made from the floor.

The only nomination made was Clarence Burgin, and he was unanimously elected.

Councilman Rice offered the following resolution which was adopted:

WHEREAS,—The trustees of the City Hospital of Quincy have petitioned the Legislature so to amend its charter as to allow it to receive from the city of Quincy annually a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars.

Be it Resolved,—That the City Council of Quincy, recognizing the benefit of the work done by the Hospital for the whole community, does hereby, approve the petition of the trustees of the City Hospital and authorize the Mayor and the Committee on Legislative Matters of the Council to recommend the passage of the bill before the Committee of the Legislature.

Over Attention to Children.

Few mothers realize the risk of over-caution and over-attention to their children, after old enough to play and romp about. A child is happier with a few and simple playthings than with a multitude of complicated toys. There is no such good fun or good training as making one's self useful in doing little things like work, and it is cruelty to deprive the child of this pleasure and stimulus. Let the brain and the body be trained through hand, foot and eye. Give the boys a carpenter's bench; encourage the girls to do housework. Where possible, let both boy and girl have a little garden-patch, if only a few feet square, and the care of a few plants. A woman in her home, a man in his garden; this seems to be a fundamental type from which we cannot entirely depart, without risk to body and mind. Cheerfulness, sincerity, industry, perseverance and unselfishness may be acquired by practice and constant repetition, as much as the art of correct speaking or playing of the piano, and are far more necessary to health.—Dr. H. L. Taylor.

Fruit as Medicine.

Why for ages have people eaten apple sauce with their roast goose and sucking pig? Simply because the acids and pectones in the fruit assist in digesting the fats so abundant in this kind of food. For the same reason at the end of a heavy dinner we eat our cooked fruits, and when we want their digestive action even more developed we take them after dinner in their natural uncooked state as dessert. In the past ages instinct has taught men to do this; to-day science tells them why they did it, and this same science tells us that fruit should be eaten as an aid to digestion of other foods much more than it is now. Cultivated fruits, such as apples, pears, cherries, strawberries, grapes, etc., contain on analysis very similiar proportions of the same ingredients, which are about one per cent. of malic and other acids, and one per cent. of flesh-forming albuminoids, with over eighty per cent. of water.

Digestion depends upon the action o pepsin in the stomach upon the food, which is greatly aided by the acids of the stomach. Fats are digested by these acids and the bile from the liver. Now, the acids and pectones in fruit peculiarily assist the acids of the stomach. Only lately even royalty has been taking lemon juice in tea instead of sugar, and lemon juice has been prescribed largely by physicians to help weak digestion, simply because these acids exist very abundantly in the lemon.—From the Popular Science Monthly.

Whiskers and Character.

"I don't know a greater shock," said the young woman thoughtfully, when the front door had closed after Maino and we were together on the veranda—"hardly that of seeing what illness has done to the face—than coming upon a man whom we have always known with a mustache or beard and finding him with none. Sides of his character we never suspected, weaknesses of will that have always been hidden, are suddenly laid bare. I sometimes think," she added, laughing, "that a full long beard to many a man is like a vine to a crumbling wall—a provision of nature to cover that which otherwise could not have been relied upon. Without his beard, how many a patriarch would be revealed the despot, how many a philanthropist the selfish schemer! For, after all, it is the lower part of the face that reveals the man you meet every day. You get his intellect, the qualities he exercises consciously, his power to think and plan, all in the upper part of the face. This may be fine, almost Greek in line and proportion, but the lower part of the face is the text to a man's nature; his refinement, his origin even, are all written there.—Harper's Bazar.

Hot Water Before Breakfast.

A prominent physician has declared that hot water is a woman's best friend. It will cure dyspepsia if taken an hour before eating, and will ward off chill when she comes in from the cold. It will stop a cold if taken early in the stage. It will relieve nervous headache and give instant relief to tired and inflamed eyes. It is most efficacious for sprains and bruises and will frequently stop the flow of blood from a wound. It is a sovereign remedy for sleeplessness, and in conclusion the doctor asserts "wrinkles flee from it and blackheads vanish before its constant use."

QUINCY, SATURDAY, JAN. 25, 1896.

Hospital Annual.

The annual meeting of the Quincy City Hospital corporation was held Monday evening at the residence of Dr. J. A. Gordon, President William B. Rice presiding.

The first business after the records of the previous meeting had been read was the election of officers, which resulted as follows:

Clerk,—Warren W. Adams.

Trustees,—William B. Rice, John H. Gilbert, M. D.; John A. Gordon, M. D.; Timothy Reed, Rupert F. Claflin, Charles H. Porter, James F. Burke, Roger H. Wilde, Henry M. Faxon, Albert Keating, W. G. Corthell and A. A. Lincoln.

The report of the trustees and treasurer was then read.

These reports showed the number of patients admitted during the year to have been 197, an increase of about 4 per cent. over the previous year. Of this number 179 had been discharged, 7 had died, and 11 remained.

During the year Dr. George B. Rice of he medical staff had resigned, and Dr Homer Clark had been elected to the staff. The head nurse, Miss Grace Beattie, had also resigned to go to Brockton. The following nurses had been graduated: Mrs. Mary Wood, Miss Martha F. Anderson, Miss Lucy N. G. Hernan, and Miss Margaret F. Ross.

The trustees intended to petition the Legislature to amend the city charter, so that the city may contribute a larger sum than heretofore.

The total receipts from all sources were $14,937.85; less debt of $5,700, leaving the net receipts $9,237.85, and the expenditures $12,809.36. Deficit of $3,571.51.

The statement of the endowment fund was as follows:

Invested in real estate,	$15,564 65
Mortgage on real estate,	5,000.00
Mortgage on real estate,	3,000.00
Loan to general account,	4,200.00
Uninvested,	7,090 85
Total,	$34,855 50

Upon motion of Dr. Gordon, it was voted to insert the following amendment in the call for the next meeting. "That the annual meeting shall be held on the Wednesday following the second Monday in January."

One new member was admitted to the corporation.

The trustees also reported that the net receipts of the festival held in September were $4,133.54.

Knights of Columbus.

Tuesday evening was the regular meeting night of the Quincy Council, Knights of Columbus, and a large number of brothers were present. The routine business of the evening was being dispatched in good order but when the council came to the consideration of new business, Bro. James F. Burke was recognized. Bro. Burke gave a review of the council from its institution in 1894 to the present time, citing the many troubles that beset and threatened to thwart the efforts of the small band of early knights to place the body upon a solid basis. The success of the council was largely due to the sympathetic cooperation of the first Grand Knight John W. McAnarney. The council owed him a debt, and they could conceive of no better form than that which they had chosen. The cardinal principles of the order were but a part of the nature of the past grand knight, and he hoped and felt assured that the helpfulness displayed in an official capacity would not now be lessened because he had been relegated to the ranks. Bro. Burke then presented Bro. McAnarney with a Past Grand Knight's charm.

Bro. McAnarney in responding thanked all for their valuable gift. He said that he regarded membership, much more than office, in their society, as one of the real pleasures, and to find that his services were appreciated to the extent shown by their testimonial, was most gratifying. Words would fail any one on an occasion like this, and if his words were inadequate, they must look to the past knowledge of him to gather the full import of his simple thanks. Bro. McAnarney then told the council that in pursuance of an intention formed upon his retirement from office, he would invite all the members to meet him at the Greenleaf parlors, Wednesday evening, Jan. 29.

The charm presented Mr. McAnarney is of solid gold, with raised symbols of the order, inlaid with four sparkling diamonds. The head and mask are of platinum. It is a little larger than regulation size and was made by Williams, the Boston jeweler. The charm was passed to the inspection of the members, and it was declared by all to be a handsome sample of the jeweler's handiwork.

On the completion of the presentation cigars were lighted and a social hour enjoyed by the council, Bros. Shay and White giving vocal and instrumental numbers.

Verdict for $1,925.

A verdict was reached Monday in the Superior court at Dedham in the case of Stephen Nagle vs. the city of Quincy, the jury giving Mr. Nagle $1,925. The plaintiff was thrown from his pung in February, 1894, on Washington street by a ridge of snow and received injuries from which he has never recovered. In the court while on the stand he had a spell which may have influenced the jury some. J. W. McAnarney and Peter Dailey appeared for Mr. Nagle, and P. R. Blackmur as city solicitor.

It is said Mr. Nagle offered to settle for $1,000, but that the best offer of the city was but $300.

We are informed however that no such offer was made to the city solicitor. In fact, under the circumstances, it would not have been advisable to compromise for any sum whatever. According to the testimony the accident to Mr. Nagle was caused by the high ridge of snow thrown up by the street railway company in clearing its track and the city authorities now propose to recover the amount of the judgment from the company in a suit at law. If the case had been compromised it is clear that the claim against the company would have to be given up.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wing and Mrs. Emeline R. Wentworth of Quincy were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jasper B. Wentworth of Brookford street, Dorchester, on Wednesday evening. Among the other invited guests present were Mr. and Mrs. George W. Bean of Dorchester, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Mears and Miss Chrisabelle Mears of Chelsea, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Wilson and Mr. and Mrs. John J. McNutt of South Boston. The evening was spent in the usual pleasant manner and a most sumptuous repast was served late in the evening. Mr. William H. Mears of Chelsea acted as toast-master and also related to the ladies an amusing incident entitled "My experience with chicken food." The company broke up at a late hour after enjoying a very pleasant evening.

There has been considerable speculation as to whether the City Council would be asked to appropriate $5,000 to the City Hospital as the amendment to the charter granted. So far as can be learned the trustees do not intend to ask for $5,000 this year but perhaps $3,000, and the only idea in having the amount it could receive from the city changed was that if at any future date $5,000 was appropriated the Hospital could receive it.

Who wins in the race? Is it a sick man? Is it a man who is weak? Is it a man whose blood is impure? An athlete trains for every race. The best athletes train all the time. They are always in perfect condition. It is pretty safe to say that the best man will always win. The man who is strong and in the best condition will surely distance his competitors.

In the race for success, the best man will win if he takes care of himself. He cannot win if he neglects his physical condition. It doesn't make any difference how smart he is. If his body isn't strong, he will never finish the race. He must look first for a clear, healthy, strong body, because the body makes and supports the brain. If the heart pumps impure blood into the brain, you cannot expect the man to be clear-headed, you cannot expect him to accomplish much. If a man's blood is pure and rich, there can not be much the matter with him. If it isn't pure and rich, he may have almost any disease under the sun, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure it. It doesn't make any difference what form the disease takes, or by what name it is called. Nearly all diseases spring from impure blood. If you make the blood pure, you remove the cause and cure the disease. That's common sense—and medical sense—and scientific sense.

You might learn a thousand valuable lessons about preserving your health by reading Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. It is a grand book and the present edition is absolutely free to all who send 21 one-cent stamps to cover cost of mailing only. It contains 1008 pages and over 300 engravings. 680,000 cloth-bound copies have been sold at $1.50 each. This free edition is in strong manilla paper covers, otherwise it is just the same. WEST QUINCY.

The carpenters have commenced work on the new Swedish Baptist church which is to be erected on Granite street near Brewer's corner.

The Ladies' Social circle of the West Quincy Methodist church held a social and entertainment Thursday evening. The ladies were somewhat disappointed by the absence of some of those who were to take part in the entertainment, yet that which was given was very enjoyable, and consisted of singing by Miss Addie W. Miller and Mr. Wendall Luce, and readings by Miss Lillian Barnes. Cocoa and sandwiches were served at the conclusion of the entertainment.

A sleigh party of thirty young people from Cambridge visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Watters Copeland street Friday evening, the 17th. After spending about three hours in singing and a general social time, they departed for their home, all appearing delighted with their visit.

A number of West Quincy's young people attended the recital at the New England conservatory of Music, Wednesday evening when Mr. Allan Dougherty, who spent last summer at West Quincy, took part.

Miss Bertie Turner West Quincy's talented elocutionist left Wednesday for Pennsylvania where she will give a number of readings and then go to Washington.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of St. Mary's C. T. A. and M. R. society are to hold a leap year party early in February.

The Ward Four Republican committee has organized with Tobias H. Burke as chairman and Nathan Ames secretary.

A daughter of Mr. John McNeil of Willard street was taken with diphtheria Saturday. Anti toxine was immediately given and the child is doing nicely.

Auctioneer F. F. Crane reports a large attendance of buyers at his sale of the stock of pictures and frames of H. Litchman at Brewer's corner. Saturday night was the third evening of the sale which was kept up until midnight, but when he closed the sale for that evening the crowd was willing to remain later.

Several of West Quincy's crack checker players are participating in the checker tournament being held in Boston.

SOUTH QUINCY.

The Meadow Brook Ice Co. has filled its houses with the handsomest ice ever cut from that pond. A great amount of work was done on the pond this year to keep it free from dirt and leaves, and as a result the ice as stated above is very handsome.

An attempt was made on Sunday morning at an early hour to break into the blacksmith shop of Craig & Richards Granite Co. on Water street. It was about 1 o'clock when Mr. John Souden, who was passing along Water street, heard a noise in the direction of the blacksmith shop. He cried out "Whose there," and moved on. Sunday morning an investigation revealed the fact that an attempt had been made to pry off the staple on the door of the blacksmith shop, but that the party or or parties had evidently been frightened away by Mr. Souden's cries.

McGrath Bros. are cutting a very handsome sarcophagus monument to be erected to the memory of the late John O. Holden.

The sickness of Mr. John B. Foster has turned into an attack of the mumps.

Some of the pupils of the Adams school went on a sleigh ride Wednesday afternoon after school.

John Carson, a stone cutter employed at John Thompson & Son sheds, had his foot quite badly crushed by a large stone falling upon it. The ambulance was called and he was removed to the City Hospital.

Mr. Edward Powers and family of Franklin place were present at the marriage of his sister Miss Annie Powers to Michael A. McCarthy at St. Patrick's church Roxbury on Sunday evening. Miss Mary G. Powers of Franklin place was bridesmaid. After the marriage they held a reception at 36 Vine street Somerville.

It is announced that the Westland case is to go on Saturday morning.

—George L. Pierce of 630 Centre street, Boston is chairman of a committee of the Royal Arcanum councils of Boston who are raising a fund to be called the Hospita Free Bed Fund for the purpose of assisting brothers of the order, who need hospital treatment. It is deserving of the support of every member of the order.

Accident at Harrison Square.

The 6.11 A. M. train inward from Quincy was derailed at Harrison Square Tuesday just after leaving the station. The tender left the track and the two following cars were thrown on to the Shawmut Branch tracks. The accident caused serious delay in all the inward trains for a couple of hours at least, as it happened at a time when many who are employed in Boston were on their way to work. Very fortunately nobody was injured in the least as the train was moving slowly. The passengers were considerably shaken up, and had the train been going express by the Harrison Square station, undoubtedly there would have been a serious accident. Those on the train after seeing what had happened immediately took the electric cars into Boston, knowing that it would be some time before trains could run. The frog on the Shawmut Branch track was probably the cause of the derailment.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

NORFOLK, ss. QUINCY, Dec. 13, 1895.

BY Virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment in favor of John H. Dinegan of Quincy, in said County, against Thomas Farrell of said Quincy, I this day seized and took all the right, title and interest the within named Thomas Farrell had on the 13th day of September, A. D., 1895, at 9 o'clock P. M., this being the time when the same was attached on mesne process in and to the following described parcel of real estate, viz.:

Being lot No. 25 on a plan of land belonging to J. B. Fletcher and A. J. Tetro, to be found recorded with Norfolk Plan and bounded northeasterly on land of Huntington 101 9-100 feet; southeasterly on land now or late of said Fletcher and Tetro being lot No. 23 on said plan, 41 9-10 feet; southwesterly on land now or late of said Fletcher and Tetro, being lot No. 24 on said plan, 100 feet; northwesterly on a certain private way that may be called Farrell street, 64 15-100 feet containing five thousand, four hundred fifty-two square feet more or less. Being the same premises conveyed to me by said Fletcher and Tetro, by deed dated Nov. 30, A. D., 1885, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, libro 573, folio 475; and on SATURDAY, the 15th day of February, A. D., 1896, at two o'clock in the afternoon, at my residence, No. 53 Franklin street, Quincy, in said County, I shall offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder the aforesaid right, title and interest of said Thomas Farrell to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

Full Moon, Jan. 30, 3.55 A. M.

BOSTON WHICH has received the best end of the Metropolitan water order seems to be putting up a big game of bluff. It now proposes to test the constitutionality of the act.

WHEW! The firm of Balch & Rackermann received $46,296 for legal services to the Metropolitan Park Commissioners during the past two years. The three Metropolitan Water Commissioners are receiving $5,000 a year, although one of number receives $7,500 additional as corporation counsel of Boston. Is it any wonder there are so many lawyers?

THE INFLUENTIAL men are not all on one side on the biennial election question, as might be inferred at the hearings this week. The following gentlemen have filed a protest against a change with the committee on Constitutional Amendments: U. S. Senator Hoar, Hon. W. E. Barrett, Hon. G. F. Williams, Hon. A. W. Beard, Hon. J. D. Long, Hon. R. S. Rantoul, Hon. L. D. Apsley, Hon. W. S. Knox, Hon. J. W. Cocoran, H. C. Thatcher, Hon. E. B. Hayes, Hon. J. H. Walker, Dr. H. B. Blackwell, Hon. Henry Winn, G. E. McNeil, B. O. Cook, jr., C. B. Rice.

THE PATRIOT is surprised that its labors with others against the new Metropolitan county scheme should have resulted in such signal success. The report has been made to the Legislature referring the whole matter to the next General Court. Now we hope the scheme to relieve the rich of taxation, and also the biennial resolve will meet a similar fate. Legislators should not be deceived by the name "Anti-Double Taxation League." People with money invested in mortgages now pay no taxes and it is an extension of this unjust law. If one is exempted another has to pay the tax.

FOR MANY years it is our highways which have had to take the balance of the appropriations. That is, the amount to be raised having been determined and all other departments having received their apportionment, the highways have taken what was left. It has been a small amount even for repairs of our 100 miles of streets. Brockton with 101 miles of streets appropriated $42,000 last year, and from an investigation among the cities, is almost convinced that the amount is too small. If $42,000 is too small for Brockton, what is $18,000 for Quincy. These figures obtained by the Brockton committee may be of interest:

	Population.	Appropriation.
Springfield	51,534	99,482
Newport, R. I.	19,457	99,000
Haverhill	30,185	80,300
Taunton	27,093	67,000
Salem	34,437	49,402
Brockton	33,625	42,000
Waltham	20,877	25,000
Newburyport	14,980	20,864
Marlboro	14,980	17,025

A VISITOR to a suburban city writes to the local paper urging the necessity of better sidewalks. There is good sense in the communication, and in the interests of a needed reform in Quincy, abstracts are given:

"If this beautiful city is to rank among the progressive, wide-awake places that draw business and business people; that talks about new-comers "moving in," and hopes for a constantly enlarging "directory," then good sidewalks are imperative. They are an important factor of city growth. They are one of the things that a live board of trade will urge.

"Inducements presented to outside parties are schools, churches, railroad facilities, street cars, electric lights, etc. We have all these. But to these should be added good roads and sidewalks. In view of the narrow streets which the firm of Greed & Shortsight have fastened upon us, it becomes still more imperative that the sidewalks should be in usable condition.

"What good are our churches and schools if pedestrians cannot get to them?

"City fathers have a duty to their constituents, even if the latter do not insist upon it. And that is to do what is best for the people. And what is best for the people means the whole people, and is not a best which is limited by material things. There's a moral upgrowth from clean and wholesome surroundings. There's a true city pride born of well ordered streets and fine buildings, which encourages progress and local ambition.

"Good sidewalks, gentlemen of the city government, are a part of the city's capital wisely invested, and as such concern the pockets of every taxpayer. And then, too, they are a component in the moral strength of the population. No man can be a good citizen at the moment when he has just lost an overshoe in the mud. Human nature is frail at its best. And when a pedestrian is forced to practice acrobatics to reach his own door in safety, the feat is not infrequently accompanied by verbal pyrotechnics."

Attractive for Yachtsmen.

If the Executive Committee of the Quincy Yacht Club carry out the changes which have for some time past been talked over by the members it will make the house one of the most attractive resorts for yachtsmen on the coast. In brief it is proposed to have a small L built out from the northerly side of the club house on the second story, beneath the large piazza, for the ladies' waiting room. From the same piazza it is proposed to have a flight of stairs lead down to the lower piazza directly opposite to the walk to the floats. This arrangement will give the entire lower floor of the house to the exclusive use of its members. In connection with this alteration it is proposed to take the present waiting room and turn it into a smoking and reading room for the members by building a large brick fire-place and furnishing the room in appropriate style.

The plan has been carefully looked into by Commodore Pettengill, Secretary Whiting and Mr. Walter B. Wilson, and will probably be brought formally before the committee early in the season for its consideration.

Lincoln Wins Two Strings.

The weather is too inclement for the members of the Wollaston Trap club to do good shooting. However D. B. Lincoln and F. N. Bates braved the elements on Saturday and had a quiet shoot. The score:

No New County.

The above was the striking headline which appeared in a Boston paper Tuesday over the hearing on the proposition to create a Metropolitan county. The "Greater Boston" committee had nothing further to offer and there were none who cared to speak in favor of the scheme. The remonstrants, however, were out in force, and Medford, Lynn, Cambridge, Wakefield, Somerville, Milton, Waltham and Norfolk county were heard.

The Herald reports Judge Grover as follows:

Judge Grover of Canton appeared in the interests of Norfolk county. The people of Norfolk county, he believed, would suffer severely from a metropolitan county. One hundred and twenty-one millions of taxable property would be taken away from Norfolk and the 60,000,000 remaining would be compelled to bear the onerous burden of building new county buildings upon a new site. Furthermore the citizens would be inconvenienced because of the crowded condition of the courts in the new county. The judge informed the committee that it now took twice as long to settle a case in Suffolk as in Norfolk county. This disadvantage, he thought, would be increased under the new arrangement.

Mr. W. W. Fifield, of Medford, in his arguments said:

This idea originated in Boston; it has been fed, nourished and clothed by the city of Boston. The city of Boston is behind the commission, and has been from the beginning. We know the financial condition of Boston. Her net indebtedness is $44,000,000 or $45,000,000, exclusive of her water debt. The subway will cost $10,000,000; a tunnel or bridge to East Boston, which must be built in the near future, will cost $5,000,000; the new bridge to Charlestown will cost from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. I would like to know, inquired Mr. Fifield, what interest Medford has in the expensive police and fire departments of Boston? What interest has she in the East Boston ferries?

Young Men's Christian Asso.

Mr. J. J. Davey, General Secretary of the Rockland Association, will speak at the men's meeting on Sunday, Jan. 26, at 3 30; subject, "Decisions." Mr. George A. Sidelinger will conduct the song service.

The boys' meeting Saturday morning at 9 45 will be addressed by the Secretary, and it is hoped that every boy will attend.

The student's class in clay modelling held its first session Wednesday evening. The pupils are very enthusiastic over this new line of work and in the near future we shall no doubt see some very fine work. As the number that have applied for admission to this class has been so large it has been found necessary to establish another class for the boys from 12 to 14 years of age, which will meet every Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Next Thursday evening at 7.45 the Debating Society will discuss the Metropolitan County question.

Thursday evening the seating and standing capacity of the gymnasium gallery was tested to its utmost. It was ladies' night. They were entertained from 8 to 9 o'clock with drill and apparatus work, followed by a very fine game of basket ball, which was very much enjoyed. The class played two ten-minute halves with three minutes rest between. The first half the score was 0 to 0, and the second half 2 to 0. This game is played every Monday evening, and is not only popular with the fellows, but also with all those who have witnessed it. The gallery is open on that evening.

Have you read about the grand mark down sale? You can find out all about it on our bulletin board.

Company K Notes.

From statistics which accompanied the report of Col. George F. Hall, inspector general of rifle practice, M. V. M., the following fact are gleaned:

Co. K, 5th Regiment had an enrolment Oct. 31 of 60, and 46 are "efficients." There are no "D. Ms.," and but 3 "S. Ss." In the first class are 7; second class, 18; third class, 18. Two scores, 14. Points, 147.

An inspection of Co. K will be made Feb. 24, and Col. Bancroft has deputized Maj. A. M. Mossman as inspecting officer, and ordered Lieut. H. P. Ballard of his staff to be present also. The inspection will be in dress uniform.

Household Economies.

There will be a free lecture on the management of the home,—household economics, as the study of home matters is now called—in the chapel of the Unitarian church, next Monday afternoon at quarter past three. This is a rather new movement, for women to learn about all that is connected with the safety and health of the home and family. In past times the men of the households attended to drains, cellars, etc., as well as they could. Children have died from a lack of proper understanding of this matter. Economy in the home in buying food, what best to use on our tables, how to prepare it. These are only a few subjects taken up by this society, which will be represented in this meeting by Mrs. B. Tobey. All will be welcome at this lecture. Times are changing for the better, if fathers, husbands and sons work hard outside getting money to take care of us; women should learn how best to use the money they bring them.

A Bright Idea.

The series of educational chats on modern dental methods, which our enterprising friends the Boston Dental Association begin this week under the head of "Tooth Talks," is a bright idea. The first few instalments which they have sent us are surely instructive and interesting; they can hardly fail to be appreciatively read by all inquiring minds. The long experience of this firm in its 16 different offices should enable it to give many valuable practical points, and its willingness to do so is commendable.

Daughters of the Revolution.

Having issued invitations to the ladies who have made application for membership to the Daughters of the Revolution, to meet the Regents of the Massachusetts Chapters at my home on Monday, Jan. 27, from three to five, I wish also to invite any ladies to attend, who are interested and eligible to membership, and who would like to join a Quincy Chapter which is soon to be formed. The object and purposes of the Society will be discussed, and the meeting promises to be very interesting.

Letter From the State House.

[Special to the QUINCY PATRIOT.]

BOSTON, JAN. 22, 1896.

The following has been distributed in the boxes of the members of the house; "We believe that the present system of annual elections of state officers and of members of the legislature is better for Massachusetts than any system of less frequent elections. Under this practice of frequent expressions of the popular will, of close accountability of political servants to the people, and of annual discussion of public affairs, which has been in force ever since the adoption of the constitution, our commonwealth has maintained a position excelled by no other, and we believe that it would be a mistake to adopt an ammendment for biennial state elections. Alanson W. Beard, John D. Long, J. H. Walker, George Fred Williams, Robert S. Rantoul, Elihu B. Hayes, H. C. Thacher, John W. Corcoran, George F. Hoar, L. D. Apsley, W. S. Knox, George E. McNeill, W. E. Barrett, Edwin C. Miller, Henry S. Gere, B. E. Cook, jr., Charles B. Rice, Benjamin F. Arrington, John L. Parker, Henry B. Blackwell, Henry Winn."

The advocates for biennials are also making a strong push for the passage of the amendment and they have on their side President Eliot of Harvard College, Samuel B. Capen, H. L. Higginson, F. L. Higginson, Edward H. Haskell, S. Stillman Blanchard and many others well known in the community. Most of them are Republicans, but some are Democrats.

The legislature has made one of the slowest starts on record. There does not seem to be any reason more than usual why there should be such delay, but it has occurred and the first three weeks have seen fewer hearings than usual. In recent years, particularly, there has been more done by this time in January. A conspicuous exception is the finance committee which has reported nearly 100 appropriation bills and has well discharged its function of keeping the wheels of government going.

TAXATION.

Evidence accumulates that the taxation struggle of this year will be as hard as it has been in any of the previous years, and perhaps harder. The organization in favor of exemption laws is in first class working shape. It has a strong president, ex-Senator William B. Durant of Cambridge. It has a strong team of directors. President Durant is to act as legislative counsel, and they have other help to keep them informed of the progress of events at the State House. On the other hand, the opposition does not yet put in an appearance. It is said that ex-Senator James W. Stockwell of Sutton will be the organizer, the same as he has been in years past, and there is no doubt that a strong fight will be made by them. It is fortunate for the farmers who want exemption for their homesteads but are not able to secure it and therefore are opposed to the present plan for exemption of municipal bonds and of foreign stock, that Representative J. H. Mellen of Worcester is in the House once more. He has always been a sharp fighter for the rights of the farmers, though he differs from most of them in politics, and they have a very friendly feeling for him. He stands up for the poor men against the men who, he believes, want to escape from their rightful share of taxation. Of course this is not the ground upon which a question of taxation should be settled, but sympathy goes a long ways in this fight. The House members of the taxation committee are the same as the members of the house committee on ways and means, as far as they go, but there are only eight representatives of the taxation committee, while there are eleven on the committee on ways and means on the part of the House. Last year the anti-double taxation men lost their chance to debate, in the main, by putting in four bills and then having them come from the committee as one matter. When the first was defeated on the motion to substitute it for the report of the committee, there was no opportunity to offer either of the others as a substitute. The legislature is already being carefully cultivated and there will doubtless be a good deal of pressure put upon the members from their constituents who, in their turn, will be manipulated by wires pulled by their friends in Boston who are conducting the fight. No matter which side of the case one believes to be right, it is interesting to see the way these contests are managed.

THE STATE HOUSE.

Another of the warm conflicts of the session promises to be over the destruction of the Bulfinch state house. There was introduced into the house Wednesday afternoon a bill to empower the present state house construction commission to demolish the Bulfinch building and to erect in its place one at a cost of not over $1,500,000, preserving as much as possible the contour of the present building, but extending the width and height. This is the same as a bill which was defeated last year and it will be opposed this year because it continues the power of the present commission. One of the proposed plans is that of Architect Albert W. Cobb which proposes to widen the front 30 feet on each side and to raise the dome 30 feet and to put a colonnade around it, thereby making the elevation harmonize with other plans of Bulfinch and giving it a far better effect in connection with the extension. But there is still another plan for opening a general competition for treatment of the entire problem by advertising for plans, either including the construction of a wholly new part, or by the preservation of the old as far as possible. Sentiment on one side and progress on the other, and the needs of business will be the claims urged upon the legislature.

GYPSY MOTH.

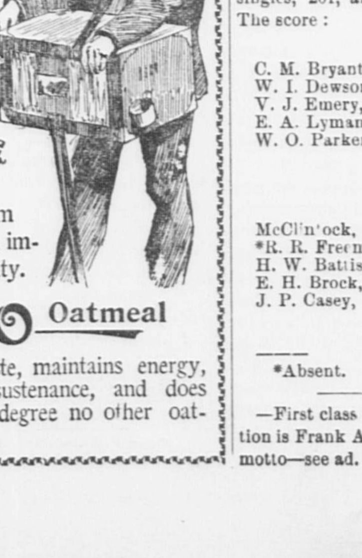

A decided effort is going to be made to have the United States Government help the state in the fight against the Gypsy Moth. An appropriation of $150,000 is probably to be asked for by the state from Congress. Senator Burns of Middlesex has been before the committee on Federal Relations, telling about the concern the whole country has in the extermination of this pest, for it would doubtless spread all over the country within 10 years, if it were not for the efforts of Massachusetts, and the damage he would do within that time, said the senator, would be represented by a sum equal to the National debt. If the Government had taken the potato bug when its attention was first called to it, it would probably not have passed beyond the Mississippi river. By neglecting its critical opportunity, the Government permitted this scourge to devastate the country to the loss of an immense amount of property, far more than would have been necessary to destroy it. Now Massachusetts is protecting the country from great pecuniary loss and it is believed to be more than right that the National Government should pay a part of the expense. Massachusetts has spent many hundred thousand dollars for this purpose and much more money is needed. The state has tried the experiment once of asking the General Government for an appropriation, but was refused. But the case is stronger every year. If Massachusetts should cease to fight the moth vigorously, the whole Union would soon wish that they had stepped in and helped to kill the last of the pest.

STREET RAILWAYS

The expansion of the street railway system of the state is going on rapidly. The committee gave a hearing Tuesday upon three petitions for enlargement of the electric-car field. One of them was for a new corporation to run cars between Amherst and Sunderland. Another was to run from Templeton Center to Gardner Depot, and the third was for an extension of the Pittsfield line into the town of Dalton. It is evident that the use of the trolley has stimulated intercommunication between the different towns and there is a great future in Massachusetts for electric railways.

Stone Fell Upon Him.

William Patterson, an employe of McKenzie & Patterson, met with quite a serious accident Friday, January 17, on Quarry street. He had just got through work and jumped onto a sled that was passing to ride home. He had not gone a great distance when the sled slewed and threw him off. It also threw off a heavy block of granite, which fell on him and pinned him to the ground. The block was too large for the driver of the team to remove and he had to go back to the quarry to obtain help, Patterson meanwhile being unable to move.

The young man was completely covered by the block of granite, which is said to have weighed nearly a ton, nothing but his head being visible, and that he was not more seriously injured is a wonder. E. J. Sandberg was the first to reach the scene, and he bent a crow-bar nearly double in his efforts to move the stone, but was unable to move it until more help arrived, and then it took the combined efforts of three strong men to move it.

After the stone had been removed it was found that he was severely injured, and a messenger was dispatched for a physician, who found that three of the young man's ribs had been fractured, and he was removed to the City Hospital and is recovering.

A Hearty Hand Shake.

That the Congregational church is liberal was shown Sunday by the marked approval with which the congregation received the sermon of Rev. E. N. Hardy. The hearty hand shake which the pastor said had taken the place of the apostolic kiss was freely exchanged at the close of the service between pastor and people, and the people with each other. But the stranger is always welcome at this church.

The text was taken from 1 Peter, 5:14—Greet ye one-another with the kiss of charity. He stated that the oft repeated injunction of the apostles was the recognition of the needs and benefits of social life in the church. Concerning the social aspect of the church two widely different views are apparent. The one was seen in an article entitled "a study of Church Entertainment in the current number of the Forum, in which sweeping and indiscriminating charges are made against church social life. The other was not a whit less spiritual without endorsing every phase of social life, yet place great emphasis upon these features of church work, and they show by their result that spirituality is deepened and extended by the judicious use of these means."

The real problem is the changing of a wrong sentiment, a popular fallacy, that there is a necessary enmity between the social and the spiritual, while the gospel teaches that in the Christ passed life they cannot be separated. Christianity is large enough to include every phase of life. The teaching and practice of the Master gives ample authority for the larger one of the social function of the church.

The ground for this is in the social constitution of man; in the social character of worship; in the nature of social intercourse, presenting as it does the major part of our temptation and affording the best opportunities for Christian service.

In practical application he urged the church to utilize and spiritualize the social life and do all for the glory of the Master.

High School Debate.

Mr. Coe took the chair Wednesday at the meeting of the Quincy High School Debating Society. The secretary, Miss Rothwell, presented her report. On motion of Mr. Walsh the report was accepted. The debate of last week on the Venezuela question was continued.

Miss Willett, '96 maintained that the United States ought not to tolerate any interference in American affairs.

Mr. Warshaw for the negative maintained that the President was wrong on the Venezuelan question. Prominent statesmen were criticized. The instability of the South American states was mentioned. A United States protectorate over South America was firmly opposed.

The critic, Miss McPherson, offered a short report.

The election of officers followed, these nominations were made, and those with an asterisk were elected:

President,—Mr. Saunders, '97.*

Vice President,—Mr. Nichols, '97.*

Treasurer,—Miss Shuman, '97.* Miss Hayden, '97.

The secretary was instructed to cast one ballot for Mr. Sanders and for Mr. Nichols.

The committee on the revision of the constitution reported by the chairman, Miss Pitts, '96.

The board of decision brought in a verdict for the negative.

The new debate was begun: "Resolved, That Cooperation is a Benefit to the Working Men."

Affirmative,—Miss Barnes, Miss Barry.

Negative,—Miss Chapman.

Further debate was postponed for lack of time.

The Best Score Yet.

Teams C and B of the Wollaston Bowling Club bowled on the Duck's Nest alleys Tuesday evening. Team C put up the highest team score ever put on those alleys and of course buried B 2,356 to 2,274. But two of B's best men were unable to play, so that possibly the game was a little one sided. Parker was high bowler on singles, 201, and Dewson on totals, 500. The score:

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Plenty of Children.

Not long since a gentleman from out of town came to Quincy looking for a house in which to move his family. He was one of those particular sort of men who desire quietness above all things, and he cast his eyes about for a neighborhood where there were not many children; and finally selected a house upon a well known street in Ward Three. The length of that particular part of the street in which he chose his abode being considerably less than a quarter of a mile. He had not been settled in his new home long before it seemed to him that there was an over abundance of juveniles in his neighborhood and one evening with pencil and paper in hand he commenced to figure it out.

One neighbor had two, another six, and another as many as eight, and in fact he found that every family on the street was blessed with children anywhere from one to eight who were under 21 years of age, the sum total being 115. Over 100 were under 15 years., and he immediately came to the conclusion that in seeking to avoid children he had located in the most thickly populated street in the city.

This was some months ago and as children multiply fast in this neighborhood it is possible that should he take the census now he might find nearer 150. And still some people ask why do we need so many new school buildings?

Is it "overwork" that has filled this country with nervous dyspeptics?—that takes the flesh off their bones, the vitality from their blood, and makes them feeble, emaciated and inefficient? No. It is bad cooking, overeating of indigestible stuff, and other health-destroying habits.

The remedy is an artificially digested food such as the Shaker Digestive Cordial. Instead of irritating the already inflamed stomach the Cordial gives it a chance to rest by nourishing the system itself and digesting other food taken with it. So flesh and strength return. Is not the idea rational? The Cordial is palatable and relieves immediately. No money risked to decide on its value. A 10 cent trial bottle does that.

Laxol is the best medicine for children. Doctors recommend it in place of Castor Oil.

☞ Those troubled by indigestion say that the Shawmut Spring Water has been a great benefit to them. tf

Anecdotes.

"I understand that Great Britain imports about $5,000,000 worth of apples every year."

"I don't believe it. If that were true, her population would double up so rapidly they'd be crowded into the sea."

Charlie-boy—"Any news regarding the robbers?"

O'Brien—"Naw; but they've found the tray of diamonds."

Charlie-boy—"Where did they find it?"

O'Brien—"They found it in a pack of cards, sonny."—Judge.

Morley (to druggist)—"I've got a fearful headache. What can you give me for it?"

Druggist (a humorist)—"I won't give you anything for it. I don't want it. I've got more than I can use already."

Fingle—There goes a woman with a history.

Fangle—That one who just left your office? How do you know?

Western Man—"Y-e-s; that's a fine building, a mighty fine one, I must say! but just you wait. It won't be long before the glorious West will have a finer one! Yessirree; we'll outshine anything you folks can do in the effete East, just mark my words!"

Eastern Man—"How soon will you start it?"

Western Man—"Just as soon as we can borrow the money from you."—Puck.

SATURDAY, JAN. 25, 1896.

The Long, Long Ago.

The short winter day is drawing swift to a close
With the sigh of a storm in the air,
And the oak tree makes moan as it feels the chill breath
On its limbs lying naked and bare.
Poor old tree! from my window I hear its complaint—
See its limbs as they toss to and fro—
While memory goes back to the days always fair—
The days of the long, long ago.

Like the ghosts of dead storms in their silent approach,
Now the snow flakes go skurrying by,
And night, the black mourner, comes after a-pace,
While she spreads her dark pall in the sky.
There's no gleam up above whence the sunlight hath fled,
There is no gift in that pale hanging bow,
But the sun always shone in the days that are sped,
In the days of the long, long ago.

Neath the oak tree we lingered that fair summer time,
'Till the sun had gone down in the West,
And the soft evening breeze 'mid the leaves overhead
Lulled the birds and the crickets to rest.
'Till the stars lit the sky and afar in the East
Hung suspended the moon's silver bow,
But the stars and the moonbeams will never more gleam
With the light of the long, long ago.

Oh, my God! from the desolate winter around
Lift the veil of this shadowy woe!
Bring me back but one moment the light that is dead,
With my love of the long, long ago.

—Adelaide Preston.

Notes and Comments.

—The most valuable land in Boston is at the corner of Washington and Winter streets. For $140 there you can only buy a piece twelve inches square, but it is 4,000 miles deep.

—No unusual number of marriages has been recorded since leap year came in. The truth is, the girls don't need to have the right to propose. They know how to make the young men do it.

—The microbe of measles is alleged to have been discovered. He is described as "a somewhat slender bacililus." We have no doubt he is a measly little thing.

—Officers Bailey, Pratt, Fitzgerald, Peare, Allen and Caldwell raided the saloon of Norman McDonald at Lovell's corner, Weymouth, Saturday night and seized a gallon of whiskey.

—The people of Holbrook have petitioned Third Vice President J. R. Kendrick asking whether or not there was a way that the N. Y., N. H. & H. railroad might be moved near Holbrook and thereby give greater railroad conveniences. The request has been referred to the engineers of the road for examination. If the change is made it will be a great convenience as Holbrook is a mile from the station and many find it easier to go to South Braintree, to take the train.

—One of the leading newspapers in France evidently knows a thing or two for it said in a recent issue that the United States is commercially a great and powerful rival for all Europe combined.

—In the death of E. B. Wright, better known as "Webb" the Washington correspondent of the Boston Journal, the community at large as well as the Journal will miss the bright and accurate accounts of Washington doings which flowed so freely from his pen.

—A portrait exhibition will be held in Copley hall, Boston, for three weeks, from March 2 to March 21 inclusive, in aid of the Associated Charities and the North End Union. The portraits exhibited will be for the most part those of men and children, but will include interesting portraits of women, not shown last year. The exhibition is under the patronage of 100 ladies well known in social and artistic circles, who will spare no pains to make the affair a success. A unique feature of the prospectus is an illuminated poster, a prize having been offered for the best design. These will be competed for by students of the Boston Art Students Association, The Art Museum, and the Cowles Art School, and the design will be submitted to a jury composed of artists. The portraits loaned as last year from all sources will represent the work of many American and European artists both ancient and modern and would be well worth careful study, if only for their historical interest. Apart from the value of the exhibition itself, it should be borne in mind that the proceeds will be devoted to two of the most worthy charities which could possibly make appeal to the public benevolence.

—Never wait for "something to turn up." Turn it up yourself. Good luck does not grow on bushes. Try it and see for yourself.

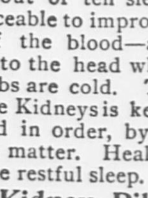

—The idea of pensions for retired members of the life-saving service and their families is one of the best in the pension way yet broached. These men do admirable service and display skill, courage and devotion to duty that entitles them to something more than mere wages, to be withheld as soon as they cease their labors.

—In Brooklyn on Sunday 150 clergymen spoke in their various churches against the open side doors of the saloons on the Sabbath, and demanded that Brooklyn be kept dry. In some churches the remarks of the clergymen were received with loud applause. And still some people say there is no civic pride in American cities!

—The town of Athol is agitating the question of free delivery and one post office. A small majority favor the change, while Gardner, one of the large villages bitterly opposes the change believing it will not work for the best interests of the whole town and be a detriment to business.

—A good reason why women should find ready employment in places of trust is the fact that of the 967 women employed in the national and state banks of the United States not one has proved unfaithful to their trust.

Loss of Sleep

Nine times out of ten sleeplessness is traceable to improper circulation of the blood—and rush of blood to the head while the lower limbs are cold. The function of the Kidneys is keeping the blood in order, by removing waste matter. Healthy Kidneys insure restful sleep.

Buker's Kidney Pills

regulate and restore the Kidneys to their normal condition thus regulating the blood and promoting healthy, restful sleep. They remove the effect by removing the cause. They are compounded from vegetable drugs and contain no narcotics or mineral poisons. Druggists sell them for 50 cents. A book about blood circulation sent, free.

Buker Pill Co., Bangor, Me.

—Quincy people are much interested in the ice crop this year for it is rumored that the European war scare will result in raising the price of things. Ice will probably go up, because the heat of this winter's discussion prevented the ponds and lakes from freezing.

—Fire Commissioner Russell, of Boston, makes a request of the citizens of Boston which might be followed to advantage in Quincy. He says that, inasmuch as the efficiency of the fire department depends in a great measure on a prompt reception of the first alarm, it would be a wise plan for people to get acquainted with the location and working of the fire-alarm box nearest their property.

—There are eleven hundred and fifty-four women in New York who claim they do not know how old they are. One is sure, at any rate, that they are not particularly young. The census enumerator seemed to find the same kind of cases in Quincy when he went his rounds last year.

—An exchange says that scientists have proven that intense cold puts out gas. This accounts for the dim lights in Wollaston parlors these cold Sunday nights.

—It is not the business of the Christian church to furnish entertainments, nor is it the business of Boards of Trade to plan harbor excursions, nor that of the author's guilds to make continental journeys, nor that of printers to picnic at Highland Grove, nor that of any organization to do anything other than its laws or by-laws designate. Yet if an excursion can be so operated as to help a business, political, or religious organization, if an entertainment can be made, in any harmless way, auxiliary to the ends of the organization, so far so good. So far let the entertainment go, but no farther.—Christian Leader.

—Brother Waterman of Athol always has a kind word to say of the PATRIOT. In a recent issue he says: "The Quincy PATRIOT commenced its sixtieth volume with the new year. It has become a fixed star in the journalistic heavens, and shines brighter and brighter every week."

—When a gunpowder lighter comes alongside a ship all fires are put out. Matches are carefully stowed away, the cook suspends operations, pipes are extinguished and the heavy chests are carried on board by hand.

—The emblems of royalty of the queen of Madagascar consists of four scarlet umbrellas which are held over her majesty when she sits in her palanquin of state—this latter, a present, oddily enough, from the late emperor of the French.

—The Sahara is crossed by mountains sufficiently high to be at times snow-covered, while in other parts it is much below sea level; and the Australian plains are interrupted in various parts by low hill ranges.

—A curious custom still prevails at the coal pits on Hogmanay, in Scotland. The first man to come up the pit after his work is over is received with a shovelful of hot ashes, which, being prepared for he dodges as best he can, while the last man gets a bucketful of cold water thrown at him.

—A tourist who recently visited the Yellowstone park says that there is a hole in the park which is supposed to be a dry geyser and is believed to be bottomless. Three thousand feet of line with a heavy weight attached was let down into it without meeting with an obstruction.

—The keys that are used the most for musical composition are C major, G major, containing one sharp, and F major, containing one flat, the reasons being that those keys are easier to play on keyed instruments, such as piano or organ, and because keys with few sharps or flats are better adapted for instruments in an orchestra.

—The Russian government has asked permission of Turkey to make measurements of the sea of Marmora, in order to determine scientifically what changes have occurred through the late earthquakes. The porte has given the desired permission, but the Russian man of war will be escorted by a Turkish vessel, and a Turkish naval officer will assist at all the scientific examinations of the coast.

—The movements of air commonly called winds are due to the heat of the sun. The warm air, being lighter, rises, and the colder air flows in to take its place. This principle is beautifully illustrated at the seashore in summer, where the daily breezes are due to the air over the heated land being displaced by a current of cooler air from the sea.

Shed and Quarry.

The shipments of granite from this city during the month of December were not quite as large as the previous month. The total amount shipped was 35,206,807 pounds, which was divided as follows: Quarry railroad, 29,575,685; South Quincy, 2,944,898; West Quincy, 2,686,224.

J. H. Bishop & Co. are to have a fine show yard near the Quincy Adams depot.

There is a general feeling among the manufacturers that business will take a boom for the better this spring.

There is lots of work in the market being figured on, and some of it must surely come to Quincy.

Malnati Bros. have erected a new derrick in their yard.

Messrs. Craig & Richards have nearly completed the McGlennen monument.

There have been no meetings as yet between the manufacturers and cutters on the changes proposed in the bill of prices by the latter, but no trouble is anticipated.

Patrick J. Barry has been engaged as contracting clerk for Craig & Richards.

Castle Square Theatre, Boston.

The Castle Square Opera Company demonstrated on Monday evening beyond the possibility of a doubt that it is the equal of any opera company in America. Verdi's masterpiece, "Il Trovatore" was the opera produced and the Castle Square Theatre was filled to overflowing with an audience that showed unbounded enthusiasm throughout the performance. It was an occasion to be proud of. Not only was the opera given in a thoroughly artistic manner, with new scenery, fresh costumes, etc., but there was a hearty spirit of earnestness that prevaded every member of the company and that is much in these times. Miss Clara Lane never appeared to better advantage. The music is the most difficult she has yet been called upon to sing, filled as it is with top notes and sustained passages that task the vocal ability of any artist.

On Tuesday evening, Jan. 28, occurs the 300th Night Festival Performance an occasion when Mr. Rose will present his company in a unique style of entertainment. Selections from the favorite operas, chosen by ballot, will be given. The voting has now been in progress some weeks and the result will be announced on Wednesday evening of the present week. The curtain will not fall until the end of the performance, there being no intermissions. Much interest and a steady demand for seats at the box office shows that the public have in mind the Gilbert and Sullivan season which is to follow "Il Trovatore." All these favorite operas will be given with accompanying Castle Square productions, and a wealth of detai in costumes and stage settings.

The Quincy Boulevard Bill.

SECTION 1. The Metropolitan Park Commission, created by chapter 407 of the Acts of the year 1893, is hereby further authorized and required to take in fee or otherwise in the name of and for the Commonwealth by purchase, gift, devise, or eminent domain, for a roadway, parkway or boulevard, all the right, title and interest of the public or of any city or town or of any corporation or individual in, to or concerning the following described strips of land: Beginning at Squantum Head in the City of Quincy; thence running southwesterly along the shore of Dorchester bay and along and including Squantum street to the vicinity of Moswetusket Hummock on Quincy bay; thence running southwesterly at every point at least two hundred (200) feet distant northerly from Atlantic street to and over the Old Colony railroad by a bridge, to Hancock street; thence to and over Neponset river to Franklin park in such direction and over such streets and lands as the Board of Park Commissioners of the City of Boston may approve; also an extension of said roadway, parkway or boulevard beginning at the first described roadway at a point at or near Moswetusket Hummock, so called; thence running in a generally southeasterly and southwesterly direction along the shore and across the property of various parties and of the National Sailors' Home to the easterly extremity of Merrymount park; thence through the park to the southwesterly extremity thereof at Furnace brook; thence running up the valley of Furnace brook across Hancock street, across the location and underneath the tracks of the Old Colony Railroad Company, and across Newport avenue, in a generally westerly direction to the Ward Four play-ground in West Quincy; thence running from the play-ground to a point near the Roman Catholic cemetery; thence running in a southwesterly direction across or along various streets and across the location of the Old Colony Railroad Company to the Blue Hills Reservation; and the said Board is hereby authorized and empowered to hold, maintain and care for the same as a roadway, parkway or boulevard, in the manner prescribed in chapter four hundred and seven of the Acts of the year eighteen hundred and ninety-three, or in chapter two hundred and eighty-eight of the Acts of the year eighteen hundred and ninety-four, or in any acts in amendment thereof or thereto enabling.

SECT. 2. The said board for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act may expend the sum of five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000), and to meet any expenditure under the authority of this act, the treasurer and receiver general shall issue a corresponding amount of scrip or certificates of indebtedness as an addition to the Metropolitan park's loan, and establish a sinking fund to be established, assessed and collected in accordance with the provisions of sections nine, ten, eleven and twelve of said chapter four hundred and seven of the acts of eighteen hundred and ninety-three.

SECT. 3. All takings under the right of eminent domain shall be made and all damages sustained by reason of any such taking shall be determined in the manner provided in chapter two hundred and eighty-eight of the acts of the year eighteen hundred and ninety-four and acts in addition or amendment thereto for takings and damages under said acts, and all the provisions of said acts, except as otherwise hereinbefore provided, shall apply to the roadway, parkway or boulevard hereinbefore described.

Section 9 of the Acts of 1893 referred to above lends the credit of the Commonwealth for the amount called for.

Section10 is for the apportionment of the cost among the cities and towns of the Metropolitan park district, as has recently been done for the Metropolitan parks and boulevards. It is provided that no assessment shall be levied for the purposes of this act in any one year upon any city or town in excess of a sum equal to one half mill on the dollar of the valuation thereof.

Section 11 provides for cost of maintainance.

Section 12 authorizes the State Treasurer to include a city's proportion with the State tax annually.

Poor Armenia.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

It is a ridiculous farce for the United States government to withhold assistance from Armenian Christians by hiding behind a misinterpretation of the doctrine, declared first by Gov. Thomas Pownall in a work entitled, "A Memorial to the Sovereigns of Europe" (1780), that "America must avoid complication with European politics" and "the entanglement of alliances," and later in a letter from Washington to Jefferson in 1788." An energetic general government must prevent the several states from involving themselves in the political disputes of the European powers."

It is obvious that an "Alliance" is a union of two or more powers to promote an object of mutual advantage. It is perfectly plain that it would not be an entangling alliance" for the United States government to save a Christian people from the murderous hate of fanaticism, devilish in its frenzied cruelty. There need be no alliance whatever with anybody. An assurance from the proper source that the United States government would neither seek to acquire territory nor to establish a permanent protectorate, but simply seek to save the lives of peaceful Christians and protect the property of American residents, would allay the suspicions of foreign nations, who, in spite of their pity, are obliged to remain passive through fear of international complications which would inevitably result. Such a movement, on the part of a nation renowned for its peaceful, self-contained policy would meet the approbation of the entire civilized world, and save us the humiliation of having the 19th century close with an epoch of murder and rapine.

Cure for Headache.

An apostle of physical culture says that an excellent and never-failing cure for nervous headache is the simple act of walking backward. Ten minutes is as long as is usually necessary to promenade. It sometimes, however, requires more than ten minutes to walk at all, if one is very "nervous." But it is not understood that it is necessary to walk a chalkline. Any kind of walking will do, provided it is backward. It is well to get in a long, narrow room, where the windows are high, and walk very slowly, placing first the ball of the foot on the floor, and then the heel. Besides curing the headache, this exercise promotes a graceful carriage. A half hour's walk backward every day will do wonders toward producing a graceful gait. Medical Record.

Telephone Story.

Pat was sent to the telephone to call up the grain dealer. When central had finally made the right connections, says Pat:

"Will yez sind up two bags of oats and a bundle of ha-ay?"

"For whom is it?"

"A bundle of ha-ay and some oats."

"But for whom is it?"

"Oi say oats and a bundle of ha-ay!"

"But for whom is it?"

"Shure it's for the hor-rse, you domned idiot!"—Boston Budget.

Quincy a Shipping Port.

The United States Investor for January 18, has a page upon the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, a part of which is of local interest and is given below:

For some time past it has been quietly reported in Boston financial circles that the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad was buying Boston & Albany stock. This week we have encountered the statement that the New York, New Haven & Hartford had offered President Bliss, of the Boston & Albany, $250 a share for his stock (and presumably enough more to carry the control of the road,) but the latter demanded $300. If matters have gone as far as this, it is safe to say that the union of the two roads is not far distant. In fact, that is the general opinion in the highest and best informed financial circles. President Bliss, of the Boston & Albany, is said to be the owner of a considerable block of New Haven stock, and it is a well-known fact that the Vanderbilts (who, with J. P. Morgan & Co., are supposed to control the New Haven) have a large voice in the management of the Albany.

Some time last fall the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company purchased about eight hundred acres of land on Dorchester bay, in Quincy, and the only conceivable object which it had in view was the construction of the most magnificent railroad terminals in the country. The property in question is known as the Squantum Farm Meadows. About five hundred acres of the purchase are meadow land and the balance flats. Altogether the company has obtained three and a half to four miles of water front. The importance of the new acquisition will perhaps be more quickly appreciated if we state that the tract is about 20 times the size of Boston common.

It goes without saying that the New York, New Haven & Hartford is not bent on acquiring the control of the entire railroad system of New England for the purpose of ruining that section. It is not buying up terminal locations on Boston harbor twenty times the size of Boston common, nor spending millions of dollars on the Boston end of its Providence and Old Colony divisions, with the intent of making the grass grow in the streets of the metropolis of New England. It must be clear that if Boston is to be reduced to a city of inferior grade, it will furnish the New Haven road less, rather than more, business than at present, and it is absurd to suppose that the New Haven people would view such an outcome with satisfaction.

On the contrary, we incline to the opinion held by many leading financiers that the New Haven's real purpose is to advance Boston to the position of a railroad centre of the first class. Its terminals on Dorchester bay may easily be made, accessible to every railroad in New England.

Told by the Thumbs.

"When I went to a nerve specialist first," said a man who was once an invalid, "he told me that one way to judge of the condition of a person's nerves was to watch his thumbs. Ever since that time I have found the greatest fascination in looking at people's thumbs. The doctor said that if they moved involuntarily outward, it was a sign that the nerves of that man or woman were not in the best condition. I find myself now sweeping the line that sits opposite me in a car, and if that doctor's test is a good one, there is a surprising number of people in this town whose nerves need looking after. There are few among the women who do not involuntarily move the thumbs outward at intervals of every few minutes, and when your attention has once been attracted to it, the process of watching their gloved hands grows very interesting. I have found the habit much less frequent among men; but take the average number of women in a street car, and it will be a surprise to you to see how many of them indulge unconsciously in this little habit. I only hope it does not mean anything as serious as it might indicate if that nerve specialist's diagnosis was a good one."

Did You Ever Think

That you cannot be well unless you have pure, rich blood? If you are weak, tired languid and all run down, it is because your blood is impoverished and lacks vitality. These troubles may be overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla because Hood's Sarsaparilla makes pure, rich, blood. It is in truth the great blood purifier.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills, constipation, billiousness, jaundice, sick headache, indigestion.

There is little doubt that an immense number of persons habitually sleep on the left side, and those who do so can never, it is said, be strictly healthy. According to an exchange, it is the most prolific cause of nightmare and also of the unpleasant taste in the mouth on arising in the morning. All food enters and leaves the stomach on the right side, and hence sleeping on the left side soon after eating involves a sort of pumping operation, which is anything but conducive to sound repose. The action of the heart is also seriously interferred with and the lungs unduly compressed. Hence it is best to cultivate the habit of always sleeping on the right side.

—Van Buren county, Michigan has paid $2800 in bounties for the killing of English sparrows during the past year or so, and yet there are just about as many sparrows as ever in that region.

Tonight If your liver is out of order, causing Biliousness, Sick Headache, Heartburn or Constipation, take a dose of Hood's Pills on retiring, and to-morrow your digestive organs will be regulated and you will be bright, active and ready for any kind of work. This has been the experience of others; it will be yours if you take Hood's Pills. 25c.

Not a Proper Business.

BY JOHN B. FINCH.

Oh, he is in trade, you say; selling liquor is a business, like selling tea and coffee. A man may be allowed to follow his business may he not? Well, so is murdering a business, only in the majority of cases the murderer does not get paid for the work he does. The rum seller does, and both do the same labor, only the murderer kills the body and the rum seller kills both soul and body, and entails disgrace upon the wives and children of his victims—disgrace and wretchedness from which they can never escape.

But the law justifies his doings, and allows him, for a consideration, to pursue his vile calling. Well, there are law makers in this country, who for a consideration, would license the infernal regions to do business; and when we think of the number of rum sellers lying around here, we are almost inclined to believe that such an institution is needed. We are told every day that liquor must be had, and will be had by those who like it, and it is no use to cry out against licenses.

But still it ought to be evident to every observer that if we lessen the number of places where it can be obtained, we lessen the chances of the drinking man to get drunk. If a laboring man has to walk forty miles to get a glass of rum, he will not be likely to go every day after his work is over to get his evening dram. But if on his way home from his shop he passes a dozen rum shops, it is very easy to step in and take a drink, and it is so much easier to do it than to pass by that he calls every night, and the rum seller's pocket book grows fat in consequence.

Household Receipts.

BAKED APPLES AND JELLY. Bake cored, tart apples, with sugar in the core of each, and one cupful of water in the pan. Fill up when cold, the hole in each with crabapple jelly. Eat with whipped cream.

CORNED-BEEF HASH. Chop one pint of cold cooked corned beef, and add to it one pint of cold boiled potatoes chopped, put them in a frying pan, mix and add a half pint of stock or water, a tablespoonful of butter, a teaspoonful of onion juice, and a quarter teaspoonful of pepper; stir carefully and continuously until thoroughly hot, no longer. Serve immediately with buttered toast.

BAKED HAM. Prepare your ham by boiling it slowly, changing the water occasionally if you think the ham is inclined to be salt. When boiled, take it off the range and leave it in the pot, closely covered, until quite cold, when remove the skin and cover with a coating of fine bread crumbs, to which has been added one tablespoonful of powdered sugar, a tiny pinch of cayenne pepper and the beaten yolks of two eggs; put in the oven and baste frequently, so that the sugar and cayenne pepper may permeate the entire ham.

CREAM RICE PUDDING. Wash two tablespoonfuls of rice and add to it a teacupful of granulated sugar, a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg, a teaspoonful of vanilla, a pinch of salt and a quart of rich milk. This should be in an earthen or an agate pudding dish. Stand it in a slow oven and stir it very often. When the rice is very soft, remove the brown crust that may have formed over the top, stir in a little cold milk and let the pudding bake till the consistency of cream; then it is done. Let it get just a little brown over the top.

CHOCOLATE CARAMELS. Dissolve over a fire one cupful of molasses and two teacupfuls of sugar. Add one-quarter of a pound of grated chocolate and a piece of butter the size of an egg. Boil for fifteen or twenty minutes. Pour into flat, buttered dishes to the depth of a quarter inch, and when cold cut into squares an inch in size.

COFFEE FRAPPE. Two quarts of water, one pound of sugar, seven ounces of coffee, and white of one egg. Put the water into a tea kettle and bring it quickly to boiling point. Put the coffee, finely ground, in a farina boiler, pour the water over it at the first boil, stir occasionally for five minutes, then strain through a fine muslin, add the sugar, stir until dissolved, and when cold, add the white of the egg unbeaten, and freeze to the consistency of wet snow.

Poetry.

Harping on One String.

Poem delivered at the second annual reunion of the Association of the Alumni of the Quincy High school by Frederic Allison Tupper, head-master of the school, Jan. 24, 1896.

Once Paganini brought his violin
Before a brilliant audience to play,
For well he knew the people's love to win,
And by his music steal their hearts away.

The expectant throng their favorite loudly cheered,
He bowed in answer as he took his place,
And as the mighty multitude he neared,
An artist's rapture lighted up his face.

One note he sounded—snapped the treacherous chord!
And all the breathless throng grew strangely still.
A second string deceived its trusting lord,
And for an instant balked the imperious will.

A murmur rose as of a coming storm
Before it bursts on some devoted land,
An angry eagerness marked every form,
Of lightning ere it strikes with thunder grand.

Broke the third string and with it broke the storm
Of disapproval on the master's ears,
And for the triumphant sound of plaudits warm
A storm of hisses thunderstruck he hears.

Yet mid that storm compelling it to cease,
Like tempest dying on the horizon's bar,
There rose a strain so sweet, so full of peace,
That every murmur faltered near and far.

As all the shouting of the boisterous sea,
Deep voiced yet hoarsely clamoring its short hour,
Dwindles to rippling whispers noiselessly
Beneath the spell of God's resistless power;

So dwindled all that disapproval's gale,
So sweet a song set all a wondering,
So strange to hear a man they thought would fail,
Bring all that music from a single string.

Never so well had Paganini played,
And when he ceased at full flood tide there came
Wave upon wave of plaudits that allayed
The pain he suffered for a moment's shame.

'Tis not for me to wake the inspiring strain,
As Paganini did in days of old.
And yet one chord there is that not in vain
I'll strike with hand untremulous and bold.

I'll touch the chord that voices all the love
We feel tonight for alma mater dear,
And every heart, all lesser thoughts above,
With sympathy will thrill its answer clear.

Love for a past made soft by Time's mild haze,
Love for the building old, the old elm tree,
Love for the memories of vanished days,
Love for the dear ones whom we no more see,

Love for the present with its triumphs grand,
Love for a larger life, a wider field,
Love for the eternal youth that can withstand
The attacks of Time to which mankind must yield.

Mid all the cares and jarring shocks of life,
Mid fires of woe that burn, though they refine,
All through the changing fortunes of earth's strife,
God keep our hearts as young and pure as thine;

As young and pure as thine, dear Quincy High
School of our hearts the Granite City's pride;
Great are thy triumphs, greater yet are nigh:
No ebb shall follow thy exultant tide.

Before our portal straight to Boston town
Runs Hancock Street with its world-honored name
Of one who to the ages handed down
The deathless legacy of glorious fame.

Upon the blue of our Columbia's sky,
Writ in the eternal fires of Freedom's stars,
That bold and King-defying name on high
Forever spurns the shame of tyrant's bars.

Across the Butler Road the mansion old
Of the colonial Quincys stands today,
A family whose virtues manifold
Might well inspire the poet's noblest lay,

Quincy, our city, takes its name from them,
Boston 's an heirloom on their family-tree,
And brighter gems still deck their diadem
With honor and unswerved integrity.

Oh mighty shade of the majestic dead,
Adams, Colossus of our Freedom's Strife,
Teach us the lessons of the days now fled,
Teach us the grandeur of thy noble life.

John Quincy Adams, Old Man Eloquent,
The world still echoes to thy manly tone,
Thy life itself was thy best monument,
Better than breathing bronze or speaking stone.

Father and son, and both the Nation's choice,
To rule our people in their times of pain,
And when another Adams hears that voice,
His ancestors' high standard he'll maintain.

Where are the portraits that upon these walls
Would lead the ingenuous youth to deeds of fame?
Where is the breathing bronze that well recalls
The virtues clustered round a noble name?

The very ground we tread is holy ground,
The air is full of voices from the past,
Majestic heroes gathering around
Warn us to hold our birthright to the last.

Mid all the rush and hurry of the time,
Mid standards false and dangerous as wrong,
Hold fast unto our heritage sublime,
The excellent, the permanent, the strong.

Leap-Year Questionings.

Why don't the girls propose, mamma?
I'm sure I cannot tell,
For everybody knows, mamma,
That I'm a howling swell,
And now leap year is here, mamma,
My every action shows;
The shy things need not fear, mamma,—
Why don't the girls purpose?

Why don't the girls propose, mamma?
You'll own that I'm a beaut.
She that turns up her noise, mamma,
At me is hard to suit.
I wear a sweet moustache, mamma,
And a perfect fitting clothes;
I'm sure I'm quite a mash, mamma,—
Why don't the girls propose?

Last evening at the ball, mamma,
I thought my time had come,
For, as we left the hall, mamma,
Sweet Mollie shocked me dumb
By giving me a kiss, mamma;
But then her ardor froze.
To me 'twas perfect bliss, mamma,—
Why don't the girls propose?

The other fellows say, mamma,
That I'm a hopeless dude.
The girls say, "Go away," mamma;
They're very, very rude.
Oh, what a lonely life, mamma,
I lead no mortal knows;
I'm sure I need a wife, mamma,—
Why don't the girls propose?

—Somerville Journal.

Miscellany.

An Evident Explanation.

"And what is the name that you say all the fellows call Miss Monica Abercrombie when they speak of her in that expansive locality, 'behind her back'?" asked James Winn, the practical man, of his friend, Cyril Creighton, the dreamer.

"The Enchanted Princess."

"Humph! Sufficiently idiotic to be probable; but why?"

"Why, for one thing, she is so beautiful and charming. For another, she lives in a palace with an orgre—her father, you know—old 'Cent per Cent' Abercrombie, the banker. For a third, she is surrounded with pride and disdain and indifference as as if through a spell, and those of the boys who vow to rescue and hold the real sweetness within are speedily discomfited and remain in hopeless captivity."

The two friends entered the house and passed through the long drawing room to where a young girl was standing. Monica Abercrombie could be gracious, too, for she knew that the obligations of hospitality increase with its power, and her greeting of Winn, the stranger, was a marked contrast to the carelessness which more than sufficed for her devotees. If there was curiosity in her glance, her eyes were too quick and well trained to betray it. She felt even before she saw that this tall, stalwart man, swarthy, impassive, composed, was different in thought and doing from the youngsters who were so monotonous in their thrumming of the one-stringed harp of adulation.

Cyril Creighton certainly was ardent; his hands, his eyes, his expression, his being glowed with the subtle fire. As for his tongue—well, if silence be golden, it had irretrievably adopted a silver standard.

"Oh! but Miss Abercrombie," he was saying, "you cannot mean it, to leave town just in the height of the season. Why, the underpinning will be knocked from everything, and we shall all be a lot of humpty-dumpties."

"Kismet," Monica replied, "the doctor has spoken; the decree, I may say the prescription, has gone forth. Papa is ordered south to Palmettaville, and of course I must go with him. A week hence we shall be on our way, so I would advise all the humpty-dumpties not to get on the wall."

"But we are there already, you know," protested the chorus of youths.

"Palmettaville?" continued Cyril. "Why, Winn, that's where you are bound for, isn't it? Didn't you say your great Southwest Railway had just about reached that point?"

"Then," began Monica, with due regard for the proper thing to say, "then we may have the pleasure—"

"Not likely," interrupted Winn. "What with getting up before daybreak and plowing through swamps and falling down precipices all day long I shall have no time for philandering."

"Ah!" There was a concerted gasp from the horrified youths, which warned Monica how trivial was the cause.

"Yours is a singular vocation, Mr. Winn," she said, "but I doubt not it's very congenial." Yet she felt annoyed because the chorus snickered.

"Well," asked Cyril, as he and Winn strolled down the avenue to the club, "Well, what you think of our Princess?"

"A nice girl enough," replied Winn, contemplatively. "Of course, a rose among cabbages does smell the sweeter. She's a mere girl, after all."

"I am one of the cabbages," retorted Cyril, warmly.

"You're a good fellow, all the same," said Winn, as they entered the club, "and I wish you luck."

When they were cosey and comfortable in the smoking room, after a mistaken masculine idea, Creighton continued: "Then, old man, if you run across the Abercrombies down South, you'll look out for them for my sake?"

"Well, since you insist. But isn't such a commission very dangerous?"

"No, I give you a full indemnity policy against any such accident. There's little of the John Alden about you, and as for the Princess, I cannot picture her as Priscilla."

"No time for philandering, indeed," murmured Monica Abercrombie that night as she looked into the glass for the last time before turning out the light. "I hope I may never see his impudent face again."

However, fate is deaf to the voice of hope; for the following week, on the Southern limited train, with her father dozing in the next chair, when Monica raised her eyes from her reading at the shadow from a tall form, she recognized this countenance so displeasing.

"On your way to the plowing and the falling?" Monica asked.

"Yes," replied Winn, "and not to the philandering."

"Thank heavens, he smokes," murmured the Princess as the shadow disappeared. But smoking, like all other good things, requires intervales of abstinence; for, after an hour, Winn reappeared. "Here is the latest illustrated magazine," he began, "if you would like to look at it. There are several silly stories—"

"No, thank you," said Monica, frigidly, "I have this quarterly."

"So I perceived; that is why I suggested the change."

At this juncture the ogre awoke, and, learning that the young man was chief engineer in the construction of the Great Southwestern, proceeded to swallow him after the fashion of such ogres, that is, to assimilate all the information he could furnish. And Winn sat down beside him quite deferential and ready to be thus consumed; provokingly ready, so it seemed, for it was provoking to hear him talk so interestingly on such a stupid subject, and to papa of all persons.

"I really think you would have found my substitute preferable," said Winn, as he was leaving, with a glance at the quarterly.

"No, indeed," replied Monica; "I have been quite absorbed by this article."

"A la Chinois? Quite an accomplishment, I'm sure," he murmured, and it was only when he was too far away for any retaliation that Monica perceived that she held her book upside down.

"A fine young fellow," commented the ogre. "We must cultivate him."

"He needs it," added the girl viciously.

All this was bad enough to one whose self had always been the sun; but the next day was worse, for, instead of arriving at Palmettaville on time, the train leaped from the spreading tracks and plunged the ponderous Pullmans into the mud. There was no great harm done, and perhaps some torpid livers received benefit; but, as a delay of twenty-four hours was inevitable, and the cars stuck at various distressing angles to the perpendicular, it was decided that the passengers should remove to a hotel supposed to be about a mile distant. And a very moderate supposition it proved before this removal was consummated, and the travellers, mire-stained and thicket-torn, arrived at the great white caravansary with rooms enough for an army and accommodations incommensurate to a rear file. Of course, every one was exhausted and cross, except Winn, who seemed to be amused.

Yes, Monica Abercrombie was certainly numbered with those who were exhausted and cross. Nor did she regain her equanimity, despite the fact that some one had obtained for her the choicest rooms, for she quickly learned that her maid had left behind that particular handbag which contained such essential trifles as curling irons and pins and powder. Horrors! What could she do? If there was one spot where a Princess should not look like a fright, it was in the wilderness, where every one else did.

The question was answered by a discreet rap and a discreeter "It is I," and Mr. Winn handed in the identical estray. All very well, and it certainly was thoughtful of him to have tramped back to the cars, as he must have done; but why, oh, why, did he smile so hatefully, and why did he say: "I knew you would be sure to want it." What business had he with any such knowledge, and what right had he to apply it to her?

Thenceforward, and until Palmettaville was at length eventually reached, the Princess so enwrapped herself with dignity that even the ogre was constrained to recommend sundry proprietary tonics in which he had mountainous faith.

Winn had disappeared within the adjacent hills and morasses, having first devoutly, but most discourteously, thanked his stars for the privilege, and the girl grew so tired of her own company that she missed him, which made her still more dissatisfied. He had been so brusque, so abrupt, so strange, that she could not keep from thinking of him, just as one flash of an unfamiliar scene may cling to the memory. After a little she came to reflecting how nice he would be if only he was entirely different, and then anger succeeded inquietude.

One afternoon Monica was riding through a wooded land, far distant from the hotel, far distant, for the winding way had been alluring, with its shaded solitude; the festooned verdure sweeping her cheeks had been gracious in its touch, and the twitter of birds and the ripple of springs had seemed voices of indefinite yet friendly consolation. A long level stretch lay before her, leading to an ascent at the base of which was a brook. It invited a dash with a clatter over the rustic bridge and a plunge half way up the hill. Monica intuitively responded with a merry chirrup to her horse, and forward she went in that vivacious, powerful, well-ordered swing which exceeds a dream of flying. Forward and over and up she went, and then reined in abruptly as the sounds of a cry and a crash reached her.

The groom had come to grief. In crossing the bridge his horse's hoof had struck through between the rotten planks; the beast lay on its side, struggling, but unable to rise; the man was picking himself out from the brambles. Neither Monica nor her servant could relieve the poor animal's case. It seemed necessary, then, that he should hold down his head to save his leg from breaking, and that she should ride away after assistance. Dimly grasping the groom's rather dim directions to a clearing where woodmen were at work, Monica started on the quest. Ere she had gone a half mile she was disconcerted; ere the distance reached a mile she was bewildered, for a sudden darkening, a heavy sickish stillness in the air presaged a storm.

Now if there was one thing, and there were many, of which Monica Abercrombie was afraid it was a thunderstorm. Surely, Fate had not been so cruel as to cast her alone in the midst of one! Evidently Fate had been exactly that cruel; for far-away mutterings advanced and coalesced into crashes, and through the interlacing boughs shot vivid vibrant flashes of light. The stout little horse caught the terrors of its rider and dashed onward madly, and when Monica at length summoned sufficient courage to check it she realized that she had lost her way. Was there no one—no great, grand, splendid one—who would come to her aid when so distressed? Hardly had her heart uttered the prayer when down the bank from the wood clambered a big, roughly-clad man, and, oh, relief unutterable, the creature so burly, so uncouth, proved to be James Winn. Was it possible that she could be so overjoyed at his easy, imprudent presence, hateful smile and all!

But Winn's manner became solicitous, its expression grew sympathetic as he learned Monica's fears and stress.

"How fortunate," he exclaimed, "that we met! The camp is but a few rods distant and some of my men will hasten to assist your groom. Meanwhile, if you will rest in a primitive sort of hut where I sometimes put up, until this storm passes over, I shall beg for the honor of driving you to the hotel in our cart. Not so awfully primitive, you know," continued Winn, shrewdly reading the young girl's pallor and shrinking, "for do you know, I'm ashamed to confess it, but a thunderstorm knocks the heart right out of me, it won't even stick in my throat. So on that primitive hut I've had the very latest improved lightning rods rigged, and I defy Jove to land a bolt within a mile of it. Ah, you see here we are, and I for one am precious glad of it."

In a jiffy James Winn lifted his companion off her horse and into the little house; too quickly, indeed, for her to notice those rods of such scientific potency. In a jiffy he had blinds and shades tightly drawn over the windows, and all the lamps of the establishment yielding a tranquilizing light. "There," he declared, as one of the men brought in a mighty brewing of tea, "there, I believe I shan't notice the storm a bit if you will only talk to me."

The clouds rent, the floods descended, but the Princess scarcely heeded the ruction. There was such a present sense of security, and the amiable weakness of another made her feel so brave. Besides, after any particularly terrific crash, Winn would stoutly assert: "I don't believe its going to rain much, anyhow," and if he really thought so, why, it must be true!

Ah, well! the drive home through the glittering esplandes, transported from fairyland by the western sunshine, was pleasant; but oh, so brief! Surely when he said "ten miles" he had meant ten minutes. Perhaps, after all, it was a dream, and her charming, most reverential companion was that same supercilious James Winn, interested in grades and bonds and far too busy for philandering.

As the days passed by and she neither saw nor heard of Winn, Monica came to distrust her memory and to believe such vain imaginings. Perhaps she felt in consequence that her mind must be affected, for she abandoned riding and coddled melancholy by long, solitary walks. After all, nature was satisfying; there was no pretence about her. One didn't learn to respect, to admire, only to be treated with scorn!

One day when Monica was sitting in a favorite retreat formed by a mossy trunk and the overjutting bank by the brook, musing on the disappointments of life and the prevalence of sawdust in dolls, there came a manly tread, and James Winn stood beside her. Yes, there could be no doubt of his identity, for if ever a man smiled hatefully that man was he. Still, he had been kind to her, and she must thank him now, since his hasty departure on that evening, so delightfully unreal, had precluded her.

"I am so glad of this opportunity to acknowledge your kindness, Mr. Winn," began Monica.

"Oh, as for that, I promised Creighton I'd look out for you on his account."

"Mr. Creighton, indeed? How impertinent of him to speak of me."

"If a cat may look at a king, I should think a lamb might speak of a princess. By the way I had a letter from him, asking what I thought of his coming here. Now, what do you think?"

"My opinion isn't necessary; if it were, I should say lambs were safer in the fold."

"In the club, you mean. Well," continued Winn, settling himself comfortably by the young girl's side, "I shall send him a telegram, then, stating that the risks against which he insured me have all accrued."

"I don't understand you, Mr. Winn."

"No? I'm not greatly surprised. Understanding is a masculine attribute, I think."

"Rudeness certainly is. Oh—"

"There, there," said Winn, as he kissed her eyes, welling with mortification, and her lips, trembling with words she could not speak, "you mustn't feel badly."

"I hate you," protested the disenchanted princess; "I think you are conceited and dictatorial and just horrid; yet, oh, I love you so! Tell me, how did you ever find out how to over master a poor girl?"

Wanted to Die Rich.

Many years ago, according to one of the yarns of the sea told by mariners who claimed to have been present, a British ship having on board a large consignment of Spanish dollars for a house in Rio Janeiro was wrecked on the Brazilian coast. Hoping to save some of his precious cargo the Captain ordered some of the casks containing the gold brought on deck, but the vessel was so badly wrecked by the continuous pounding on the rocks that it was soon found necessary to take to the boats without any of the treasure. As the last boat was about to leave the ill-fated craft, one of the officers, to make sure that no one was left on board, went back to make a last tour of the ship. To his surprise, sitting beside one of the casks with a hatchet in his hand, he found one of the sailors.

"Hurry up!" cried the offices. "We came within an ace of going off without you."

"I'm not going," replied the sailor, giving the cask a hearty whack with the hatchet, bursting it open, and laughing with delight as the coin poured out around him. "I've always wanted to die rich. I've been poor all my life, and this is my first and last chance. Go ahead. I'll stay here with my fortune."

Argue as he might, the officer could not pursuade the fellow to leave the gold with which he played as a child with marbles, and he finally had to leave him to his fate. —Harper's Young People.

Light and Sound.

One of the most wonderful discoveries in science that has been made within the last year or two, according to the Practical Engineer, is the fact that a beam of light produces sound. A beam of light is thrown through a lens on a glass vessel that contains lampblack, colored silk or worsted, or other substances. A dish having slits or openings cut in it is made to revolve swiftly in this beam of light so as to cut it up, thus making alternate flashes of light and shadow. On putting the ear to the glass vessel strange sounds are heard so long as the flashing beam is falling on it. The latest phase of this interesting discovery is still more remarkable. A beam of sunlight is passed through a prism, the disk is turned, and the colored light of the solar spectrum is made to break through it. Now, if the ear is placed to the vessel containing the silk, wool or other material, as the colored lights fall upon it, sounds will be given by different parts of the spectrum, and there will be silence in other parts. For instance, if the vessel contains red worsted, and the green light flashes upon it, loud sounds will be given. Only feeble sounds will be heard if the red and blue rays of the spectrum fall upon the vessel, and other colors make no sound at all. Green silk gives sound best in a red light. Every kind of material gives more or less sound in different colors and utters no sound in others.

Salaries in England.

The higher official salaries in England and in all monarchial countries are much larger than they are in the United States for the like offices. This is due mainly to the fact that American salaries were mostly fixed a hundred or more years ago, when, as Senator Evarts once remarked, "A dollar would go farther than it does now." All the changes made in salaries of American officials have been increased, and they have usually been made when the people were not paying as close attention to politics as they should. The salary of American judical officers is less than most first-class lawyers earn in their profession. The Chief Justice of our Supreme Court gets $10,500 a year, all the other justices $10,000 each. The Lord Chief Justice of England gets $40,00 per year, the Lord Chancellor gets $50,000 a year, and a penion for life of $25,000 after he leaves office. The English Attorney General gets at least $60,000 a year, and sometimes more. The Attorney General of the United States is a cab'n't officer, and all he gets is $8000 per year. Yet the honor of our judicial positions secures the ablest lawyers to fill them, despite the fact that they must lose money by accepting them, rather than practicing law and earning its far larger fees.—Boston Budget.

Mystery of a House.

When Pete kissed his wife good-bye in the morning his little frame house rested on rollers. The house mover's gang was hitching clanking chains to the heavy square timbers, and the brown horse with the dejected droop of his long head was ready to circle around the capstan and haul Pete's cottage into the street.

"Don't you worry a bit, Mary," said Pete, as he picked up his dinner pail. "The house mover told me that not an inch of plaster would fall. So long. I'll pick you up six blocks south to-night."

"Sure thing," replied the house mover to Pete's inquiry. "This is a dead easy job. You'll find your house in the middle of the street six blocks down there to-night and your wife and the kids all O. K."

Pete was an iron moulder, and the foundry where he worked was a good hour's walk from home. He went to his bench in a cheerful mood. The elevated railroad company had paid him a good, stiff price for his lot, and had offered to move his house free of expense to him. Pete took the money and bought a lot cheap in a new street, half a mile nearer the foundry, two blocks from a school and with a church just around the corner. Taking it all in all Pete considered he had made a good bargain.

During the day Pete's thoughts were on the little white cottage, with its clean muslin sash curtains and light green shutters, slowly traveling down the street. He could almost see Mary anxiously noting progress through the windows, and the children, wild with the novelty, racing and tearing around. Every moulder on the floor knew that Pete's house was on the move. They discussed the matter while grouped around the cupola waiting for the iron to run. They were full of suggestions, and Pete received the benefit of the concentrated advice of fifty sympathetic men. The foreman once had passed through the house moving experience, and, as he was the foreman, and as his house was a two-story brick, his advice was regarded as weighty and his suggestions treasured as words of great value.

After Pete had filled and emptied his ladle a dozen times and had washed up, he started merrily to find his home. When he arrived at the corner where he expected to meet his cottage none appeared. Pete looked north and south through the dusk, but as far as he could see the street was clear. A policeman happened along.

"Say, officer," exclaimed Pete, have you seen a one-story white frame cottage go by here to-day?"

The policeman stared at Pete for a second, then replied, gruffly: What'er you givin' me?"

"That's straight," said Pete, with energy. "They're moving my house. It ought to be here. but it ain't."

The policeman grew sympathetic at once. "I've seen no house movin', but there's some red lights over there two blocks. Mebbe it's your house."

Pete hurried for the red lights. It was a house perched on rollers in the middle of the street, but it was not his house. He clambered over timbers, chains, and skids to the front door, for the steps had been amputated.

A woman with a hand-lamp answered the knock.

"Have you seen a one-story frame cottage, white, with green shutters, and a little woman with brown hair go by this way to-day?" asked Pete, hurriedly.

The woman shook her head.

"No," said she. "We're movin', too. My man hasn't got home yet either. May be he's hunting for me, too," and she giggled hysterically.

Pete gave her no comfort, but sprang to the ground. Near the house was a grocery, and there Pete inquired for his house. No one had seen it.

Pshaw!" said Pete. "Its a light house, and those house movers have got it on the lot."

He almost ran to the new site, and found it vacant. He had spent an hour searching for the white cottage and Mary. He had asked fifty persons if they had seen a white one-story cottage on a tour, and now he seated himself on the edge of the sidewalk in front of the new lot he had bought, and tried to pull himself together. He could not understand it. He could think of no other path over which the house might travel.

Suddenly a new idea struck him. "The fire department has made them pull the house into a vacant lot so as not to block the street. I'll start from the beginning, and if I don't find it to-night, I'll sleep in the woodshed. They haven't moved that anyway. Only Mary will be worried.

In a quarter of an hour he was on the old familiar sidewalk. As he hurried along he closely examined every house on both sides of the street. Absorbed in this he forgot his whereabouts, and he choked and gulped in surprise when he suddenly looked into the windows of his own white cottage and saw Mary with her nose flattened against the glass watching for him. The house had not been moved a foot.

"Something broke," explained Mary helping Pete to a heaping plateful of liver and bacon, "and the men will be back to-morrow."—Chicago Record.

Force of the Human Jaws.

Experiments are reported to have been made by Dr. Black, a dentist of Jacksonville, Fla, to determine the force exerted by the human jaws in chewing food, and also the greatest force which the jaws are capable of exerting. By means of a spring instrument provided with a registering device he took—according to the account given—records of about one hundred and fifty bites of different persons, fifty of these being preserved as characteristic of the ordinary man, woman and child. The smallest pressure recorded was 30 pounds, by a little girl seven years old, with the incisors, but, using her molars, the same child exerted a force of 65 pounds. The highest record was made by a physician of thirty-five, the instrument used registering only 270 pounds, and he simply closed it together without any apparent effort, there being also no method of determining how far above that figure he could have gone, and the test was made with the molars. Several persons exceeded a force of 100 pounds with the incisors and 200 with the molars. Dr. Black states that the physical condition of the persons experimented upon seemed to but slightly influence the result, and he is of the opinion that the condition of the peridental membranes is the controlling factor, rather than muscular strength; and further, that in the chewing of food much more force is habitually exerted than is necessary.—Scientific American.

Use Anti-Toxine.

In view of the prevalence of diphtheria in our city, the Board of Health are strongly recommending to our citizens the use of anti-toxine in treatment of the disease, feeling sure that the best of results may be expected to follow, provided the remedy is used in the early stages of the disease. The opinions of the leading physicians of the country are universally in favor of the remedy, and to substantiate and show to our citizens the good results that may be expected to follow its use, we give below the opinions of the physicians of the city who have been consulted in regard to it.

Dr. Gordon strongly urges its use and reports the best of results particularly when used before the 3d day, he regards it as a specific for diphtheria. Has applied it to some 16 cases and all have recovered. Has noticed no harmful results when used.

Dr. Gilbert concurs in its use, and has applied it to 6 cases, and all have recovered except 1. Has noticed no harmful results in those to whom he has applied it.

Dr. Hunting is strongly in favor of its use. Has applied it to all his cases with two or three exceptions, which were so light as to not need it, and all have recovered; and has noticed no harmful results.

Dr. Welch also is strongly in favor of its use. Has applied it in some 40 cases and all have recovered with one or two exceptions. He has not noticed any ill results from its use.

Dr. Sheahan is also very much in favor of using it, being perhaps the first physician to use it in the city. He is decidedly of the opinion that no ill results has followed its use. Has applied it to all of his cases, and regards it as almost a specific in the early stage of the disease, even in worst cases, and reports no harmful results.

Dr. F. S. Davis does not recommend its use. As the results show, a terrible fatality has attended the cases to which he has been called. Since November 1895, he has reported to the Board of Health 6 cases of children, and 5 cases of adults sick with diphtheria, of which the 6 cases of children proved fatal. There have been no fatal results in the cases of adults for the last two years in the city.

Dr. Padula is also in favor of its use and has used it in three cases. In the cases of two of his patients, in his opinion, he was called to late, and was unable to save their lives; the other case recovered.

Dr. Hallowell also is very strongly in favor of its use. Has applied it in all the cases to which he has been called, and with very favorable results. Some 12 cases in all, and is positive that no harmful results follow.

Dr. Ash, a member of the Board of Health, also fully concurs in its use, and is decidedly of the opinion that no harmful results follow, being in his mind a specific in early stages, its beneficial effect, soon evidencing itself and cutting the disease short. It frees the patient on whom it has been used of the severe forms of anaemic paralysis and tendencies to kidney complications which often after convalesence from diphtheria, in cases not treated by anti-toxine, result fatally.

Odd Fellows' Ball.

A pleasant evening, an unusually large, as well as a pretty party, good music, and an efficient and painstaking committee in charge, were the elements which combined to make the twelfth annual ball of Mt. Wollaston lodge, No. 80, I. O. O. F., held at the Coliseum Thursday evening, a success in ever way, and one that will go down in the annals of the lodge as a crowning piece to any of its previous gatherings of a like nature.

It was but a little after 8 o'clock when the carriages began to roll up to the door of the hall and deposit their freight of daintily gowned ladies and their escorts, and from this time on, there was an almost constant stream of carriages arriving.

Meanwhile Towne's orchestra, seated on the platform behind a bank of potted plants and ferns, gave those present an idea of what they might expect when the ball opened, and in connection with the orchestra, it might be mentioned that their music was of the highest order and gave universal satisfaction. In their selections for the dancing they furnished an invocation in the way of a vocal accompaniment which was very pleasing, more especially so when any of the popular airs of the day were rendered.

The concert programme was as follows:

March "Directorate," Sousa
Overture "Popular Melodies," Beyer
Selection "Il Trovatore," Verdi
Concert Waltzes "L'Estudiantina," [Waldtenfel
Medley "Plantation Echoes," Weigand

Promptly on the stroke of 9 o'clock the grand march was inaugurated and was led by Floor Director Henry L. Kincaide and Miss Hattie L. Pierce the latter gowned in pale blue chiffon. Then followed the assistants, aids and others, which swelled the number in the march to 137 couples, while there were almost as many more, who from preference chose to watch the kaleidoscope effect from the seats arranged about the hall, and to them the effect was indeed beautiful, and in fact the march was one of the prettiest features of the evening.

The march over, and the order of twenty numbers was entered into with zeal and continued uninterrupted save for a brief intermission at midnight during which supper was served in the upper hall.

The menu was by Tufts and was as follows:

Roast Turkey, Grape Jelly. Ham.
Tongue. Escalloped Oysters.
Lobster Salad. Chicken Salad.
Spanish Fritters, Wine Sauce.
Chicken Croquettes, with Peas.
Frozen Pudding. Charlotte Russe.
Vanilla, Strawberry and Chocolate Ice Cream.
Sherbet.
Plain and Fancy Cake in variety.
Coffee. Fruit. Rolls.

It was two by the old town clock when the last strains of Strauss "Blue Danube" waltz had died away, and the now tired dancers were being hurried homeward in their carriages and electrics and the twelfth annual passed into history.

Helen Pratt Thompson.

The sudden death of Nellie Thompson, as she was familiarly known, on Tuesday, was a sad blow to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Thompson, and to her grandparents, neighbors and little friends. Her case was malignant from the start and her parents feel that everything possible was done for her. Dr. F. S. Davis was very devoted, and also called in Dr. R. S. Thurston and Dr. S. A. Kimball, two of Boston's eminent physicians. Little Nellie was in her eleventh year, a pupil of the Coddington school and of the Sunday School of the First church. A private funeral was held on Wednesday, the services being conducted by Rev. E. C. Butler. The interment was at Mount Wollaston.

Boulevard Hearing.

The hearing to have been held Monday before the Committee of the Legislature on the petition to build a parkway from Squantum along the shores of Quincy Bay and thence to the Blue Hills reservation, was postponed upon the request of Mayor Adams. The main reason being that as a petition is to be introduced this week for a parkway along the shore of Winthrop beach it would be advisable to hear both at the same time, and then again Quincy had not had sufficent time to prepare its case.

CITY BRIEFS.

Candlemas day next Monday.

Dr. William Everett will occupy the pulpit of Rev. W. B. Geoghehan at Beverly on Sunday.

Wednesday evening Feb. 19, Rev. Mr. Butler will address the Unitarian club at West Roxbury.

The Quincy & Boston street railway have published a new set of rules for its employes, which are to be strictly enforced.

Mrs. A. F. Welch and daughters Misses Marion and Pauline of Danvers, are guests of Mrs. Goodridge of Hancock street.

Hon. and Mrs. William B. Rice and Miss Rice have taken apartments at Hotel Brunswick, Boston, for the rest of the season.

At the morning service at the First church the pastor Rev. Ellery C. Butler took for his subject "Go quickly." It was a very interesting discourse.

Ex-Mayor Porter was on Saturday re-elected secretary and treasurer of the Mayors' club of Massachusetts at the annual meeting and banquet.

Delegation from Divisions 4 and 5 of Quincy attended the institution of Division 15, A. O. H., at North Weymouth, Saturday evening.

John McDonnell, who was recently employed by C. L. Prescott and later by Eaton Bros., was killed Thursday night, last week, on the Boston & Albany railroad.

Mr. William J. Faircloth of Quincy avenue had a shock Monday afternoon which affected his head. Owing to Mr. Faircloth's age he is considered seriously ill.

Mr. Frank G. Smith, who has returned from a months travel to New York, Chicago, Denver, etc., is spending a few days with his sister Mrs. George H. Wilson of this city.

When Quincy gets its State road, its park way, its sewerage system, its streets paved and its police signal system, it can hold its own against any city in the good old Commonwealth.

But little now remains of the old Tirrell homestead on Hancock street and a few days more will see the last timber removed and work commenced on the erection of a new building.

Rev. Ellery C. Butler attended the reunion of the Unitarian church at Beverly last week. Mr. Butler was stationed over this church previous to his coming to Quincy.

Electric cars to Nantasket are among the probabilities this year. The Hingham company will build, and the Quincy & Boston will make connections via East Weymouth.

Edward T. Phelan, the humorist, will assist the Boston Ideal Club at their concert under the auspices of the employes of the Bay State Aluminum Company on Thursday evening, Feb. 6.

P. E. Quill, musician of Co. K, 5th Regt., has received an offer from Cuban agents of $100 a month for his services in the rebel army at Cuba. Mr. Quill says if he was sure of his salary he would go.

Secretary R. D. Chase and Director Albert Keating of the Quincy Co-operative bank attended the banquet of the Massachusetts Co-operative Bank league at the United States Hotel, Boston, on Friday last.

Miss Jean Lawrence has taught school 38 continuous years in the Lowell district at Jamaica Plain, but this is in the shade beside the service of over 40 years by Miss Julia Underwood at the Coddington school, Quincy.

A $500 granite monument will be erected at Provincetown, commemorating the landing of the Pilgrims, and the signing of the compact there. The Old Colony commission allowed the sum last week from the State appropriation.

The men's meeting of the Y. M. C. A. on Sunday was addressed by Mr. J. J. Davey of Rockland. Mr. T. D. Roberts, superintendent of the Boston Industrial Home, will speak on "Personal Purity" at the men's meeting next Sunday.

There is a perceptible falling off in criminal business from towns outside of Quincy this month, but whether it is because the people are getting good or because of the approach of the annual town meeting is an open question.

On the fourth page of this issue will be found an article on the formation of a chapter in Quincy of the Daughters of the Revolution. The Quincy chapter starts out with much enthusiasm, about fifty prominent women being interested.

Mr. John Hermann Loud of Weymouth presided at the organ at Christ church on Sunday morning. Mr. Loud will give an organ recital at this church on Wednesday evening, February 5, at 7.45. There will also be a boy soloist from one of the Boston church choirs. Admission without ticket.

Commencing this evening an important change will take place in the running time of the cars on the Braintree & Holbrook line of electrics. On Saturday nights the last car will leave Quincy centre for Holbrook at 11 38, and on other nights the last car will leave at 10.30 instead of 10 o'clock as heretofore.

Mr. Joseph L. Sturtevant gave a private German Saturday evening at Faxon hall, which was participated in by upwards of fifty couples. The hall was very prettily decorated with bunting, and Loud's orchestra furnished music. The matrons were Mrs. T. A. Whicher, Mrs. T. L. Sturtevant and Mrs. G. S. Keyes.

It is understood that the trouble which recently took place between Capt. Morrison and Mr. Long, over the letting of the armory at Braintree by the militia, is to be settled in court. At the time a hearing was held before Judge Humphrey, who took the matter under advisement. He has now issued the warrant asked for by Mr. Long, and the case will be heard in the District Court next Saturday.

The first grand ball of the Quincy & Boston and Braintree, Randolph & Holbrook Railway Relief Association was held at the Town Hall, Braintree, Friday, Jan. 24, and a success it was in every way, the inclement weather seemingly in no way preventing a large party from being present. The members of the association are to be congratulated upon their success as entertainers.

Henry H. Faxon attended the 50th anniversary of the order of Grand Templars of Massachusetts in Boston, Monday. The Herald says, Henry H. Faxon, the "fighter," made a stirring address, in which he told some pertinent facts in relation to the fighters in the work, claiming that, perhaps, it would be more effective and far-reaching had the society more fighters in its ranks than it now enjoys. Had it not been for his fighting he would not be as well known as he is today.

Representative Flint has introduced into the Legislature a petition for the division of Norfolk county into judicial districts. It does not affect Quincy or the towns now in the district of East Norfolk except that it shall become the third district, but establishes four districts of the remainder of the county, with a justice and two special justices each, also a clerk. Two districts call for a salary of $1500 for justice and $1000 for clerk, and two districts for $1000 for justice and $500 for clerk.

There is a bill in the Legislature to limit the charge for the transportation of bicycles.

The night lunch car recently damaged by fire has been removed. We want no more of them.

Edgar Emery met with a painful accident Thursday evening by a blade of a knife entering near his eye.

Mr. Lawton of Atlanta, Georgia, has succeeded Mr. Dozier, as manager of the Quincy telephone exchange.

The Ward One Democratic committee met at the Hancock House at 7.30 last evening for the purpose of organizing.

Our stock of billheads is large, and was bought when the cost was less than now. We can quote you low prices for lots of 1,000 to 5,000.

There is a rumor that Mr. Wrigley, the organist of Christ church, is to return to England: what will they do without him? All the other churches will regret it.

A horse being driven from Hingham to Boston fell on Hancock street near the High school Tuesday night, and was so badly injured that Officer Barry was obliged to shoot him.

Lewis Thayer and R. H. Newcomb each secured verdict in the superior court at Dedham Wednesday against H. C. Rodgers of this city, for $500 and $425 repsectively, J. W. McAnarney, Esq., for plaintiffs.

Master Henry Donlan will sing "Angels ever bright and fair," Handel; and "Now the day is over" C. Marks; at the organ recital by Mr John Hermann Loud, A. R. C. M., at Christ's church on Wednesday evening next.

Among those who attended the annual dinner of the Boston Press club, at the United States hotel, Boston, Wednesday evening, were Henry H. Faxon, William M. Marden, Frank F. Prescott, Joseph F. Costello, Christopher J. H. Totman, George T. Magee, Timothy J. Collins and William J. Parker.

The movements of the watches that were stolen from the Harlow, Williams and Harkins houses a year or so ago, were recovered Wednesday by Inspector McKay from among the articles taken by the Boston police from the residence of Chaffey, the receiver of stolen property, now in State prison.

A class for the study of German language was organized Monday evening at the Young Men's Christian Association, with Prof. Bernhard Schroeder as instructor. The class will meet on Monday evenings. It affords a splendid opportunity to study German at a very small cost. Prof. Schroeder is a thorough teacher, using the most modern methods. He has a class of forty in the Boston Association.

Mr. John Hermann Loud, A. R. C. M., pupil of Alexandre Guilmant, will give an organ recital at Christ's church on Wednesday evening next, February 5th, commencing at 7.45, when he will play Toccata in F, J. S. Bach; Priere in G flat, E. Lemaigre; Ite Missa Est, N. J. Lemmens; Cantilena, in B flat, and March Religeuse, Alex. Guilmant; Andante Cantabile, from Symphony, No. 4, C. M Widor; Grand Choir Dialogue, in G., E. Gigout. There will also be two selections by a boy soloist.

It is always pleasant to see faithful service rewarded, and while the Quincy telephone exchange has lost an obliging and faithful manager in Mr. J. E. Dozier, the Lynn exchange, to which he has been transferred, has been the gainer. Mr. Dozier has been in Quincy a little over a year, and by his able management coupled with the valuable assistance he has had from the inspector and the two obliging young ladies in the operating department, the Quincy exchange has been brought up to a high standard of excellence. At Lynn, Mr. Dozier has a large exchange having under his charge nine operators, three inspectors and about 700 subscribers.

Among the many entertainments announced for the near future in Quincy is that of the Boston Ideal Banjo Mandoline and Guitar club assisted by Mr. Edward T. Phelan the well known humorist, who will appear at Hancock hall under the auspices of the employes of the Bay State Aluminum Co., on Thursday evening Feb. 6. Anyone who is at all fond of good music should not fail to attend. This club has a well earned reputation as entertainers and it can be truthfully said they are unequalled. Mr. Phelan is also well known to Quincy people whom he has entertained on former occasions.

Turkey Supper.

Paul Revere Woman's Relief Corps, held a turkey supper, sale and entertainment at Grand Army hall Tuesday evening. About the hall were arranged numerous tables for the sale of fancy goods, which were presided over by the ladies of the corps.

From 6 to 7 30 a turkey supper was served, which was greatly enjoyed.

At 8 o'clock there was a pleasing entertainment under the direction of Mrs. Fannie Lane the programme being as follows:

Piano solo by Master Willie Turner.
Banjo solo by Miss Helen M. Lane.
Readings by Mr. Herbert Wessell.
Harmonica solos by Mr. Frank Miller.
Trios by Messrs. Powell, Miller and Tirrell.

The cake on the sales table was awarded to Mrs. John A. Allen of Hyde Park, and the elegant white muslin apron to Mrs. Kate Hayden.

Historical Museum.

The news that the birth place of President John Quincy Adams at South Quincy is to be given to the Quincy Historical society by Hon. Charles Francis Adams, to be occupied by them as a museum will be welcomed by the citizens of Quincy. Of late years but little in the way of repairs has been done to the old house and unless some such movement as is proposed is carried out, the old house would in a few years be beyond repair or preservation and nothing left to mark the historic spot.

It is understood that the historical society may convert the house into a colonial mansion of the Revolutionary period and to have the furnishings as far as possible correspond, and the many historic relics of a local and national nature will be here preserved.

WOLLASTON.

The monthly business meeting of the Wollaston Epworth League will be held on Thursday evening. Feb. 6.

The Junior Epworth League of Wollaston is preparing to give a cantata on Thursday evening February 13, entitled "Grandmother's Garden with Sunflower Chorus." Other interesting features will also be introduced in the very attractive programme.

The supper and social by the ladies of the Methodist church Wollaston at Mrs. Hastings' Central avenue on Thursday evening, called out a large number of people. A very pleasant entertainment followed the supper. This was in charge of Mrs. J. N. Emerson and consisted of "Illustrated Book Titles," "Grandmother's Garden," "A Sale," by Mrs. L. E. Prince and readings by Mrs. J. N. Emerson.

Teams B and A of the Wollaston Candle Pin Club had an exciting contest on the Duck's Nest alleys on Wednesday evening. For upwards of two hours the adherents of each of the contesting teams alternately cheered and looked blue. It was a case of nip and tuck. Team B finally won with four pins to spare, the score being 1129 to 1125.

Invitations are out for the marriage of Miss Emily Ward Cobb and Mr. Jesse Gilbert Swift, formerly of Wollaston, on Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 11, at Trinity church, Sing Sing-on-Hudson, N. Y.

The representation of some twenty odd of Charles Dana Gibson's best illustrations from "Life," which are be given by the Steadfast Ten, King's Daughters, at Mr. W. G. Corthell's residence, Wollaston next week will be one of the events of the season.

Mr. H. C. Davidson of Wollaston is visiting friends in Brockton.

Mrs. F. A. Page of Wollaston, who is ill, is reported as convalescing quite rapidly.

Mrs. Jessie F. Stevens of Wollaston has returned from a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Townsend of Holbrook.

Landlord Merrill of the Wollaston Hotel gave a delightful informal dancing party to a number of prominent Wollastonians in the hotel dining room on Saturday evening.

The Elliot club of Wollaston met with Mrs. Allen M. Jameson on Wednesday evening. The subject: "A Prophetic view of the Twentieth Century." Mr. W. G. Corthell, Mrs. Frederick H. Bishop, Mr. W. E. Simmons and Mrs. David Jewell were the seers.

Rev. Luther Freeman, formerly at Wollaston, has had enough of Waltham, and will ask for a change at the April conference.

Rev. James E. Bagley spoke before a large congregation upon "Literature" at the vesper services on Sunday afternoon.

At the Wollaston Baptist church on Sunday morning the pastor Rev. Preston Gurney took his text from Luke 14:24. "For I say unto you that none of those men which were bidden, shall taste of my supper." Miss Carrie Follett Spear of Quincy sang with the quartet in the place of Mrs. Frank A. Page, who is ill.

Owing to the severe storm on Friday evening last week, the regular meeting of the Unity club was postponed.

Mr. Al. Williams of Wollaston killed a rat which measured twenty-six inches from tip to tip, a few days ago.

Wollaston was the scene on Tuesday evening of its second golden wedding within a comparatively recent period. It was but a short time ago when Deacon and Mrs. Jones Howe's golden wedding was observed and now it is the 50th anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Joshua D. Rollins marriage.

About a hundred leading citizens of the place called and paid their respects to the worthy couple in the early hours of the evening. After half an hour enjoyed in pleasant conversation by the "early settlers" and those residents of Wollaston of a later date, the Rev. Preston Gurney in a few felicitous remarks presented on behalf of friends a purse containing $325 in gold to Mr. and Mrs. Rollins.

Mr. and Mrs. Rollins are both natives of Maine, Mr. Rollins hailing from Vasselboro and Mrs. Rollins from Belfast. On Jan. 28, 1846, they were married at Lowell, Mass., by the Rev. Dr. A. A. Miner. In 1873 they came to Wollaston to live, where they have since resided.

At the annual parish meeting of the Wollaston Congregational society, which was held on Monday evening these officers were elected for the ensuing year:—

Clerk, Joseph W. Lovett.
Treasurer, A. A. Lincoln.
Collector, Chas. P. Hutchins.
Assessors, Clarence G. Farwell, Nathan G. Nickerson, Edward L. Robbins, Herbert W. Marshall, and Charles A. Campbell.

Team B of the Wollaston bowling club defeated Team A on the Duck's Nest alleys Tuesday evening, 2318 to 2263. Brock and Freeman were tied for high on singles, each putting up 192. McClintock was high on totals, 485.

QUINCY POINT.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Washington Street Congregational church, have elected the following officers for this year:

President,—Mrs. Harlow.
Vice President,—Mrs. Federhen.
Treasurer,—Mrs. Barry.
Secretary,—Miss L. A. Carter.

MILTON.

East Milton was well represented at the Odd Fellows ball at Quincy Thursday evening.

The fourth subscription party will be held at Ellsworth hall, Feb. 14.

William Egan, who has been quite sick, is reported as improving.

Louis Staples left Wednesday for St. Louis to join his mother, Mrs. H. C. Vrooman, who is now located there.

Several of the local bicycle riders are in training for next season's races.

Mrs. John B. Kendrick has an infant alligator, which was sent her by her sister, Miss Newcomb, who is now in Florida.

Miss Orissa Beals is quite ill with typhoid pneumonia.

Mrs. Buchan is quite sick.

John Ford has returned from a visit to his parents in the old country.

Those who have the petition for the extension of the street railway in charge, report that 90 per cent. of the abutters on the proposed line have signed the petition, which has now over 400 names upon it, and there is not the least doubt but what work will be commenced at an early date.

—At Barre, Vt., Sunday morning, the shop of Marr & Thompson, granite tool manufacturers, and polishing mill of G. E. Mills were destroyed by fire, and the polishing mill of C. H. More & Co. was damaged $500.

A CARD. Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Rollins wish to extend their sincere thanks to the many friends who cheered them by their presence on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of their marriage on Tuesday, January 28th, and to express their cordial appreciation of the very generous gifts so kindly sent them.

Wollaston, January 29, 1896.

WEST QUINCY.

A benefit dance to Andrew Doddy will be held under the auspices of the John Boyle O'Reilly club at St Mary's hall at an early date.

The young men of the West Quincy Epworth League are arranging an entertainment to be held early in February.

The weekly and Sunday evening meetings at the West Quincy Methodist church are growing in interest and there is a very perceptible increase in attendance.

The Quincy police made another liquor raid Sunday afternoon, and were successful in confiscating twelve gallons of wine, two quarts of whiskey, some empty jugs that had contained cherry rum, and some bottles that had contained lager beer. It was in the vicinity of 3 o'clock when Inspector McKay, Officers Ferguson, Canavan and George McKay entered the house of John W. Wentworth on Willard street, near the Braintree line. They found three men all the worse for liquor and a woman who said Mr. and Mrs. Wentworth had gone to a christening. This made no difference to the officers, who read the warrant and then searched the house with the result noted above.

A leap year party under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the St. Mary's C. T. A. Society will be held in St. Mary's hall, Wednesday evening, Feb. 5. Mrs. James O'Dowd, Mrs. John C. Kapples, Mrs. P. T. Fitzgerald and Mrs. John W. Hart will be the matrons, and Miss Nellie O'Dowd and Miss Mary Duggan, maids of honor.

The O. T. Rogers Granite Co. has elected these officers: President, George H. Field; clerk, Walter T. Babcock; treasurer and general manager, Marshall P. Wright. The above officers constitute the board of directors.

The Granite Railway Co. have elected these officers: President, William B. Sewall; vice president, John W. Leighton; clerk and treasurer, J. Albert Simpson; directors, George F. Green, J. Albert Simpson, Henry E. Sheldon, Robert B. Williams and John R. Bullard. The directors have appointed Henry E. Sheldon as agent.

SOUTH QUINCY.

The Calvary Baptist church has been holding three services on Sunday since the opening of the new chapel and is glad to say they are well attended, especially at the 3 and 7 o'clock services. Mr. Henry Faxon was one of the number on Sunday evening last. There has been opened a class for the Chinese and on the hour appointed two came and semed very interested in the teachings given them.

The Sunday School teachers of St. John's church held a private entertainment and collation at St. John's hall Thursday evening.

John H. Bishop & Co. have dissolve copartnership, and John H. Bishop will continue the business.

William Wilson has accepted a position in the ware rooms of the New England Piano and Organ Co.

Among the articles found by the Boston police at the residence of James S. Chaffey, the burglar, was a watch made by C. F. Pettengill of Quincy, minus the case. The movement was a Reckford, No. 288,323. The watch proved to be one stolen from the residence of Mr. Williams on Quincy avenue when it was entered two years ago and was owned by Samuel Williams.

The Ward Three Democratic Committee has organized with Dennis J. Ford, chairman; William A. Kelley, vice chairman; George D. Cahill, secretary; and Thomas Higgins, treasurer.

What might have proved a bad conflagration was discovered Tuesday evening and extinguished by the efforts of Officer Carl Nicol, assisted by Thomas Doyle, John Duffy, ex-Councilman Dixon and Henry Bowen. As the 8.15 P. M. train from Boston was passing by the Purity Dried Fruit Company's factory, some of the sparks from the engine ignited the grass on the Adams estate, on the east side of the track, and was burning quite fiercely when discovered by Officer Nicol. All five worked heroically and succeeded in extinguishing the fire after quite a piece had been burned over. If left alone it would have caused considerable damage, as it was headed directly for a group of houses on President's avenue. Taken all together Officer Nicol is to be complimented on his good work without calling out the fire department, as some of the people around thought he should do.

Water street, between Franklin and Copeland streets, is becoming more and more citified every day, and at the present rate of advancement it will not be long before Salem street, Boston, will be in the shade.

The Young Men's Christian Association is planning for a big meeting Sunday afternoon in the interest of "Social Purity." Mr. T. D. Roberts, Superintendent of the Boston Industrial Home, will be the speaker. The service will be held in the Presbyterian church, South Quincy, which will accommodate an audience of four hundred men.

Miss Eva Mischler was surprised on Wednesday evening by fifty of her companions at her home on School street and presented with a handsome banquet lamp Mr. James Rose, Jr., making the presentation. Messrs. James Rose, Jr., Clinton Kidder and Theodore Hermanson managed the affair. Games were enjoyed after the presentation and a collation was served.

Miss Julia M. Beal, a promising young lady in the professional training class for teachers, who has for the past year been working in the Lincoln School of our city has accepted a position as teacher in one of the Bedford schools.

At the meeting of the St. John's C. L. and A. A. Friday evening, the following were elected members of the dramatic board:—Financial secretary, Thomas J. McGrath; stage manager, P. Duffy; corresponding secretary, John J. Gill; assistant stage manager, James Dougherty.

—The Norfolks defeated the South Bostons at bowling Wednesday evening, 2,559 to 2,487.

☞ C. F. Dadmun the Butter, Egg, Grocery and Flour dealer at 76 Kneeland street, Boston, in wishing the OBSERVER a happy new year, says the OBSERVER has made him many business friends the past three years and they have told friends of him, who have told others of his cheap cash store. He evidently appreciates all his friends. 18-2w

ATLANTIC.

Tuesday afternoon a wooden block under the kitchen stove of Mrs. J. Moynihan of Old Colony street broke apart, and the stove which was red hot fell over on the wall setting the building on fire. Archie Shea, Albert Madden and Frank Leslie, three of the fire brigade of Timberlake & Small's store, hastened to the scene, and after a few minutes quick work managed to extinguished the flames.

Thomas Bell has moved his family from Atlantic to Providence.

Mr. Roger H. Wilde has recovered from his illness and is about once more.

The fire department is changing its wires from the old to the new poles on Hancock street.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lothrop of Billings street have returned from their visit to Newport.

Miss Josephine Hunt of Lowell has moved into one of the Bryant houses on Old Colony street.

A number of the Atlantic Rebekahs attended the banquet at Odd Fellows hall, Neponset, Thursday evening.

Mr. Chandler of Dorchester has moved into one of the Atlantic Land Co.'s new houses, which he has purchased.

Next April Mr. Cephas Drew, one of the obliging clerks at Gurney's store will complete the 21st year of his services with that firm.

The death of Miss Mary Webster will be a loss to the Methodist society as she was an active worker in all departments of the church.

Henry Cunningham has moved his pool room and barber shop from the Duggan block near the depot to his new parlors under Music hall.

Memorial services out of respect to Miss Mary A. Webster will be held at the Methodist church, Atlantic, Sunday at 3 o'clock. Supt. Lull, Mr. Merrick and others will take part.

The Republican ward committee Ward 6 Atlantic met Wednesday evening Jan. 29 and perfected their organization by electing councilman at large Frank E. Badger chairman and Henry Von Enden secretary and treasurer. The other members of the committee are: Mr. Roger H. Wilde, Eben Stocker, T. H. Kingston, Wm. Cummings, Faxon Billings.

Mr. and Mrs. William Murphy of Walker street, are mourning the loss of their youngest child, who died on Monday of pneumonia.

A petition to the City Council is being circulated around Atlantic for some incandescent lights to be placed on Walker and Appleton streets. These two streets, are at present very poorly lighted by kerosene lights and being very much travelled over during the evenings, good lights are needed. The petition is receiving many signatures.

Many of the cases of diphtheria recently reported have been in the immediate vicinity of Teal pond which many think may be the cause, as it has been quite objectionable of late. When will the city take steps to abate this nuisance.

Preparations are being made in Atlantic for a leap year party to be given in Music Hall in about one month. The ladies are planning to make it a most brilliant affair. Mrs. Stecker of Botolph street is very prominent in making arrangements.

At the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, Sunday, the pastor preached to a full congregation at both morning and evening services. The choir in the morning sang several selections which were very fine. The evening service was well attended by young people and a quartette furnished music. Mr. Norton intends to repeat the talk which he gave several weeks ago on the city of Jerusalem next Sunday if the weather is fair. He has been requested by many who were unable to hear him before on account of the stormy night when he gave it. The talk was exceedingly interesting as Mr. Norton tells of his own observances in that city. Miss Lillian Hammond is to teach a class of little girls in the Sunday School beginning next Sunday.

Mrs. L. A. Bassett, of Walker street, returned last Saturday from several days pleasant visit to friends in Newton.

The "Saturday Evening" whist club of Atlantic met with the Misses Bassett on Walker street, last Saturday evening and spent a very pleasant time. The prizes were won by Miss Annie Hall and Miss Ruth Bassett. Mrs. Mabel Ramsdell catered, serving ices, cake and confections.

There is no doubt about Massachusetts Bay Colony, U. O. P. F., being a wide awake organization. Beside its own peculiar and distinct features it is regarded as the successor and heir of the Atlantic Social club and is keeping up the reputation of the latter. The dancing parties are the most enjoyable ever given in Atlantic, with the largest attendance. The colony has just appointed a committee of "rustlers" with James Curtin as chairman, to provide a minstrel show in the near future, and it will be the best ever given here. At the Monday evening meeting after the routine business the committee on good of the order provided a pleasing entertainment. Miss Emma Curtin gave a piano solo. Songs were sung by Frank Tilton and Mrs. Ella Carver, and Mr. C. F. Merrick read several selections from Eugene Field. Then a new game was played, with Mrs. Dr. Bruce at the piano, and great sport was had. The prizes fell to Mr. Yeoman and Mrs. DeHuff. The number by Miss Curtin deserves especial mention for her talent as a pianist has become marked. An equally good time is promised for the next meeting. The committee are C. F. Merrick, Mrs. John Carver, Mrs. James Curtin.

Two cases of diphtheria have been reported at Atlantic on Walnut street, at the home of Mr. Martin. There is also a case on Madison street.

Mr. Edward A. Wight, the well known Boston lumber dealer, is spending several weeks with his father-in-law, Mr. S. G. B. Coombs of Appleton street, hoping by so doing to improve his health, which is slightly run down.

Mr. Harry O. Parker of Atlantic is preparing for an extended trip to the South, where he is to engage in civil engineering. He has a large tract of land there to lay out into building lots and streets for Mr. Brown, of the Atlantic Land Co.

DOWNS AND PARK.

Mr. McIntire is to occupy his new house on Hamilton circle this week.

The new chapel at Norfolk Downs is rapidly approaching completion. It is expected that the dedication will take place about Feb. 22.

On account of the alterations taking place at the Quincy Mansion, the Park and Downs Union Society have been obliged to hold their services elsewhere. They now worship in the vacant house owned by Mr. John Stewart on Bromfield street.

The Hospital Appropriation.

The petition of Hon. W. B. Rice and others presented to the Legislature last week by Representative Thompson of this city, was accompanied by the following bill:

SECTION 1. The city of Quincy is hereby authorized to raise by taxation a sum of money not exceeding five thousand dollars per year and appropriate the same towards the maintenance and support of the City hospital in said city.

SECT. 2. Section six of chapter one hundred and seven of the acts of the year eighteen hundred and eighty-nine is hereby repealed.

SECT. 3. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

—The Winthrop petition as to open spaces along the shore was taken from the files of the Legislature Tuesday and referred to the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs.

Entertained at Banquet.

The members of the Quincy council, Knights of Columbus, were out in full force Thursday night, and seldom if ever has The Greenleaf held a party more unanimous in their praise of an honored member and an honored order.

Mr. John W. McAnarney was, until the election in December, the grand knight of Quincy council, and it was his intention that he would not sever his active official connection with the society without a gathering that would be pleasurable to himself and the order he represented, and he decided upon the banquet held Thursday evening.

The members and guests began to arrive at eight o'clock and were received in the parlor by Mr. McAnarney. For nearly an hour the members were in social converse interspersed by solos by Bro. Shea of Atlantic, with Rev. A. F. Roche as accompanist.

The invited guests were Grand Knight Hugh J. Malloy of the Randolph council, Rev. A. F. Roche, Rev. John P. Cuffe, Mr. J. C. Dorgan, Mr. Edwin F. Murphy, Mr. E. Murphy, Dr. J. E. Welsh and Timothy J. Collins and William F. Kenney.

About nine o'clock the march to the banquet hall was taken, the first line being headed by the host and Postmaster Burke and the second line by Secretaries Carey and McGrath.

Before being seated, Rev. A. F. Roche invoked the divine blessing, after which the assemblage proceded to divest the tables of the good things placed upon them by Landlord Hayden.

The menu was as follows:

Blue Points on the Deep Shell.
Consomme Royal.
Deep Sea Bass; Tomato Sauce.
Cold Boiled Ham.
Roast Beef. Mashed Potatoes.
Roast Turkey. French Peas.
Roman Punch.
Salmon Salad.
Lemon Pie. Washington Pie.
Vanilla Ice Cream, Sponge Cake,
Bent's Crackers, Cheese.
Tea. Coffee.

At the completion of the last course, and after cigars had been lighted, Mr. McAnarney called the assemblage to order, and introduced William F. Kenney, day editor of the Boston Globe, in a felicitious speech, who responded to the toast: "The Press:"

Ever shall the Press the people's rights maintain.
Unawed by influence, and unbribed by gain.
How Patriot Truth, her glorious precept draw,
Pledged to Religion, Liberty and Law.

Mr. Kenney's address was interesting, coming as it did from a practical newspaper man, and pointed out the ideals to be sought for in the press of today. He praised the majority of the papers for their unswerving maintenance of the principles laid down in the toast.

James F. Burke was then introduced as toastmaster of the evening. Mr. Burke lamented the unavoidable absence of Dr. Sheahan, as he had signified his intention of being present and addressing the meeting. A letter of regret was also read from Rev. J. J. Driscoll of Weymouth, the chaplain. The toastmaster was pleased at the large gathering and said that all signs presaged a prosperous future for the council.

Rev. A. F. Roche was then asked to respond to the toast, "Our Clergy: the highest pursuit, the truest study of mankind, is man." Fr. Roche said he considered it an honor to meet such an assemblage, and that too, of representative Catholic men. The office of priesthood carried with it great responsibility, and nothing gives the clergyman greater joy than to see the spontaneous co-operation on the part of the laity. He had the warmest feeling for the host of the evening, for his grand qualities of mind and heart and hoped that God would bless him in succeeding years.

Grand Knight Hugh J. Malloy of Randolph council responded to the toast, "The Randolph Council." He brought the greetings of his society to the Quincy council and to Brother McAnarney. Mr. Malloy was happy in anecdote, and in the serious part of his address paid his meed of praise for the thoroughness with which the Quincy body did their work at Randolph last summer. The bond of friendship would be strengthened as they became better acquainted with each other. The essentials of knighthood would not be complete if unflagging Catholic faith was not included. Our faith should be the faith of the great Columbus and of the Pilgrim and Patriot, undeterred by any obstacle.

Rev. John P. Cuffe, in the absence of Fr. Driscoll replied to the toast, "The Chaplain." He added his felicitations to the worthy host and council. He was fully in accord with the principles enunciated by preceding speakers and so noticable in the personnel of this gathering. The order was destined to be a credit to Church and State. The success of Quincy Council due in a large measure to Bro. McAnarney, and he hoped for him, with a full knowledge of his estimable qualities increased prosperity.

Grand Knight T. Sullivan was then called upon and he responded to the toast, "Columbus: my name and memory I leave to men's charitable speeches, to foreign nations, and to the next ages." After a cursory sketch of the great mariner, he turned to the affairs of the order that bore his name. Membership in the society was coveted and one admitted only after a careful scrutiny and unquestionable endorsement.

Brief remarks of a congratulatory nature were made by Deputy Grand Knight, Richard J. Larkin; Treasurer, William T. Shea; W. J. Coleman, P. F. Fitzgerald, Charles C. Hearn, Councilman Thomas J. Lamb, Peter T. Fallon and D. T. Fitzgerald. Dr. Welsh of Neponset at the conclusion gave a solo.

Toastmaster Burke then proposed a rising vote of thanks to Mr. McAnarney, which were given, and he in return gave this toast: "A good life, a happy life, and a long life to everyone here."

Then as the clock struck the hour of twelve the banqueters adjourned, all with the best of wishes for Past Grand Knight John W. McAnarney.

Postmaster Burke makes an excellent toastmaster, and his introductory remarks were facetious and varied. Letters of regret were received from State Deputy Hayes and Deputies Cavanaugh and McNary.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

THE SHAWMUT SPRING WATER possesses all these requirements, and when used in liberal quantities it is a most important factor in building up and restoring to healthy action the digestive organs and conducive to the health of all, more especially to children and persons of delicate constitutions. The array of testimony by doctors and others in its favor is overwhelming and shows that Shawmut Spring Water stands among the best.

Death of School Teacher.

The death of Miss May Webster of Atlantic, which occurred on Monday, was a severe shock to her many friends and has taken from our circle of young people one of the most estimable young ladies. Miss Webster had been confined to her home for several weeks with typhoid fever, which finally resulted in her death. She was about twenty years old, and up to the time of her sickness was a teacher in one of the public schools in Natick, where she was greatly beloved by her pupils, and by many friends whom she had made while there.

She was a graduate of the Quincy High School, being a member of the class of '93, and a great favorite among her teachers and schoolmates. Miss Webster was a sincere Christian and a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, Atlantic.

The funeral was held from the Methodist church, Atlantic, on Wednesday afternoon at 2 30 o'clock. The church was filled to over-flowing and flowers were in great abundance. Rev. Geo. B. Shanor, the pastor, conducted the services, speaking from the text, Rev. 21:25, "There shall be no night there." The quartette of the church sung, and Mr. Justin Hill presided at the organ. The Sunday school attended in a body. The pall bearers were by request of Miss Webster's mother selected from the Epworth League, and were Messrs. John Ramsdell, Herbert Cassidy, Nathaniel Pember, Emelio Paul, Henry Mitchell and Winifred Fearebay. Herbert Moxon and Warren Nelson acted as ushers.

The flowers were most beautiful and were contributed by many friends, Miss Burr sent a floral harp with "May" on the base, which was very handsome, also the Maltese Cross from the Epworth league, and a wreath on a standard from the Sunday School, and a piece made up of sixty carnations from the school in Natick where Miss Webster taught up to the time of her sickness, were very beautiful. There were many others. The interment was at Mount Wollaston Cemetery.

'One dear to us has gone, but we hope to meet again."

A special memorial service will be held at Methodist church at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

Death of Recent Resident.

The sad intelligence was received in Quincy Tuesday evening of the death in New Orleans, Jan. 18, of Mr. W. Sinclair Kirk after a brief illness. Mr. Kirk was well known in Quincy where he resided for two years previous to last October.

Mr. Kirk came to America in 1883, and settled in Indianapolis, where he remained some nine years, when he went to Providence, coming to Quincy from the latter place and entering business with Mr. McIntyre, under the firm name McIntyre & Kirk, boat builders.

During Mr. Kirk's stay in Quincy he resided at The Greenleaf, and after the dissolution of the firm, he continued to reside here until last October when he went to New Orleans, where he was engaged at Port Chalmette ship channel. On Jan. 11, he unfortunately took cold, which turned into pleurisy, and he was removed to the hospital, where his disease developed into pneumonia, from which he died as noted above, on Jan. 18, at the age of 33 years.

During Mr. Kirk's stay in Quincy, he became very popular in social circles and he was a member of the Wollaston golf club.

He was buried at New Orleans.

Unprovoked Assault.

Frank French had a rough experience Sunday afternoon at his bird store on Canal street. It was between 3 and 4 o'clock when Patrick Simms, who it is said had been drinking more than was good for him, entered Mr. French's store and began to abuse him in so rough a manner that his head was cut and he was otherwise injured. Mr. French, however, managed to get Simms out and locked the door. The latter, however, was not satisfied with what he had already done, but attempted to force the door. In this he was unsuccessful, and meanwhile word was sent to the police, and Constable Furnald, who happened to be near went down, but Simms had taken warning and departed. He will probably be given an opportunity to explain his actions before the judge of the District court.

Wollaston Unitarian.

The annual parish meeting of the Wollaston Unitarian Society was held on Monday evening. The society voted to continue the music and $126 was subscribed at the meeting for the music fund. Mr. Chandler W. Smith, who has been for some time an active member of the parish committee, positively declined a re-election, and Mr. Charles M. Bryant was elected to fill the vacancy. The officers:

President,—Walter E Simmons.
Clerk,—Charles T. Baker.
Treas. and Collector,—W. J. Wellington
E. H. Sprague, Frank A. Page, Walter M. Hatch, Hon. Henry O. Fairbanks, Charles M. Bryant.

Irish League Officers.

The Quincy branch of the Irish National League held its annual meeting Sunday evening and elected these officers:

President,—James Collins.
Vice-President,—Frank Rafferty.
Secretary,—George D. Cahill.
Treasurer,—Peter McConarty.
Executive Committee,—Edward Lawton, Michael Burns, Michael Daley. Patrick Fay, Thomas Carroll.

A Board of Trade.

Quincy has a Board of Trade, by-laws having been adopted at a meeting Tuesday evening. But it is not in working order, as officers have not been chosen. The meeting was held in the room of the Granite Manufacturers Association in the Durgin & Merrill block, and was attended by representative citizens as will be seen by the list below.

By-laws were reported and taken up article by article, discussed, amended and adopted as a whole. They will soon be published in full in the LEDGER.

They provide for a Board of Directors of 25, who shall from their number chose a president and two vice presidents. The other officers will be a clerk, treasurer and auditor.

The directors are the governing power, having the sole right to contract debts and control expenditures, and generally to adopt such measures as are deemed proper for the promotion of the objects of the corporation.

Individuals, firms and corporations of Quincy may become members at an annual assessment of $5.

The meetings will be held on the second Tuesday of each month.

There will be standing committees as follows:

A committee of five on Ways and Means.

A committee of three on Railroads and Transportation.

A committee of five on Municipal Affairs.

A committee of seven on Manufacturing and Mercantile Affairs.

A committee of five on New Enterprises.

A committee of three on Taxation and Insurance.

A committee of five on Highway Improvement.

A committee of three on Legislation.

The next business after the adoption of the by-laws, was the election of officers, but it was thought best to defer this until the next meeting, and it was voted that a committe of five, of whom the chairman shall be one, be appointed to make nominations. The chair appointed: Hon. C. F. Adams, 2d, James Thompson, Clarence Burgin, John R. Graham and Hon. John F. Merrill.

An adjournment was then made until Wednesday evening, Feb. 5, and it was voted that the public be invited through the press.

School Committee.

The School Committee held a late session Tuesday evening, but little business was transacted outside of the examination of schoolhouse plans.

The only absent member was Mr. Breed. After instructing the chairman to call the attention of the City Council to the necessity of two new school buildings a recess was taken to meet the members of the Council Committee on Public Buildings, to examine plans.

Four sets of plans were presented for approval which were by S. O. Moxon, Bacon & Wright, T. H. Kingston and Randlett & Howe. Representatives of these architects were present to explain their plans, all of which were considered at length, but the board did not vote to approve of any of them at this meeting for lack of time.

Although the board did not approve of any of the plans at this meeting it is understood that they will approve of all the plans presented.

It was voted that the present term of the schools close March 20, and the new term open April 6. That the graduation of the High school be held June 24, and of the Grammar schools June 25, and that the schools close June 24.

A request was received from F. W. Spaulding, that his son be admitted to the business course of the High school. Referred to the sub-committee of the High and the Superintendent.

A bill for extra services at the Willard school was presented by janitor Walsh which was approved and it was voted his extra services be continued until March 20.

School Iliad by Seymour and published by Ginn & Co. was adopted as a text book for the High school.

Vespers Music.

The music to be sung Sunday at vespers at the Unitarian church will be:

"The Lord Waked as one out of Sleep"	Hatton
"The Silent Land"	Garrett
"O Lamb of God"	Lake
"Even Me"	Warren
"Hear Me O God"	Schnecker
Alto solo, "Salve Regina"	Horatio Parker

Letter From the State House.

[Special to the QUINCY PATRIOT.]

BOSTON, Jan. 29, 1896.

A widely concerted effort is being made all over the State to induce the legislature to authorize the erection of an equestrian statue in honor of "Fighting Joe Hooker" on the State House grounds. Piles of petitions come in, showing that some hearty work is being put in for the cause. But a sober second thought on the part of some of the western Massachusetts people is that the statue ought not to be on State house grounds, but somewhere in the Connecticut valley in the neighborhood of Hooker's birthplace. He was born in Hadley. The first hearing on the petitions occured Wednesday forenoon and ex-Gov. Boutwell, Gen. Francis A Walker and other distinguished men were present so speak for the statue. All was going on smoothly when a remonstrant by the name of Curtis, who served under Hooker, put in opposition, saying that Hooker was dismissed from his command in disgrace, that he was reprimanded by President Lincoln, that he became intoxicated on duty and resigned a position and left the army in the face of the enemy, a proceeding which would have subjected him to a court martial if it had been done by a private soldier. This put a new phase on the affair, and in order to accommodate those who wanted to reply to the aspersions upon the old hero's character, the hearing was adjourned, when the petitioners will be given another opportunity.

TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

The effort of former years to repeal the law which exempts church property from taxation has been renewed this year. The situation has two sides. Some of the support for the bill comes from those who want to take away the exemption so that the Catholic churches shall be obliged to pay taxes on their property. But the law knows no distinction of sect, and if the exemption were repealed, all the Protestant churches would have to be taxed the same as the Catholics. But this is a very narrow ground of argument. The broad consideration is whether it is for the promotion of the highest good of the State to encourage church-building to the extent of saying that citizens who devote so much of their property for religious and moral purposes, wholly apart from any private or personal use, shall be exempt from paying taxes on it.

THE AUSTRALIAN BALLOT.

The colored member from Boston, Mr. Reed, has revived the old project of allowing a voter to vote the straight party ticket on the Australian ballot by making a single cross at the head of the list of party candidates. Such a measure has been killed repeatedly, for it would defeat the very purposes of the Australian act. It would make it possible for a spotter to tell whether a voter was voting the straight ticket or not by the time it required to mark the ballot, and it would put an end to the educating, discriminating influence of the present system. The bill is a direct and dangerous blow at the efficiency of the Australian system.

The architect who has lately examined the State house, finds that the senate chamber is safe for all the weight which will be put upon it, which is reassuring.

KNEELAND STREET UNION STATION.

Things have begun to move in the direction of a new union station on the south side of Boston. Col. J. H. Benton, Jr., counsel for the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, has put in a petition in its behalf that it may take all of the real estate from its station on Kneeland street as far east as Federal street. This will extend the railroad property so far that there will be only the width of Federal street and a short distance in addition between the property of the Consolidated road and the passenger station of the New York and New England railroad. Evidently the plan is to bring the latter road further west into the city and have it cross Federal street into the Union station. The Boston and Albany road has its station only one short block west of the Consolidated station, better known as the Old Colony station, on Kneeland street. It will be no difficult matter to bring these stations under one roof. There remains the Park Square station of the Consolidated, and it does not yet appear what will be done with it. But there seems to be no doubt that all of the roads on the south of Boston, like those on the north will eventually find accommodation in one large union station.

BIENNIALS.

The feature of the hearing on Friday upon biennial elections was the address of George Fred Williams and the sharp questioning to which he was submitted by the committee. He was particularly sharp in his denunciation of the corporate and commercial spirit of the times which he charged to be responsible for much political corruption and with being the chief instigator of the present movement for biennials.

STATE EXPENSES.

The legislature is disposed to look out more sharply this year than usual for the expenses of the state government. Of course it cannot be forseen whether this zeal will hold out till the end of the session, through the warm days of spring and the pressure of national politics and the desire of the representatives to get home, but the sentiment is in a healthy condition now and ought to be cherished faithfully through to the end. It came to the front in the debate in the house over the deficiency bill. Mr. J. P. Mellen of Worcester called to account the commissioners and department officers, who, without authority of the legislature, had exceeded their appropriations. It was shown by Mr. Lowell of Boston, in behalf of the committee on ways and means, that the money, for instance, that for the Worcester normal school, had been spent honestly and that it was all needed for the good of the state,—the people ought not to have been satisfied with a meagre appropriation in the first place. But he agreed with Mr. Mellen's criticism in the main. The latter said that he did not challenge the bill for the sake of defeating its passage, but in order to draw attention to a bad practice and to see if something could not be done to stop it.

The overhauling of the practice of some of the commissions of consulting lawyers outside of the attorney general's office is another instance in point. Under the order of the house as it was finally adopted and adhered to, in spite of efforts at amendment, the inquiry is to include not only all the legal, but the other expenses of the department for 1884, 1885, 1894 and 1895.

RULE.

Little Things

if they are little wrongs, lead to a large wrongness. Backache is a little thing—not a very serious thing, in itself. It is often overlooked because it is so slight—it may come day after day and not be bad enough to cause any anxiety. The smallest kind of a Backache means coming illness—probably Kidney trouble.

Buker's Kidney Pills

will cure a Backache—cure it so it will stay cured. These pills cure the ache by removing the cause—Kidney trouble. They are a specific for Kidney trouble in the early stages—they'll make an old back new again. Druggists sell them for 50 cents. A book about Backache and Kidney trouble, free.

Burns' Anniversary.

In accordance with the time honored custom among Scotchmen the members of Clan McGregor, O. S. C., of this city, observed the 137th anniversary of Robert Burns by a gathering at Doble's hall Wednesday evening which was one of the largest gatherings of this kind ever held and, withal, it was one of the most enjoyable gatherings, as every minute of the time between early evening and early morning was brimful of pleasure.

The first part of the evening was devoted to an interesting entertainment, which was presided over by Thomas Johnson. The first number on the programme was an address by Peter Kerr, Royal Secretary of the Scottish Clans. Mr. Kerr spoke at length on the life and character of Burns, and upon the aims and objects of the Order of Scottish Clans. Mr. Kerr is a powerful speaker and his remarks were received with much applause.

Then followed a musical programme consisting of a duet by the Misses Roche, readings by Miss Henrietta Esson, solos by Miss Roche, Miss Lizzie Esson, Mr. James Marr, Mr. William Elrick and Mr. Samuel Tutten, and selections by the Granite City Male Quartette.

The floor was then made ready for dancing, which was kept up until a late hour, music being furnished by Wilson's Orchestra. Mr. Alexander T. Black had charge of the floor, and he was assisted by an efficient corps of aids.

At midnight an elaborate supper was served.

He Needed Watching.

Wednesday evening a few of the winter residents of Hough's Neck gathered at one of the houses for a social chat. Among the party were Barton B. Derry and Peleg O'Leoned. In Derry's vest pocket there reposed a $65 gold timepiece, and in O'Leoned's mind there reposed an idea to possess that timepiece.

During the evening Mr. Derry was reclining on a sofa and while there he dozed off into a peaceful sleep, from which he awoke with a start to find that all of the party had departed and the outer door was ajar. Wondering what time of night it was his hand sought his watch pocket, only to find his watch gone.

He reported his case to the police and suspicion was fastened on O'Leoned, and Thursday afternoon Inspector McKay placed him under arrest.

On the way to the police station the prisoner desired to visit an outbuilding and while there he rid himself of the watch, so that when the police station was reached and he was searched nothing was found.

It was not long, afterward, however, before Officer Ferguson walked into the station and turned the missing watch over to Chief Hayden, Officer Ferguson having recovered it from Mr. Forrest, the owner of the outbuilding.

O'Leoned was arraigned in court Friday morning.

Young Men's Christian Asso.

Mr. T. D. Roberts, superintendent of the Boston Industrial Home will speak at the men's meeting in the Presbyterian church, South Quincy, on Sunday, at 3.30 P. M. He will have for his subject, "The sin of impurity." The solos by Mr. Roberts will amply repay one for attending.

Next Monday evening at 7.30, the class in German will meet. Prof. Schroeder is a first-class teacher and young men should embrace this grand opportunity of learning a language at so small a cost. A $2 membership in the Association and $1 as the fee, entitles you to this class.

Mr. J. E. Merritt will have charge of the boys' meeting to be held this morning at 9.45. His subject will be "The importance of Decision." Parents should see that their boys leave home in time for this meeting. The meeting is opened by a 15 minute song service

A new basket ball outfit has been ordered for the gymnasium. It is expected to arrive today.

The meeting of the Debating Club was well attended Thursday night, about 30 young men being present. Councilman J. Q. A. Field spoke at length. The vote on the merits of the debate was 11 to 6 in favor of the negative.

The subject for the next debate is "Resolved, that Thomas B. Reed should be the standard bearer of the nation."

District Court, Quincy.

John Gallagher was sentenced to three months in the House of Correction for drunkenness at Quincy.

Augustus Pitts was fined $5 for drunkenness at Quincy.

Peter Burgess was fined $3 for assault on Augustus Pitts.

Frank, Charles and John Antoine of Cohasset were arraigned for assault on Michael Toomy. The evidence in the case showed that the assault if any was committed by Toomy and the Antoines were discharged.

Timothy Regan of Weymouth was fined $8 for cruelty to a horse.

George Gourley, of Quincy, was sent to the truant school at Walpole for one year for truancy.

The cases of George Gourley, Benjamin Leavitt and John Parker for stealing and burning shingles from Henry H. Faxon came up and were disposed of as follows: Gourley's case was placed on file, Benjamin Leavitt was discharged, John Parker was fined $3 and Charles Leavitt was fined $2.

John F. Smith was fined $7 for drunkenness at Weymouth.

Patrick J. Simms was fined $5 for drunkenness at Quincy, and $6 for assault on Frank W. French.

Daniel A. Quinn secured a verdict of $150 in the Superior court in his action of tort against J. H. Elcock et al for the loss of an eye in quarry.

Alexander McDonnell was fined $5 for drunkenness at Braintree. He did not happen to have the money with him as he had left his pocketbook at home. He was given until next Monday to raise the money.

Walter Holm was fined $5 for drunkenness at Quincy.

Antonio Breno was fined $5 for carrying firearms in the Metropolitan Park Reservation.

The case of Benjamin Stover, the 11 year old juvenile who has been terrorizing the store keepers and business places for some months past, was called, and upon recommendation of the State agent he was sent to the Reform school.

Peleg O'Leoned was arraigned for the larceny of a watch valued at $65 from the person of Barton B. Derry, and held in $500 for the grand jury.

The members of Merry Mount lodge, A. O. U. W., turned out in large numbers Tuesday evening, it being the installation of the newly elected officers by Deputy W. S. Haliburton and suite of Boston.

The Westland Case.

Another hearing in the celebrated case of Clan McGregor against William Westland was held Saturday; at 1 o'clock all the government witnesses had been examined.

The defence did not put on any witnesses, as at the completion of the government's side Mr. McAnarney, counsel for Mr. Westland, raised a legal point which the court desired to consider, and continued the case two weeks.

$100 Reward $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

TOOTH TALKS - No. 1

A Dental Departure

One thing that has helped make our patrons loyal to us, is our willingness to explain as we work, so everything we do is understood. They appreciate this as instructive, besides the satisfaction of knowing what's being done and why.

Now, we propose to give a series of short chats or "Dental Dissentations" in our advertisements—some new bit of information every other week. We believe this will also be appreciated and followed with interest—there'll be some revelations in up-to-date dentistry, to the uninitiated. Watch for it, PATRIOT readers.

In the mean time notice some of our prices—we'll tell you later how they're possible.

No Use Arguing with a Woman who has once used IVORINE WASHING POWDER. You can't persuade her that anything else is "just as good," or that gives her so much for her money. This is the way she reasons: "A pound and one-half package of Ivorine costs me 12c. With each package I get a splendid cake of Toilet Soap — worth at the very least 5 cents. Taking this out makes the Ivorine cost me only 7 cents per package. I know it's the purest and best washing powder, because its manufacturers have had the highest reputation for half a century, and that is guarantee enough."

IVORINE WASHING POWDER

"My mother has used Ivorine Washing Powder for a long time, and thinks it unequalled. She has tried a number of other powders recommended as just as good, but has found them all failures. Ivorine is prime. We use it for everything." — MARY E. KIERNAN, Portsmouth, R. I.

"The cake of soap which we find in each package of Ivorine is alone worth 15 cents to us as a Toilet Soap." — W. R. BABINGTON, Daytona, Fla.

A choice cake of Olive Oil Soap will be found in each package of IVORINE Washing Powder.

Does he get a bid from all the attorneys he knows and then employ the cheapest? We think not. The same principle applies to the buying of a range. It's true economy to buy the best, particularly so when the price of Glenwoods at this store is no more than vastly inferior ranges elsewhere, $20.00 to $33.00. SATURDAY, FEB. 1, 1896.

February.

One step the new year takes, and—lo!
  Caught in a labyrinth he stands;
The second month since long ago
  Has helped to fasten Cupid's bands.

The God of Love has much to do,
  The birds must mate, true hearts must bind,
And late at work, and early, too,
  The silken meshes he must wind.

The month, as centuries, is old,
  Yet spoke no word of warning true!
The year, like youth, would not be told—
  Must live the story old, yet new.

—Sarah E. Howard.

Notes and Comments.

—There are five Saturdays in this month, today being the first. It hardly seems possible to get so many into so short a month.

—Four months have five Sundays this year: March, May, August and November. The vacation month has a liberal supply and old Prob says it is to be a pleasant month, so many will enjoy a quiet outing.

—The predictions are, very pleasant weather for the month of February.

—February 22d, Washington's birthday, is approaching and is the first legal holiday this year. The school children should be preparing patriotic exercises for Friday afternoon the 21st.

—Parents often make a great mistake in not seeing for themselves the surroundings of their children during school hours. Moreover, they should make it manifest to the teacher that they mean to co operate with her. Invite her to your home—not in a general way, but at a definite time. Make her feel that you want her to be something more than the teacher of your child. Make a friend of her if you can; at least give her the opportunity to show that she has another side to her nature than that which she shows in the classroom.

—How large a part the savings banks of Massachusetts play in the system of public economy is shown by the report of the commissioners, just made to the Legislature. The number of open accounts in these banks last year was 1,302,479; and as the total population of the state is 2,500,000, this gives more than one savings bank account to every two persons living here. Another interesting thing is shown by this report. The number of open accounts last year was greater than in the year preceeding, as also was the number of deposits made; while the average amount of individual accounts and of individual deposits was less. This means that persons of limited means are laying up their money more generally; that is, that the savings banks are fulfilling their mission.—Boston Commonwealth.

—The Somerville Journal seems to have grasped and mastered the Memorial Day observance question for it says: "Every one sees the fitness of paying public tribute on one day of the year to the bravery of fallen soldiers, but it is not practical to have Memorial day set apart for that exclusively. The modern tendency is to make a holiday a feast day, rather than a fast day, and the recent abolition of Fast day was accomplished because those who were interested in the religious observance of the day saw that there was no possibility of doing away with the incongruities. In the case of Memorial day the incongruity is not so great. It is not practicable to have the whole day given up to inculcating lessons of patriotism, and there is no great harm done by the indulgence in sports that has come to be the rule. The only practical way to have Memorial day set apart exclusively for honoring the memory of our soldiers is to have the date movable, so that Memorial day will always come on Sunday. So long as the day is a week-day holiday sports are inevitable, and no legislative enactment can be secured to stop them."

—English greed for American money is again shown to the public in a way that reflects anything but credit on the young Duke of Marlborough. He is hardly married to Miss Vanderbilt and her millions before he induces her to have her life insured for $3,000,000 in his favor. We should think the poor little bride would be afraid to go to sleep for fear of not being allowed to wake up again. The Vanderbilt family are very indignant over the matter.

Literary Note.

Henry M. Stanley, in an article on the "Development of Africa," which is to appear in the February Century, recalls the fact that troubles with the Boers in southern Africa first induced David Livingstone to travel to the north, and so led the way to the opening of Equatorial Africa. Livingstone, who was a missionary at Kolobeng, accused his Boer neighbors of cruelty to the natives. They resented his interference, and threatened to drive him from the country. He published their misdeeds in the Cape newspapers, and his house was burned in revenge. This led to his leaving southern Africa and going to a region where he could follow in peace his vocation as a missionary, unmolested by the Boer farmers.

High School Reunion.

The second annual reunion of the association of the alumni of the Quincy High school, Jan. 24, ensures a successful future for this association, although the attendance was not as large as it should have been. It was a stormy night, however, and there were many other attractions. As it was, there were about 100 present, a very pretty party for the size of the hall, when it came to the dancing.

The graduates and friends were late in arriving but from 7.45 to 8.30 a reception was given. President and Mrs. H. W. Battison being assisted in receiving by Mayor C. F. Adams, Chairman C. H. Porter of the School board and Mrs. Porter, and the head master of the school, Mr. Frederic Allison Tupper and wife. Mr. C. Eaton Pierce was head usher and was assisted by Mr. Percival A. Hall, Mr. John J. Reardon, Mr. Charles W. Hall and others.

About the platform were palms and plants, and in the corner to the right where the guests were received, were rugs and easy chairs.

Ladies and Gentlemen, Fellow Alumni and Classmates,—It is with the greatest pleasure that I greet you this evening on the occasion of our second annual reunion. Many of you, I feel that I may truly say, I know; others of you, I know only by name, but I hope to know you better, for this is one of the fundamental principles of our association, to bring the graduates together that they may become acquainted with and interested in one another, and then working as one person, with unlimited ability, capacity and resource, accomplish the aim of the association in advancing the interests of our dear Alma Mater, the Quincy High school.

I wonder how many, or rather, I would say how few, of us on looking back cannot recall the feelings we experienced when we realized that we were no longer members of the school, that after the long vacation to which we had been accustomed for so many years, and which many of us were to enjoy for the last time, we would not return to the old places so dear, but that we were to make another start on new and unfamiliar lines, and that the Quincy High school was to us no longer a vivid reality, but only a memory. Then and then only, I feel safe in saying, did we realize how dear it had become to us.

To many of you the Quincy High school is represented by this noble building, but there are many others of us who know nothing of this structure, but whose memory brings to view the old white building, on a little knoll at the end of a lane, whose every nook and corner recalls some little episode which warms the heart or brings a smile to the face. Yet it is not the building or the place which holds our affection, it is the associations connected with those good old days,—the classmates, the teachers, and all that goes to make up a happy and pleasant little world. For at that time the school room was our world for at least part of the year. Each one busy with his tasks, engaged in a friendly rivalry as to who should lead; the teachers always ready to help over a difficult spot; the associations formed to last not only through school days, but all the after years of life; and last, and surely not the least of all, the habits and characters being unconsciously formed to last till life should be no more. With such recollections, it seems but natural that such an association as this should be formed, and it is a wonder to me that our membership instead of being as limited as it now is, does not include fully 50 per cent. of the entire alumni, and 90 per cent. of the recent graduates.

Last year when this association was formed, it was thought that the alumni would rally to its support but such, as we all know, was not the case. This year we find that though the increase is not so great as might be desired, we are growing. It assuredly is better to build slowly and surely, rather than to start with a large membership only to find the same dwindling away each year. I am gratified to see so many of those who joined at the outset with us tonight, and to see so many new faces. I feel tonight that the association is an assured fact, and already a success; and I hope that at our first quarterly meeting (to occur before long) that I shall again be able to greet you. The idea of this meeting may set some of you to wondering as to what it is and its intention. The committee who so ably last year drew up the constitution, decided that not only should we hold an annual reunion for social purposes, but that we should also have quarterly meetings of a literary cast, to not only advance our own ideas, but to keep the association in mind, and its purpose to advance the interests of the school. It is the intention of the present board of officers to hold these meetings as stated, and to attempt to make them so interesting that each one will look forward to the next gathering with pleasureable anticipation.

Let each one of us then, take a deep and loyal interest in this association, for by so doing we shall be promoting its aims and objects and the Quincy High School Association will be a true and grand success.

Miss Lucy Hayes was first introduced and her deep contralto solos were so well received that she sang three selections: "My Hearts in the Highlands," Schumann; "The Danza," Chadwick; and "The Blue Bell," MacDowell.

Mr. Tupper responded with a poem, entitled "Harping on an old string," which was well received, and will appear in full in Monday's LEDGER.

After a selection by the orchestra Mayor Adams was introduced as a member of a family which had been prominent in educational affairs. He spoke at length saying in part: The objects of the association were to promote the interests of the High school, but this would promote the interests of the city. Quincy had a stability, solidity and character, and it was her schools, particularly the High which developed character.

A musical number by Mr. Walter E. Loud followed, and then ex-Mayor Porter was introduced. With a brief preliminary he unfolded a movement for beautifying the interior of the High school building with works of art, which will be made the subject of a special article in the LEDGER next week.

Hendrie furnished light refreshments of cream, sherbets, cake and coffee. Then for two hours dancing was enjoyed to excellent music by Loud's orchestra, the ushers having charge of the floor.

Verdict for City.

The case of Mary Nelson of Atlantic against the City of Quincy was tried in the Superior Court at Dedham Monday. The suit was for $4000 damages, which Mrs. Nelson claimed from the city by reason of having met with an accident on the sidewalk opposite her house, which she claims was left by the city in a dangerous and defective condition after some grading had been done there by the city's men. The jury came in shortly before adjournment of court and rendered a verdict for the city. Bartlett Anderson of Boston for the plaintiff, Paul R. Blackmur, City Solicitor, for the city.

Daughters of the Revolution.

Monday afternoon about seventy-five ladies of Quincy, in response to invitations sent out by Miss Annie L. Prescott, to meet the Regents of the Daughters of the Revolution of the State, met at her home 13 Spear street, from three to five.

In the receiving party were Mrs. Nelson V. Titus, Mrs. George F. Daniels, State secretary and also acting Regent; Mrs. John W. Perkins, regent of North Bridge Chapter, Salem; Mrs. Edson, regent of Mary Warren Chapter, Roxbury; Mrs. Mary E. Meredith, regent of Dorothy Q. Chapter, Boston; Mrs. M. P. Clough, regent of Lynn Chapter; Mrs. Henry White, of the State Council; also Miss Emily F. Pope of the State Council.

The ushers were Miss Miriam R. Houghton of Dorchester, Miss Ethel Fish of Roxbury, Miss Emily C. Wilde and Miss Ruth Randall of Quincy. After the introductions Miss Prescott called the meeting to order and introduced Mrs. Titus, a very enthusiastic Daughter of the Revolution.

Mrs. Titus spoke very feelingly of Mrs. William Lee, Regent of the Massachusetts Chapters and regretted that her serious illness prevented her from being present and introduced Mrs. Daniels the State Secretary who is Vice Regent during Mrs. Lee's illness.

As five, the required number of charter members were present it was decided to organize the Quincy Chapter. Mrs. Lillie Blanche Titus as Regent and Miss Annie Lincoln Prescott, as secretary, took the oath of office and the Quincy Chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution was duly organized.

Remarks were made by the Regents and visiting "daughters" which were so bright and enthusiastic that many of the guests encored.

At the close of the talks Mrs. Titus announced that arrangements were being made to secure the John Adams house for the home for the new chapter. She said the new chapter would furnish the old house in a style corresponding with Colonial times. As the birthplace of John Quincy Adams has been given by Hon. Charles Francis Adams to the Quincy Historical society, these two historical houses will become the centre of interest to our towns people as well as to tourists from all over the country.

After Mrs. Titus' pleasing remarks, the company gathered in animated groups and discussed and asked questions of the "Daughters" who were more experienced, and as a result, Mrs. Daniels the State secretary, will be kept busy for a day or two sending application papers to Quincy.

When more applications have been approved and further details looked after, a treasurer will be elected, arrangements made for regular meetings and a name selected for the chapter.

The house was darkened and made brilliant inside with gas and fancy lamps. The dining room decorations were pink and Miss May Rice poured chocolate and Miss Alice Keith Prescott, poured tea, assisted by the ushers all gowned in pretty light dresses.

We congratulate the Quincy Chapter on its selection of Mrs. Titus as regent. Mrs. Titus is not only an active, ardent Daughter of the Revolution, but she is a very capable business woman and will make the Quincy Chapter without doubt the best and most flourishing in the State. We extend our congratulations and wish the young chapter every success in the future.

Castle Square Theatre, Boston.

Verdi's masterpiece "Il Trovatore" will be continued another week at the Castle Square Theatre. This is in response to the unanimous request of the theatre's patrons who have found the theatre filled at every performance and a consequent difficulty in securing seats. Trovatore, the Twenty-eighth opera produced by the Castle Square Opera Company, has proved the greatest success of them all. Not only are the members of the company excellently cast, but the opera itself is produced in the same thorough manner that has been the source of so much comment during the long season. Monday evening next, Feb. 3, will witness the opening of the Gilbert and Sullivan Season with that favorite opera "Iolanthe." Mr. Rose promises an adequate production, which has come to mean, when used by him, that the opera will be placed upon the stage with every detail that experience can suggest and money buy. The cast will be an exceptionally strong one. Miss Lane will sing the role of Phyllis; Miss Mason, Iolanthe; and Miss Leighton the Fairy Queen. Mr. Wolff will be the Lord Chancellor; Mr. Murray, the Strephon, while the two frisky Lords will fall to the lot of Messrs. Persse and Wooley. A new face to Castle Square patrons will be that of Mr. M. H. Clark who sings the basso role of the Sentry. Now that the 300th mile stone is past, the company may look forward confidently to another century of performances.

About Winter Crepons.

A practical hint of the future is gathered from the gossip of the shops. One of the richest yet most conservative of the great dry-goods stores when sending two buyers abroad in search of woolen goods for next winter instructed them not to buy crepon, believing this fabric to have had its day of favor with American women. At last report these buyers cabled home that they must buy crepon, as there is little or nothing else in the European market for the next season. At another house of great repute more than two-thirds of the wool samples received for next winter are creped, but in new and fanciful weaving, different from anything now seen. These crepons of the future are also two-toned, some of them changeable, others in stripes and plaids.

These facts are of value to economists, who find crepons, at greatly reduced prices filling the counters of the shops, many of them a dollar less in the yard than was asked at the beginning of the season. Black, corn-flower blue, golden brown, and violet are apparently safe colors to buy, and it is also well to look for those barred or striped in two colors, and also dotted, as a season of fancy fabrics is predicted.

Did you ever stop to think what indigestion really means? It means simply that your stomach is tired. If our legs are tired, we ride. The horse and the steam engine do the work. Why not give your stomach a ride; that is, let something else do its work. Foods can be digested outside of the body. All plants contain digestive principals which will do this. The Shaker Digestive Cordial contains digestive principles and is a preparation designed to rest the stomach. The Shakers themselves have such unbounded confidence in it that they have placed 10 cent sample bottles on the market, and it is said that even so small a quantity proves beneficial in a vast majority of cases. All druggists keep it.

Laxol is the best medicine for children. Doctors recommend it in place of Castor oil.

Household Receipts.

POTATO HASH. Chop cold boiled potatoes, put them in a sauce-pan, dust with a tablespoonful of flour, and to each pint of potatoes add a tablespoonful of butter, a half-pint of milk, a half teaspoonful of onion juice, and a quarter teaspoonful of pepper. Bring to boiling point, stir gently without breaking the potatoes, and serve at once.

HAMBURG STEAKS. Chop one pound of lean beef, add to it one tablespoonful of onion juice, half teaspoonful of salt, and a quarter teaspoonful of black pepper; mix well together. Moisten the hands in cold water, take two tablespoonfuls of the mixture and form with the hands into small round cakes or steaks. This quantity should make eight. Put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying-pan, when hot put in the steaks, brown on one side, then turn and brown the other. Dish them, add a teaspoonful of flour to the butter remaining in the pan, mix until smooth, add a half pint of boiling water, stir constantly until it boils; add salt and pepper, and if you like a tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce, pour this over the steaks and serve; or they may be broiled same as a plain steak, seasoned with salt and pepper and spread with butter.

CHOCOLATE CAKE. For two sheets of cake use three ounces of chocolate, three eggs, one cupful and three fourths of sifted flour, one cupful and three fourths of sugar, half a cupful of butter, half a cupful of milk, half a teaspoonful of vanilla extract, one teaspoonful and a half of baking powder. Grate the chocolate. Beat the butter to a cream, and gradually beat in the sugar. Beat in the milk and vanilla, then the eggs, well beaten, next the chocolate, and finally the flour, in which the baking powder should be mixed. Pour into two well-buttered shallow cake-pans. Bake for twenty-five minutes in a moderate oven.

CARROTS. A delicate entree is made by grating ten small table carrots, and putting them into a saucepan with three ounces of butter. Let them simmer gently fifteen minutes, then add salt, pepper, a very small onion chopped fine, and a teaspoonful of chopped parsley. When the carrots are tender, drain the butter from them and serve hot. This a nice dish to serve with roast beef.

A NEW WAY TO COOK APPLES. Fill a quart bowl with alternate layers of thinly-sliced apples and sugar; add half a teacup of water, cover with a saucer held in place by a weight. Bake slowly three hours. Let it stand until cold and you will turn out a rounded mass of clear red slices imbeded in firm jelly. Cooked in this way few deserts are more delicious.

TURKEY SOUP. Put all the bones and the bits left from a dinner into three quarts of water. If you have turkey gravy or the remnants of chickens add them also, and one onion. Boil two hours or more. Strain and set aside in a cool place till the next day. Then take all the fat from the top. Take the bones and pieces of skin from the meat, cut it in small pieces and return it to the liquor. Add salt and pepper to taste and a tablespoonful of minced parsley. Let it all boil together a few minutes and serve.

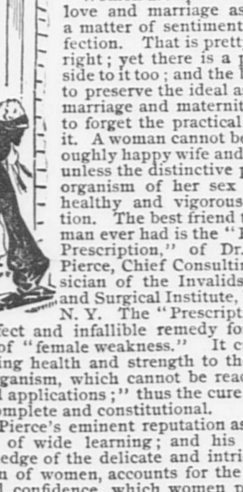

STEWED BREAST OF LAMB. Wipe the breast with a damp towel, cut into pieces, season with pepper and salt, and lay in a stewpan; pour over sufficient water or soup stock to cover, and set over the fire to stew gently until tender. Take up on a heated dish, thicken the sauce, and season it with salt, pepper, and mint; let come to a boil, and pour around the meat.

BREAST OF MUTTON GRILLED. Half boil a breast of mutton, score it, and season it with pepper and salt, rub it over with the yolk of an egg, and sprinkle it with bread crumbs and sweet herbs chopped fine. Put it over a clear fire and broil it gently till it is a fine brown color. Chop a sprig of parsley, an onion, four pickled cucumbers and a tablespoonful of capers; boil them five minutes in half a pint of gravy. Put a teaspoonful of butter into a saucepan with a scant tablespoonful of flour, cook till smooth and brown, add the gravy, give it one boil, and pour over the mutton.

Spools.

Practically all the wood used in making spools for thread in this country and great Britain is cut in Maine forests, but so great is the amount of lumber required each year for the making of these seemingly insignificant articles that Maine will not be able to supply the raw material much longer. The spools are made of birch wood and the birch of the Maine forest is the best for the purpose. More than two million feet of lumber is shipped to Scotland every year for the use of the great thread manufactories there, and almost as much is supplied to domestic manufactories. The business began in Maine twenty-five years ago, and land that was cut over at that time is now well covered with young trees, but not for twenty-five years more will this timber be fit to cut.

Forty-eight English pennies weigh, as nearly as possible, one pound.

When love knocks at a woman's heart he usually comes in disguise. Doesn't want it known what he's up to. If she knew all about the little rascal, would she let him in? That's a question.

Women are apt to look upon love and marriage as purely a matter of sentiment and affection. That is pretty nearly right; yet there is a practical side to it too; and the best way to preserve the ideal aspect of marriage and maternity is not to forget the practical part of it. A woman cannot be a thoroughly happy wife and mother unless the distinctive physical organism of her sex is in a healthy and vigorous condition. The best friend that woman ever had is the "Favorite Prescription," of Dr. R. V. Pierce, Chief Consulting Physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y. The "Prescription," is a perfect and infallible remedy for every form of "female weakness." It cures by restoring health and strength to the internal organism, which cannot be reached by "local applications;" thus the cure is radical, complete and constitutional.

Dr. Pierce's eminent reputation as a physician of wide learning; and his special knowledge of the delicate and intricate organism of women, accounts for the unparalleled confidence, which women place in his "Favorite Prescription," over every other remedy. Its use obviates the necessity of dreaded "examinations" and the stereotyped "local treatments."

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Dear Sir:—I suffered fourteen years with female weakness, nervousness, and general debility, trying everything I could find to help me—all to no avail. I then heard of Dr. Pierce's medicines and although I was thoroughly discouraged, I thought I would try once more to find relief. I took your "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Favorite Prescription," and too great praise cannot be given for the rapid relief they gave me. I am now free from the former troubles. Very sincerely yours,

The Waste of the Saloon.

The saloon is the great and unrivalled barrier that impedes the poor mans progress to independence and plenty. Into the coffers of the American saloon the wage-earners of the country generously pour a billion of dollars a year. American opportunities are wasted because of the maddening curse of drink. Destitution and want in this country, in the vast majority of instances, are the results of profligate patronage of the saloon-keeper's business.

If so many of the toilers of the land simply camp in the wilderness of great tenement structures and drag out their lives in hopeless poverty, the lamentable fact is, to an alarming extent, the result of paying a too generous tribute to the liquor-seller's trade. When rum is no more. The increased consumption of bread will raise the prise of wheat. The increased demand for shoes will increase the demand for hides. The increased call for clothing will make the wool and cotton markets boom. The penitentiaries will be depleted, and the contract labor problem will solve itself. Twenty-five millions a week will be restored to legitimate trade, and hard times will vanish like the morning mist.—Temperance Cause.

Saved by a Magnet.

Joseph Brown's eyesight was saved by a magnet, at the Eye and Ear infirmary recently. Brown is workman, employed at Plainfield, N. J. On Saturday, while at work, a piece of his steel flew from his hammer, and imbedded itself in his eye.

An examination showed that the steel had sunk so deeply into his eye that any attempt to cut it out with knives would probably result in loss of sight.

He was taken to the Eye and Ear infirmary here. That institution possesses the strongest magnet in the world. It consists of coiled wire, about twelve inches in diameter, and two feet in length. At the ends the soft iron comes down to points. The magnet is connected with the dynamo in the building. The exact strength of the magnet is not known, but it is supposed that it will hold up 100 pounds by the power of attraction.

Brown's head was brought close to one of these points, and his eye carefully opened. He felt a sharp sensation of pain, and then on the blood-stained eyeball appeared a small bit shinning of steel, which had come to the surface of the wound. A small magnet was then placed to his eye, and the steel was drawn away. The doctors say he will not lose his sight.

The use of the magnet in such cases is not rare, the doctors say, and it has prevented many a man from becoming blind. —New York Herald.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

NORFOLK, ss. QUINCY, Dec. 13, 1895.

BY Virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment in favor of John H. Dinegan of Quincy, in said County, against Thomas Farrell of said Quincy, I this day seized and took all the right, title and interest the within named Thomas Farrell had on the 13th day of September, A. D. 1895, at 9 o'clock P. M., this being the time when the same was attached on mesne process in and to the following described parcel of real estate, viz.:

Being lot No. 25 on a plan of land belonging to J. B. Fletcher and A. J. Tetro, to be found recorded with Norfolk Plan and bounded northeasterly on land of Huntington 61 9-100 feet; southeasterly on land now or late of said Fletcher and Tetro being lot No. 23 on said plan, 41 9-10 feet; southwesterly on land now or late of said Fletcher and Tetro, being lot No. 24 on said plan, 100 feet; northwesterly on a certain private way that may be called Farrell street, 64 15-100 feet containing five thousand, four hundred fifty-two square feet more or less. Being the same premises conveyed to me by said Fletcher and Tetro, by deed dated Nov. 30, A. D., 1885, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, libro 5 3, folio 4 5; and on SATURDAY, the 15th day of February, A. D., 1896, at two o'clock in the afternoon, at my residence, No. 53 Franklin street, Quincy, in said County, I shall offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder the aforesaid right, title and interest of said Thomas Farrell to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

Poetry.

Kind Neighbors Looking In.

What words to human hearts more sweet
Than honest "Kith and Kin?"
That speak of home where dear ones meet,
Kind neighbors looking in.

I see the ruddy hearth-fire blaze,
I hear the cheerful din,
That merry, friendly voices raise,
Kind neighbors looking in.

The good old words that touch the heart,
What memories they win
Of home, where loved ones meet and part,
Of neighbors looking in!

Of cordial hand-grasp, tender kiss,
'Twixt faithful kith and kin,
Oh! what has life of greater bliss,—
Kind neighbors looking in?

—Good Housekeeping.

Miscellany.

DOCTOR JOHN.

Of all the queer creatures you ever came across, Dr. John was the queerest. He looked queer. His figure was too broad for its height, and his mild, kindly brown eyes seemed to be forever apologizing for the fierce little red mustache that tried in vain to hide the firm, pleasant mouth beneath it. He was not very young, fast nearing the forties, and the soft brown hair on his forehead was getting quite thin. He was absent-minded to an alarming degree, and a bit shortsighted. He had no home, but lived around in boarding-houses, carrying always about with him a small menagerie (picked up in India years ago), a stuffed tiger, with fierce, horrible eyes, a parrot that refused positively to utter a syllable, but strutted about in a big gilt cage with becoming dignity, and a pale, grinning skeleton and brown, weazened-faced mummy, besides a lot of curios and antiques, for which this quiet, unobtrusive little old bachelor had a passion. Indeed, it seemed his one object in life was to collect all the queer things imaginable and carry them about from city to city in two mammoth trunks that called forth "curses not loud but deep" from long suffering express men.

After drifting over half the world, he one day landed, way down in quaint old New Orleans, and went looking about in all sorts of locations for "Rooms to Let" or "Boarding."

Somehow, he felt drawn to "inquire within," because of a certain homeliness that seemed to prevade the long, low doorstep.

The landlady one of those delicate, refined women that abound in our large cities; women that have lost the golden apple of success. He thought her terms exceedingly reasonable, but he did not say so. He only asked, in his mild, soft voice, if Mrs. Carlisle, for such was his landlady's name, would object to the stuffed tiger's resting quietly in an alcove just under the stairway.

Mrs. Carlisle was rather dubious.

A flighty young widow roomed on the first floor, a little affected, nervous creature, who declared that she was afraid of the very shadow that sometimes danced or collided in a most gruesome fashion on the chamber wall, and then a family of mischievous, bright-eyed little boys, whose supreme delight would have been to pull the skin away from Mr. Tiger's lips, or pluck out his baleful eyes, had apartments in a near vicinity.

But the little doctor had such a gentlemanly bearing, and without the asking laid out a month's board in advance, that the little lady agreed, and much sorrow came of it. The fluffy-haired widow alarmed the house at dead of night with blood-curdling shrieks of "A wild beast from the circus has got in the hall! Oh, save me! Save me!" Dr. John did the heroic act, and explanations followed, but the little widow refused to be comforted, and gave notice that she would leave at once. And all the little bright-eyed boys belonging to the interesting family cried out, "Goody! I'm so glad she's a-doin' away! She won't 'et us tie her canary bird's feet to der cage. So glad she's a doin' away! All of which greatly complicated matters.

But Mrs. Carlisle, with all her wealth of gentle tact, and the three girls, Marian, Minnie, and Virginia, managed to arrange things amicably after a while.

Dr. John was happy. The little boys were sorrowful. The timid young widow remained—remained to cast languishing glances at Dr. John when his vis-a-vis at the breakfast table, but which were entirely lost on that odd specimen of bachelorism, who, on account of his short sightedness and utter lack of self-appreciation, never even dreamed of it. Indeed, women didn't bother the gentle physician much, though he had found himself thinking once or twice that Mrs. Carlisle's three daughters were a rather pleasant addition to the dinner at five.

Marian, the eldest, a tall, stylish girl, who seemed to dwell always apart—a dreamer and artist—who never had company in the parlor, but who was well up in all the leading topics of the day, and courted learning's dangerous, if fascinating, powers.

Minnie was just as different as could be. She was pretty, and blonde, and plump—no angles anywhere. A laughing, dazzling creature that pined in her secret soul for the wonderful delights that attended the rich and fashionable.

She yearned to be in "society." She'd had a peep into this fairyland and longed for a good, square, full-face glance, but, dear, dear! She was poor. How tiresome it all was! True, a few swell—"real society"—boys called on her sometimes in the pleasant winter evenings, and one of them had even been bold enough to invite her to a little reception given by his recherche club. She had gone, and enjoyed it, too, in spite of rather chilling glances and unsympathetic smiles from the queens of the kingdom; and one or two whispers had reached her as to whom she could be? "Her mother keeps a boarding-house, I believe," and other little stings.

Virginia was entirely different. She had a little thin, dark face, and a wide, lovely mouth.

She made fun of Marion and Minnie and their pet hobbies. She laughed shamelessly at poor unsuspecting Dr. John, his private museum, the cut of his coat, and his fierce little red mustache. She made fun of their keeping boarders, and even of the old genealogical tree that her mother so fondly treasured. She laughed at the old-fashioned furniture, and made faces in the rather murky French glass mirrors in their ponderous gilt frames, but rubbed the former till it looked new and shiny, and polished the latter until they grew actually ashamed of their dingy backgrounds, and reflected only the bright and flaming things. Yes, Virginia was an energetic little soul, and declared often that if things ever came to the worst, which they hardly ever do, that she would hire out as an artistic decorator of interiors, as her most fervent delight was in making the house attractive, moving the furniture, and re-arranging the ornaments, draping curtains, or hanging pictures.

Again a fit of laziness would come over her, and she would lie on the sofa all day long reading.

The flighty widow, who never affiliated with Marion or Minnie, had taken Virginia into her confidence long ago—had told her how lonely her life was, or would be if it were not for a certain consul to Italy, whom she met often in society. Of course, she would not speak of this to any one else—a widow had to be so careful, she was so cruelly watched; every little innocent word or look criticised—but it was so easy to talk to Virginia. She understood things so well. And those terrible boys were always willing to allow the pater and mater an evening at the opera if Virginia would come and sit with them and tell fairy tales—she knew such jolly good ones—until sweet sleep would kiss their eyelids down.

And Virginia had her dream of a fairy prince that would surely come for her some day. He would be tall, fair-haired, and with eyes as blue as the waters of lake Pontchartrain.

Ah, he would be a goodly knight, and she would love him well.

Mardi Gras.

The little widow handed over her invitations to the balls for inspection. How pretty they were. Minnie sighed dolefully. Marion, who had a soul above such things, was supremely indifferent, but Virginia said, in a burst of confidence and with a little patient smile of resignation: "I never attended a Mardi Gras ball in my life. I'd like to go."

Dr. John looked up from his paper—looked again—cleared his throat, and then realized with a sort of shock that Virginia was not quite happy. Little Virginia, whose very presence brought sunshine and laughter and joyous content.

It must not be. If Virginia wanted to attend the Mardi Gras balls, why, it must be so arranged. He coughed again, folded his paper in a precise and irreproachable little fold, and then said:

"If you young ladies would like to go to the balls, I will take you with pleasure."

There was a moment of intense silence. Virginia could hardly suppress a desire to giggle. Ye Gods! go to the Mardi Gras balls with Dr. John. Did anyone ever hear of such a good joke? Would he wear a little blue sack coat, not thinking of full dress rules and regulations, and forget that a carriage was one of the requisites?

But Minnie was beginning to blush and dimple all over. She realized that Dr. John was in earnest.

"Oh, how delightful!" she broke out impulsively, "Dear Dr. John, how kind of you. Will you really take us?"

A kind, warm smile lingered about the doctor's pleasant mouth, just under the fierce little red mustache.

"I will be glad to be of any service to you at any time, and certainly will arrange this little thing about the balls. Miss Virginia"; he added, after a moment, and a little awkwardly, "you will go too?"

"Of course, I will. A real live ball! Me, Virginia Carlisle, a scion of a noble but sadly decayed race, to glory in the purple and fine linen of swelldom. I am amazed. I hardly grasp the meaning of it all. My spirit soars—to laces and ribbons, white gloves and high-heeled slippers, violets for my corsage and in my rippling hair. On! on! to conquests and the Mardi Gras balls—thanks to Dr. John."

* * * * *

Such elegant costumes! Such beautiful women! The ballroom is indeed a scene long to be remembered. A scene one never forgets. How inspiring is the music! The breath of flowers floats upward, faint and sweet.

Minnie and Virginia stand by, a bit awed. It is in very truth the grandest thing they have ever before witnessed. Nobody comes to them to dance just at first. A queer sort of feeling comes into both their pretty round throats. Two or three of those "real society boys" have bowed to Minnie as they pass, dancing with other girls, but have not come nearer. A lonesomeness, a horrid, shamed sort of red creeps into her satin-like cheek, while an indignant flash emits from Virginia's stars of eyes.

Just then a mild voice is saying right into her ear: "Ah, here we are. Miss Carlisle, Miss Virginia, let me introduce my friend, Mr. Langdon," and Dr. John brings forward an elegant-looking gentleman, who immediately asks Minnie for the dance that is just beginning. Dr. John turns a bit red, and says, simply: "Miss Virginia, will you dance with me?"

Virginia forgets to think it queer that Dr. John can dance; that it is unusual to see him in full dress evening suit; that his moustache is red and his hair thin on the temples. She only feels a sort of fierce joy that she is no longer a poor, neglected young girl, with fast-beating heart and tears of mortification near, very near, the pretty bright eyes. How well he dances, this quiet, unassuming, short-sighted Dr. John. Who would have believed it!

Never until tonight did Virginia realize that the little doctor was, after all her jokes, a New Yorker, and a gentleman born and bred. How many people know him. She is never without a partner again. She is beginning to like it, too. These men of fashion know well how to turn a sentence gracefully. How Minnie is enjoying herself! Dancing, always dancing! Those "real society boys" are claiming a large share of her attention. Perhaps they meant to come to her all along. Perhaps her dancing with Percy Langdon, the most conservative man in town, had something to do with it. At any rate, Minnie is happy. She is "in society" for once. She is at the Krewe ball. It is very delightful, even the ride home in the satin-cushioned carriage. Virginia looks often at Dr. John. How could she have laughed at the stoop in his shoulder or the shape of his hat?

He had never thought of these little things—they seemed of so little importance to him. He could dress as fashionably, and was quite as correct form as any other man in the ultra-elegant city. Look at him tonight. How good he has been to her and Minnie. They were only two eager, innocent, young girls, without money, position, or anything but their good blood and blithesome youth. Yet he had treated them with all the consideration and polite attention of a courtier—dear Dr. John!

A little new something moved in Virginia's tender bosom. Could it be a heralder of the fairy prince?

And Dr. John stood for a long time at his window that evening, thinking. At last he closed the blinds and said out quite loud, and with a long, deep sigh:

"Yes, I'll go back to New York. I never thought it would come to me. I am almost forty years old; such things are for the young. She would laugh at me in her innocent girlishness. She would not understand, my little Virginia. Some young, talented fellow will win her. I am only Dr. John, a plain, stupid, unattractive man, fast nearing middle age, who ought to have known better than to have cast his eyes upon the brightest, sweetest bit of womanhood God ever sent to gladden earth."

And in a few days Dr. John goes from among them; goes on his weary way, even as he came—alone!

Times became hard, harder, hardest. The widow wedded the consul to Italy, and went far across the sea. The family with the boys moved to the country. Other boarders fell off. The pleasant tenement house uptown had to be given up. They moved way down in a dingy quarter of the town. The boarders were not as nice, the house was not as nice—and now there was so much more work to do.

There was no gentle Dr. John to pay a month's board in advance, which had made things so much easier; there was nobody to help in any way. One evening in February—just a year from the night of the Mardi Gras ball—with a feeling of desperation in her troubled heart, Virginia drew from a long-concealed hiding place (she had little use for such things now, poor child) a crimson silk waist and neat black skirt. Donning them both, she reached for a somewhat shabby black sailor hat, and started for Canal street, "just to be a lady for once more in my life," she whispered, with a rebellious rush of tears to the brave, bright eyes.

"Oh, if Dr. John were only here! I laughed at him and was mean; that is the way I was to be punished for it all—he was to go far, far away, and he'll never know how sorry I am."

Walking forlornly along the beautiful boulevard, pausing now and then at an especially attractive show-window, and gazing therein with an almost childish delight—she had so few pretty things now. Suddenly a hand was laid very gently on her shoulder, and a voice, a dear voice she had never forgotten for a single day or hour, was saying:

"Virginia! It must be Virginia; I've come back!"

And, yes, there he stood, right by her side, before a Canal-street, show-window—Dr. John. She turned to him, laughing and crying all at once. She was so glad and happy and rested. They took an electric car for home, and as he closed the dark, damp hall door, Dr. John took both her little trembly hands in his own firm, soft, white ones—the red silk waist and the trace of tears too often shed had done the business. The timid, little, short-sighted doctor was brave as a lion now, and said:

"Virginia, I've come back. I've come back to marry you."

And what did the foolish Virginia do but throw herself into his outstretched arms and sob out:

"Oh, I'm so glad! I'm so glad! Now you've got back, Dr. John, everything will come right again."—Mary Belle Poole, in New Orleans Picayune.

Russia's Religion Cars.

The Greek church is becoming strictly up-to-date. It has had five church cars constructed. These have penetrated Siberia as far as the road-bed of the new Siberian railroad which is to connect the eastern sea with the Czar's dominions when completed. Each car has two priests, and is fitted out with all of the paraphernalia of the regulation orthodox Greek Church that is to be seen in every Russian village of any size. The settlements in Siberia are so small and so widely scattered that it is impracticable to maintain a church for each settlement. Altogether the five churches on wheels visit seventy settlements a week.

Each settlement knows when the church car is to arrive, and all the people are expected to come down to meet it promptly for the services are held in the car immediately after its arrival. Each church can comfortably seat thirty or forty people, and two settlements are visited daily by each one. Several settlements have more people than the church can accommodate and in such cases the cars make longer stops to hold two and sometimes three services before departing.

The entire length of the road from St. Petersburg to Vladivostock will be 6,000 miles, of which 3,700 miles are yet to be constructed. It is in charge of the most competent engineers in the world, and no expense is being spared to make it of an enduring nature.—New York Press.

The New Way.

"Ever since my work began," said an old housekeeper, "I've been washing vegetables in cold water to cleanse them from the sand and insects. But it's live and learn. Now comes one of these advanced cooks, noted for experimenting in the kitchen, who tells us that we've been using the wrong method. 'Why,' she says, 'should vegetables be washed in warm water first, then cold to rinse them from sand, etc.? The hot water, which must be hotter than tepid, causes the insects and sand to fall out at once. Insects do not always dislike cold water and salt, but hot water kills them. It must be understood that only a small handful of greens or one head of cabbage at a time must be washed, and then instantly thrown into cold water, which crisps and thoroughly cleanses them. Spinach, leeks, celery and sea kale are thus rendered very clean, and, moreover, are very rapidly cleansed. It is worse than useless to attempt to cleanse vegetables in salt and water. The hardness which salt creates in the water prevents all cleansing properties. The salt may kill the insects (it does not always do this), but they stick on so hard and fast; the hot water makes them fall out at once, and the cold water crisps and also blanches them."

The Proper Time

When the most benefit is to be derived from a good medicine, is early in the year. This is the season when the tired body, weakened organs and nervous system yearn for a building-up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Many wait for the open spring weather, and, in fact, delay giving attention to their physical condition so long that a long siege of sickness is inevitable. To rid the system of the impurities accumulated during the winter season, to purify the blood and to invigorate the whole system, there is nothing equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. Don't put it off, but take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will do you good. Read the testimonials published in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla, all from reliable, grateful people. They tell the story.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met Monday evening, and transacted considerable business in less than half an hour. Many citizens witnessed the proceeding sand most of the department officials were in their seats, including the new Commissioner. Mayor Adams was present throughout the evening.

Fence Viewers,—Ward 1, Geo. O. Whitman; Ward 2, George Crane; Ward 3, James Nightingale; Ward 4, John R. O Neill; Ward 5, Quincy A. Faunce; Ward 6, Thos. H. Kingston.

Field Drivers,—William Faxon, Patrick Connors, Samuel D. DeForrest, James Berry, George Crane, William V. West, Allen T. Williams.

The Parkway.

Councilman Claflin offered the following order which was read and referred to the Committee on Finance:

That the sum of $500 is hereby appropriated; said amount to be expended by, or under the direction of the Mayor for such plans, or other expenses as are necessary to properly present the city's case in the petition for the boulevard along the shores of Quincy bay to Blue Hill Reservation, same to be charged to appropriations for Miscellaneous City Expenses when made.

County Expenses.

Councilman Field offered the following resolution which was adopted without debate:

Resolved—that his Honor, the Mayor, request the City Solicitor to appear before the Legislative Committee on County Estimates, to protest against any unnecessary appropriation of money as asked for in the estimates for Norfolk County.

Temporary Loans.

Councilman Rice offered an order authorizing City Treasurer to borrow $250,000 in anticipation of taxes in addition to amount already authorized. To Committee on Finance.

The Council then adjourned.

National Editorial Association.

ONE THOUSAND MILES IN FLORIDA.

Having had the pleasure of attending the convention at St. Augustine, of the National Editorial Association, and traveling over many hundred miles of Florida, we will endeavor to give the readers of the Patriot some account of what we saw and enjoyed during our trip.

We left Quincy on Wednesday evening, Jan. 15, by the Fall River line for New York; one of the very best for comfort and enjoyment to be found on this continent—splendid steamers, fine music and excellent menu. On reaching New York we took the Blue Line for Washington, which carries you over a solid road at the rate of nearly a mile a minute—or 230 miles in 300 minutes. On reaching that city we had one day to see the sights before leaving with other delegates on a special train for Florida. We visited the Capitol, the White House, the Washington Monument and other places of interest, but the time was too short to see one-half that is of interest in that beautiful city.

On Friday afternoon a special train of Pullman cars took the delegates and ladies on their southern trip to St. Augustine, each member occupying the same car and section during the two weeks' trip through Florida; in fact, until homeward bound Washington was reached once more. This created a home-like feeling at once, especially as everybody soon became acquainted, and it was as one large family that we began our journey.

Instead of going directly to the convention we were taken to Tampa, Florida; stopping on the way for a half day at Savannah; which in so many ways fulfils one's previous ideas of a southern city. Palms here and there bordering the streets, the live oak trees always green and festooned with the grey moss, the old southern homes with their balconies and piazzas, the latter oftener two and three stories high, than the single one common to our homes in the north. Running vines and roses climb to the roof; but it was only a stray rose, here and there, that greeted us, as it was the beginning of their spring. The English violets were more abundant, however, and the gardens were bordered with them and the japonica blooms were numerous. To add to the picturesque were the colored people, lazy and smiling beneath their battered and torn head coverings, and whenever a darky cabin was seen, there swarmed the pick-a-ninnies galore. The cow hitched, and in using this word be it understood she was indeed hitched, by a variety of rope, to a queer two-wheeled cart, plodded patiently along, contented but not more so than was the face of her driver. Black and placid there was found there no impatience at the slowness of his progress. That there were many cows thus hitched up, I will not say, but I am quite sure every member of our party saw that one cow sometime during that morning in Savannah.

But now it is Saturday afternoon and we are off again for Tampa Bay. Did we reach it Sunday morning bright and early as expected? Not quite. Eleven o'clock when the cry came, "Here we are." Hungry—ravenously so, with nothing to eat since the night before at seven o'clock; and this supper by the way was eaten at Suwanee Springs, by the Suwanee river of song,—and when our train drew across this river, at a signal whistle from our engine, the song S'wanee River might be heard from every car,—and it greeted us again from a colored quartette with their banjos as we entered the hotel.

Now we have left a hundred and fifty hungry travelers at Tampa Bay while telling about Suwanee River. But they were not long in that category when once under the roof of this most perfect of all hotels, the Tampa Bay. The style of the architecture is Byzantine, the arch and crescent being multiplied again and again. The cone shaped domes, little loopholes and balconies, and oddly hooded dormer windows being counterparts of those found in the land of Mohammed—and what beautiful things to satisfy the eye when once inside, after turning our backs upon the beautiful gardens and walks and having crossed the broad piazzas. What a feeling of content came over us all, as we sank into the deep, comfortable chairs, scattered everywhere about, as we entered the rotunda; and this is really the business part of the hotel, but who would know it? Of such size that the corner devoted to the office occupied but a wee corner indeed. Oriental rugs strewn everywhere over a rich red carpet; rare paintings, etchings, and pictures of all kinds upon the walls; Venetian mirrors, exquisite bronzes, bric-a brac and furniture collected during several years of search while abroad by Mr. and Mrs. Plant.

In the drawing room are pieces of furniture belonging at one time to Louis 14th, to Marie Antoinette, and to Napoleon. Every table, every chair has its bit of history attached. And all through this immense hotel the beautiful is to be found. In every room is something at which we pause for a second look. The long corridor leading to the dining room, with its noble dome shaped roof, has abundant sunlight streaming through the many windows on either side. Pictures and again pictures line the walls—tropical plants are in profusion before every window and the same rich gleam of the old red carpeting blends with the white walls and the green tropical foliage. It is said this walk to the dining room is to insure an appetite, but that this needs no coaxing, needs but one visit to prove. "Perfect," is again the word, used upon leaving this room, oftentimes before leaving, and it is the word most used by us all when referring in any way to the Tampa Bay Hotel. G. W. P.

The Quincy Patriot.

QUINCY, SATURDAY, FEB. 8, 1896.

Art from Life.

The residence of Mr. Wendell G. Corthell on Grand View avenue, Wollaston, contained an appreciative audience on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings to witness the first private representation of a number of Charles Dana Gibson's most notable illustration from "Life," which were exhibited under the auspices of the Steadfast Ten, King's Daughters, the proceeds to go towards assisting worthy girls through college.

Gibson's illustrations, depicting the deliciously humorous side of fin de sciecle high life, probably were never better staged (if that professional term may be used) than those which were presented under the direction of Mrs. Elbert H. Brock and Miss Mae Arnold Lincoln. The grouping, a most difficult undertaking where a perspective background and flies cannot be used, was so artistically accomplished that it satisfied the most exacting critics.

Cupid (Dorothy Fay) was a delightfully graceful little figure in her flesh-colored costume and extended dove's wing and deserved the applause which was so generously bestowed for her artistic posing.

"Gibson's girls" were strikingly illustrated by Miss Bertha V. Jameson, Miss Marion Sherman, Miss Russell of Quincy, Mrs. Ralph J. Saxe, Mrs. Amos T. Leavitt, Miss Miriam Ripley, Miss Anna Whitman, Mrs. E. H. Sprague, Miss Hatch of Boston, and Mr. Charles Rippey, who personated the heiress in "Puzzle: find the heiress."

On Tuesday evening Mrs. Alma Faunce Smith opened the entertainment with a piano solo "Impromptu in F sharp" from Chopin, and on Wednesday evening Mr. Berton O. Wetmore opened it with a most excellently rendered baritone solo. The other soloists were Mrs. Frank H. Sprague and Mr. Robert B. Porter.

"Gibson's Men" were Mr. Elbert H. Brock, Mr. Everett S. Litchfield, Mr. Charles R. Sherman, Mr. Ralph J. Saxe, Mr. Amos T. Leavitt. Mr. Tyler Brigham and Mr. Robert B. Witham.

Preceding the illustration Mrs. Elbert H. Brock gave an interesting account of Mr. Gibson's life and works.

After the entertainment chocolate was poured and a light lunch was served to the guests. The entertainment will be publicly repeated next week at the Knights of Honor hall.

Board of Trade.

Another meeting of those interested in forming a board of trade in Quincy was held Wednesday evening in the rooms of the Granite Manufacturers' Association in Durgin & Merrill's block, some thirty of the prominent business men of the city being present. But little business was done as the charter has not been secured as yet.

Mayor Adams presided and John O. Hall was clerk. The committee appointed to present a list of officers for the corporation made its report, after which the officers were elected by ballot and the clerk sworn to the faithful performance of his duties by the chairman.

The officers elected were as follows:

Treasurer, Horace E. Spear.

Clerk, John O. Hall.

Auditor, Horace F. Spear.

Director, Theophilus King, John F. Welch, Rupert F. Claflin, Fred B. Rice, Charles F. Adams, 2d, Clarence Burgin, John F. Merrill, Fred H. Smith, George H. Brown, John Swithin, John R. Graham, Frank S. Patch, Henry L. Kincaide, James Thompson, Henry McGrath, John Q. A. Field, James F. Burke, Fred L. Badger, James Elcock, Henry O. Fairbanks, Herbert T. Whitman, Charles M. Bryant, Nathan G. Nickerson, Stephen O. Moxon, John A. Duggan.

As there was no further business to transact, the meeting adjourned about eight o'clock.

The next step is for the directors to meet and organize by a choice of a president and to sign the papers of incorporation.

Ninetieth Birthday.

Mrs. Martha P. Hall, one of Quincy's oldest residents, if not the oldest, celebrated her ninetieth birthday on Monday. Mrs. Hall is the mother of the late Enoch Hall of Edwards street and of Mrs. George W. Thayer of Crescent street, West Quincy, with whom she resides. She has been blind for about seven years but goes about the house unaided by guide or cane.

She sat at supper with five of her grand children, Mrs. Enoch Hall and Mr. and Mrs. Thayer, together with some friends. Mrs. Hall was the recipient of many gifts of remembrance among which was a box from South Portland, Me., from Mrs. A. V. Cole, a daughter who was unable to be present, also a bouquet of roses from Mrs. Maria Bowker of Weymouth.

She had many callers during the day and seemed in the best of spirits with a joke now and then. Her many friends wish her many happy returns of the day.

Organ Recital.

There was a large gathering at Christ's church Wednesday evening on the occasion of the organ recital by John Hermann Loud, A. R. C. M., a pupil of Alexander Guilmant, who was assisted by Master Henry Donlan, the boy vocalist.

Mr. Loud rendered a programme of classical music, calculated to test the powers of the magnificient organ of the church, which was very enjoyable. The solos by Master Donlan were very beautifully rendered and he can be truthfully said to possess a wonderful voice.

The programme included:

Toccata in F.	J. S. Bach
Priere in Gb	E. Lemaigre
Ite Missa Est.	N. J. Lemmens
Angels ever bright and fair. Master Henry Donlan.	Handel
a Cantilena in Bb b Marche Reiigieuse,	Alex. Guilmant
Andante Cantabile from Symphony No. 4,	C. M. Widor
Now the day is over, Master Henry Donlan.	Christopher Marks
Grand Choir Dialogue in G.	E. Gigout

CITY BRIEFS.

Mayor Quincy of Boston was in town Sunday.

W. W. Jenness, Esq., is confined to his rooms with tonsilitis.

Quincy has been fortunate in regard to fires thus far this year.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Henry Emery are contemplating a trip to Florida soon.

There is a bill in the Legislature to make Jan. 17, Franklin's birthday, a legal holiday.

It is reported that the recent ball of Mt. Wollaston lodge of Odd Fellows netted over $100.

Most of the new city officials have qualified for the offices to which they were appointed.

It is reported that Mr. E. F. Carr of E. F. Carr & Co., is travelling for a Barre, Vt., granite firm.

The prospects are that there will be considerable building in Quincy with the opening of spring.

Copies of the receipts and expenditures for Norfolk County for the year 1895 can be had at City Hall.

Miss Bessie Hector has been engaged as stenographer and typewriter at the office of the Quincy Cycle Co.

Merrymount lodge, A. O. U. W., will have a stereopticon exhibition at its meeting next Tuesday evening.

The members of the Quincy Board of Trade have already received circulars from gentlemen who desire to lecture to them.

An important special meeting of the School Committee is called for next Monday evening, to consider new school buildings.

The programmes for the concert of the Boston Ideal club and for the High school prize speaking were printed at the PATRIOT office.

The regular meeting of the Granite City club will be held Saturday evening, to act on applications for membership and to take action in regard to a banquet.

The many friends of Mrs. C. A. Winslow, of Edwards street, will be pleased to learn that she is recovering from the accidental fall she had last week.

The Board of Health has organized with Benjamin F. Curtis as chairman and Dr. John H. Ash, secretary. The board has appointed T. F. Ford, inspector.

Mr. Charles Francis Adams, 2d, will have a racing half-rater in the field next season, from the board of Designer John R. Purdon of this city.—Herald.

The petition of the city of Quincy for authority to erect and maintain an electric light plant for street lighting, was forwarded to the State House on Wednesday.

Some member of the Quincy Yacht Club forwarded a five dollar bill to the treasurer this week without disclosing his identity. The beginning of a conscience fund probably.

C. H. Johson has sold the estate of the late Charlotte Carr on Adams street, recently purchased by Charles H. Brooks, to Daniel Moran of this city, who will occupy the same.

John B. Foster is accepting congratulations and sympathy mingled, over the birth of twin boys in his family Wednesday. Grandpa Osborne of Bigelow street is perhaps the happiest.

The electric lights in the Swedish Lutheran church went out suddenly Sunday evening during the service, but there was no commotion. Those present remained quiet and the lights came on again in a few moments.

Monday the girls employed at Rosenfield's wrapper factory struck against a reduction in pay and left work. A new agreement was entered into upon a different basis and the girls returned to work Wednesday.

The petition to the city council by Hon. John F. Merrill and others for the establishment of the grade on Hancock street between Granite and School streets is a move in the right direction for it is in very bad condition at present and in fact has been for a long time.

There was a merry party at the Granite City club room Wednesday. Councilman Rideout was the champion whist player. Col. Bass lead the members gallantly in many contests, and was receiving cheers on all sides; but in the last few games Mr. Rideout outflanked him.

One of the Boston papers of Monday stated that Dr. William Everett preached on Sunday in the First Baptist church at Beverly. It was not however the Baptist church, but the First church, formerly served by the Rev. E. C. Butler, where he will preach again next Sunday.

Mr. Walter B. Holden left Saturday night for Buffalo, to be present and to usher at the wedding of his friend, Mr. Frank Bartlett Steele, who was married Tuesday at Titusville, Penn. Mr. Steele was best man at the Schenkelberger-Harlow wedding in this city last October.

Fifty-two volumes of the Little & Brown edition of the Historical Romances of Alexander Dumas have lately been added to the Public Library. The correct numbers of the new volumes and of the few of the old edition which yet remain in use, will be found by consulting the list in another column.

About fifty couples participated in the social dance given at Faxon hall on Wednesday evening under the auspices of the Choral Society of the Universalist church. Dancing was enjoyed from 8 to 12 o'clock, ice cream and cake being served by Wales at 10.30. Those in charge of the affair were Joseph A. Alden Samuel Oxford and Peter A. Gomez.

The Norfolk County Commissioner evidently are not anxious that Quincy people shall scrutinize their figures this year. For many years the receipts and expenditures have been printed annually in the Quincy PATRIOT. Perhaps Quincy kicked up too much of a breeze at the hearings at the State House last year to suit the Commissioners. They will hear from Quincy again this year.

The organ recital at Christ church was enjoyed by a large gathering of people Wednesday evening. Mr. John Hermann Loud of Weymouth presided at the organ and gave a varied programme in his usual masterly style. Mr. Loud has made a study of music abroad under Alexandre Guilmant, receiving honors and much praise for his excellence. Master Henry Dolan sang two selections, and every one was more than pleased with his clear sweet notes.

Mr. George W. Prescott and Miss Etta M. Prescott have returned from an extended trip through Florida. They left Palm Beach, 300 miles south of Jacksonville on Wednesday, January 29, and arrived in that flourishing city the same evening. There they stopped one day, then started for Charleston, S. C., where they were entertained for several hours, when they continued on their journey to Washington, and from there to New York, and home by the Fall River line. An extended account of the National Editorial Association convention and their trip through Florida will be given in the Quincy PATRIOT from week to week.

There is a movement for an electric street railway from Weymouth to Holbrook which might take some of the Brockton travel to the beaches away from the Quincy & Boston road.

Again Thursday night it was illustrated that the Washington street culvert over Town brook is too small to carry off a rush of water. The low lands bordering the brook were overflowed and Cherry avenue remained under water until this noon.

On the morning of Dec, 26, 1895, Mrs. Lucinda Rogers Hobart passed quietly away, aged eighty-two years and nine months, at the home of her sister-in-law Mrs. Sarah L. Rogers, at Troy. Mrs. Hobart will be remembered by many of our older residents, and also by members of the Episcopal church.

The heavy rain Thursday afternoon and evening undermined the street railway tracks on Washington street, between Temple street and the residence of Geo. O. Langley, and the tracks settled so bad that it was impossible to run cars over them, and the passengers had to walk from the corner to Mr. Langley's residence. A gang of men was put to work and the line was rebuilt before the late trains were due.

Mrs. Sarah A Burrell has the sympathy of many friends in the loss this week of her grandson, Mr. George W. Lovell, of North Weymouth. Mrs. Burrell always spends Thanksgiving and a few of the winter months in Weymouth with her daughter, Mrs. Solomon Lovell. She returned to Quincy a few weeks ago, and is now with her daughter Mrs. N. B. Furnald. She is recovering slowly from her recent severe fall.

The hurricane which had been working up the coast from the southern sea-board, broke with terrific force over this section of the country on Thursday afternoon. The storm started in a mild sort of a way but by three o'clock a West India hurricane was raging. At that time the wind at Wollaston had attained a velocity of 40 miles an hour and 53 on Blue Hill. For four hours the gale blew with unabated fury, when suddenly it ceased and disappeared as quietly as it came.

Debate on Hard Times.

President Saunders took the chair at the meeting of the Q. H. S. Debating Society on Wednesday, and Secretary Briggs presented his report. It was accepted and adopted.

The debate of last week was concluded. The subject was: "Resolved, That Hard Times Are Not Under the Control of the Government."

The affirmative was taken by Miss Geer and Miss Duffield.

The negative by Miss Hayden, Miss Leona Hayden, Miss Hayes, Miss Johnson and Miss Joss.

When the debate was opened to the society, Mr. Coe, Miss Joss, Mr. Northcott, Mr. Foley and Mr. Chapman spoke. There was a lively debate on the late "War-scare."

Mr. Wilkins, '97, the critic, offered a report that caused some discussion on the ground of personalities. After debate the report was accepted.

The entertainment followed:

Essay, "Recollections of Childhood," Miss Melzard, '96.

Declamation, Mr. Mitchell, '97.

Essay, "A Day at Chautauqua," Miss Ramsey, '96.

The board of decision declared themselves in favor of the negative.

Bowling at Wollaston.

Team C of the Wollaston Bowling club came to the front at Tuesday evening's bowl and licked Team D (Atlantic), out of sight, 2,211 to 2,062. Emery was high bowler all around, singles 172 and totals 511. The result:

WOLLASTON.

Rev. C. W. Wilder and Rev. A. W. L. Nelson of Jamaica Plain will exchange pulpits on Sunday morning.

The Gleaners, King's Daughters, will meet with Mrs. S. P. Moorehouse, Winthrop avenue, Monday, Feb. 10, at 2.30 P. M.

The monthly business meeting of the Epworth League of Wollaston which was to have been held at the house of Mrs. Stiles, on Thursday evening, was postponed on account of the storm.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Wollaston Congregational church, will hold their regular monthly sociable in the church vestry, Thursday evening, Feb. 13. It will take the form of "A Belated Picnic."

The Whatsoever Ten, King's Daughters of Wollaston will hold a sale at the residence of Mrs. Amos T. Leavitt, Lincoln avenue, on next Tuesday afternoon and evening. The proceeds will go towards caring for the worthy people of this city.

The Junior League of Wollaston is to give a cantata and entertainment at the Methodist Episcopal church on Thursday evening, Feb. 13. It is entitled "Grandmother's Garden with Sunflower Chorus." They will be assisted by Class No. 8 of the Sunday school, and Misses Hazel Hewins and Elizabeth Pipping of Dedham.

"Wither goest thou" was the subject of Rev. Preston Gurney's sermon Sunday morning, at the Baptist church. Previous to the discourse Mr. A. D. Albee made a few remarks on Sir Joseph Branby, the eminent composer who has just died. The music sung by both the quartette and congregation was by Barnby.

Rev. Frederick B. Dewhurst, formerly of Wollaston but now of Indianapolis, Ind., presented the Newspaper Sermon Association with one of the twelve best sermons on Immortality.

Israel Waterhouse, the new Ward Five Assessor, will recuperate in the South for several weeks previous to his tour in May about town.

Waterhouse, Shannon & Munroe, of which Mr. F. P. Waterhouse of Wollaston is senior partner, are now government contractors, having been awarded two large contracts, one for 10,000 reams of best machine finish book printing paper, and the other for 175,000 pounds of woodcut paper.

A special meeting of the Wollaston Trap club was held at the Wollaston hotel on Monday evening. It was voted after considerable debate to join the State association; to shoot for sweepstakes; to award marksmenship badges of gold and silver, annually; to enlarge the club house, and set a hitching post for Mr. J. C. Morse's horse.

DOWNS AND PARK.

Norfolk Downs is up to the times with a dancing school. Prof. Chase's class opened last evening.

The new chapel of the Park and Down's Union Society will be dedicated on the afternoon of Feb. 22. An interesting program is being prepared in which all the pastors of Wollaston and Atlantic are expected to take part. George L. Perin, D. D., pastor of the "Every Day Church," Boston, will preach the dedication sermon.

The petition of the residents of Norfolk Downs and Wollaston Park for better fire protection is one that should not be passed over lightly by the City Council. This is one of the most rapid growing sections of our city and as the petition truthfully sets forth, there is a large amount of valuable property there which is actually without adequate fire protection, the nearest apparatus being Wollaston or Atlantic.

With a central fire station located near the Norfolk Downs depot the apparatus would not only be within three minutes run to all parts of this section, but the apparatus at the present central station would not be obliged to respond except in case of conflagration.

Then again Squantum which has long been crying for better fire protection, would have a steamer within two miles, whereas now the steamer and hook and ladder are fives miles away, and the horses that haul these pieces of apparatus are completely fagged out when Atlantic is reached.

Quincy is a growing city, and, although it has been fortunate thus far in the matter of fires, there is no knowing when a serious conflagration may start, and compared with surrounding cities and towns, it is way behind the times in the matter of fire apparatus.

Young Men's Christian Asso.

The members of the Intermediate Junior Department will be tendered a supper this evening by the Women's Auxilary.

Rev. C. W. Wilder, of the Wollaston M. E. church will speak Sunday on "The Scripture Doctrine of Sin."

Secretary Colton returned from Portland Friday where he attended the N. E. Secretaries' Conference. He took a small exhibit of models from the Sloyd school, also drawings from the Granite Cutters' school, which attracted considerable attention and were highly praised by the Portland papers.

The board meeting this month has been postponed until the second Tuesday Feb. 11.

The Bible class continues to meet on Monday evening, and is making good progress in Old Testament study.

A large audience gathered in the Presbyterian church Sunday afternoon to hear Mr. T. D. Roberts of the Boston Industrial Home. Owing to a misunderstanding Mr. Roberts did not speak primarily upon the subject of "The Sin of Impurity," although he made some references of it. The service including the after meeting lasted two hours, and both, especially the after meeting, were of unusual spiritual power.

Wollaston Defeats Norfolks.

The Wollaston Bowling club visited the Norfolk Cycle club of East Weymouth on Monday evening and did it up in approved style, defeating the Norfolk club 2482 to 2352. Lyman of the Wollastons distinguished himself as well as the club to which he belonged by not only being high bowler on singles, 201, and high on totals, 576, but made no break and missed but one spare.

The result:

ATLANTIC.

Newbury avenue in front of Teal pond is flooded to a depth of 18 inches in the middle of the street, which will necessitate much inconvenience to the school children who will be obliged to go far out of their way in order to get to school.

Miss Bennett of Newbury avenue has been confined to her home several days this week with a severe cold.

The Alps club of Atlantic are to hold their first dancing party of this season in Music hall one night next week.

The heavy rain of Thursday did considerable damage in Atlantic. Many of the cellars in the low parts were flooded to quite an extent and the streets, plainly show the effects of the rushing torrents, the gutters in many being badly worn.

Mr. William H. Owen, of Botolph street, sang several tenor solos at the minstrel show given by the South Boston Owl club at St. Augustine's hall, South Boston, on Thursday evening last. His singing was excellent and greatly appreciated by all who attended.

Rev. J. H. Mansfield, D. D., will preach at the Methodist church, next Sunday evening, and hold the fourth quarterly conference at the close.

The attendance at the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, Sunday, was as it has been recently, very large. The pastor preached both morning and evening. The evening service was in the form of a descriptive lecture on Jerusalem and was intensely interesting. Miss Moxon and Miss Coe sang two duets at the evening lecture which were worthy of great praise, being rendered in an exceptionally fine manner.

Another death was reported from diphtheria at Atlantic, Saturday.

At the last meeting of the Boston Bicycle Club, Dr. W. G. Kendall of Atlantic was elected captain. This is the ninth year he has been honored by such an election, and he is without question the oldest captain in the country, in point of service. He will get his long service medal soon. Herald.

The Quincy school, Atlantic, has been undergoing a thorough cleaning and disinfecting. On account of the many cases of diphtheria among the children it was deemed advisable to thoroughly renovate the entire building and contents. Several women were engaged on Saturday and the school was closed Monday to continue the work.

Miss Emma Curtin is convalescent and will soon be out again.

Miss Lizzie Glover entertained the Reading Club Thursday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Stecker, formerly of Botolph street, have moved to Dorchester.

Miss Vogel and Miss Bemis are home from the Bridgewater Normal for a short vacation.

Mr. John T. Hunt of Atlantic has been re-appointed constable of the city of Quincy, making the 15th year he has been honored with the office.

A very interesting entertainment is being prepared for the next social of the Ladies' Benevolent society to be held in the Memorial Congregational church.

One of the Thomas boys of Squantum street is sick with diphtheria, and Mr. Mitchell of Billings street is reported as being sick with typhoid fever; so much sickness in Atlantic has not occurred for many years.

Atlantic society is now in its annual whirl with dances and parties, "at homes" and clubs of various kinds. Whist seems to be the prevalent craze. There are a number of clubs devoted to this object and various ladies are having delightful afternoon whist parties. Mrs. Elijah Hall had one last week. This week Mrs. C. L. Coe and Mrs. C. R. Safford each have one, and next week Mrs. W. I. Scholes will entertain a similiar party.

About two hundred couples, consisting mostly of young people joined in the grand march of the first leap year party given in Atlantic this year, by the young ladies of the Violet club Wednesday evening. The party was the largest that has ever assembled to any dancing party in Music hall and made a very pleasing picture.

The floor was in charge of Miss Nellie Gerry, floor directress, and Miss Mary Cunniff, assistant directress, assisted by the following aids, Miss Mary R. Sullivan, Miss Rose Cunniff, Miss Maggie A. Gerry, Miss Catherine Hayes, Miss Elize Junior and Miss Mary Barry. Sprague's orchestra furnished music and dancing was enjoyed until 1 A. M.

MILTON.

Rev. M. A. Daugherty who has filled the pulpit of the Congregational church so acceptably for the past few weeks, will preach next Sunday. His preaching is liked very much and many of the parish would like to have him supply the pulpit permanently.

While Mrs. Michael Mullen was riding Thursday morning her carriage collided with James Thomas' milk wagon. Mrs. Mullen was thrown out and considerably bruised, and her horse ran some distance before he was stopped. The carriage was damaged but little.

The annual reunion of the Milton High school was held last night at the Town Hall.

The warrant committee meet next Monday evening to consider the articles in the warrant for the annual town meeting.

Governor Greenhalge has reappointed Mr. Edward Brooks a member of the board of trustees of the Perkins Institute for the Blind.

Miss Addie L. Newcomb arrived home the first of the week from a trip to Florida with Mr. Geo. W. Prescott and daughter, Miss Etta M. Prescott.

Monday evening the several companies meet for organization.

Ex Mayor's Father Dead.

Moses Fairbanks, an ex-Alderman of Boston, and the father of ex-Mayor Fairbanks of Quincy, died in Boston Tuesday at the age of 80 years.

Mr. Fairbanks had been in delicate health for a long time, having had a shock six years ago, but he was able to attend to his business until two months ago. As late as last Sunday he was able to be about the house. Death resulted from heart disease and was sudden.

He was born in Dublin, N. H., and coming to Boston as a young man, founded an immense bottling establishment under the firm name of Fairbanks & Beard. He was once interested in the Howard Atheneum, and was a heavy owner in the Wollaston Land Company and the Arlington Heights Land Company. He served as Alderman for several years. Of late he has been exclusively in the real estate business, and carried on his business up to about two months ago. He leaves a widow, two daughters and two sons.

The funeral was held on Thursday at 2 P. M., 15 Wellington street, Boston.

WEST QUINCY.

Charles Bearse has severed his connection with E. H. Doble & Co.

There is considerable sickness at West Quincy, although fortunately the sickness is not of a serious nature.

The John Boyle O'Reilley club held a dance at St. Mary's hall Thursday evening for the benefit of Andrew Doody.

The heavy rains Thursday caused a large pond to form in front of Hose 3 house which overflowed the sidewalks, making passing for pedestrians anything but pleasant.

The earnings of the Quarry railroad during the last four months of 1895 averaged 13.83 per cent.

The Ward Four Democratic Committee has organized with W. T. Shea as chairman, W. D. Burns as vice chairman, Matthew Lyons as secretary and Thomas Hogan as treasurer.

Mr. Richard A. Cole of West Quincy is confined to his home with typhoid fever, the disease being incipient for the past week.

The Nonpareil Social club held its regular monthly meeting Monday evening under the following officers: President, P. A. Lane; Vice President, Robert Dinnie; Secretary, J. C. Pierce; Treasurer, W. Anderson. The club now occupy its new rooms at Brewer's Corner and on this occasion an oyster supper was served by Mrs. E. Lark, who received a vote of thanks from the club, for her valuable assistance. Vocal and instrumental music was in order after supper and was enjoyed by all.

SOUTH QUINCY.

William A. Reed won the second tournament of the Greenleaf Chess club.

B. W. Ward, the evangelist, will speak at the Calvary Baptist church Sunday.

A writer from San Francisco, Cal., says: "Mrs. Joseph Walker of 428-7th street who has just returned from an extended pleasure trip through the Eastern States, was tendered a very jolly surprise party at her residence on Friday evening, Jan. 24th, by the club of forty, composed of married ladies, of which she is past president. The evening was spent in singing, recitations and dancing. Music was furnished by Carter's orchestra, which was stationed in the hall. At midnight a bountious supper was served in the spacious dining room in French courses by Lundy, in the course of which Mrs. Pratt on behalf of the club presented Mrs. Walker with a beautiful piano lamp. After supper dancing was resumed until the small hours of the morning, when the band played "Home Sweet Home," and the guests departed each declaring they had spent a very enjoyable evening. The present president of the society is Mrs. C. Pratt, who has relatives in Quincy."

H. Litchman moved into his new store at 119 Water street last week. It is bright and attractive.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Frank Mitchell gave a whist party at their home on Quincy street Tuesday evening, in honor of their guest, Miss Haggett of Waltham, enough being present for three tables. At the conclusion of play pretty gifts were awarded to those having the highest score and a dainty lunch was served.

Swingle & Falconer are making plans to enlarge their cutting plant.

Mrs. S. K. Jones of Pleasant street is seriously ill with acute neuralgia.

Christopher J. H. Totman has been appointed editor of the Braintree Bee. Few of our young men have made such rapid strides in journalism.

The Young Ladies' Auxiliary of St. John's society are to give a whist party and dance at St. John's hall, Monday evening, Feb. 10. Refreshments will be served.

Since the week of prayer there has been considerable religious interest in several of the churches of the city. The Swedish Congregational church on Garfield street has held meetings every evening for the past month and over a score have expressed a determination to lead christian lives.

The First Presbyterian church in its regular meetings has seen good results, over thirty persons having manifested their interest.

Curtis—Crane.

A quiet but charming home wedding took place Wednesday night, Feb. 5, at the residence of Mr. B. F. Crane, 43 Franklin street, Quincy, when his lovely and accomplished daughter, Alice Ludden, was united in marriage unto Mr. Samuel Curtis of Boston.

Rev. F. B. Mott of Dorchester officiated in his usual happy and impressive manner and the happy couple departed amid showers of rice and hearty congratulations. Thus representatives of two of Quincy's oldest families are again united. The great grandfathers of the young couple having been near relatives.

Nerves and Blood

Are inseparably connected. The former depend simply, solely, solidly upon the latter. If it is pure they are properly fed and there is no "nervousness." If it is impure they are fed on refuse, therefore cannot be strong and healthy, and the horrors of nervous prostration result. The only sensible way to cure is: Feed the nerves on pure blood. Make pure rich, red blood and keep it pure, by taking

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to express our gratitude to the many friends and companions of our late beloved daughter, Mary A. Webster, for the many tokens of esteem and friendship. The unbounded sympathy so kindly manifested in the time when our dearest hope has been blighted, will be appreciated more than words can express, and will be a source of much comfort to us in our loneliness.

In Memoriam.

A public service in memoriam of the late Miss Mary A. Webster was held in the Methodist Episcopal church, Atlantic, Sunday afternoon. There were a great many of the friends present and the order of services were as follows:

Prayer and eulogy, Rev. George B. Shanor.

Letter read from Rev. H. D. Dietz, her former pastor.

Letter read from Mr. Frank E. Parlin, Superintendent of Schools, Natick, Mass.

Resolutions from School Committee of Natick.

Poem, (written by Miss Ruth Bassett expressly for this occasion)

Address on her school life, Mr. Chas. F. Merrick.

Representing Epworth League, Miss Flora Brown.

Representing Sunday School, Mr. John Ramsdell.

Resolutions from Epworth League and Sunday School.

Mr. Jones Sadder.

Tuesday a well appearing gentleman, who gave his name as Jones, arrived in Quincy in search of his wife and family, whom he had not seen for eleven years. He located them at 20 Quincy avenue where he called to see them. A little later the police were notified that there was a crazy man at 20 Quincy avenue, and Inspector McKay and Officer Murray responded in a carriage. Upon their arrival they found Mr. Jones seated quietly in a chair looking anything but crazy, and upon being informed of the object of the officers' visit, he said, had his wife requested him to leave he would have done so.

Upon arriving at the station he said that he and his wife lived at Bridgeport, Conn., where he was employed as a painter for Barnum's circus. Eleven years ago he was taken insane and sent to an asylum where he remained until two years ago, and during all these eleven years had not seen his wife or children, whom he finally located in Quincy. His visit here was for the purpose of seeing them. When he called at Quincy avenue he could hardly recognize his wife but upon entering the house he asked to see his daughters.

Mrs. Jones told him to be seated and she would send for them, but instead of doing so, sent for the police.

From what can be learned Mrs. Jones has experienced a change of heart during the past eleven years and does not love her husband any longer, and has commenced proceedings to secure a divorce.

Upon learning the true facts of the case Mr. Jones was allowed to depart which he did, a sadder but wiser man and poorer by $10, which it cost him to make the trip to Quincy.

High School Prize Speaking.

Friday evening of this week was the date of another of those popular prize speaking contest of the pupils of the Quincy High School—the fourth annual—at the High school building.

Prizes offered by Joseph M. Sheahan, M. D, were also awarded for excellence in essays and translations.

District Court, Quincy.

Joseph Berriot of Braintree pleaded guilty to keeping liquor with intent to sell, and was fined $50 which he paid.

Patrick A. McLeod was fined $5 for drunkenness.

George Milligan was fined $7 for drunkenness at Quincy.

John Hanley of Weymouth was arraigned for assault on Rose Hanley. Case continued two weeks.

The continued case against Alex. McDonnell of Braintree for drunkenness was called and he was fined $5.

Mr. Brown, who is the proprietor of the bowling alley under the old court house, testified that on Tuesday night there was a little argument in the part of the room where the frankforts were served, and he told them to keep quiet or he would put them out. He then stood at the door and stooped down to pick up a ball, when he was struck in the back of the head with a tumbler. It did not cut him as the wound was more in the nature of a bruise.

Michael McGrath testified that Brown had sent him out in the front room to look out for the frankforts and the first thing he knew Brown came running out and said some one had hit him.

Thomas Scannell testified that he was in the room where the alleys were and that Sullivan was at the score board. A glass came by the witness's head and hit Brown. He did not see who threw it.

Sullivan testified that he was keeping score and the first thing he knew he heard Brown exclaim "Oh! Moses!" Witness then looked about and saw the glass near Brown.

The court decided that Sullivan was not guilty, and discharged him.

The liquors seized from Joseph Benoit Braintree were forfeited.

Gail Hamilton for War.

That famous political writer, Gail Hamilton has recovered sufficiently from her recent illness as to be able to write her first article on public matters since the day she was stricken almost to death in the Blaine mansion at Washington. That article she has sent to the Boston Journal, to be used in their next Sunday issue. It is reported that the article is full of fire and snap, in Gail Hamilton's familiar vigorous style, and that it urges the country to extreme radical measures with England. If so, it will certainly attract widest attention, for the writer is one of the sharpest and most alert in the country.

New Moon Feb. 13, 11.13 A. M.

AN OUT-OF-TOWN man for commissioner naturally provokes considerable comment. Many think that it was unnecessary, and that it was an affront to men in the city who are just as capable of filling the position. They claim that a Quincy man would know better the peculiar needs of the city, and knowing also the resources would not be extravagant in demands upon the taxpayers. That the failure in the past to give Quincy the best of streets should not be laid wholly at the door of the commissioners, but to the meagre appropriations. Our new commissioner tells us at the outset, that they are small; not only small, but less in proportion to valuation than any other city in the commonwealth. Doubtless, too, he can more readily convince the City Council that the department must have more money than any Quincy man could. An out-of-town teacher generally succeeds better in a small city or town than does a native born young man or young lady, with whose history every gossiper is acquainted, and perhaps it will be so with a commissioner.

The city charter provides that a person to be eligible for appointment to most of the city officers shall be a resident of the city for at least one year, but the commissioner of public works is an exception, the other positions being superintendent of schools, chief of police, and chief engineer of the fire department. It has never been found necessary to import a man for either of the last two positions, but other small cities find it advantageous to secure an out-of-town man for police marshal, and Quincy schools prosper under superintendents from other fields.

Perhaps Mayor Adams found it necessary to go out of town because there was too much rivalry for the position among Quincy aspirants. While he would have liked to reappoint ex-Commissioner Ewell, he doubtless felt that he could not consistently go out of his party, and to have appointed either Mr. Eaton, Mr. Shea or Mr. Fallon would have caused a split among the Democrats. By selecting an out-of-town man, he has in a great measure removed the office from politics, and the same independent business administration which the people expect of Mayor Adams, they will doubtless receive also from Commissioner Knowlton. The new official has a pleasing address. With a Mayor 29 years of age, and a commissioner 31, Quincy has a young vigorous team from which much is expected.

IN MANY places the annual reunion of the High school graduates are the event of the season, being largely attended, enjoyable and profitable. Quincy seems to be differently constituted, although the reunion this year was a grand social success. The Q. H. S. alumni numbers from five to six hundred and as each graduate attending is allowed an extra ticket, over 1000 are eligible. Upon an economical basis it is said an attendance of at least 150 is necessary to make these gatherings a financial success. For two years the board of director have promptly met all deficiencies, and in view of the social success they have courage to believe that the reunion of 1897 will met their fond expectations. Will not more of the graduates take an interest and thus aid an association which is working to promote the interests of the High school.

Common Oatmeal

Sold from barrels or oftentimes in fancy packages (but still common oatmeal) is hard to cook, bitter in taste and overheating to the system. It overtaxes the digestive organs and the body derives no benefit from it—it injures rather than helps.

H-O

gets rid of all that is objectionable in oatmeal and preserves all that is valuable. It makes oatmeal a human food, palatable and easy of digestion, without taking away any of the elements needed for the building up of body, bone and brain. All other oatmeals—"steam-dried," "kiln-dried" and "partly cooked"—leave off just where H-O begins.

The New Officials.

On the first page today will be found a full list of Mayor Adams' appointments for 1896.

Charles F. Knowlton, the new Commissioner of Public Works, was born in Swampscott, Jan. 31, 1865, and was, therefore, 31 years of age the day on which his appointment was made public. His early education was received in the public schools of his native place and at a private school.

Graduating from school he entered the employ of a wool firm as clerk and from that entered the employ of Norman & Weever in the construction of the Swampscott Water system.

In the spring of 1889 he went to Duluth, Minn., where he was employed in the construction of sewers, bridges, streets, etc.

He remained there ten years and then entered the employ of the Everett Land Co., of Washington, to build the city of Everett, where he had charge of the construction work and the laying out and building of its streets.

Owing to the illness of his father, he returned east last spring and entered the employ of the Massachusetts Highway Commission, as constructing engineer and has built since that time the State roads in North Adams, Williamstown and West Newbury, the latter being left uncompleted on account of winter weather.

When seen later by a representative of the PATRIOT, Mr. Knowlton said he had made a study of streets and material used in their construction so as to get the best results for the money expended. He considered the first thing was proper drainage, without which it was impossible to have good streets.

Next was the proper construction and the putting on of the material in the proper way, and in this connection, he said, different localities needed different modes of construction, according to the use to which the streets were put and he should have to make a study of Quincy streets before he could tell what form of construction to use.

The great trouble, however, was that people do not attach enough importance to good roads. He considered that they were second in importance to schools, and the appropriation for such should be second to that of schools, for it was better to have good roads if some other departments suffered.

The city of Quincy appropriates a less proportion of its valuation for care of streets than any other city in the Commonwealth. In other words $1.12 of the taxes in Quincy is expended on streets, while in some cities it ran as high as $4.

City Treasurer Gray

Is an ex-Councilman, and a well known citizen. He is 53 years of age and has been a stock broker and in other business, and has been interested in the financial institutions of the city.

A critic of the Council of 1891 said of Mr. Gray: "No member of the Council has stood up more manfully against the most bitter sarcasm and fierce attack of words than Councilman Gray. He is a strong believer in pure and systematic finance. He never votes in the affirmative if he takes the slightest exception to the way of borrowing the money or if he considers the proposed appropriation at all in excess of his ideas of the city's needs. This makes him unpopular during the sessions of the Council, but it is the kind of unpopularity that the city can afford. In pure slang he is a kicker, and we thoroughly believe in the necessity of kickers in all legislative bodies. We earnestly hope that every Council in Quincy's future will have one or more Grays. Socially he is one of the finest members, and even after a heated debate he is as affable to his bitterest opponent as to his fellow partisan."

Overseer Bass

From his long term in the City Council, three years as its President, needs no extended introduction to PATRIOT readers. He is well acquainted with city affairs and is well adapted for the position to which he has been appointed.

The Assessors.

Israel Waterhouse of Wollaston and B. R. Redman of Atlantic have both served on the Board of Assessors, and their reappointment will strengthen the board.

Water Commissioner Baker.

The appointment of Mr. C. T. Baker gives Wollaston a worthy representative on the board of Water Commissioners, but at the same time leaves the Republicans without a representation. James H. Stetson, who retires, has been on the board since it was created. Mr. Baker has resided in Quincy since 1875, his birthplace having been Boston. He has served acceptably in the City Council.

W. R. Tyler, the head master of the Adams Academy, and ex-Congressman Everett, who preceded him, are the new members of the Board of Managers of Adams Academy.

Hon. W. B. Rice and ex-Mayor Porter are again on the Board of Park Commissioners, and Mr. Pfaffman, who was appointed late in 1895 continues.

J. A. McDonnell is transferred from the Park Commissioners to the Board of Health.

Boston Horse Show.

Extensive preparations are being made for the big horse show to be held in Mechanics Building, Boston, during the week of April 6, and although the event is some two months off, gowns and horses are already being talked up. Judging from the amount of enthusiasm displayed, the coming horse show promises to be the social event of the season in Boston. All New England is interested in the exhibition and the promoters of the show are sure of a big list of attractions as $10,000 for prizes is offered.

The executive committee of the horse show consists of the following representative Bostonians: Mr. Francis Peabody, Jr., Mr. Frank Seabury, Mr. J. Murray Forbes, Mr. Robert C. Hooper, and Col. John E. Thayer. The committee is represented by Mr. Thatcher Goddard at the office of the horse show, room 28, No. 40 State street, Boston.

The preliminary arrangements are being completed as fast as can be expected and the premium list and other details will be announced at an early date.

The Democratic State Committee has organized with the re-election of Chairman Corcoran, and Secretary Cunningham. John V. Scollard of Braintree is the representative of the first Norfolk district this year.

THERE IS STYLE in glasses as in everything else. The principal thing, however, is to have your Glasses properly fitted. John W. Sanborn & Co., Opticians, 3 Winter St., Boston. Take Elevator.

Letter from the State House.

[Special to the QUINCY PATRIOT.]

BOSTON, Feb. 5, 1896.

The woman suffragists have at last put in their first appearance for the session. They have presented two petitions. They come from the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association and one of them asks for the right to vote for presidential electors, while the other is for municipal suffrage, the same as has been requested for the last half dozen years or more. They feel happy over one thing, that they will have two opportunities of being heard. The petition for general suffrage must go to the committee on constitutional amendments, while the petition for municipal suffrage will entitle them to a hearing before the committee on election laws. So, if the legislature thought to save time and annoyance by referring the question to the people, it looks as if they were mistaken. The women are as sharp as they are. The suffragists say that they are much encouraged by the vote last fall, for it shows that they have a good many more friends in the state than they thought they had. There will be opportunities to make arguments before two committees and to have debates in the house and senate upon two distinct propositions, whereas they had only one chance before.

A petition has been presented for a return to the old system of aldermanic districts in Boston, doing away with the present system of aldermen at large with minority representation so that the minority party is sure of at least five of the twelve aldermen. Boston has vibrated back and forth several times with her aldermanic system. Not many years ago there was elections at large, by which the Democrats used to carry the entire board.

The last hearing on biennial elections occurred Thursday forenoon. The committee went at once into executive session and reported in favor of the resolve. All of the three Democrats dissented. In the house on Friday the amendment was assigned to Tuesday, February 4, with the understanding that there should be debate on both stages of the resolve. It was admitted by Mr. J. H. Mellen of Worcester on the floor that it was likely, or possible, that the friends of the amendment would succeed this time.

Senator Huchinson of Suffolk has put an order for a general investigation of the penal, reformatory and charitable institutions of the state. But there seems to be no serious reason to suppose that such an investigation will be held, or that there is any reason for having one. It is said that the order was introduced in consequence of the course of Senator Maccabe of Suffolk in challenging the passage of the general appropriations, including those for these institutions. Now, these bills are reported in the regular progress of proceedings. They are routine matters. There was no reason to suppose that there was anything wrong with the amounts of money appropriated, and Senator Maccabe's questions did not bring out anything wrong. But, after all, it has probably done no harm to have the matter stirred up. It is well for the people to know how their money is spent and to look after their appropriations. So, though some of the dignitaries may feel that their honesty of capacity has been impugned by this inquiry into their conduct, still, under a popular government, it is much better to err on the side of over caution than of neglect. But Senator Hutchinson, supposedly feeling that the administration of the state's institutions had been smirched, offered his order so that an investigation might show the public that everything is all right. But, as no charges of corruption of incompetence have been made, and as the discussion in the senate has brought out nothing against the administration, it is not likely that anything will be done. If charges of wrong-doing were made, it would be a different matter altogether. Then there would be an investigation in short order, if the charges were made by reputable persons for the good of the state.

There has also been referred to the committee on constitutional amendments a petition from members of last year's senate and house, some of whom are re-elected, for the election of the legislative presiding officers by the people. The proposition has support in the senate. President Lawrence spoke for it last year. Senator Irwin is on the petition. Senator Cook of Worcester was one of the petitioners last year. Senator Wellman is in favor of it. This will, at least, insure its being well debated in the senate. Three of last year's house who signed the petition are re-elected this year.

The biennial amendment came up by special assignment on Tuesday afternoon, but no sooner was it called than a skirmish began over the limitation of debate. It was finally limited to a little over an hour (by the time they were ready to vote) and then Mr. J. H. Mellen of Worcester got the floor and made a point of order that the resolves were not properly before the house, that they had been so hastily reported by the committee that they were materially out of order. Speaker Meyer overruled the point, but Mellen so persuaded the house, after that, that the amendment was not in the right form that it was recommitted on motion of Mr. Bates of Boston, one of the Republican leaders of the house. Wednesday afternoon the committeee reported the resolve once more, this presumably in the proper form for consideration. Great interest attaches to the question and efforts are being made by the Republicans to draw party lines on the question in spite of the attitude of Senator Hoar, ex-Gov. Long, ex-Collector Beard, several congressmen and others, for if it becomes a party issue, the Republicans will have more than the necessary two-thirds.

The temperance people are much pleased at the attitude of the house upon some of the liquor matters which have come to a vote and say that this is one of the best legislatures they have had for a long time. Radical legislation is proposed on both sides. The liquor people, and those who regard liquor selling as an honorable business to receive the protection of the state, the same as any other business, are putting measures to break down the present restrictions around the issue of licenses, while the temperence men are putting in petitions and bills on the other side, asking for further turns of the screws upon the liquor sellers. With the present temper of the legislature, the liquor men will get the worst of it.

The state board of agriculture, at its meeting Wednesday, voted to hold its next winter meeting in Greenfield on December 1, 2 and 3, and also adopted unanimously a series of resolutions condeming the effort to procure the exemption of personal property from taxation and instructing the secretary of the board, in the interest of the farmers, and representing the board, to express to the legislature the opinion of the board. This brings the taxation fight to the front once more, and the chances seem to be on the side of the farmers.

Yacht Club Annual.

The Quincy Yacht club held its annual meeting Saturday evening at the Ward Room, City Hall, and although the night was a stormy one there was a good attendance. Commodore Pettengill presided and the business of the evening was put through with dispatch. The report of the treasurer, Mr. James S. Whiting, showed the total receipts for the year from all sources to have been $1,373.68; the expenditures, $1,348.64, leaving a balance on hand of $25.04.

The secretary's report was as follows:

Total number of members during season, 196.

Number of members in good standing, Jan. 23, 1896, 185.

Number of members admitted, 1895, 20.

Number of members in arrears, (dropped) 8.

Number of members resigned, 2.

Number of members died, 1.

Number of members permanent residents of Quincy, 127.

Number of members, residents elsewhere, 58.

Total number of yachts enrolled, 92.

Number of yachts enrolled, Jan. 23, 1896, 83.

Number of club races, 4.

Average number of yachts entered (a decrease of 9 over preceding seasons) 7.

Both of the above reports were accepted.

It was voted to proceed to the election of officers and Messrs. Edwin Newcomb, Amos Merritt, Harold B. Faxon and H. F. Spear were appointed to receive and count votes, and the voting began.

While the committee were counting the ballots the following business was transacted:

COMMODORE PETTENGILL.

Voted, That the club become a member of the Yacht Racing association of Massachusetts and that the Commodore be a committee to appoint a member to represent the club at the association.

Article seven of the by-laws was amended by the addition of the following: "Members who are absent from Massachusetts during the whole fiscal year, commencing on the first Saturday in February, shall be exempt from their dues for such year, provided they give notice of their intended absence to the Secretary."

That section of the same article relating to delinquent members, was amended so as to read: "Members in arrears on the first day of June shall be notified by the Treasurer of such indebtedness and may be debarred from all Club privileges until the same be paid. If the dues of a member remain unpaid on the first day of August the Treasurer shall cause his name to be posted in the Club House, and his name may be erased from the list of members by the Executive Committee," etc., etc.

The executive committee was authorized to select and adopt some device or insignia for caps.

Paragraph four of article four of the by-law was amended by the addition of the following words: "And give to the owner of each yacht measured a certificate of measurement."

Section two of chapter three of the rules and regulation was amended by the addition of the following words: "the fee for which shall be one dollar."

Section six of chapter three of the rules and regulations was amended by substituting the words "half raters," for "jib and mainsail yachts."

The following resolve was adopted: "That it is the sense of this meeting that the executive committee to consider the matter of securing winter quarters for the club in the centre."

The result of the ballot was then announced and the following were declared elected:

Commodore,—Charles F. Pettengill.

Vice-Commodore,—John W. Sanborn.

Secretary and Treasurer,—James S. Whiting.

Measurer,—William C. Harrison.

Executive Committee, — William P. Barker, John T. Cavanagh, Henry M. Faxon, George E. Pfaffmann.

House Committee,—Horace R. Drinkwater, Luther W. Glover, Gordon M. Keating, C. Eaton Pierce, Fred B. Rice, Walter B. Wilson, Walter E. Wyman.

The sharpest contest was for measurer—Mr. Harrison receiving 18, a bare majority to 16 for George Crane, and 1 blank. The lowest man elected on the house committee received 20 votes, and he had a close call, for Joseph L. Sturtevant received 19, and Arthur J. Shaw 18.

This is Commodore Pettengill's second year, and his popularity was shown by an unanimous reelection under an Australian ballot. A year ago the PATRIOT published a lengthy sketch of the commodore, and today we are able to present an excellent portrait.

There is a bill in the Legislature providing that damages cannot be recovered from a town because of injuries received on highways resulting from ice or snow.

HOOD'S PILLS cure Liver Ills, Biliousness, Indigestion, Headache. A pleasant laxative. All Druggists.

1,557 Bottles in Three Days.

The sales of True's Pin Worm Elixir, manufactured by Dr. J. F. True & Co., Auburn, Me., for the first three days of 1896 amounted to 1,557 bottles. The manufacture of this old, standard family remedy was begun nearly a half century ago and the demand for it has steadily increased until in 1895 there were sold nearly 40,000 bottles. These figures speak volumes for the efficacy of the Elixir in curing the diseases of children, and of the faith that the mothers of America have in it.

If we could trace Dyspepsia to its source, it would lead back to our kitchen. In fact, the secret of good health is good cooking. If well cooked, foods are partially digested; if poorly cooked, they are less digestible than in their raw state. If you are a victim of faulty cooking; that is, if you suffer from Dyspepsia, the rational cure must be looked for in an artificially digested food, and a food which will at the same time aid the digestion of other foods. Such a preparation virtually rests the tired digestive organs, thereby restoring them to their natural strength.

The Digestive Cordial, as prepared by the Shakers of Mount Lebanon, is just such a preparation, and a single 10 cent bottle will convince you of its value. If your druggist doesn't keep it, he will be glad to get it through his wholesale house.

Laxol is the best medicine for children. Doctors recommend it in place of Caster Oil.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

THE SHAWMUT SPRING WATER possesses all these requirements, and when used in liberal quantities it is a most important factor in building up and restoring to healthy action the digestive organs and conducive to the health of all, more especially to children and persons of delicate constitutions. The array of testimony by doctors and others in its favor is overwhelming. and shows that Shawmut Spring Water stands among the best.

Largest in the World.

Boston may have soon the largest hotel structure in the world, on Commonwealth avenue, to be called the Commonwealth Hotel. The architect, Mr. John Pickering Putnam, has the plans about ready, and work will begin in the spring. The structure will be in three sections. There will be 700 rooms in the first section, which is all that will be built this year. There will be a large banquet hall and a dancing hall. There will be provision for an ice skating rink and summer bicycle pavilion.

When completed the hotel will have 2250 rooms, will be 11 stories high and in effect will be something like the Charlesgate. It is modeled after a German palace.

"You see," he explained, as he showed her the wishbone, "You take hold here. Then we must both make a wish and pull, and when it breaks the one who has the biggest part of it will have his or her wish gratified."

"But I don't know what to wish for," she protested.

"Oh, you can think of something," he said.

"No, I can't," she replied; "I can't think of anything I want very much."

"Well, I'll wish for you," he exclaimed.

"Will you really?" she asked.

"Yes."

"Well, then, there's no use fooling with the old wishbone," she interrupted, with a glad smile, "You can have me!"—Truth.

Good Temper.

There's not a cheaper thing on earth,
Nor yet one half so dear;
'Tis worth more than distinguished birth,
Or th usands gained a year;

It lends today a new delight,
'Tis virtue's firmest shield;
And adds more beauty to the night
Than all the stars can yield.

It maketh poverty content,
To sorrow whispers peace;
It is a gift from heaven sent,
For m rtals to increase.

It meets you with a smile at morn,
It lulls you to repose;
A flower for peer and peasant born,
An everlasting rose.

A charm to banish grief away,
To clear the brow from care;
Turn tears to smiles, make dullness gay,
Spread gladness everywhere.

And yet 'tis sweet as summer dew
That gems the lily's breast;
A talisman for love as true
As ever man possessed.

What may this wondrous spirit be,
With power unheard before—
This charm, this bright amenity?
Good temper—nothing more.

Good temper—'tis the choicest gift
That woman homeward brings,
And can the poorest peasant lift
To bliss unknown to kings.

For the Patriot.

On the Death of Miss Webster.

Mary, thou wast mild and lovely,
And thy pure and gentle life,
Shed abroad a hallowed fragance
Which will last while time abides.

It was hard to see you suffer,
Oh, so hard to have you go,
But a kind and loving Father
Had a mansion made for you.

So from earth to heaven he took you,
To the mansion in the skies
An angel now in purest white,
A child of Paradise.

Fond mother, dry your weeping eyes,
And put your trust in God's great love,
Your darling child has won the prize,
The crown immortal, up above.

Oh, what comfort in the promise,
"No night in Heaven" shall be,
But one long blessed day of light,
Free from earth's misery.

We miss you in the Sunday School,
Teachers and scholars all,
No "Mary" answers to our call,
The one we loved, has gone.

We can but say "Good night,"
"Good night," but not "Good by,"
For we'll meet to say "Good morning,"
In the better home on high.

A. M. C.

Notes and Comments.

—We have received from Prof. J. B. Sewall the nineteenth annual catalogue of Thayer Academy, Braintree. The school seems to be in a flourishing condition with a large number of pupils in attendance. Quincy contributes twenty-six pupils out of the ninety-three.

—There is a rumor that the large sewing machine companies will go into bicycle manufacturing this year and place a good wheel on the market for $25. Who believes it?

—It is shown by the official statistics that in a given 1000 of the people of Massachusetts there are now more individuals possessed of moderate and fair-sized estates than ever before, and that the average size of such estates is more than double what it was 60 years ago. This is relatively true as to the whole country. In spite of all the loose talk about the rich growing richer and the poor growing poorer, the fact is that the poor are accumulating property faster, in proportion and in the aggregate, than the rich.

—The canvass for the births of 1895 has been taken in different towns. Two ladies in a neighboring town report the birth of a fifteenth child and one the births of twelve in sixteen years.

—There is some complaint at Nantasket beach of Boston refuse and garbage being washed in from the sea. We opine, from what we have seen, there is full as much refuse carried down in the summer, by the excursion boats and trains.—Mansfield News.

—Weymouth is having an epidemic of pink eye.

—The work on the new Charles River Park track in Boston is being pushed with a rapidity and spirit that speaks for its early completion. When that point is reached, Boston will undoubtedly be the wealthiest city in the country in the matter of race tracks, for she will have no less than four of them, but of this number the Charles River Park track must take precedence owing to its construction on the most scientific plan, there not being a single experiment in the entire construction.

—Charles Hoyt the playwright and actor is talked of as the democratic nominee for governor of New Hampshire. Mr. Hoyt has represented his district in the legislature for several years and is said to be as successful in making rules as in making plays.

—One of Palace Car Pullman's daughters is to be married, and, strange to relate, to an American. That would indicate an increase rather than a decrease in "Pullman births."—Franklin Sentinel.

—A newspaper man who was imprisoned and fined for criticising a judge has been released by a higher court and the judge reprimanded. Thus the "freedom of the press" is vindicated.

—Postmaster General Wilson has issued an order to establish a house letter box system of distributing and collecting mails. Experiments will be first made in Boston, Springfield and Portland. The boxes will be placed outside the door or gate, and an indicator on it shows whether there is any mail in it or not.

—The postmistress of Georgetown, Ind., has held her position for fifteen years, but a recent visit of the inspector revealed the fact that there were seventeen unopened sacks of mail from one to seven years old. She probably hadn't had time to read the letters yet. That was a big task for a woman sixty years old.

—Miss Francis Huls, who has been appointed an official weigher of coal in Cincinnati, is the first woman to secure such an office in that city.

—Another innovation in the manufacture of shoes in Brockton has just been put into practical operation. It is the introduction of ooze calf for tops. The material resembles cloth so much that it cannot be detected, unless by close examination, and when made up it gives the shoe every appearance of a natty cloth top shoe.

Morse Bros., Props., Canton, Mass., U. S. A.

—The right way to roll your umbrella is to take hold of the ends of the ribs and the stick with the same hand and hold them tightly enough to prevent their being twisted while the covering is being twirled round with the other hand. Then your umbrella will be as nicely closed as when you bought it, and the only wear and tear will be on the cloth. It is twisting the ribs out of shape around the stick and fastening them there that spoils most of the umbrellas. Never hold the umbrella by the handle alone when you roll it up, and you will find that it will last longer and cost less for repairs.

—There was a little breeze in Plymouth a few days ago among the merchants of the town, on account of some Jews advertising a clothing sale. The matter has been taken up by the Commercial Club and a movement made to stop this sale of clothing where a license has not been secured by the parties. The merchants object to these parties coming into town and hiring a room and selling, as they say, goods of inferior nature, when they have to keep up a big store and pay rent and taxes. Five of the Jews interested in this clothing sale were brought before Judge Davis charged with violating the statute in passing handbills, announcing the sale when a license for it had not been secured — Hingham Journal.

History of an Old Church

The old white church, which has stood for many score years on the very top of Meeting-house hill, Dorchester, was destroyed by fire on Monday morning last, supposed to have caught from an overheated furnace. Loss $30,000; well insured. The church was built in 1816, and the parish is the oldest religious society in Boston.

We copy from the Boston Journal the following facts connected with this old church:

The First Parish Church (Unitarian) of Meeting House Hill was a real old Boston landmark. Its history dates away back to the time of the first coming of the settlers of the then future New England, from the old country. The parish itself has the distinction, probably had by none other in the country, at least no other church, of having been founded in England. The date was March 20, 1630, and it was on the eve before a little colony of emigrants embarked for the New World, and its unknown dangers and disappointments. The "Mary and John" was the good ship that brought them away from old Plymouth that eventful spring morning.

The first ministers of the parish were John Maverick and John Wareham.

Like many another religious body of primitive colonists, the first services were open air meetings. The first gathering of this parish in the new world was on the Sunday in June, 1630, that followed their landing and settling in Dorchester.

The first edifice was unpretentious. It was fashioned of rough logs, built in 1631 at the corner of Pleasant and Cottage streets. Like most other structures of the time, to be safe against the attack of the Indian it was protected by rows of palisades.

In 1645 a more expensive structure, on the same site, took its place.

In 1670 the edifice was moved to Meeting House Hill, which thus derived its name and where on its topmost point, the cynosure of all eyes, its white walls kept watch over the growth of a great city.

In 1677 a new church was erected on the site at an expense of $200. In 1743 another new one was built, which stood until the erection of the present structure in 1816.

The old bell was presented to the church in 1751 and has therefore been a part of the First Parish for 145 years.

It has been a part of the civil as well as of the religious history of the town. It has called the settlers to meeting, it has roused them to attend fires, it has called them to town meeting, it has tolled their death, it announced the birth of liberty in 1776, and the call for troops for the Rebellion in 1861.

Many years ago it became cracked, and was taken down, recast, and hung again.

A Scandal.

Senator Peffer has unearthed a glaring public scandal. It is the Congressional funeral. He has been examining the expenses of such a matter, and finds that the United States treasury is "a subject of common plunder for those who choose to pray upon it." The Senator finds in his researches that the first Senatorial funeral was an economical affair. Attended mainly by neighbors and kindred of the departed legislator, it was conducted according to their sense of propriety. The expense was four dollars and forty-nine cents; while the latest Sentorial funeral was a parlor car procession across the continent, and cost the country the sum of twenty-one thousand three hundred and twenty-two dollars. Congressional authority put the departed statesman in "the hands of his friends," and extended to his family the privilege of being invited guests. The wine-stock buffet the expensive floral outfit, and the costly mourning crape swelled the expense to the enormous sum named.

The Pawtucket Gazette says, "The matter reminds us of a Congressional party which came to accompany the body of the venerable John Quincy Adams forty-eight years ago. Our older readers recollect that he died in the Capitol. It was pertinent indeed that a committee of his colleagues should accompany his lifeless form to Massachusetts; but one would have thought that they would have respected the solemnities of the occasion. There were citizens of Boston, however, that could not forego the pleasure of a feast. A banquet was therefore provided at the Revere House, and the mourners were invited to the "funeral baked meats." Josiah Quincy, Jr., was then Mayor of Boston, and was invited to preside at the feast. In a dignified reply, however, he gave the civic committee to understand that Massachusetts was in no mood, while her venerated statesman lay unburied, to engage in a drinking bout. But the supper took place, and stories were current of the excesses which disgraced the occasion. The Mayor preserved his reputation, however, and thousands of the citizens of the Bay State blushed at the revelry of some other officials."

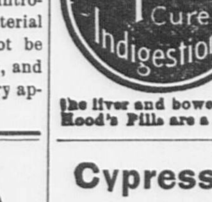

How it Lost its Name.

Botanists tell us that the plant which everybody calls nasturtium is not really one at all. Nasturtium is the botanical name for watercress, but because this plant with its flat, circular leaves and beautiful red and yellow blossom, happen to taste like watercress it lost its own name, "tropoelum," and will probably never get it back again except in books.

Diphtheria.

Editors of the Patriot;

In your issue of last week an article appeared in regard to the cases of diphtheria under my care, which would lead one to suppose that the use of anti-toxin would have saved some or all of them, which I deny.

In the first place the cases were very malignant, which opinion is confirmed by the physicians, who were called in consultation, and they are men of experience in this disease.

In the interview published the statement is made that "the opinions of the leading physicians of the country are universally in favor of the remedy." This is not so. The most determined opposition to the use of anti-toxin comes from prominent regular school physicians and journals, from which allow me to quote.

In the February "Medical Brief" is as follows: "The really scientific, eminent, conservative men in the profession who love truth for its own sake, and are capable of judicial investigation and an unbiased verdict, are beginning to send in reports on anti-toxin. One and all condemn it, and demonstrate conclusively that its use has really increased the mortality of diphtheria."

As instance, we cite the two able and impartial papers on the subject, read before the New York Academy of Medicine by Doctors William Henry Porter and William Vissman, lecturer on Pathology and Clinical Microscopy, at the New York Polyclinic.

Dr. Porter says in American Medico-Surgical Bulletin as follows: "In the practical application of diphtheria, anti-toxin, from a clinical standpoint, we find the common statement that anti-toxine of diphtheria is of a ail, only when it is used early and in the mild cases of the disease. In the later stages, and when the disease is of a severe type, the anti-toxin is of little value, and should not be used; in the diptheria with mixed infections it has no influence of value. Neither does it render the human subject immune to diphtheria, but rather it tends to lower the nutritive resistance of the living cells of the body, and thus increases the susceptibility to the disease."

"Yet in the face of all these statements which have been made by the experimental biologists, innumerable statistics are being published which appear to prove conclusively that the mortality from diphtheria has been greatly reduced by the introduction and use of the diphtheria anti-toxin. The real facts however, appear to be as follows:

"The diagnosis of diphtheria for a long time was based upon the presence of Klebs-Lœffler bacilli in the throat. The presence of the bacillus, even in the absence of clinical manifestations constituted a true case of diphtheria. This naturally swelled the total number of the mild cases of diphtheria that would in all probability have recovered upon almost any rational plan of treatment. This single factor has greatly increased the total number of cases, and it alone helped largely to lower the percentage of fatal cases. The severe cases not amenable to the anti-toxin treatment, one eliminated, which again helps to lower the apparent mortality.

"Then a large percentage of cases having a pseudo membrane in the throat and all the clinical manifestations common to diphtheria, and in which the mortality runs high in consequence of the mixed infections, but in which the examiners failed to find the Klebs-Lœffler bacillus, have been excluded in compling the statistics. Of this class some observers put the number as high as thirty or forty per cent. of all cases of diphtheria.

"All of the above enumerated classes of cases have helped to keep down the apparent fatality of diphtheria. If now, some of the first-class, which, from a clinical standpoint, never had true diphtheria, are deducted as they should be, and the two other classes added, the true and total mortality from diphtheria will be found not to have been perceptibly lowered.

"On the other hand, there appears to be an accumulation of evidence which, in the near future, and in the absence of any severe epidemic, will show conclusively, that the mortality from diphtheria has been raised rather than lowered, by the employment of diphtheria anti-toxin."

Dr. William Vissman, B. A., M. D., New York, says: "From what we have learned from the experiments of Landois, Naunyn, Francke, and many others, we are not justified in the subcutaneous introduction into the human organism of the blood serum of the lower animals; because it does produce a very serious effect even on healthy persons. In diphtheria anti-toxin, however, we have a modified serum, which its discoverer informs us is almost indifferent in its effect on the human organism. So far as we can learn from the reports of those who have administered it to man, its effect is far from indifferent. Nearly all are agreed that there are certain disagreeable results from the use of anti-toxin.

Among these complications are erythema hemorrhages in the skin, heart weakness, pain in the joints (with or without swelling) which may last for several days. If all of those persons having virulent diphtheria bac lli in their fancies, were treated with anti-toxin, many would be injured for an uncertain benefit to a very few.

After the disease has made such progress that it can be diagnosed the toxin has produced such an effect upon the organism, that, judging from the experiments of Behring, Parks and others, little benefit is to be expected from the anti-toxin. And, since observing the results of experiments on rabbits, it is highly probable that, instead of reducing the mortality of diphtheria, anti-toxin has really increased the death rate."—Amer. Medico. Surg. Bulletin.

The Journal of the American Medical Association reviews editorially the position of the eminent London laryngologist, Lennox Brown, (the worthy succesor of Sir Morrell MacKenzie, M. D.,) who states that after the use of serum theraphy "A greater number of children have been found liable to attacks of cyanosis and faintings with a correspondingly increased demand for nervines and stimulants. Complete recovery is found to be greatly delayed and an unexpected fatal result at a late period is more frequent"

"He calls attention to the increased liability to the most grave complications of diphtheria, viz. anuria, rephritis and cardiac failure. He also alludes to cases in which immunizing serum had produced noxious and even fatal results.

"In view of these facts, the Journal A. M. A. cautions the practitioner to give anti-toxin a wide berth, and not make the profession rediculous by too much haste in accepting "every continental fad that is forced upon us."

From Medical Brief, Feb.—All observers unite in saying that anti-toxin is absolutely valueless in septic diphtheria, malignant diphtheria, genuine diphtheria. No man who has ever administered a dose has had sufficient courage to trust it alone. Recourse is always had to local and supporting treatment.

"It has been shown in many instances, especially in the Willard Parker Hospital for children, in New York, that the mortality from this anti-toxin treatment which a year ago promised such favorable results, is now alarmingly high. Not only are paralysis, acute nephritis, convulsions, fatal congestions, of the abdominal viscera and other alarming conditions produced as a result of the treatment, but various septic states follow as remote effects.—Medical Brief.

Household Receipts.

CHEESE SANDWICHES. Take the yolk of one hard-boiled egg, rub it smooth, add one tablespoonful of melted butter, quarter of a pound of grated cheese, salt and cayenne pepper and mustard to taste. Mix well, and moisten with a tablespoonful of water, which will make it of proper consistency. Spread over thinly sliced bread.

SQUASH MUFFINS One cup sifted squash, one cup milk, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, melted, one egg, one pint of flour, two tablespoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt. Mix the milk, sugar and butter with the squash, add the well beaten egg. Mix the baking powder and salt with the flour and then stir this into the first mixture and beat thoroughly. Bake in round muffin pans, about half an hour.

FILLING FOR CREAM CAKES OR PIE. Scald one cupful of milk reserving enough to make a smooth paste with one tablespoonful of flour. Mix this with the scalded milk and stir till it thickens. Let it cook five minutes stirring occasionally. Then mix the thickened milk with one beaten egg or the yolks of two, and cook for a few moments longer till the egg thickens. Take from the fire, add one-fourth cupful of sugar. When carefully put together straining is unnecessary.

GINGER CAKES. Five tablespoonfuls of flour, three tablespoonfuls of brown sugar, one teaspoonful of ground ginger, two tablespoonfuls of black molasses, a good teaspoonful of baking powder. Mix the flour, sugar, ginger and baking-powder well together in a dry state, than add the molasses with a little milk, stir well together, and bake in a moderate oven in small pattypans.

STEAMED BROWN BREAD. One cup Indian meal, one cup rye meal, one half cup white flour, one half teaspoon salt, one half teaspoon soda, one fourth cup molasses, one and one half cup sweet milk. Mix in the order given and steam two and a half hours.

Bad dreams distress the man whose digestion is out of order. Constipation creates more dreams than are in the infernal regions. People who are troubled with constipation sleep badly and restlessly. Sometimes they cannot sleep at all, and when they do sleep, the dreams come. It doesn't take so very long to wear a man out with that sort of thing. He gets up in the morning feeling worse than he did when he went to bed. He is listless and without energy. The chances are he is dizzy, has "heart-burn," palpitation, sees black spots before his eyes, has headache and is bilious. What nonsense it is to let a condition of that sort continue. Nine-tenths of all the sickness in the world comes from constipation and neglect of it. It is a simple thing to cure if you go about it right. It's a bad thing and a serious thing if you don't take the right medicine. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are designed for the cure of constipation. The "Pellets" are tiny, sugar-coated granules. One is a laxative, two a mild cathartic. Everybody who has ever used them has a good word for them. They have prevented more serious illness than any other remedy ever sold. Druggists sell them, and an honest druggist will not try to sell you something else.

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is the greatest family doctor book ever published. It explains human physiology and the laws of life and health in plain yet scientific language. It has had a tremendous sale; 680,000 copies at $1.50 each, bound in cloth. The present free edition is the same in all respects except that it is bound in strong manilla paper covers. A copy will be absolutely given away to anyone who sends 21 one-cent stamps to pay cost of mailing only, to World's Dispensary Medical Association. No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Liquor Business as it Is.

It is known that alchohol is a poison, and as all intoxicating liquor contains alchohol it must be injurious. Alchohol poisons the blood, disorders the brain, dulls the nerves, inflames the stomach, and excites the heart. If taken at all, it should be only as a medicine and then under medical advice. As a beverage it will always harm sooner or later.

The saloon which furnishes liquor sends with it poverty, for all who persist in drinking it, squanders their earnings. It causes waste, as few who frequent the drinking place are able to save money for useful purposes, or even for their own need. Many a young business man is ruined through drink, and working people are less useful and valuable therefor. The laboring man at the till of the saloon pours out his money to enrich the capitalist, who is making from 100 to 1000 per cent. on the liquor sold.

The saloon hurts others for nine out of ten criminals are arrested because of drinking, and four out of five in the poorhouse went there because they drank liquor, while you have to help support them. Wives and mothers, and children and parents must suffer in order to sustain the saloon keeper.

All business is impaired by the saloon, for the people who lose money on account of drink are the very persons who are unable to buy as many shoes and hats and groceries as they otherwise would. To every dollar the liquor business pays the public in taxes and revenue, it retains eleven dollars for the liquor maker and seller.—Cause.

Eugene Field's Last Story.

In 1884 Eugene Field wrote a story which he called "The Werewolf." When it was finished he laid it aside and a year afterward entirely rewrote it. In 1886 he again took it up and revised it, and during the nine years between that time and his death in November last, he rewrote it eight times. His last revision pleased him and he decided to print it. But death came too suddenly, and the story was found, unpublished, among his effects. Mrs. Field concluding to have the story appear, gave it to the editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, in which magazine all of Mr. Field's work, outside of his newspaper articles, was presented to the public. The story will be printed in the next issue of the Journal, strikingly illustrated by Mr. Howard Pyle.

Mending Gloves.

In mending gloves, cotton, not silk thread should be used. Silk thread not only cuts through the kid, but a rent mended with silk is always noticeable, whereas the cotton thread soon becomes rubbed and takes on the color of the glove. All kid gloves are sewed with cotton thread. The manufacturers consider the difference in the material and use most satisfactory.

Thread in all shades in which gloves are made is sold especially for mending gloves. A bunch can be bought for a trifle. If a glove is badly torn, place a small silk patch under the torn part and fix it on with invisible stitches. Then draw the raw edges up, carefully taking up as little of the kid as is possible.

A sporting Boer in the Transvaal has, according to the Cape newspapers, two racing ostriches, one of which has a stride of 14 feet and can go 22 miles in the hour.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

NORFOLK, ss. QUINCY, Dec. 13, 1895.

BY Virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment in favor of John H. Dinegan of Quincy, in said County, against Thomas Farrell of said Quincy, I this day seized and took all the right, title and interest the within named Thomas Farrell had on the 13th day of September, A. D., 1895, at 9 o'clock P. M., this being the time when the same was attached on mesne process in and to the following described parcel of real estate, viz.:

Being lot No. 25 on a plan of land belonging to J. B. Fletcher and A. J. Tetro, to be found recorded with Norfolk Plan and bounded northeasterly on land of Huntington 101 9-100 feet; southeasterly on land now or late of said Fletcher and Tetro being lot No. 23 on said plan, 41 9-10 feet; southwesterly on land now or late of said Fletcher and Tetro, being lot No. 24 on said plan, 100 feet; northwesterly on a certain private way that may be called Farrell street, 64 15-100 feet containing five thousand, four hundred fifty-two square feet more or less. Being the same premises conveyed to me by said Fletcher and Tetro, by deed dated Nov. 30, A. D., 1885, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, libro 573, folio 4 5; and on SATURDAY, the 15th day of February, A. D., 1896, at two o'clock in the afternoon, at my residence, No. 53 Franklin street, Quincy, in said County, I shall offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder the aforesaid right, title and interest of said Thomas Farrell to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

OUR MOTIVE IN QUOTING THESE EXTRAORDINARY LOW PRICES—Our place of business, 78 Beach street, opposite U. S. Hotel is one of the nearest stores to the Albany, Old Colony and N. Y. & N. E. Depots, rendering it the most convenient place for those who travel on these roads to make purchases.
We hope the same inducement that has obtained for us the largest hotel and restaurant trade in the city, namely, low prices and a true representation of our goods to the buyer, will have the same favorable results—a larger and increasing trade—with the patrons of these roads.
We do not pay freight or express charges on goods going out of town sold at these prices.

Poetry.

A Valentine.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

Accept, dear wife, this little token,
And, if between the lines you seek,
You'll find the love I've often spoken—
The love I'll always love to speak.

Our little ones are making merry
With unco ditties rhymed in jest,
But in these lines, though awkward very,
The genuine article's expressed!

You are so fair and sweet and tender,
Dear, brown-eyed little sweetheart mine,
As when a callow youth and slender,
I asked to be your valentine.

What though these years of ours be fleeting?
What though the youth of years be flown?
I'll mock old Kronos with repeating
"I love my love and her alone!"

And when I fall before his reaping,
And when my stuttering speech is dumb,
Think not my love is dead or sleeping,
But that it waits for you to come.

So take, dear love, this little token,
And if there speaks in any line
The sentiment I'll fain have spoken,
Say, will you kiss your valentine?

Miscellany.

Old-Fashioned Valentine.

"O give to me some smallest sign
If thou wilt be my valentine."

Mrs. Barrows sat at an old-fashioned desk, an old-fashioned valentine in her hand. It was an affair of paper-lace, gilding, embossed flowers, etc. The verses that it contained were sentimental in the highest degree, ending with the lines quoted above.

The lady's lip curled as she read. Love was a word that no longer brought pleasant emotions to her heart. Her dreams of happiness in love had proved but dreams. Life was hard, commonplace, flat, without inspiration, without hope. So she pretended to herself. Deep down in her heart, much smothered and flouted, there was yet a voice that now and then found utterance to this effect:

"If life is hopeless, joyless, it is your own fault to a great extent."

As she sat gazing at the gorgeous valentine, the voice whispered, "You accuse your husband of change, coldness, broken promises. How is it with yourself. There are other promises than those made in words. What kind of a person was it to whom this valentine was written?"

What kind of a person? A sweet-faced, bright, breezy, laughing girl, clad in the prettiest of costumes, who would not for the world have allowed her lover to see her in negligee. Why should not the adoring "suitor" see her unbecomingly dressed? Why should he not see her hair in curl-papers, her feet in ragged slippers? Why? Because his admiration would receive a check. He might cease altogether to be attracted. To please was then her chief object. If she felt listless when he came she roused herself. If she felt cross she controlled the disposition. If she felt dull she hid the fact, bringing out all her resources to amuse.

Thus the voice in her heart. She knew that it was all true. These promises made to the eye, the heart, the mind of her lover, she had broken many times and oft. On his part he had ceased to feel the old time interest in her society, to pay the old time attentions. He found other places more attractive than his home; other society more amusing than that of his wife. He followed his inclinations, the leadings of his nature as she had followed hers. Neither had made it the business of their lives to overcome the faults that threatened the death of affection.

As Mrs. Barrows sat in silent introversion her husband came into the room unheard. He saw the open desk, the unloosed packet, the folded valentines, and the open one in his wife's hand. An odd sensation made him breathe quickly as he went quietly out. The present seemed to recede. The past came back with a wondrous vividness.

He had intended to speak to his wife on some unimportant domestic matter before going to business; but the sight of her lost in the contemplation of the old valentine had restrained him. He went slowly down town, his thoughts like his wife's, busy with those early days when she was his goddess and he her devotee. What if he should send her a valentine as in the old days? He smiled a little at the thought. He had long ceased to be "sentimental," as he called the old emotional experiences. Could he bring back those feelings? No, that would be impossible, he thought. But might he not be truer to his duties without the impetus of feeling?

"I will go home tonight early," he resolved. "Kate must be very lonely many a time when I am at the club among friends, pictures, books." All day there hovered in his mental atmosphere an image of a graceful girl, gentle, bright, witty, who was the Kate Marston of his early fascination. Yes, he called it a fascination, since, as he thought, the influence that she exerted over him had wholly disappeared.

Nevertheless, as his mind was more and more concentrated about the plan of surprising her with new devotion, some of the old eagerness for the evening home-going returned. At an earlier hour than usual he went to the market and bought a basket of fruit—pale Malaga grapes and golden oranges. A cluster of costly roses was selected—just such roses as "Kate" used to delight in, and with actually some of the lover's interest in what she would say, he hurried home.

As he approached his home he saw that it was brilliantly illuminated.

"There must be company," he thought. "Mrs. Barrows is rather economical of gas as a usual thing. I wonder if sister and the children are here from New York? If they are Kate will rebel, for she hates trouble, and has small favor for poor Sister Mollie these latter days."

Mr. Barrows was very fond of his favorite sister's pretty flock of babies; five of them and the eldest but seven years old. The twin girlies were his delight, and it was one of his private griefs that his wife did not take to these little people, or to children of any age or kind, as to that.

Thus reflecting, the husband entered the house and took off his overcoat in the hall. As he was hanging it on the rack somebody opened the door leading into the parlor. It was a stately lady in a very charming tea gown of violet cashmere with silken trimmings, a cluster of white pinks at her corsage and another in the smooth black coils of hair. He stared at her a moment in astonishment, she smiling, evidently amused at his perplexity.

"Kate!" he exclaimed at last. "Really I didn't know you. How handsome you look!"

She slipped her arm into his, and together they went to the dining-room.

"I have brought you some roses," he said, almost timidly, "and I thought perhaps you would like some fruit."

"How good of you, James!" said the lady, burying her face in the lovely flowers. "And such roses are so expensive now! I love them all the better for their rarity—the beautiful, beautiful things!"

The husband was many times repaid for the gift by the pleasure she showed. The fruit was praised in its turn, and it was with genuine happiness that the two sat down to the tea-table and chatted of the events of the day. Mr. Barrows stole many a glance at his handsome, vivacious wife. She had put on that pretty gown for him, she had arranged her hair for him. That was the style he admired—no frizzing, no curls, just those stately coils that became her so well.

"I thought perhaps there were guests in the house, you had lighted up so brightly!" said Mr. Barrows, presently.

"I remembered your foundness for having the rooms well lighted," replied Mrs. Barrows; and as her husband looked fixedly at her, she actually blushed, yes, the self-contained matron, who believed herself to have outgrown all feeling, grew rosy under a look.

When tea was over the two strolled into the library where a glowing fire in the open fire-place welcomed them.

"This is a pleasure indeed," said Mr. Barrows, who had missed the open fire sadly.

"Yes, I thought it a pity we had neglected it so long," said Mrs. Barrows, "it looked so cheery after Thomas lighted it. It is some trouble, you know; makes a good deal of dust."

"All the kinder of you to undertake the trouble," responded the husband, gallantly.

After a little talk Mrs. Barrows produced a new book.

"I saw this when I was down town today," she said. "These essays you know of Miss——'s that you enjoyed so much in the magazines. I thought it would be pleasant to reread some of them together."

"I should enjoy it of all things," said the amazed husband, who had been accustomed to see his wife always absorbed in some occupation that shut him out.

So the table was drawn to the sparkling fire, the drop-light was arranged, and Mr. Barrows read aloud from the brilliant pages, while his wife busied herself with a bit of embroidery.

This was a good beginning. But Mrs. Barrows saw that the cure must go deeper. She sat down the next morning and wrote a long letter to the "Sister Mollie" that her husband loved so well. There were some confessions in it, some explanations.

"You will help me, I know," she wrote, "when you understand the effort we are both making. It will be rather troublesome to bring your brood, but as John is absent, you won't so much mind leaving home, and I will come and help you with the fitting. I have already told you that I wish you to leave little Mollie with us for a few months, till you come to us next summer at least. Think of this seriously. It will be such a help to us in reconstructing."

"Uncle James! Uncle James! We's come."

A little fairy in white ran down the walk shouting these words, as Mr. Barrows opened his gate one April morning.

The child was caught up and hugged and kissed till her soft cheeks tingled.

"We's all here," she said. "Mamma says mebbe you will turn us out cause we didn't ask you if we might come. Will you turn us out, Uncle Dames?"

"All here? What do you mean Mollie?"

"Why us all. Mamma and Neddie and me, and the twinnies, and tiny baby. Only papa is way off in Talifornia, you know."

"It's Kate's doings," thought the husband. "God bless her. She shall see that I will not be lacking in appreciation."

And he was not. The presence of "Mollie and the babies" brought a great wave of love into the house by which many sweet things were refreshed.

Talking the matter over with her sister one day, Mrs. Barrows said:

"Why do we ever forget that love, the tenderest of flowers, needs the most careful, the tenderest culture?"—Portland Transcript.

Separated by Fate.

A well dressed woman walked into the Crocker building yesterday afternoon and took an elevator. Her husband saw her from across the street, and, hurrying over, took the next elevator. He went up to the office where he knew his wife had business, and found that she had stepped in and out, and gone down in the next elevator. The elevator dispatcher said to her:—

"Your husband just went up in the elevator. I think he is looking for you."

The lady took the next elevator up. Just then her husband came down. He looked all around, and then inquired of the elevator man:—

"Have you seen my wife here?"

"Yes, she just went up this minute."

The man took the next elevator, and he was no more than out of sight till his wife came down again.

"Your husband has just gone up again," said the elevator man.

"I guess he'll wait for me this time so I'll go up." And up she went.

Down came her husband a second afterward.

"Did my wife come down again?" he inquired.

"Yes, and just went up again." She thought you would wait for her."

"Well, I'll wait here."

He waited about five minutes, and then, growing impatient, took an elevator up stairs. She had been waiting for him, and came down again just as he disappeared.

"Well, I will wait for him and catch him this time," said she.

After standing in the corridor several minutes she decided to go up stairs and find him. As she was wisked out of sight, he stepped out of another elevator.

"Your wife has gone up," said the elevator man.

The husband swore a little under his breath, and started to leave the building. At the door he hesitated, changed his mind, and took the next elevator up. Down came his wife at the same moment.

"He's just gone up again," was the elevator man's answer to her weary look of inquiry, "and he's as mad as a hornet."

"Then I had better go right up and catch him," said she.

Up she went, and down he came.

"Just went up," remarked the elevator man.

"I'm darned if I'm going up again," said he; "I'll wait right here," and he sat down on the stairs. Half an hour later he was still sitting there, and his wife, equally determined, was waiting for him up stairs.

Spent Enthusiasms.

There was once upon a time a little girl who had a wonderful talent for beginnings. Every new plan, new study, new language, every novel field of industry, solicited her, and she entered eagerly and with all her might on the tempting employment, only to waste so much of herself in the initial attempt that she wearied of it before she had achieved success. The path of the child's life from ten to twenty was strewn with brilliant bits of things begun, but showed few things accomplished. Fatally superficial the woman envolved from this child saw her years when she had passed the meridian, a heap of spent enthusiasms; no harvests gathered after all her ardent showing of the seed; no staying power hers, to win in any race.

A distinguished scholar, arrested on a journey by a midsummer storm, found himself temporarily quartered in a farmhouse far up toward the sky-line in the mountains of Tennessee. The good people, gave the stranger the daughter's room. The man disposed his boots and hat and his thick rain coat about this retreat, wondering not a little at the books and other tokens of purpose in study along a definite line which a glance at the shelves and the little pine table revealed. It was difficult for him to believe that the daughter of the house, in a collarless bluff-colored print, with languid movements and lifeless sallow skin, eyes dull, speech slow, face apathetic, was the same girl who had been at college, and studied with zest and appreciation the text-books which remained in her room, like driftwood cast ashore after a wreck. Yet this was true, and the story was the common one of spent enthusiasm. Lacking the stimulus of companionship, of competition, feeling the limitations of a narrow lot, the girl had lost heart and hope, and dropped her hold of what had once been intensely interesting and satisfying.

There are few experiences more barren of happiness than those which come to us from conditions like these. Let us beware of enthusiasm which flares up to suddenly and then expires. Such enthusiasm, whether for work, for friendship, for devotion, for any reason beneath the sun and stars, is to be deprecated. Better far the steady pace with which keeps on tireless to the end of the day than the spurt which exhausts itself in a burst and gains nothing worth the name of reward.

Many of us do not take seriously into account the fact that a capacity for enthusiasm and sustained effort in work is the only fountain of youth left upon the earth. The person who works with unfailing energy and real delight in work for the work's sake forgets to grow old. Not long ago, in a company of gifted men and women, the one who attracted most observation and held around her the most loyal court was a fine and stately gentlewoman well on toward eighty.

"What is her secret? How has she preserved this almost miraculous charm of manner, this rare beauty of countenance?" some one asked her granddaughter.

"Oh," was the answer, "grandmamma has kept her weapons shining by constant use! She studies, reads, walks, goes into society, as she always did. She never thinks about herself, always thinks of what she is doing. And she is as enthusiastic about each day's work as if she were only sixteen."—Harper's Bazar.

Preserving China and Glass.

Many a bride, rejoicing in the beautiful china provided by loving friends to adorn her table, and who, wishing to see her new possessions as often as possible, uses them frequently, grieves over the mishaps which befall the dainty articles often without suspecting the real cause.

"Nicks," the bane of the housekeeper, appear, the gilding looks dull or even begins to wear off, the colors fade, the decoration on a set of hand-painted dessert plates looks, here and there, as if bits of the color had come off.

Nor is it only the china brought forth to deck her board on special occasions which suffers. The plainer ware purchased for daily use shows unaccountable cracks in the glaze, which, in the course of time, become brown, especially in the case of platers or other dishes on which meats or any greasy kinds of food are served.

The cracking of the glaze is commonly due to exposure to too much heat, for instance, in warming the plates, setting dishes in the oven to keep their contents hot, or even plunging them into water that is near the boiling point to wash them.

This cracking of the glaze, however, fortunately rarely occurs in the costlier wares, because they are subjected to greater heat in the process of manufacture.

If the yellow bowls, crockery baking dishes, teapots, etc., are placed in cold water, which is heated until it boils, then taken off the fire and allowed to cool gradually, their power to resist heat will be very greatly increased, and the bill for replacing broken cooking utensils correspondingly diminished.

To return to the fine china. The jarring of the dishes against each other is a fruitful source of nicks and even breakage, and this jarring can be avoided by setting them apart on a tray, which, in careful hands, is safe from the jolting and jarring of the average dumb waiter.

The dullness of the gilding is often due to the location of the closet in which the china is kept; if this is damp even the very best gold will tarnish. Its brilliancy can be restored by rubbing with a little dry whiting and soft wash leather, but this should be done as rarely as possible, or the gilding will be worn off.

Never permit plates or dishes to be set one upon the other without something between them. Canton flannel is the best material for this purpose, but blotting paper, cut into circles the size of the plates, is an excellent substitute.

The bottoms of all dishes are liable to be a little rough, and many a delicate bit of china has had its gilding or color decoration scratched or marred for lack of the precaution just mentioned.

The secret of the fading of the colors of dishes in which pickles and salads are served is the acid of the vinegar, which sometimes, through some almost invisible hole in the glaze, penetrates beneath.

Cut glass, which rivals china in many a woman's affections, requires fewer precautions. It may be kept in good condition by simply washing in warm, not hot, water, and drying with a soft cloth.

To preserve its full lustre and brilliancy, richly cut glass will need occasionally to be cleaned and polished with a soft brush and a little fine chalk.

Decanters and water bottles can be cleansed by putting into them potato parings, chopped fine, filling them with water and letting them stand three days, then empty, rinse well and they will be as bright and clear as the daintiest housewife could desire.—Globe.

ONE THOUSAND MILES IN FLORIDA.

In writing last week of the beauties of the Tampa Bay Hotel, the visit was enjoyed all over again in the imagination and in the enthusiasm which its name alone brings up, we almost forgot to tell you of the pleasant things done for our entertainment. They were too enjoyable not to be mentioned. To be sure there were some in our party who quite disappeared after lunch. Were they lazy? or were they tired? or was it that the sight of a "really truly bed" proved too enticing after two nights on the cars? If history speaks correctly they went to sleep and it was dark when they awoke and dinner called to them as something in the immediate future.

Meanwhile nearly all of the party had been by train down to Port Tampa that afternoon, to see the steamer Olivette come in from Cuba and Key West. A long pier, nine-tenths of a mile, had been built; immense excavation made; (as the water in the Gulf of Mexico, off Florida is very shallow,) which allowed the steamer to land her passengers and freight on the wharf.

It takes but twenty-three hours for the steamer to bring passengers from Havana to Port Tampa; and large numbers of Cubans, fleeing from the land of their nativity, are brought to Tampa each trip. As one gentleman expressed it, we had the pleasure of seeing many "real live Cubans" land on this occason.

Monday, our last day in Tampa, was like a day in June. A sail down the bay to the gulf was enjoyed by almost the entire party. The distance is about twenty miles so that it was sunset when we returned. A lunch having been served on the steamer with delicious fruit for all, and fragrant cigars for the gentlemen. Those not caring for the sail had the electric cars at their disposal, as they had been since our arrival, open ones too, and that in the middle of January; and how comfortable not to be burdened with heavy coats and wraps. A visit was made to different cigar factories where men, women and children are employed and where one hundred thousand dollars a week are paid out. Children not more than ten years old, earning their three and four dollars a week.

But it is now between seven and eight o'clock in the evening, and Tampa Bay is to be left behind. That some were loath to leave it, or even meditated a speedy return is certain; or why did "grandpa" leave his luggage and make sure of a room on his return, by coming away with his key in his pocket. Or is it that with advancing years and heavy cares comes loss of memory. That his burdens had been light up to this time, we know, and then "grandpa" travelled so often in a freight-car who shall say he was not glad for even that short time to escape all thoughts of luggage.

A hearty thank you to the representatives of the Plant System, to the Manager of the hotel, and the citizens of Tampa for the pleasures they had given us, and we are once more away.

A night of travel and we were to reach St. Augustine the next forenoon. Jacksonville came first, however, and although it was not on the books that a stay of any length was to be made there, just then, yet that was what it turned out to be; that is, if two hours can be called long. That we were hungry goes without saying. It was our usual condition in the early hours of the day, as it is equally true, the reverse condition was ours as night approached. Here at Jacksonville how pleasant it was to receive the cordial greeting of the reception committee from St. Augustine. How friendly we became with these fifteen or twenty ladies and gentlemen, who came to make us feel at home with them and that we were indeed welcome.

An hour's ride and sunny, smiling St. Augustine itself greeted us. And how bright and beautiful it seemed as viewed from the open carriages, which having met us at the station now rolled along so quickly over the asphalt streets taking us to our hotel, "The Alcazar." Here we bade our new friends good-bye until we should meet them at the Ponce de Leon that night.

Up to our rooms we go, and open wide our windows, not to shut them again during our four days' stay. How foreign it all seemed as we gazed across the bit of park with its fountains and tropical green at the Ponce de Leon on one side and the Cordova on the other. Such a group of Spanish architecture, the "Alcazar" making a third side to this square, is it any small wonder we felt for a moment we had landed in Spain? The warmth of early summer is all about us, and to be sure that fountain of youth, so long sought, could not be far away from this beautiful spot. Here all is spacious and magnificent, but a few steps away and we feel the quaintness and charm of the Old St. Augustine, narrow streets, old coquina houses with far outreaching balconies just above our heads and here and there an old fashioned garden with its palms.

Sauntering along one of these winding lengths of narrow street we came to the Old City gateway, which when closed in olden times, completely cut off St. Augustine from the rest of the world. Its coquina towers are twenty feet high and inside them are the sentry boxes with loop holes for the muskets.

At the corner of Cordova and Orange streets, not far from the gateway we noticed a tablet, neatly framed, placed on the top of a low monument, which we copied verbatim:

Notis
This Werry Elabborate Pile is erecked in memery of Tolomato
A Seminole Ingin Cheef, whoos wigwarm stuud upon this spot and surroundings.
We cherish his memery as he was a good-hearted Cheef.
He wood knot take Yoor Skalp, without
You begged him to do so, or pade him sum munny.
He allways akted more like a Christshun gentlemen than a Savage Ingin
Let him R. I. P.

On inquiring of a young gentleman who was near by what the R. I. P. meant, he said: "Rest in Peace." G. W. P.

—Out of 260,000,000 passengers carried on the street railways of Massachusetts in 1895 there were 1507 persons injured, 25 fatality. This indicates that the trolly car is a less dangerous means of locomotion than it has a reputation for being. On city streets where children play, and where pedestrians and riders upon all sorts of vechicles go constantly back and forth, it is wonderful that the fatalities are so few.

The Quincy Patriot.

QUINCY, SATURDAY, FEB. 15, 1896.

The Parkway Hearing.

Every business man in Quincy, who has the welfare of our city at heart, is earnestly requested to attend the hearing before the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs at the State House, Boston, Monday next at 10 A. M., to show why we should not have this great improvement carried out. Such a chance will never occur again. Nine-tenths of the property owners from Squantum Head to Merry Mount Park have offered to give their land free of expense for the construction of a boulevard 100 feet wide along the shores of Dorchester and Quincy Bays.

The land is vacant today but may not be so ten years from today, and what can be done now at trifling cost will be an expensive luxury in years to come. This beautiful boulevard along our shores will benefit every part of Quincy.

There will be an effort made to secure additional appropriations for a boulevard in Winthrop, and if Quincy wants this boulevard she must make herself heard now. No improvement has yet been made by the Metropolitan Park Commissioners on the south side of Boston, but no part of our shore is more beautifully adapted for improvements than are the shores of Quincy and Dorchester bays.

By building the proposed boulevard from Franklin Park down through the beautiful valley of the Neponset river along the shore of Quincy bay, the residents of Boston are brought directly to the sea, which will be of inestimable benefit in years to come.

It is hoped that the solid business men of Quincy will take the time from their business on Monday next to go before the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs, to whom this matter has been referred, and present the claims of the City of Quincy to be heard in favor of this great improvements.

An Inharmonious Board.

The Board of Managers of Public Burial Places, from all appearances, is not as harmonious a board as it should be. Last year the members of the board got into a deadlock over the election of a superintendent of Mt. Wollaston cemetery which required several meetings to straighten out, and this year the board struck a snag at its very first meeting when it attempted to organize, over the election of clerk.

All members were present when the meeting was called to order and the board immediately proceeded to organize. John Hall was the unanimous choice for chairman, but Mr. Hall had evidently had all the experience in that capacity with this board that he desired and he declined the office. The board then elected Mr. Vogel.

The next office to be filled was that of clerk and it was soon apparent that there was to be a contest as there were two members who desired to hold the only salaried office on the board.

Mr. Elijah G. Hall the clerk of last year's board was a candidate for re-election and Mr. Fred F. Green also wanted the office, and it was over the election of a clerk that the deadlock was caused, and although four ballots were taken the result was not changed.

The vote on the first ballot was: Elijah G. Hall, 3; John Hall, 2; Fred F. Green, 1.

The next three ballots remained the same with the two Mr. Halls the odd ballot being given to Mr. Maxim, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Green in turn.

Boston Ideal Club Concert.

Another large audience was at Hancock hall Wednesday evening at the concert under the auspices of the employes of the Bay State Aluminum Company, and it took nearly 200 of those fancy aluminum hair pins to supply all of the ladies present with a souvenir. These pins are a pretty design and are often taken for silver. They are only one of many attractive articles in aluminum made by the Quincy company.

The concert artists were the Boston Ideal club, and Messrs. Lansing, Shattuck, Robinson, Galencia and Grover, appeared in many numbers. The mandolins and guitars opened with two selections. The banjo solos of Mr. Lansing received a hearty encore and he responded.

Mr. Edward T. Phelan, the humorist, Boston, appeared three times on the programme, and the audience clamored for more of his witty monologues.

The banjos and guitars received an encore and gave a Chinese serenade. The trick banjo solo was very good and Mr. Grover was recalled, as were also the Boston Ideals after their song "Lindy."

The Indian war dance by banjos and guitars was one of the features of the evening.

Schoolhouse Plans.

A special meeting of the School Committee was held Monday evening to consider plans for two new school houses. After some discussion the following votes were passed:

Voted,—That the School Board approve the plans made by S. O. Moxon, and the chairman of the board is hereby authorized to inform the City Council of the fact.

The Committee suggest that two entrances be made in the rear of the building to the basement, and that the cost of finishing the building in brown ash be determined before the plans are formally accepted. The School Committee do not intend by this vote to approve any system of heating and ventilating until approved by the State Inspector for this district.

Voted,—That a special committee consisting of the chairman and the superintendent confer with the Commissioner of Public Works regarding the specifications for the S. O. Moxon plans, to see that no details are omitted.

It Was a Braintree Fire.

Many in Quincy were startled shortly before 8 o'clock Thursday by a long and short blast from a steam whistle which was at first supposed to have been in the quarries at West Quincy. It proved, however, to be a locomotive whistle at South Braintree, giving the alarm for a fire in a large shop of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., used by the bridge department and also as a carpenter's shop and store house. The fire was a brisk one and the building was practically ruined before the flames were extinguished.

In the building were several kits of tools belonging to the workmen, railroad bicycles, etc., all of which were destroyed.

The loss on the building is estimated at $1500, and on the contents $2,500, which is nearly covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to have been caused by an overheated stove.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

A meeting in the interests of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will be held in Christ Church, Sunday evening, Feb. 16th, at 7 o'clock. Mr. Arthur Chester of Boston, and Mr. Albert White of Cambridge, both young laymen actively interested in the work of the church among men, will make addresses. They will tell the story of the founding and extension of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. It is hoped that a chapter of the Brotherhood will be organized in Christ Church during the following week. Everybody welcome. Young men especially invited. All seats free.

CITY BRIEFS.

A holiday a week from today.

Lent begins on Wednesday of next week.

C. F. Carlson has just put in a handsome Tufts' soda fountain.

The officers are receiving their January court fees this week.

The electric lights were turned on Tuesday morning during the snow squall.

The old ballads will be sung in costume Monday night next, at the Parish House.

The last alarm of fire in this city was from Box 46 on Sunday evening, Jan. 12.

Miss Floretta Vining spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. George H. Wilson, of Canal street.

W. R. Lofgren has commenced work on a new house for Andrew Johnson on Gas place.

Quincy was represented Wednesday at the meeting of the Grand Encampment, I. O. O. F.

Butler's pond was alive with skaters Wednesday evening and some rare sport was enjoyed.

The new bowling alleys on Hancock street will probably be ready for occupancy early in March.

Mrs. Elwood M. Litchfield of Quincy avenue is enjoying a visit from her mother, Mrs. Harris of Beachwood.

The estate of the late C. C. Brackett on Hancock street will be sold at auction by the administrator next month.

It will truly be worth the admission fee to hear the choruses of children in the entertainment of Feb. 25th and 27th.

Henry H. Faxon and others have petitioned the Legislature that all money received from liquor licenses be turned over to the State treasury.

Mrs. James L. Wilson of South Boston is spending a few days visiting her sister, Mrs. Emeline R. Wentworth of Granite street, Quincy.

Miss Ellis, a teacher in the Danvers High school, attended the prize speaking of the Quincy High school and spent Sunday with Miss Kate C. Bryant.

The net dog tax of Quincy for 1895 was $1,810.05. In Brookline it was $1,098.32; in Weymouth, $1,049 22; in Braintree, $781.51; in Milton $1021 35.

The members of Merry Mount lodge, A. O. U. W., were treated at their meeting to a lecture entitled "From Ocean to Ocean," illustrated by the stereopticon.

Lists of new books as published in the PATRIOT will be sent from the library to the stores in various parts of the town where the baskets of books are delivered.

The article in a recent issue of the Golden Rod on "Reading for High Schools" by Frederic Allison Tupper, was copied into the Journal of Education.

The committee on public buildings of the National house has reported favorably on a $75,000 public building for Plymouth. Why the town of Plymouth before the city of Quincy?

Mr. Lawton, the new manager of the Quincy telephone exchange is to take up his residence in the house on Orchard place recently occupied by City Messenger Tirrell.

The Board of Managers of the Woodward Fund and property has organized with Mayor Adams as chairman; Harrison A. Keith, secretary, and H. Walter Gray, treasurer.

The subject debated by the Debating club Thursday night was: "Resolved,—That Mr. Reed should be the standard bearer of the Republican Party." A column report appeared in Friday's LEDGER.

A whist party and musicale was held at the residence of Mrs. T. H. O'Brien, Hall place, Wednesday evening. The playing commenced at 7.30 o'clock; refreshments were served during the evening.

The "Precious Pickle" at the Universalist vestry, Wednesday evening, was much enjoyed by a good audience. The young ladies did finely and carried off their parts in a very creditable manner. The readings and music also received encores.

The Granite City Club have voted to hold a banquet at the United States hotel in Boston on Wednesday the 19th instant. It was voted to invite Mayor Adams to be present; and that each member have the privilege of inviting one guest.

Upon motion of Hon. W. B. Rice of this city the Associated Board of Trade of Boston has voted to establish a committee on metropolitan district. Mr. Rice has resigned from the committee on roads and highways and will probably be chairman of the new committee.

The high wind Tuesday afternoon was the cause of a swinging ground on the fire alarm circuit and was the cause of the numerous blows on the alarm bells about 3 30 The first that were struck registered Box 52 at the Central station and the apparatus had a run to Wollaston for nothing.

Quite a number went to Braintree Saturday night to attend the plays given by the senior class of Thayer Academy. Miss Ethel L. Keith, Miss Bessie L. Burns, Miss Clara Merrill and Mr. Herbert H. Albee from Quincy were very good in their parts, as were the rest of the cast, all receiving generous applause.

Among those from Quincy who have signed the paper calling upon Congressman Harrison H. Atwood to resign are: Charles H. Porter, Henry H. Faxon, Henry M. Faxon, Andrew Milne, James P. Clare, John B. Reinhalter, George H. Field, Russell A. Sears, Richard G. Chase and Luther S. Anderson.

The Ward One Democratic committee met last week and organized with the choice of the old officers. It is said a thorough canvass of the ward was made prior to meeting in the hope that some one might be found willing to take the offices, but everyone approached declined, and the old board finally consented to hold over.

Hugh Rogers, a driver for Henry C. Weeden, met with quite a serious accident in City Square last Saturday. Rogers was exercising Mr. Weeden's colt in a gig, and in turning from Hancock street into Temple one of the wheels of the gig went in between a pole and the stone post. Rogers was thrown violently to the ground. He was taken up unconscious and carried to the police station and later to the City Hospital. His injuries however, were little more than a general shaking up.

This afternoon in the chapel of the Unitarian church, Mr. E H. Dewson will read before the Quincy Historical Society "The History of Hancock street and the Training Field—Past and Present, covering a period of 257 years." Few gentlemen have given a more careful research of this bit of history than Mr. Dewson, and many have expressed an interest in his work. The QUINCY PATRIOT will publish his article in full with illustrations.

The Board of Managers of Public Burial Places partially organized Monday evening. J. H Vogel was elected chairman but there was a contest over the choice of clerk. Four ballots were taken for this office without a choice and the matter was then postponed until next Monday evening. The position has been held the past year by Elijah Hall of Atlantic. No business can be transacted by the board until a secretary is chosen. The members are John Hall, Joseph H. Vogel, James E. Maxim, Elijah G. Hall, F. F. Green and George H. Wilson.

—First class work and perfect satisfaction is Frank A. Locke the piano tuner's motto—see ad., cut of piano. tf

The postoffice department was busy Friday with valentines but it had a rival at the school building, where postoffices were established for the day and valentines received and distributed in large numbers. The young children enjoyed it too.

On Sunday afternoon at 3 30 the men's meeting in the Young Men's Christian Association will be address by Rev. C. J. Keevill of Lowell. "A Three Fold Blessing" will be his subject. There will be a rousing song service before the address. Solos by Rev. Mr. Keevil will be a special feature of the meeting.

J. J. Kenily, of No. 9 Temple street, is giving an exhibition of the improved Welsbach gas burner, for which he is sole agent in Quincy, in several of the stores in the centre. A very bright white mellow light is given by this burner which is very pleasing to the eye. It is also a very economical burner to use, as it consumes only three cubic feet per hour, yet it gives a light of sixty candle power, three times that of any light in ordinary use.

WEST QUINCY.

Mrs. Timothy O'Keefe is to open a dry goods store on Copeland street.

The West End club hold another of their social dances in St. Mary's hall, next week.

Joseph R. Frost of Windham Depot, N. H., has been engaged as a clerk by E H. Doble & Co.

The New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad has built a new section house in the rear of Badger Bros.' shop.

Prout Bros. have erected a new derrick at their works.

Wilbro B. Dalpe, clerk for E. H. Doble & Co., is at home sick with the grip.

The young men of the West Quincy Epworth League promise something unusually good at their entertainment next week.

West Quincy is to lose one of its most enterprising business men. Mr. T. L. Williams is to remove his business to Quincy centre next month, having leased the store now occupied by Walker & Colpitts on Hancock street.

There is quite a demand for grout and rough stock.

The progress of the work of abolishing the large number of grade crossing in the vicinity of Jamaica Plain is of considerable interest to our daily travellers to and from the Hub. Among the interesting facts in connection with the work is the carrying of all the granite used in the bridges a distance of nearly forty miles over the railroad from Quincy, although the distance across the country from the quarries to Jamaica Plain is only about four miles. As the loads are so heavy, some trains being made up of 35 or more cars with monster locomotive, they must be taken without change or carting, so that the long route is the easiest and best way after all. The trains go from Quincy to Brockton thence over the Shovel Handle road to Easton, Stoughton and Canton, on the main line to Heath St. station at Jamaica Plain.—Sharon Enterprise.

SOUTH QUINCY.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Parry of Pleasant street, have lately returned from an extended visit to New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, etc., spending three weeks among relatives and friends.

Mrs. S. K. Jones, who has been very ill with acute neuralgia and la grippe, is slowly recovering and is able to sit up a few hours each day. Her many friends extend their sympathy and hope to soon see her about her usual duties.

N. B. Furnald is to build another store to his building on Water street, and somewhat larger, than that occupied by Peter Haverly, which is to be occupied by L. M. Pratt & Co. as a fish market.

J. Winthrop Pratt is building two houses on Bennington street, one of which he will occupy.

Swingle & Falconer have set the foundation for the enlargement to their cutting sheds and blacksmith shop.

The meetings at the First Presbyterian church on Water street were continued this week on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings at 7 30 o'clock. Since Jan. 1 the church has received 45 applications for membership.

Rev. F. A. Cunningham left Monday for Annapolis.

Few sections of Quincy are building up faster than that section south of Independence avenue.

The first public entertainment of the Young Ladies' Auxiliary of St. John's society was a great success socially and financially. It was held in St. John's hall and was attended by about 160 young ladies and gentlemen. There were 36 tables in the contest. The ladies' prize was won by Miss Mary Parker, and the gentlemen's prize by Mr. Maurice Cantfill. At the close of the playing, refreshments of cream and cake were served by the young ladies.

The success of the affair was due in a great measure to the following ladies: Miss Eliza C. Sheahan, Miss Mary McNally, Miss Alice G. Gavin, Miss Frances Talbot, Miss Margaret O'Hara, Miss Ellenore Roche, Miss Jennie Walsh and Miss Mary Collagan.

The dance closed at 12 o'clock.

Karl Gustaf Winquist and John Lawry, Jr., are stonecutters employed by the Craig & Richards Granite Co. Thursday afternoon they had a dispute over some blocks, and when Winquist left work for home he found Lawry waiting for him. Another wordy war was immediately commenced which finally ended in blows, and they were giving a miniature exhibition of a Fitzsimmons-Maher, when friends interfered and separated the men.

This morning Winquist swore out a warrant against Lawry for assault and later he was arrested by Officer Sandberg. The case will be heard in court Saturday morning.

WOLLASTON.

The ladies of the Women's Missionary Society of Wollaston met at Mrs. Durgin's Beale street, on Wednesday afternoon.

Quite an extensive addition to Wollaston realty is soon to be made. Messrs. Nickerson and Sherman are to build a block of six stores at the corner of Arlington and Brook streets.

The monthly business meeting of the Epworth League of Wollaston deferred on account of the storm from Thursday, Feb. 6, was held on Monday evening at the house of Mrs. Stiles, Everett street.

One of the strangest postmastership fights that has ever taken place in this state, and most assuredly in this city, is now being waged at Wollaston. It presents the odd spectacle of the Democratic party in that place as represented by six members of the Demmocratic Ward and City Committee, out of a total membership of nine, under the leadership of Chairman Charles T. Baker assisted by City Collector Brasee, making a strennous fight to have Charles F. Wilde, the present incumbent, a Republican, re appointed. It may be well to add here that Charles F. Baker and Watson H. Brasee are the nestors of the Wollaston Democracy. The other three members of the committee (one of whom is Martin F. Burns the applicant for the office) are working for Mr. Wilde's removal and the appointment of Mr. Burns.

The treasurer of the Quincy Yacht club has received another five dollar bill to pay for annual dues without the name of the sender. What's the matter with the members of the Quincy Yacht club?

Miss Isabel Gannett of Wollaston, a teacher at the Adams school, has been confined to the house by illness for two weeks.

The Wollaston Trap club will not shoot for sweepstakes.

The January prize contest at the Duck's Nest alleys was finished on Friday, Feb. 7, and resulted as follows: 100 trip Boston ticket, regulation pins, to V. J. Emery, 536; 10 trip Boston ticket, regulation pins, to C. F. Briggs, 518; 1 trip Boston ticket and five cents for refreshments; regulation pins, to Charles L. Coe, 504; silk umbrella, candle pins to C. F. Briggs, 260.

Hodensaunee Tribe of Wollaston worked the Hunter's Degree, Thursday, Feb. 6, and received two application for membership.

The old waiting shed used at the Wollaston depot, which was purchased by John Cavanagh and was being being moved by him to Houghs Neck, was handled rather roughly by the storm last week. The shed, which was left in the street near the causeway was blown over and left laying upside down on the side of the street.

The Whatsoever Ten, King's Daughters of Wollaston, held a very successful sale at the residence of Mrs. Amos T. Leavitt, Lincoln avenue, on Tuesday afternoon and evening. The sale was in aid of the worthy poor people of the city.

The lemonade was dipped by Mrs. Edmund S. Taylor and Mrs. Horace G. Kent; the candy table was presided over by Miss Howard, Miss Taylor and Mrs. Walter A. Holbrook; and Miss Helen Foster and Mrs. Stanley sold the aprons.

During the evening Mrs. Ralph J. Saxe rendered a pleasing vocal solo, and Miss Jeannette Packard played in excellent taste a piano solo.

The building occupied by Mrs. L. E. Prince as a bakery, has been moved from Brooks street to Newport avenue.

The Cresent lodge degree staff worked the first degree for John Hancock lodge, I. O. O. F., of Wollaston, Wednesday evening.

The Steadfast Ten, King's Daughters, will repeat by request the "Gibson pictures" at the Wollaston Congregational church next week.

The sudden appearance of the Central Station apparatus at box 52, corner of Elmwood avenue and Farrington street, Wollaston, at 3 30 Tuesday afternoon, created quite a sensation, as no alarm had been sounded by the whistle. Inside of a minute the streets were thronged with an excited crowd of men, women and children yelling "Where's the fire! where's the fire!" But there was no fire. The alarm was caused by crossed wires.

Mrs. Chandler W. Smith and Mrs. Eugene H. Sprague have sent out invitations for a leap year dance Feb. 19, at Knights of Honor Hall, Wollaston. It bids fair to be the event of the season. Hendrie will cater.

Mrs. Charles R. Sherman of Wollaston entertained the Elliot Club on Wednesday evening. "Venezuela" was the subject which was ably discussed.

The regular monthly sociable of the Wollaston Congregational Society was as usual a very enjoyable affair and attracted a large audience. The vestry was profusely decorated with evergreen trees through the courtesy of the Lewis and Baker boys.

The entertainment consisted of shadow pictures, a guitar and banjo duet by Miss Dickey and Mr. Fenton and a flute solo by Mr. Albert E. Rhodes.

The committee in charge consisted of Mrs. John Thompson, Mrs. A. L. Baker, Mrs. C. E. Snow, Mrs. Campbell and Mrs Mary T. Taylor.

QUINCY POINT.

An anonymous communication protesting against the discharge of George Connor from the Quincy Point hose company has been received. Being anonymous it has been consigned to the waste basket.

Mr. and Mrs. George Pratt, of Quincy Neck, are receiving congratulations upon the arrival of a little girl. She came late Sunday night.

Congratulations to John R. Graham, Esq, and best wishes to Mrs. Graham. The street railway horn should be brought out for a serenade.

Spargo—Turner.

A pretty marriage was solemnized at the home of the bride's father Mr. W. S. Turner, Clark's ave. on Wednesday evening. Rev. W. R. Breed performed the ceremony. The bride was gowned in white albatross with trimmings of spangled chiffon and pearl passementirie and carried bridal roses. Miss Nellie Spargo, sister of the groom, acted as bridesmaid; she was gowned in white albatross with trimming of white satin and Persian and wove pink carnations, Mr. Harry Smith acted as best man. The presents were elaborate and numerous.

Now Wants Her Silver.

The police were called upon Thursday noon to assist Mrs. Fred Gore in obtaining her property which was in the possession of her husband at 18 Main street, which he refused to permit her to take.

It seems Mrs. Gore who has not lived with her husband for some time, came on from Camden, N. J., with a relative to get her property. They first went to the house and demanded the property, which Gore refused to give up. Then acting upon advice of a lawyer they applied to the police and Inspector McKay accompanied them on their second trip.

When the party arrived with the officer, Gore had changed his mind and Mrs. Gore obtained about $300 of her property, consisting of clothing, pictures and fancy china. Mrs. Gore claimed that there was $500 of solid silver which had been given her by her relatives when she was married but this could not be found. Gore claimed that he had mortgaged the silver but would not tell where or to whom it was mortgaged, and no record could be found at the City Clerk's office.

It is not known whether Mrs. Gore will take any action to recover the silver.

☞ Bills of the Young Ladies' Charitable society were lost Friday, probably between the Quincy Postoffice and Durgin & Merrill's block. Mrs. T. H. O'Brien of Hall place, West Quincy, will be pleased to have the finder return them to her.

ATLANTIC.

The Alps club held a well attended dance at Music hall on Tuesday evening.

Assistant Engineer Stephen H. Edwards of Ward Six has tendered his resignation to Chief Williams, owing to a pressure of business.

The fire alarm wires on Hancock street have nearly all been changed to the new poles.

The Board of Health deny that there is a Taylor child sick with diphtheria at Atlantic.

A warrant of insolvency was issued against the estate of Phineas A. Coombs of Quincy on Saturday.

Edward J. Colbert, clerk at T. Gurney's store, is sick with the grip.

Mrs. G. E. Howard of Melrose is the guest of Miss Belle B. Moseley.

The Massachusetts Colony of Pilgrim Fathers are to hold their monthly dancing party in Music Hall next week.

A class in elocution has been formed in Atlantic. Many of the young ladies have joined it, and the first instructions were given on Monday evening. Miss Smith of Boston is instructor.

The Massachusetts Bay Colony, Order of Pilgrim Fathers, is to hold a minstrel show in Music hall shortly. The arrangements have already been begun and the colony will give a show equal if not superior to those given in the past by the Atlantic Social club.

The regular supper and social of the Ladies' Benevolent society which was to be held in the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, on Wednesday evening has been postponed for two weeks on account of giving more time in which to perfect the arrangements for "Grandmother's Memories" which is to be given as entertainment.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. A. Hall of Walker street have cards out for a whist party Friday evening, Feb. 21st.

One night this week a man very much under the influence of liquor fell from the Neponset railroad bridge into the river. After much difficulty he was rescued, by some men, in a very bad condition. After being brought to his senses he went off, never even thanking the parties who rescued him from his dangerous position. They say that some people do not appreciate favors and we think that this is an example.

Mrs. Jane L. Shaw keeps a little store on Hancock street, Atlantic. Last week a young man possessed of an oily tongue walked into her store and informed Mrs. Shaw that he lived on Cypress street, Neponset. That he was formerly in the jewelry business, but owing to depression in business he had given up his store and was about trying to pick up a little repairing to do. Mrs. Shaw was favorably impressed with the young man and gave him two gold watches and a diamond ring to repair. After the young man had gone she felt sorry that she had let the young man have her property and as day after day passed and the young man came not she felt more sorry. Inquiry showed there was no street named Cypress street in Neponset and as she could find no trace of the young man it dawned upon her that she was $200 out.

DOWNS AND PARK.

W. S. Comee has moved into McIntire's house on Hampden circle.

Miss Edna Cody of Beach street has removed to Hotel Boylston, Boston.

An addition is being built to the westerly end of the Wollaston machine shop.

Grocers' Banquet.

The Quincy Grocers' Association was not formed to give short weight on goods but to prevent long waits on the part of the grocers for their money. The annual banquet Wednesday evening at Faxon hall was not short weighted, neither were there any long waits between the courses. Caterer Nash served one of his tempting spreads as will be seen by the menu below, and the list of guests appended shows that many of the solid weights were in attendance. It could not have been in Quincy that a farmer's daughter attempted to trade some butter and insisted it weighed five pounds because she had weighed it with five pounds of soap bought at the same store the day before.

The Old Colony association held a short business meeting before the banquet, at which resolutions were adopted criticising the course of the Boston retail grocers in opposing the food fair to be held by the Old Colony association in Boston next fall.

The following menu was then discussed while Hanson's orchestra rendered the latest popular music.

Providence River Oysters.
Hot Roast Turkey, Roast Chicken
Cranberry Sauce. Currant Jelly.
Mashed Potatoes, French Peas.
Lobster Salad, from the Shell.
Chicken Salad.
Escalloped Oysters, Providence River.
Celery. Olives.
English Pickles. Cheese.
Plain and Fancy Cake in Variety.
Vanilla Ice Cream. Chocolate Ice Cream.
Frozen Pudding.
Pineapple Sherbet. Roman Punch.
Oranges. Malaga Grapes. Bananas.
Coffee. French Rolls. Tea.

Chairman Prout welcomed the guests. He said sociability had become a prominent part of the Quincy association. Five years ago however it was a necessity, and was organized for that reason. The Old Colony association had been an outgrowth of it, and he was pleased to note that it also was a success.

Andrew J. McNeil, the president of the Old Colony association, was first introduced. He spoke words of encouragement for the approaching food fair. As he was about to close Osborne Rogers hastened forward and presented Mr. McNeil with a framed life-sized portrait of himself. It was not a perfect likeness, however, for the snap shot was obtained before the gentleman lost his mustache and assumed his priestly appearance.

L. M. Pratt, the second president of the Quincy association, made the speech of the evening. The starting of the association was a great undertaking, he said, and had cost the twenty members over $1090 the first year, but they had since reaped dollars where cents had been sown, and the collector had earned a good salary on percentage, so that many had paid who did not want to. The expenses had not been so heavy since the first year. It was not a fact that the association had been formed to advance prices, as sugar was the only article upon which there was an agreement. He believed the food fair would be a success if properly conducted.

Other speakers were Messrs. Connell, Lynch, Humphrey, Prescott and Green. These were interspersed with music by the orchestra and solos by Galen V. Bowditch. A letter of regret was received from Mayor Adams.

Cigars were contributed by Fleischmann, the yeast manufacturer.

At the head table were Joseph P. Prout, chairman of the Quincy committee; Andrew McNeil of Hingham, president of the Old Colony Grocers' and Provision Dealers' Union; M. W. Lynch of East Weymouth, secretary of the Old Colony Union; A. C. Humphrey of Hingham, Josephus Sampson of Braintree, H. P. Capen of Rockland, Frederick Humphrey of Hingham and Frank L. Clark of Rockland.

At the table on the right were A. E. Hobart of Hingham, William H. Bain of Boston, J. Marcus Arnold of Braintree, C. H. Hobart of South Braintree, F. W. Hayden of Randolph, C. W. Hollis of Braintree, H. F. Holmes of East Weymouth, John J. Guess, Councilman E G. Cleaves, Richard Prout, William Prout, Franklin Jacobs, J. W. Dennen, P. J. Williams, J. E. Hayden, E. H Doane, J. Peterson, John A. Connell of East Weymouth.

On the table to the left were: Walter B. Wilson, W. E. Howe, Geo. H. Wilson, Osborne Rogers, W. L. Murdock of North Abington, C. L. Keon of North Abington, E. T. Paty of Abington, Arthur T. Faunce of North Abington, Frank F. Prescott of Quincy DAILY LEDGER, Lester M. Pratt, Howard Rogers, A. F. Macleod, Frederick E. Goss, George F. Spooner, J. A. North of Chicago, Joseph W. Johnson, C. E. Tuttle of Boston, Robert T. Johnson, John Curtis, 2d, Frank Kemp of East Milton, T. L. Pearce of East Milton, Councilman T. J. Lamb, G. H. Hardwick, John W. Nash, Fred F. Green, T. J. Collins and G. V. Bowditch.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

THE SHAWMUT SPRING WATER possesses all these requirements, and when used in liberal quantities it is a most important factor in building up and restoring to health, action the digestive organs and conducive to the health of all, more especially to children and persons of delicate constitutions. The array of testimony by doctors and others in its favor is overwhelming and shows that Shawmut Spring Water stands among the best.

Orders addressed to F. J. FULLER, West Quincy, Mass., will receive prompt attention.

MILTON.

Mrs. D. Sage of Granite place, East Milton, is spending the winter with her daughter, Mrs. F. H. Sloan, in Hartford, Conn.

The political pot has commenced to boil, and as the annual town meeting approaches there is much talk of what is going to be done and what is not. There is a movement on the part of some of the voters to oust certain officials but as their following is small there is not much prospect of a change, as the only complaint against the officials seems to be that they do their duty, and are not affiliated with the so called A. P. A. This organization will show it hand at the caucus which will be held next Wednesday evening at the Town Hall.

The fourth subscription party was held at Ellsworth hall, Friday evening.

The young ladies of East Milton are arranging for a leap year party to be held at an early date.

East Milton has three candidates for selectmen viz. Messrs. Simpson, Wheeler and Bates.

Messrs. Frank Kemp and T. L. Pearce attended the Grocers' banquet at Quincy Wednesday evening.

The 26th annual reunion of the Milton High school, February 7, was largely attended and a grand social success. There was a reception, business meeting, supper and dance.

Miss Orissa M. Baxter was floor director, and her aids were Miss Marion L. Pierce, Mrs N. Marion Littlefield, Miss Bertha Swift, and Miss Orissa Beals.

The election resulted in the choice of the following officers:

President,—Mr. Leonard E. Littlefield.
Vice Presidents,—Mr. Wilbert F. Calderwood and Miss Marion L. Pierce.
Secretary,—Mrs. N. Marion Littlefield.
Treasurer,—Mr. Charles Mitchell.
Executive Committee,—Mr. Charles Copeland, Miss Ella Martin, Mr. James Donovan, Miss Eva M. Bradlee, Mr. Herbert Edwards, Mr. Jesse B. Baxter and Mrs Vina B. Parsons.

The warrant for the annual town meeting was posted Thursday. It is somewhat larger than usual containing 51 articles, among which are those calling for the election of officers and the appropriations for the several departments.

Others of importance are: To see if the town will accept a deed of land from Mr. and Mrs. Amos L Hollingsworth on Brush Hill road for a public park and playground; acceptance of act enabling the town to choose its selectmen for one, two and three years; to see if the town will empower the selectmen to employ a civil engineer and fix his salary; to see if the town will place electric lights on Hillside street; to see if the town will accept the by-laws recommended by the committee on buildings, relating to the construction of buildings and plumbing; to see if the town will appropriate $40,000 to connect the village sewer with the metropolitan sewer; to see if the town will accept and allow the report of the selectmen laying out a special space for use of street railways on Edge Hill road, Pleasant street, Quarry street, Randolph avenue, Canton avenue, White street, Brook road, Mattapan street, Blue Hill avenue, to boundary line with Boston. This latter article covers the route over which the Quincy & Boston street railway have petitioned for a location to extend its tracks from the present terminus at East Milton to Mattapan.

Restful Sleep.

If there's one thing on earth a tired body is entitled to, it's a comfortable, soft and luxurious bed at night.

There isn't one person in fifty that knows just how to bring about these results, but we've made a study of it from a scientific point of view and have all the fittings that go to make the rig.

Spring beds that almost woo you to sleep, comfort-bringing mattresses that rest the weary bones and make a life worth twice its living, and best of all the dreamy and restful sort of pillows.

There are many hardships in life, but you can square yourself with the world if you buy your bedding here.

Mortgagee's Sale of Real Estate.

BY Virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Thomas Kennon to the Abington Savings Bank, dated February 4, A. D., 1890 and recorded with Norfolk County Deeds, Lib. 632, Fol. 601, for breach of the conditions contained in said Mortgage, and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, upon the premises described in said Mortgage, on WEDNESDAY, the eleventh day of March, A. D., 1896, at half past one o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises described in said Mortgage, viz:

A certain lot or parcel of land with the buildings and other improvements thereon, lying on the northwesterly side of Squantum street, in Quincy, in Norfolk County and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, containing twenty thousand square feet and being the northerly half or part of a lot of land in said Quincy delineated on a plan drawn by Mr. Case (and to be recorded herewith). Said lot is bounded and described as follows:

Beginning on said street at a point two hundred and thirty-six [23] feet southwesterly from land of John A. Billings, thence north 40 degrees west to other land of said Billings; thence northwesterly, northerly, northeasterly and easterly with said land of Billings to said Squantum street; thence southwesterly two hundred and thirty-six [236] feet to the point of beginning. Being a part of the same premises described in a deed from Alicia E. Marden to said Kennon, dated 18 November, 1884, and recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds, book 628, page 251.

Two Hundred Dollars to be paid by purchaser at the time of sale; further terms at the sale.

Mortgagee's Sale.

BY Virtue and in execution of the power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Henry C. Weeden and Amy E. Weeden, wife of said Henry C., in her own right, to Benjamin D. Weeden, dated March eleventh, A. D., 1896, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, libro 644, folio 110, which mortgage has been assigned by said mortgagee to me, the undersigned, as trustee, by assignment dated April 20, A. D., 1894, recorded with said Deeds, libro 712, folio 141, and for the purpose of foreclosing said mortgage for breach of the condition thereof, will be sold by public auction, on the premises hereinafter described, being the premises described in said mortgage, on MONDAY, the ninth day of March, A. D. 1896, at one o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, namely:

A certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon, situated in Quincy, in the County of Norfolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a stake near a Willow tree on the northeasterly side of a street called Palmer street, shown on a plan drawn by H. T. Whitman, surveyor, dated February, 1890, and recorded with said deeds, and filed as No. 559, at land conveyed by said Amy E. Weeden to John Quincy Adams, thence running northeasterly at right angles to said Palmer street, four hundred and sixty-eight [468] feet to a stake; thence turning at right angles and running southeasterly two hundred and four 65-100 [204 65-100] feet to a stake in the marsh line shown on said plan. From this point to the point of beginning the granted premises are bounded as follows: Northeasterly on salt marsh of persons unknown by the marsh line as shown on said plan, southeasterly partly on salt marsh late of Peter Bracket and partly on Ridge Hill, so-called, southwesterly by the sea to marsh land formerly of the town of Quincy, northwesterly by said last mentioned marsh land to said street, northeasterly again by said street to a point opposite the point of beginning; thence the line runs across said street to the point of beginning. Excepting out of said described premises a certain parcel of land containing about one acre conveyed by Samuel Andrews to Abraham Rich, Jr, by deed dated October 5, 1861, recorded with said deeds, libro 304, folio 17, to which deed reference is made for a particular description of the parcel excepted from this grant. And excepting, also, said Palmer street. Being a part of the premises conveyed by Mary A. Sheen in her right to said Amy E. Weeden, by deed dated Feb. 14, 1891, recorded with said mortgage, comprising lot three [3] on said plan and other portions conveyed by said deed from Mary A. Sheen.

$500.00 will be required to be paid in cash by the purchaser at the time and place of sale. Other terms of sale made known at the time and place of sale.

Musical Society Concert.

A large audience attended the second concert of the season of the Quincy Musical society at Hancock hall Tuesday evening. A delightful concert was presented by the chorus assisted by Miss Mary DeV. Mitchell soprano, Miss G. F. Olney pianist, and Mr. Walter E. Loud violinist.

All the selections of the chorus were pleasing and were finely rendered under the direction of George W. Dudley. They sang "Meistersinger," by Wagner; "The Miller" by Macfarren; "Three Charms of Life," by Pinsuti; "Matona," by Orlando Lasso; "Night, Lovely Night," by Berger; "May Queen," by Bennett; "Madeleine," by Roeckel; "Philemon and Baucis," by Gounod; and closed with "I have surely built Thee an House," by Tunnell.

Mr. Frederick Pierce was expected to give a cornet solo, but sickness prevented his appearance. Miss Mitchell sang two solos and a duet with Mr. Bullock very acceptably. Miss Olney's piano solo, and Mr. Loud's violin solo were of a high order.

Board of Trade.

The directors of the Board of Trade met Saturday evening and organized with the choice of the following:

President,—Charles F. Adams, 2d.

Vice Presidents,—John R Graham and James Thompson.

A committee consisting of Mayor Adams, John R. Graham, James Thompson, Clarence Burgin, Frank S Patch, Stephen O Moxon and John O. Hall was appointed to bring in a list of names for the various committees, and to report at a meeting to be held Tuesday evening, Feb. 18, at which time the charter will probably be ready.

Round-About Club.

By invitation of Mr. and Mrs. G. Henry Wait of the Round-About Club, a number of their relatives attended a dinner party given in their honor, at Mr. and Mrs. Wait's home in South Boston on Wednesday. Among those present were Mrs. Chas. Wing and Mrs. Emeline R. Wentworth of Quincy, Mrs. Wm. H. Mears and Miss Chrisabelle Mears of Chelsea, Mrs. Jasper B. Wentworth of Dorchester, Mrs. Gilbert H. Wait and Mrs. James L. Wilson of So. Boston. Mrs. Wait is a most charming hostess and being assisted by her sister, Mrs. John J. McNutt, it is needless to say the occasion was one of the smartest society events of the Peninsular district this season.

St. Valentine's Eve Dance.

For a good social dance the one given by the young people of Christ's church on Thursday evening, at Faxon hall, will easily carry off the honors, for it was one of the prettiest and most enjoyable of the season.

The matrons were Mrs. Walter Russell Breed, Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick and Mrs. Frank Brewer. The ushers: Miss Pauline Wilkins, Miss Edith M. Cote, Miss Annie Chamberlain, Miss Mabel Oxford, Miss Mollie Brewer and Miss Sadie Thomas.

The music was by Mr. William Wilson, pianist and Mr. Joshua Hanson, violinist.

Ices and cake were served during intermission, the young ladies furnishing the cake and Wales the ice cream.

All pronounced the affair a great success and regrets were to be heard on every hand that there are to be no more at present as Lent commences on Wednesday.

Young Men's Christian Asso.

Owing to the small attendance, occasioned by the storm, Sunday, Rev. C. W. Wilder did not speak on subject advertised, but gave an interesting talk on Bible study.

Thirty boys attended the boys' meeting Saturday morning, and the same number in the gymnasium class.

Last fall the Association as an experiment, divided the Junior department, putting the academy and high school boys in one division and the grammar school boys in another. Saturday evening a supper was given the first division by the Woman's Auxiliary. Twenty boys were present and after the inner boy was satisfied, speeches were in order.

Secretary Colton acted as chairman. Rev. E. N. Hardy gave some helpful suggestions. Mr. Merritt spoke of the physical work. Mr. Nowland told about the Sloyd work calling attention to the proposed summer school. Mr. Atkins praised the educational work which the Association was doing. Edward C. Hewitson described the summer camp, while Wm. Patterson, Jr., gave an account of the annual conferences, and Nathaniel Thayer aroused enthusiasm for the clay modeling class.

The chairman then asked the boys to offer suggestions as to how the Association could be made more helpful. Among the numerous suggestions made were these: "A debating society, a Bible class, an athletic club, a rambling club, a cycle club, base ball nine, bicycle club, orchestra, cross country runs," etc., showing that the boys minds were indeed fertile. Committees were appointed by the boys to take immediate action on two of the suggestions viz. debating society and Bible Study club.

Westland Discharged.

The long drawn out case of Clan McGregor against William Westland, for embezzlement, was disposed of Saturday by the defendant being discharged, for want of probable cause.

When the case was called Mr. McAnarney, counsel for the defence, argued that the complaint was defective, as the complaint was not set forth according to law.

Mr. Shultz, counsel for the government, contended that it was simply for the lower court to decide probable cause and that there had been an embezzlement of fifty cents proven.

The court said that he must be reasonably satisfied that the offence had been committed, and what has been proved does not come within the scope that the grand jury could receive.

The form was not correct, as the date was not alleged, and under the statue it must be within six months. There was no prima facia evidence that there had been an embezzlement during any period of six months during which Westland was treasurer, and to change the form of complaint would not change the matter any, as it would be necessary to start anew, which considering the many continuances he did not think would amount to anything.

Fire Companies Reorganize.

The several fire companies of the city met Monday evening and organized as follows:

Hose No. 1,—Foreman, William J. Gavin; Assistant foreman, J. P. Duffy; Clerk, Charles H. Flowers.

Hook and Ladder—Foreman, J. F. Morrisey; Assistant foreman, Arthur C. Merritt; Clerk, Edward J. Faircloth.

Hose No. 3,—Foreman, Edward F. Duhan; Assistant foreman, James Callahan; Clerk, Thomas F. Hogan; Steward, Dennis Buckley.

Combination Chemical,—Foreman, John H. O'Brien; Clerk, Edward A. Shea; Steward, J. F. McKenna; Driver, Michael Connelly.

The officers of Hose 2, Wollaston, for the ensuing year are as follows:

Foreman,—Gilbert M. Rhodes.

1st Assistant Foreman, — George E. Thomas.

2d Assistant Foreman, — John P. Thomas.

Clerk,—Clarence D. Sargent.

Stewart,—Marcena R. Sparrow.

Hose No. 4 has organized with William Kane as foreman; John Dolan as assistant; George W. Nash as clerk and steward.

Castle Square Theatre, Boston.

The second week of "Iolanthe" opened Monday evening at the Castle Square Theatre under even better auspices than the initial performance. Not only was the beautiful auditorium crowded but enthusiasm ran high throughout the evening. The beauty of the production, the taste and harmony of costumes and lights and before all and beyond all the eveness of the cast and the zest with which each member entered into the spirit of the opera were the subjects of universal praise. It was a happy thought that induced Mr. Rose to give the public a change from the heavy music of Verdi and Gounod to the lighter vein of Gilbert and Sullivan. For Monday evening, Feb. 17th, Mr. Rose announces a double bill that is in itself extraordinary. "Pinafore" will be the opening piece and everyone seems to be anxious to renew acquaintance with the old favorite. On the same evening Mascagin's Grand Opera "Cavalleria Rusticana" will be given. A bill of this kind was never before given and it is an undertaking which no opera company has ever dared attempt but the Castle Square Opera company has established a reputation for audacity and they have redeemed all pledges made to the public since the opening of the season on May 6th, 1895. For the personal convenience of his patrons, Mr. Rose announces that special cars will leave the theatre at the close of the evening performances for all railroad stations.

Grandmother's Garden.

The cantata, "Grandmother's Garden," by the junior league on Thursday evening, at the Methodist church, Wollaston, was well patronized notwithstanding the storm. The program included:

Violin solo by Master Royal Archibald Moore.

Recitations by Frances Jennie Intermeister, Helen Campbell and Mabel Bessie Hastings.

Duets by Hazel Ettelyn Hewins and Elizabeth Caroline Pipping.

Piano solo by Myra Stanwood Brown.

"After Blenheim" was read by Dorothy Hersom and illustrated by drill.

The song "When our darlings kneel in prayer" by H. Maud Charlton and E. Lois Mitchell was illustrated.

The characters in "Grandmother's Garden or the Sunflower Chorus" were taken by Frances Waldo Sanders as Mistress Carey, and Royal Archibald Moore as Goodman Tabor. Members of the Junior League constituted the chorus.

The Saturday Shoot.

The first time for several weeks the Wollaston Trap Club was able to hold a shoot on Saturday afternoon. Several of the members took advantage of the favorable weather, barring a slight breeze, and held a shoot. D. B. Lincoln was high man with 21 birds, 16 of them being straight, and A. A. Lincoln was a good second with 19 birds. The score:

Letter from the State House.

[Special to the QUINCY PATRIOT.]

BOSTON, Feb. 12, 1896.

The amount of business for the legislature of 1896 cannot be determined exactly at present, but it looks as if it would fully equal that of last year, which was in advance of that of any previous year. It is a matter of comment, too, by those who are familiar with the quality of legislation, that the business this year contains many propositions of much importance. It is true that some measures are put in which there is reason to suspect are merely for blackmailing purposes, but the percentage of such matters must be trifling and of no more importance than such malicious efforts are in comparison with the vast amount of honest business in the commercial world. The figures which are given in certain departments of industrial development to show our progress in recent years might be duplicated easily by the figures showing the growth of the state as seen in the amount of business presented to the legislature. More than this, the current fashion of sneering at this business has no foundation in common sense and would never be indulged in by men with a realizing sense of the magnitude and variety of the interests involved. The charge cannot be made without a wholesale indictment against the people of Massachusetts, and surely the people are few who would entertain such a charge as that. If it were possible to picture to the public the growth of the state as revealed in its legislation a fascinating presentation could be made by the genius with an imagination vivid and true and broad enough to take in the facts which seem so dry to the ordinary reader and infuse them with the genuine life of the state, thrilling at every point and full of good things for the entire mass of the people. Ours is a wonderful state when we study it aright and if we paid a great deal more attention to it, instead of giving so much of our time to the evening whist table we should be a great deal better off and our better understanding would result in a better state.

Many labor bills have been introduced and one which forbids the employment of women and minors for over 10 hours a day in any manufacturing or mechanical establishment. This would be such an extension of the law that it would doubtless be vigorously opposed by corporation influence.

The screws are being prepared for the liquor sellers and drinkers and the temperance people say that this legislature is one of the best they have ever had at the State house.

The passage of the biennial amendment seems to be assured. The vote in the house on the question of ordering it to a third reading was 175 yeas to 54 nays and one pair. Here are 131 members on record out of 137,—there being three vacancies. The efforts of Mr. Mellen of Worcester to interpose points of order were all overruled and fell to the ground after they had been hotly supported by himself, and had not been opposed by any member on the other side. The passage of the resolve will be due to the force of the appeal to refer the matter to the people and give them a chance to pass upon it after an agitation of 20 years.

It is surprising to observe the amount of business which is brought to the legislature from the cities of the state. They put a great deal more into the legislative hopper than they did 20 years ago. Why the local needs are so much more numerous and pressing than formerly perhaps the officials of the cities can tell, but of the fact there can be no doubt. Springfield, Worcester, Lowell, Fall River and others are frequently at the State house. The prospect is that the metropolitan water act will be followed by many suits and bills.

It is settled now that there will be sometime an equestrian statue of Gen. Joseph Hooker on the State house grounds, for the senate has listened to glowing speeches in his honor and has adopted the resolve appropriating $50,000 for the statue. The house will concur without doubt and then the question will arise who shall be next to receive the honor. If we don't look out the grounds about the State house will resemble a mass meeting, if all the statues are erected which people would like to see there. The house has taken from the files of last year the resolve appropriating money for statues of Gen. Butler and Wendell Phillips. If there is ever serious danger of a statue of Butler doubtless the proposition will call out some of the hottest remonstrances which ever were heard at the State house, for there are plenty of people who believe that they have excellent grounds for affirming that Butler was totally unworthy of any such honor and if the proposition is pressed, it would surely bring out a mass of testimony injurious to the reputation of the general.

The woman suffragists are putting in their petitions by the large quantity and the contest will be as warm as ever it was before the referendum which was supposed to have settled the question. Whether the effect of the popular verdict will be evident in the disposition of the legislature to debate the question cannot be predicted, for the members have not had any fight, except over biennials, but before the committees on constitutional amendments and election laws there will surely be the warmest kind of woman suffrage arguments.

The farmers are putting in their petitions for the restriction of the use of tuberculin and several schemes are proposed. Some would extend the present restriction for one year, or to June 1, 1897, while others would extend it indefinitely. Others want to abolish the cattle commission altogether, while others wish to reduce its membership to three and thus get rid of the two members who are most obnoxious to the farmers. It is too early yet to tell how the question is going. The farmers have considerable legislation on hand this year, including double taxation and tuberculin. If they could realize the connection between the biennial issue and the taxation question, they would be less disposed to be so unanimous for giving up a material part of their political power. RULE.

Occident and Orient.

The Rev. Frederick J. Stanley, L. H. D., lately professor of English Literature in the Imperial University at Tokyo, Japan, will give his sermonic-lecture on the wonders of God's Providence in the Occident and the Orient, in the First Presbyterian church on Water street, Sunday morning. This church will at the evening service publicly receive the new members who have united since the January communion.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER, 106 Wall St., N. Y.

AN INVITATION.

It Gives Us Pleasure to Publish the following Announcement.

All women suffering from any form of illness peculiar to their sex are requested to communicate promptly with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America. This confidence has induced more than 100,000 women to write Mrs. Pinkham for advice during the last few months.

Think what a volume of experience she has to draw from! No physician living ever treated so many cases of female ills, and from this vast experience surely it is more than possible she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case.

She is glad to have you write or call upon her. You will find her a woman full of sympathy, with a great desire to assist those who are sick. If her medicine is not what you need, she will frankly tell you so, and there are nine chances out of ten that she will tell you exactly what to do for relief. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has relieved thousands.

Surely, any ailing woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.

Never in the history of medicine has the demand for one particular remedy for female diseases equalled that attained by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and never in the history of Mrs. Pinkham's wonderful Compound has the demand for it been so great as it is to-day.

Business for 1895.

In our columns today will be found a statement of the business of the Massachusetts Benefit Life Association for 1895. Many citizens of Quincy are fortunate in being members of this association, one of the very best and most flourishing in New England. The association has a membership of over fifty thousand; dividends paid to policy-holders during the past year $424,269 14. George S. Merrill, the Insurance Commissioner of this state, speaks very complimentary upon the clearness and correctness with which the books of this association are kept.

Ninety Per Cent.

Of all the people need to take a course of Hood's Sarsaparilla at this season to prevent that run-down and debilitated condition which invites disease. The money invested in half a dozen bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla will come back with large returns in the health and vigor of body and strength of nerves.

Hood's Pills are easy to buy, easy to take, easy to operate. Cure all liver ills. 25c.

The Quickest and Best.

The Atlantic Coast Line, via Richmond, Va., has again placed at the service of the travelling public the celebrated "New York-Florida Special." Here is one of the triumphs of railroading as it enables tourists to reach the beautiful winter resorts of the South with perfect ease and with luxurious surroundings. One night only between Boston and Florida. Exclusively Pullman Vestibuled train composed of dining, sleeping, library and observation cars. A perfect road-bed running through a section of the country historical and picturesque. The route is via Washington and Richmond to Charlestown, Savannah, Jacksonville, and St. Augustine. This is the quickest and best line also, to Thomasville, Brunswick, Aiken, Augusta and Middle Georgia.

Before deciding on your trip be sure to consult the illustrated pamphlets and descriptive matter of the Atlantic Coast Line.

Write to J. H. Johnson, N. E. A., 300 Washington street, Boston Mass, for illustrated books and pamphlets of the Southern Hotels. tf

☞ If the readers of the PATRIOT wish to buy good clothing, at reasonable prices, they should call at the store of the Granite Clothing company in Durgin & Merrill's block. You can be sure of getting good bargains; and not cheated by inferior articles. It is a very reliable firm to deal with.

How to Read.

We cannot too strongly impress every daughter with the fact that habits of reading are wonderfully powerful. Early learn to read only good books, and read them critically and thoughtfully. The purpose for which we read a book must not be mere pleasure. We must aim to obtain and retain the author's thought and meaning. Few good books do not have some particular question upon which they dwell strongly. A few well directed questions from father, mother or brother will help to bring this to light, and in addition will enforce the fact that an opinion that own's it is of more value than a dozen that were begged, borrowed or stolen from some eminent man or woman. Many people regret that they were not early taught to consider the author's name a portion of the title of his book and are continually remarking, "Oh, I can't remember who wrote that book."—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

The Mount Lebanon Shakers have invented a great many valuable things. They were the first to make brooms by machinery; the first to put up seeds in little packages; the first to manufacture cut nails.

Now they are out with a method of curing dyspepsia by resting the stomach. Their remedy is known as the Shaker Digestive Cordial. It supplies food in an artificially digested form and at the same time aids the digestion of other foods in the stomach. In other words, by the use of the Shaker Digestive Cordial, a dyspeptic virtually gets along without the use of his stomach until it is restored to its natural strength and vigor. A single 10 cent bottle will oft-times give marked relief. Get a bottle from your druggist and try it.

Laxol is the best medicine for children. Doctors recommend it in place of Castor Oil.

"It was at Mrs. Watkin's reception, ma'am. You and you daughters ate a quart. The Watkineses have been unable to pay the bill, and I am trying to collect it of those who really got the stuff."

"Harry, here are three apples; now suppose I wanted you to divide them equally between James, John and yourself, how would you do it?"

"I'd give them one and keep the others."

"Why, how do you make that out?"

"Well, you see, it would be one for those two, and one for me too."—Harper's Round Table.

The Little Valentine.

Though 'tis faded now and yellow
With the d st of many years,
And its verses float before me
In the mists of unshed tears,
Yet of all the tender treasures
That around my heart entwine,
There is none I love so fondly
As this little valen'ine.

For around it cling and cluster
Mem'ries of the long ago;
Of the sunny days of childhood,
And the joys I used to know;
Cherished dreams and youthful fancies,
That in those old days were mine.
Hover, like the breath of roses,
Round this little valentine.

And like shadows flitting softly,
Loving faces come and go—
Faces that have long been sleeping
'Neath the blossoms and the snow;
And dear hands, that long have vanished,
Once again I clasp in mine.
As I gaze in love and reverence
On this little valentine.

Voices sweet that death has silenced,
Whisper to me words of love,
Like the sound of angel music
Floating downward from above:
Till at last, the echoes dying
In the depths of mem'ry's shrine,
I am left in silence gazing
On my little valentine.

So, although 'tis dim and faded
With the dust of many years,
And its verses float before me
In the mists of unshed tears;
Yet of all the tender treasures,
That around my heart entwine,
There is none I love so fondly
As this little valentine.

Notes and Comments.

—Mrs. Givile Marcoux of Lawrence has just had her fourth child in 26 months. She is 28 years of age, and none of her four children are able to walk. Mrs. Marcoux's father had a family of four before he was 21 years of age. He was a grandfather at the age of 37.

—The Revere Journal has entered upon its 15th volume, and its prospects for continued financial success and usefulness never were better. Mr. Ernest H. Pierce is a live, active editor, who is bound to make the Journal a welcome visitor in every family.

—The new mills going up or in contemplation at Fall River will employ from 2,000 to 2,500 extra workers. This means an increased population of 7,500. By the end of the year the number of spindles in operation will be close to 3,000,000.

—The Pawtucket Gazette wants to know "if Mr. Cleveland is afraid to declare himself either for or against the Nicaragua canal? That's the way it looks. He has had the report made by the engineer commission which investigated the canal in his hands since last fall, but he hasn't sent it to Congress. The sub-committee of the House committee on commerce got tired waiting for that report and have started upon the preparation of a Nicaragua canal bill."

—Our Boston contemporaries seem to have been entirely oblivious to the fact that the largest newspaper organization in the world held a very important convention in St. Augustine week before last, that they were tendered a banquet by the citizens of St. Augustine, Fla., at what is probably the finest appointed hotel in the world, on Jan. 24, a reception by the Board of Trade of Jacksonville on Jan. 30, and the northern contingent were received by the Mayor of Charleston on Jan. 31.—Waltham Free Press.

Killed on Railroad.

Benjamin A. Brooks a blacksmith residing at 36 School street, was instantly killed by the cars at South Quincy last Friday night by the outward train due in Quincy at 10.40.

It seems that Brooks was laying on the inward track just north of the freight depot, and as the train approached, the engineer saw him and whistled. This evidently aroused him, for he got onto his feet, only to fall over onto the outward track and before the engineer of the outward train could stop his train, the cars had passed over him, cutting him in half and killing him instantly.

Undertaker Hall was notified and removed the remains.

The unfortunate man was a blacksmith by trade, but had been unemployed for some weeks past. He was a son of John Brook formerly of Braintree.

It is supposed that he came from Boston on one of the earlier trains and started up the track toward his home, but laid down in a dangerous place. He was about 34 years of age and unmarried.

Massachusetts Press Asso.

The 27th annual reunion of the Massachusetts Press Association was held at the United States hotel Tuesday afternoon. A very large gathering was present.

The business opened with the reading of the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer. Treasurer J. S. Smith in his report stated that the association was in a most flourishing condition, and he was prepared to say that there was a sum of $238 on hand.

The following officers were then chosen for the ensuing year: President, Benjamin Anthony of the New Bedford Daily Standard; Vice Presidents, E. H. Pierce of the Revere Journal, Alexander Starbuck of the Waltham Free Press, A. C. Dowse of the New England Grocer, Boston, R. S. Barrows of the Jamaica Plain News, and Geo. W. Prescott of the Quincy Patriot; Secretary, H. B. Smith of the Rockland Standard; Treasurer, J. S. Smith of the Rockland Standard; Historian, George H. Proctor of the Gloucester Times; Auditor, Geo. A. Hanscom of the Lowell Times.

Among the after-dinner speakers were, William B. Cook of the Milford Journal, Rev. Mr. Winship of Somerville, Benjamin Anthony of the New Bedford Standard, G. M. Whitaker of the New England Farmer, Dr. Puffer of Brockton, C. B. Fisk of Palmer, W. S. Loomis of Holyoke, A. C. Dowse of the New England Grocer, James Cox of the Cambridge Press, Alexander Starbuck of Waltham, William Reed of Taunton and H. H. Sylvester of the Youth's Companion.

In the evening most of the members attended the Boston Theatre, by the generous courtesy of Mr. Eugene Tompkins, the Manager, and Mr. Walter Damrosch, of the Damrosch Opera Company.

To be Good-Looking.

In a recent talk before the Frœbel Society of Kindergartners on "How We Can Improve Our Looks Through Hygiene," Dr. Emily Hunt claimed, that beauty, that which may be possessed by all, the highest form of beauty, is not dependent on feature or complexion, but on expression. The face but mirrors the mind and the soul and in the daily longing and striving after nobility and purity, unconsciously is gained that outward beauty, which every woman—yes, every individual desire. Good health, which is also good looks, depends much on the carriage of the body. The weight of the body should be thrown forward upon the arch of the foot, which gives a light, elastic step and prevents the jar to the spinal axis which always occurs in heel walking. The skin is a very important organ, and upon the care given this great eliminator of the body, depends in a great measure the health and looks of the individual.

Frequent baths are desirable—in health, a daily bath can be taken with good results, using both hot and cold water, and followed in every case by a vigorous rub. Good digestion is desirable to the person who would look and feel well. Avoid any article of diet which has proved harmful at any time, and eat at regular hours good nutrious food. Sleep, nature's great restorer, must be often wooed by those who desire health and her counterpart, beauty. Make long nights, and if possible snatch from the busy day a period, even if very short, for a little nap. The lecture was illustrated by very interesting charts. In answer to the question: "How can one keep from taking cold?" Dr. Hunt gave these preventives: "Bathe the throat and chest daily in cold water, dress the feet so they may be always warm and dry, and avoid draughts.—The Kindergarten News.

High School Prize Speaking.

Eight hundred or more friends of the Quincy High school and of its pupils assembled in the large study hall of the new building, Friday evening, February 7th, to be entertained with some very creditable declamations.

It was the fourth annual prize speaking contest of the pupils of the school for $75 in books offered in seven prizes by Wendell G. Corthell, Esq.

The past success of these contests was fully maintained, both in proficiency of elocution and financially. The net proceeds of the first three were $155.24, and the "Prize Speaking Fund," now on deposit in the Quincy Savings Bank will probably be increased to $225.

The programme in full follows, the order of speaking having been assigned by lot. It will be seen that the class of '96 had three representatives, the class of '97, seven; class of '98, three, and the class of 99, three.

The programme was as follows:

1. Music—"Praise ye the Father, Gounod
By the School.
2. "A Legend of Bregenz," A. A. Proctor
Bertha F. Hayden, '97.
3. "Toussaint L'Ouverture," Wendell Phillips
Mary M. Joss, '97.
4. Selection from "Evangeline," Longfellow
Beatrice H. Rothwell, '96.
5. "The Bell of Zanora," N. R. Rose
Nettie Sweeney, '96,
6. How Cushing Destroyed the Albemarle," Anon.
Gertrude Walker, '97.
7. The Destruction or Pompeii," Bulwer Lytton
Raymond P. Delano, '98.
8. Music—(a) "Wanderer's Farewell," Arranged by Irving Emerson
(b) "Yachting Glee," Wm. Culbertson
By the School.
Assisted by Mr. Kolb, '99, and Mr. Mitchell, '99.
9. "The Rescue," W. H. H. Murray
Fannie E. Beckwith, '98.
10. "Description of Webster's Speech in Reply to Hayne," C. W. March
Donald MacKenzie, '97.
11. "Plea for the Old South Church," Wendell Phillips
Edward C. Hewitson, '98.
12. Selection from "No Thoroughfare," Charles Dickens
Maude Cummings, '96
13. "The Ride of Great Grandmother Lee," E. B. Rexford
Elsa Scharnagel, '97.
14. Music—Trio, "Meadow Song," J. Wiegand
Miss Burke, '97, Miss White, '97, and Miss Bates, '98.
15. "The Last Speech, Robert Emmet
Curtis Nichols, '97.
16. 'Herve Riel," Robert Browning
Rachel E. Johnson, '97.
17. "The Man Who Rode to Conemaugh," J. E. Bowen
Ethel E. Douglas, '99.
18. "All's Well," Celia Thaxter
Norma C. Lowe, '99.
19. Music—"On Dancing Waves," J. Wiegand
Mr. B. Fitzgerald, piano,
Mr. J. Fitzgerald, First Violin,
Mr. E. Marnock, Second Violin.
20. Award of Prizes.
21. Music—"The Miller," G. A. MacFarren
By the School.
Assisted by Mr. Kolb, '99, and Mr. Mitchell, '99

A word first for the music. As one lady remarked: "When the boys sing it is always good. Well the boys did sing and it was good, strong in chorus and in parts and in excellent time. It was under the direction of Mrs. L. C. Smith, the efficient director of music in our public school. The accompanists were Miss Helen E. Bemis, '97; and Miss Edith Chapman, '97. The vocal trio, and the instrumental number interspersed were pleasing variations from the speaking.

Comments on the individual efforts of the contestants is hardly necessary, as the judges in their awards decide upon the merits. Little if any exception will be taken to the award of the first prize, however, it may be with the others. Miss Joss rendition of that old prize winner—"Toussaint L'Ouverture" has had few superior. It was very close to 100 per cent. in sympathy, distinction, pronunciation and gesture.

The Prize Winners.

The judges of the declamations were Mayor Adams, Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick and James F. Harlow, Esq. They retired at the close of No. 18 on the programme but it was half an hour later before they were ready to report. At their request, Mr. Frederic Allison Tupper, the head master, announced the awards as follows:

First prize, $20 worth of books,—Miss Mary M. Joss, '97.

Second prize, $15 worth of books,—Curtis Nichols, '97.

Third prize, $10 worth of books,—Miss Maude Cummings, '96.

Fourth prize, $10 worth of books,—Raymond P. Delano, '98.

Seventh prize, $5 in books,—Donald Mackenzie, '97.

While waiting for the decision of the judges of declamation, Mrs. Albert F. Schenkelberger, for the judges of essays and translations, awarded in her pleasing manner the prizes offered by Joseph M. Sheahan, M. D. The prizes for essays were $5 in books in each class, and for translations, $4 each. The successful ones were:

For essays:

Class of '96,—First prize, $5, divided between "Ulysses of Ithaca" [Jacob Warshaw] who wrote on "Confessions of a New Woman;" and "X. Y. Z" [Charles J. Anderson] who wrote a poem entitled "The Secret of Success."

Class of '97,—First prize, $5, "Hope" [Donald McKenzie] who wrote on "The Duties of a Patriot." Honorable mention to "Ericas" [Mary M. Joss] for "An original Story."

Class of '98.—First prize, $5, to "Nan." [Florence Osborne] who wrote on "Treasures of the Sea." Honorable mention to "Don Roderick," [Daniel Gallagher].

Class of '99,—First prize, $5, to "Adelaide McLeod," [Grace Craig] who wrote on "An Autumn Walk." Honorable menmention to "Billy," [William H. Baker] who also wrote on "An Autumn Walk."

For translations:

Greek,—First prize, $4, "Maiden Minerva," [Jacob Warshaw]. Honorable mention to Sophocles," [Mary E. Cahill].

Cicero,—First Prize, $4, divided between "Vesla," [Mary E. Pitts] and "Diedrick Knickerbocker," [Jacob Warshaw].

Virgil,—First prize, $4, "Hope," [Donald MacKenzie]. Honorable mention to "Proserpina," [Mildred H. Sampson].

Cæsar,—First prize, $4, "Titus Labienus," [George Lewis]. Honorable mention to "Marcus Aurelius" [Mary A. Sweeney]

French, '96,—First prize, $4, "Algeria" [Isabelle Hay]. Honorable mention to "Barkis is willin'" [Jacob Warshaw].

French, '97,—First prize, $4, "Louise de da Valliere" [Alice M. Perry]. Honorable mention to "Hope" [Donald Mackenzie].

The judges of the essays and translations were: Mrs. Schenkelberger, Mrs. Frederic A. Tupper, Miss Minnie J. Pratt, Miss Florence Hayes and Mr. Robert B. Porter.

Household Receipts.

BROILED STEAK. Few persons know how to cook beefsteak for an invalid. Have the meat cut quite an inch thick. Trim off the fat, and hold it on a gridiron over a very hot fire, turning it rapidly from side to side that both surfaces may be thoroughly seared to retain the juice. Withdraw it a little from the extreme heat and cook four to eight minutes, as it is liked, rare or well-done. The same principle is involved in broiling chops or any meat.

MEAT PUDDING WITH POTATO CRUST. Make a thick gravy by frying one tablespoonful of butter and two tablespoonfuls of flour, one cupful of boiling water; add any meat, chopped fine, (not too fine), grate in this two onions, one teaspoonful of pepper, a little salt. This goes in the dish first.

CRUST. One cupful of flour, one heaping tablespoonful of butter, one cupful of milk, two eggs, not beaten, one cupful of grated potatoes, two cupfuls of bread crumbs. Melt the butter over the fire, stir in the flour, keep on stirring till quite hot; take off, add the milk, then eggs, one by one, then the potatoes and bread crumbs, mixed. Spread over the meat and bake one hour. Serve hot.

PRINCE ALBERT SANDWICHES. Take three eggs, a piece of butter the size of a walnut, a little grated Parmesan cheese, a dash of salt and of cayenne pepper. Put all into a sausepan and stir over the fire till it thickens. Cut some round pieces of bread, fry them in butter till of a nice brown. Spread the paste over them. Have some ham, or tongue, grated or chopped fine, to be strewn over them before serving.

FRIED CAKE PUDDING. Dip slices of stale cake in hot milk, drain, and fry in hot butter. Spread each with jam, and eat hot, with sauce.

CURRANT PUDDING. One cupful of sugar, one-half of a cupful each of butter and milk, two eggs, one and one-half cupsful of flour, one cupful of currants, one and one-alf teaspoonsful of baking powder. Bake in patty-pans, and eat with sauce.

It Cured Her Headache.

The pretty, plump, demure young woman who occupies the cashier's desk at a Nassau-street luncheon room sat on her elevated perch and rested her cheek in her hand. Her forehead was a net-work of fine lines, and she had no appreciative smile for the clerks and office boys who had come to believe lunch incomplete without one, and they felt that they had not had their dime's worth. She raked in the small change as it was tendered with a perfunctory air, and one could see she took no pleasure in her duties. It was plain that she had a severe headache, and wanted nothing but quiet seclusion, a scent bottle, and an easy sofa. Men who had had experience with women looked at her and felt sorry for her.

One such was a waiter who, custom being light at that hour, was sweeping among the chairs and leaving no visible trace of his passage. He saw the pretty cashier sitting there with her face puckered up. He went over to her and tried to cheer her with a few words suitable to the occasion. She merely nodded a reply.

"Let's see what I've got in my pocket for you," said the waiter, adopting the tone one uses toward a child. He felt in the depths of his jacket pocket, and brought forth a small object. "There! You can have that to play with," said he. He laid it down and went about his business.

She picked it up without the least interest in the world and looked at it. It was only a common red firecracker, and she had no use for it. She did not even smile at the humor of the gift. She finally thrust it on one of the wooden toothpicks that stood in a huge bunch before her. They were tied about with a bright hued ribbon, and the firecracker among them had a certain decorative effect that held her for a moment. Then she turned away again and nursed her headache.

A man with a twinkle in his eye came up and paid his reckoning. He had a good light on his cigar, and he touched the fuse of the firecracker with it. The cashier did not even look up at him as he passed by. He went to a corner and jingled the change in his pocket while he awaited developments.

They were not long in coming. With a spiteful little bang the firecracker exploded. The toothpicks flew in all directions. The cashier and fourteen other girls screamed. The proprieter rushed forth and exclaimed: "I'd give $50 to know who did that!" The waiter heard him and got out of sight. Then things quieted down and the apprentice girl in the place was set to gathering up the toothpicks.

But the pretty cashier smoothed down her hair, looked up with an unclouded face, and said, with a little laugh:—

"Well, it cured my headache, anyway!"—New York Times.

The Frying-Pan's Mischief.

People who rarely eat meats that are fried, but have them broiled instead, complain of those who do as victims of the frying-pan. A traveler describes the cooking of a beefsteak by saying that the meat was cut to the thinness of a wafer. The frying-pan was on the fire filled to a third of its depth with lard, drippings, rancid bacon fat or some other form of abomination. Into this the thin slivers of meat were plunged, and fried, fried, fried until they were of the chips chippy. Mutton, pork, ham, and even venison all dance to the same music. Spinach, turnip-tops and other greens were boiled and baptized with grease. It was hog meat, hog meat everywhere; hog meat for breakfast, hog meat for dinner, hog meat for supper, always fried and served up in its own grease. A caustic observer says that the devil of indigestion holds full sway in certain localities because the frying-pan has a firm grip on the affections of the people. He complains of seeing tall, gaunt men, sallow faces like corpses, having perfect satisfaction with the country, a lack of strong high ambition; women, gaunt, haggard, and hopeless looking, all trace of womanly beauty long since gone, every line of their faces speaking of want, privation, neglect of all sanitary laws, and unvaried monotony of unwholesome food; little children, flabby, yellow, pallid, with old men's faces. This is not malaria, he says, but the frying pan.—Good Housekeeping.

THE CRICKET. This is the title of a new paper which has found its way to our editorial table. It is full of illustrations and funny sayings, and is called the People's Comic Weekly. Published by the Cricket Publishing company, Chicago. Price, $1 per year.

The Liquor Business as It Is.

Wives, mothers, children and parents must suffer in order to sustain the saloon-keeper. All business is impaired by the saloon, for the people who lose money on account of drink are the very persons who are unable to buy as many shoes and hats and groceries as they otherwise would. For every dollar the liquor business pays the public in taxes and revenue, it retains eleven dollars for the liquor maker and seller. It is then clearly wrong to give any one a license to sell liquor except as a medicine, or as other poisons are sold.

Indeed, if it is right to sell at all, everyone should have that right, not one or two in a hundred. A vote for license makes the voter indorse the right to sell, and makes him responsible for all the saloon brings. It is helping place ruin within attractive and easy distance of men for money which is a serious crime. The man who gets liquor at a saloon soon becomes a pest in the town and an injury to society.

The liquor business does not really bring money to a city or town, careful estimates show that for every dollar received for license, the people of the city pay out in increased expenses from five to ten dollars, and when the amount of money paid for liquor is reckoned, the dollar received is matched by over twenty dollars expended.

For such reasons most thoughtful people condemn the saloon. The churches, with hardly an exception, object to it in the strongest language, and everywhere we are hearing the cry. "the saloon must go." Shall it be retained to please the brewer and the distiller and the liquor seller? Less than one in four of the cities and towns in Massachusetts vote for a liquor license. Surely your home should not have one. Be sure and vote "No License."

New York Fashions.

SPRING AND SUMMER MATERIALS.

Materials for spring and summer, like those of the winter, show a predominance of rough effects and unequal wearings. Crepons come forth with renewed prestige and while retaining former features, become attractive by reason of new colors and combinations. Delightful fabrics having fine cotton surfaces are chosen groundworks for floral patterns in silk that rise with characteristic crinkle and the same unitings are apparent in light quality wools. New ginghams and other fancy cottons display designs that stand out from the body of the goods and such idea is repeated in ways too varied for enumeration. Very frequently, however, are in narrow stripes and it is safe to predict that they will predominate during the approaching season. Plaids, nevertheless, are conspicuous and often rendered most attractive in consequence of rough additions in black that veil the bright-colored combinations beneath them. But plaids are intended for waists and as hitherto, will be preferably worn with black skirts that will show them off. Black skirts in general, will be extremely fashionable and as a foregone conclusion it may be argued that independent waists may still be reckoned as in the zenith of their popularity.

NEW PATTERNS

NEW DESIGNS

for making up, show no marked variation from what has been fashionable. Skirts still hang plain and stiffly; corsages yet remain the vantage ground for adornment that in many examples attains the limit of extravagance, and it may readily be inferred that the large sleeve is still in favor. Already leading dressmakers are busied in filling southern orders; one may see in their workrooms, yards of cotton fabrics, taffeta silks, etc., and it can be noticed that they use preferably Clark's Mile End cotton, since good sewing requires good thread. It always comes on black spools and for the benefit of the ladies interested in crochet work, a word can be added in commendation of the Mile End crochet cotton. The Clark Mile End Company, 442 Broadway, New York, are advertising a book giving very beautiful colored patterns and directions which can be obtained by sending them 10 cents: the fireside will thus be made cheerful at present by pretty handiwork and time will be afforded for a selection of designs suitable for piazza industry.

STIFF SILKS

are again in order, because skirts still stand out stiffy. Taffeta therefore is in great demand and manufacturers of India silks are in corresponding despair. Beautiful as may be their goods, the fashionable world does not demand them, and where figured designs appear, they are close and give body to the fabric. Black satin is a very frequent selection for skirts, not only for day wear, but in the evening, where a pale or bright-colored corsage becomes greatly enhanced by such an offset and the prophecy is safe, that while satin skirts will be in much demand for evening. For black crepon skirts, the same success will be achieved during the summer as has been won this winter.

THE STAR OF HOPE.

"I had lost all hope and gone to my father's to die," said Mrs. MOLIE EVANS, of Mound, Coryell Co., Texas. "I gave birth to a baby a year ago, the 5th of June last," she adds, "and seemed to do very well for 8 or 9 days, and then I began to feel very bad, my feet began to swell, my stomach was all wrong and I seemed to suffer with everything that could be borne. I was in bed 5 months and there was not a day that it seemed I could live. We had the best doctors that our country afforded. I was a skeleton. Every one that saw me thought that I would never get well. I had palpitation and pain in the heart, terrible pain in my right side just under the ribs, terrible headaches all the time; a bearing down sensation; a distressed feeling in my stomach all the time; could hardly eat anything and it looked as if I would starve. All the time I would take such weak trembling spells, and it seemed as if I could not stand it. There were six doctors treating me when I commenced taking your medicine. I had lost all hope and gone to my father's to die. I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and his 'Favorite Prescription' together, and I took them regularly until I felt as if life was worth living again."

"I weigh more than I have weighed for ten years. My friends say that I look better than they ever saw me. The first two bottles did me more good than all the medicine I had taken. My stomach has never hurt me since. I can eat anything I want and as much as I want. If you want to use this in favor of your medicine, I am a living witness to testify to it, and will, to anybody who wants to know further of my case."

A Word to Letter Writers.

Always save your correspondents' letters, says a letter writer of long experience, at least till you have answered them. Look them over before responding and reply to any questions that may have been asked, for that is only another form of being personal, and personalities always please. You see, in writing a successful letter, instead of saying what you want to say, you must say what your correspondent wants you to say, though, of course, after you have been personal as long as need be, you may add variety by talking about yourself, but don't be dull or stilted about it, don't describe a sunset to a person who never looked at the sun or go into a long criticism of some book to an individual who never reads. Be gossipy, be light, and, above all, be natural. Why, I know a pair of painfully discreet sisters who, when they are together, exchange opinions of all sorts as freely as any two of like relationship, but whose stiff, cold conversations by mail you would never recognize as emanating from the same persons, so fearful are they that something will get down in black and white that they might regret if the world got hold of it. For my part, I would prefer to run the risk of the whole world getting hold of it to sacrificing all that pleasant, chatty companionship. To be separated from your friends is bad enough without having the additional woe put upon you of an unnatural manner growing up between you and them.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

What Causes Thirst?

The sensation of thirst is caused by a lack of fluids in the system. In a state of health it indicates that the body wants moisture. We should distinguish natural thirst from that caused by stimulating foods and beverages which produce a fever in the organs of digestion. Thirst is caused by a failure of the salivary glands to secrete a proper amount of fluids for use in the stomach. It is possible to quench thirst not only by the ordinary means, but through the blood vessels, and the skin. Much of the water drank passes out through the skin by means of the blood vessels, and is known as unconscious perspiration. It is a well known fact that the loss of blood is always followed by intense thirst; this thirst is one of the most harrowing features of the battlefield, as every old soldier knows. The reason for it is that the blood vessels being drained of their moisture, the skin becomes parched and every pore is changed into a thirsty mouth. Thirst accompanies fevers, but its causes are local, being due to dryness of the throat and mouth, the result of a high temperature.—Plymouth Memorial.

Shawmut Spring Water.
How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.
THE SHAWMUT SPRING WATER possesses all these requirements, and when used in liberal quantities it is a most important factor in building up and restoring to healthy action the digestive organs and conducive to the health of all, more especially to children and persons of delicate constitutions. The array of testimony by doctors and others in its favor is overwhelming and shows that Shawmut Spring Water stands among the best.

Poetry.

Best.

"Love is better than house or lands;
So, Sir Stephen, I'll ride with thee!"
Quick the steps where the courser stands,
Light she springs to the saddle-tree.

Love is better than kith or kin;
So close she clung and so close clasped he,
They heard no sob of the bitter wind
Nor the snow that shuddered along the lea.

Love is better than life or breath!
The drifts are over the horse's knee,
Softly they sink to the soft, cold death,
And the snow-shroud folds them silently.

Houses and lands are gone for aye;
Kith and kin like the wild wind flee;
Life and breath have fluttered away,
But love hath blossomed eternally.

Miscellany.

SIBYL'S SLIPPER.

When Sir William Howe succeeded General Gage as governor and military commander of the New England province, he at once set to work to make himself and the king's cause popular, in a social way, by giving a series of fine entertainments in the stately Province House.

To these entertainments were bidden all the Boston townsfolk who were loyal to the British crown. Among such, none were more prominent or made more welcome than Mr. Jeffrey Merridew and his pretty young niece, Sibyl.

Mr. Merridew was a staunch loyalist, though he was by no means a violent hater of the rebels.

His only brother, Dr. Ephraim Merridew—Sibyl's father—was a rebel at heart, though in faraway Barbados, where he was at that time engaged in business, he could not serve the rebel cause in person, as he would gladly have done.

But he left behind him a son, who, in full sympathy with his father's views, ranged himself boldly on the rebel side as part and parcel of the American army.

A rebel relative in Barbados was not a matter to trouble one's self about greatly, but a rebel relative on the spot, so to speak—for young Ephraim was only six miles away at the Cambridge rallying ground—was a different thing. The young man could not, of course, be allowed free intercourse with his sister.

"What harm do the king's soldiers think poor Eph can do them by now and then paying a visit to his sister?" she asked her uncle scornfully.

"Harm? You are very young, Sibyl, and don't understand these things. Your brother has chosen very foolishly to join the rebel forces, and so has made himself one of our acknowledged enemies, and I never heard of declared enemies in time of war walking in and out of each other's houses like tame cats," answered Mr. Merridew, sarcastically.

"You think Eph would be so mean as to tell tales?" exclaimed Sibyl in high indignation.

"Tell tales!" repeated Mr. Merridew, flinging back his head with irrepressible laughter at Sibyl's ignorance. "Why, my dear, the reporting of important facts, however gained, in times of war, is part of war tactics—it is not called 'telling tales.'"

"And would you—would you, if you were in Ephraim's camp as a visitor, would you"—

"Tell tales?" laughed Mr. Merridew. "Indeed I would, if I heard anything worth telling—anything that I thought would serve the cause I believe to be a righteous cause."

Then, more seriously, "Why, Sibyl, it would be my duty to do it."

"Oh, oh!" cried Sibyl, "it is odious, odious, all this war business.

"Yes, I grant you that, but who is to blame for bringing this odious business upon us? Who but these foolish malcontents, these rebels, like"—

"Like my father and my brother," broke in Sibyl hotly as Mr. Merridew hesitated.

"Yes, like your father and your brother, I am sorry to say," concluded her uncle gravely.

"No, no, no," cried Sibyl excitedly. "It is not that they are to blame. They are good and brave and wise. They only want justice and fair play. It is the king's folk who are to blame—the king's folk who want to oppress the people with unjust taxes that they may live in grandeur."

Mr. Merridew stared in silent astonishment at this unexpected outburst. Then, in a severer tone than his niece had ever heard from his lips, he said:

"So this is the treasonable talk you have heard from your brother—these are the teachings that he has been instilling into you? Ah, it is none too soon that you are cut off from the influence of that headstrong boy."

* * * * *

"And you're to dance the last dance with me, remember, Miss Merridew."

"Indeed, Sir Harry, I will not promise you that."

"You will not promise? But you have promised."

"Have promised? What do you mean, sir? I think you are forgetting yourself!" and Miss Sibyl Merridew lifted up her graceful head with a little air of hauteur that was by no means unbecoming to her piquant beauty.

But young Sir Harry Willing was not to be put down by this pretty little provincial—not he—and so, lifting up his head with an air of hauteur, he said to Miss Sibyl:

"I crave Miss Merridew's pardon, but perhaps if she will reflect a moment she will recall what she said to me yesterday morning when I begged her to give me the pleasure of dancing the last minuet with her tonight."

"But I never reflect."

"So I should judge madam," retorted the youth wrathfully, "but perhaps," he went on, "if Miss Merridew will design to bestow a glance upon this," and the young fellow pulled from his pocket a gold mounted card and letter case, out of which he took a tablet, upon which was written:

"Met Miss Sibyl Merridew this morning on the mall. She promised to dance the last minuet with me tomorrow night. Mem.—send roses if they are to be had in town."

Sibyl blushed as she read this. Then lifting the flowers—Sir Harry's roses—to her face for a moment she dropped a demure courtesy and said, with a gleam of fun in her eyes:

"If Sir Harry finds that it is necessary for him to recall his friends and engagements by memorandum notes, he certainly cannot expect an untutored provincial maid who carries no such orderly appliance about with her to charge her mind unaided."

"An untutored provincial maid!" exclaimed Sir Harry, all wrath extinguished by her pretty recognition of his flowers and his admiration of her ready wit. "An untutored provincial maid! By my faith, Miss Sibyl, you'd put to shame many a court dame. But hark, what's that? As I live, the musicians are tuning up for a minuet," and smilingly he held out his hands to her.

Sir Harry, boy as he was, spite of his one and twenty years, was giving vent to a little boastful talk about the army and "those undisciplined rebels who would never stand the test against a full regiment of regulars."

"Why," Sir Harry declared at length, led on by Sibyl's air of great interest, "we have positive information that their troops at Cambridge have neither arms nor ammunition to carry on a defence, and they are in sorry condition every way—it is impossible for them to resist us successfully. We shall literally sweep them off the face of the earth if they attempt it."

"And you—the king's troops?" inquired Sibyl.

"We—well, we have been a little straitened ourselves for the munitions of war," replied the young aid-de-camp, "but by tomorrow night a vessel will arrive for us that will relieve all such necessities."

"Ah," with a gay smile, "what would not these rebels give to get possession of this information and put their cruisers on the alert to capture such a prize. But there is no possibility of this?"

All this in the pauses of the dance. When they started up again, the music had accelerated its time, and down the great hall they led the way at a fine pace. But in swinging about to return Sir Harry felt his companion fal er.

"What is it?" he asked anxiously.

"My slipper," she replied, with a vexed laugh, and stooping as she spoke she whisked off a little satin shoe, the high hollow metal heel of which had suddenly given way.

Something could be done. She was to go to Mme. Bontineau's rout the next evening. She needed these slippers for that occasion.

Would Sir Harry, on his way to his quarters that night, would he think it beneath his dignity to leave the slipper at Anthony Styles, the shoemaker's? It was just there by the tavern, at the sign of the gilded boot.

He had only to drop the shoe, with a message she would write to go with it, into the tunnel box by the door, and Anthony would find it by daylight and set to work on it at once that she might not be disappointed, for it was a longish job, she knew.

And would he then give her a bit of paper and pencil and take her to the cloak room for a moment?

Alone in the cloak room, Sibyl wrote her message to Anthony Styles. Folding the paper in the slipper and wrapping the whole in her pocket handkerchief, she fastened the parcel securely with the silken cord that had held her fan.

"And may I have the last dance tomorrow night?" asked Sir Harry smilingly as he took leave of her a few minutes later.

"Perhaps—if I may depend upon you and Anthony Styles," she answered. Her eyes sparkled like dark jewels as she spoke; her cheeks burned like red twin roses.

* * * * *

And in the midst of a pretty disorder of satin and lace and flowers sits Sibyl, far into the night, or rather morning, turning over and over in her mind something that effectually banishes sleep.

"To think that it should be given to me to do—made my duty! Uncle Jeffrey taught me that, as he has taught me many things these past months—to keep my own counsel, for one thing.

"Yet I felt like a cheat tonight as I led Sir Harry on to tell me what he did—Sir Harry, who thinks me, as all the rest do, a stanch little Tory, for I have kept my counsel indeed, and no one suspects.

"Yes, I have done my duty, for—'the reporting of important facts, however gained, in times of war, is part of war tactics.'

"Oh, I could laugh, I could laugh if I didn't shiver so when I think of it! Sir Harry—Sir Harry of all persons—dropping that message into Anthony Styles' hands—Anthony Styles, the stanch rebel, whom they think a stanch Tory."

* * * * *

The clock was striking four the next afternoon when a weather beaten man, who had a look as if he had once been a seaman, knocked at the side door of Mr. Jeffrey Merridew's mansion and asked to see young Mistress Merridew.

"It's Shoemaker Styles," the maid informed Sibyl, "and he says you must come down and try on the slipper he has brought—he's not sure about the heel. He's in the hall room, mem."

He stood with the slipper in his hand as she entered the room, and before she could close the door behind her he called out in a frank, loud voice, "I thought you had better try on the shoe, miss—I wasn't sure of the heel."

The moment the door was closed, however, he came forward eagerly, and in a low tone said:

"It's all right, little mistress. I heard the click of the tunnel box last night, for I had not turned in, and afore many minutes I was up and off in my boat with the message—in my head. I burnt the paper."

"And it's all right, and the end will be all right?" faltered Sibyl anxiously.

"All right? You'll know for yourself by nightfall perhaps, and now God bless you, little mistress. You've done a great service, and if ever Anthony Styles can sarve you he'll do it with a whole heart—God bless you, God bless you!"

* * * * *

But Sir Harry did not dance at Mme. Bontineau's that evening, for when at nightfall he returned to his quarters he was met by the disastrous tidings that the long-looked for, eagerly expected British brig, loaded with supplies for the king's army, had been captured off Lechmere's point by the Yankee rebels!

It was not many months after this capture that the British evacuated Boston. When Sir Harry Willing took leave of Sibyl Merridew, he pleaded for some token of remembrance.

"You will not promise yourself to me," he said in reproachful accents, "but give me some token of yourself, some gage of amity at least."

"But what—what can I give you, Sir Harry?" asked Sibyl, not a little touched and troubled.

"Give me the little slipper you wore that night we danced together at the Province House."

"That—that slipper?" and Sibyl blushed and paled.

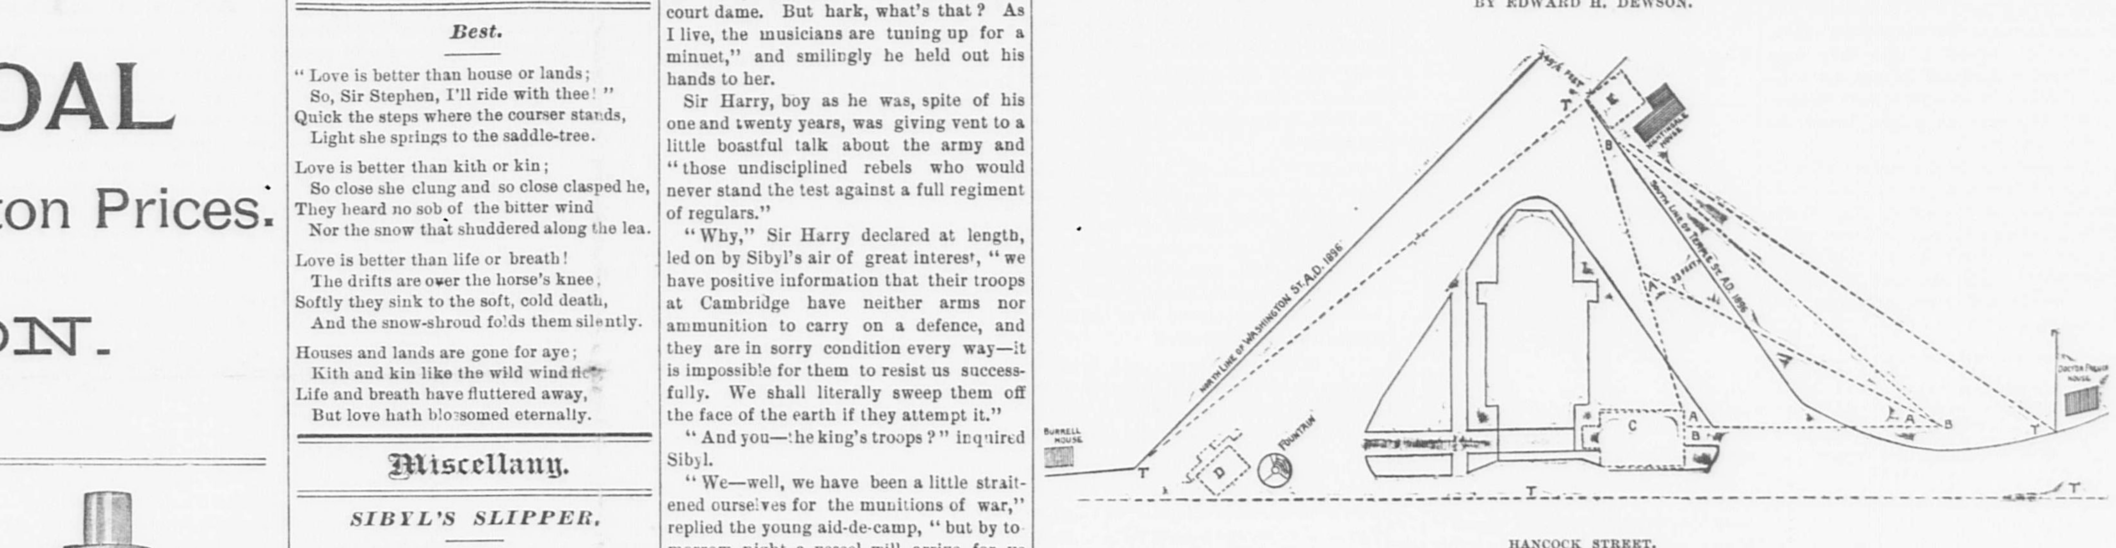

"Yes—ah, you will, you will!"

A moment's hesitation, then, with a strange smile, half grave, half gay, Sibyl answered, "Yes, I will."—Nora Perry in Boston Globe.

Mr. President, and Ladies and Gentlemen:

In offering this paper I am aware that I am doing little more than stringing together, recollections of your own. Many of which will seem very commonplace. But you must remember how precious to you are stories and traditions of a past in which your ancestors lived and acted.

These few incidents that will be recorded in the archives of our society may interest those who come after us. It is in this hope that the society carries on its work.

In the year 1630 the town of Boston was incorporated.

In 1634 the General Court gave it enlargement at Wollaston.

In 1639 the first church was established at Wollaston.

In 1640 the territory embraced by Wollaston became the town of Braintree.

It included the present towns of Quincy, Braintree, Randolph and Holbrook.

In 1708 the town of Braintree was divided into two precincts or parishes "for the more regular and convenient upholding of the worship of God."

In 1792 the North Precinct of Braintree became the town of Quincy.

In 1635 Boston granted large tracts of land at Wollaston to Edmund Quincy, Wm. Coddington, Atherton Hough, John Wheelwright and others.

Smaller allotments were made on the basis of four acres for each member of a family, and of meadow land for each head of cattle.

After the incorporation of Braintree Boston continued making grants, occasioning many disputes.

In 1710, the matter was settled by Boston relinquishing its title to all the territory, to the Town of Braintree.

The small allotments are very difficult to trace. The descriptions are imperfect, and many of the early records have been lost.

One of the first recorded acts of the new town, was to build a highway from Weymouth to the Dorchester line. There were six persons present at the town meeting.

The survey was made in 1641, but owing to disagreements, it was not accepted until December, 1648.

It is the Franklin, School, Hancock and Adams streets, of today.

Mr. Charles F. Adams, says that the construction of a great coast road from Newbury, on the Merrimac, to Hingham, was ordered by special vote of "The General Court" in Nov. 1639.

The Indian trail from Plymouth to Boston, ran down Penns hill, crossed the plain, continued west of Presidents hill, to Adams street, thence over Milton hill to Boston.

The highway, or coast road, left the Indian trail at Adams street, and passed around Presidents Hill, toward the eastward, joining the trail again at some point on Franklin street. The portion of Hancock street, that is the subject of this sketch, began at the present junction of Adams and Hancock streets, and ended as now, at Elm and School streets.

We have said that a large tract of land was granted to Edmund Quincy.

He died in 1637, shortly after the allotment at Wollaston had been made to him. The grant to him and to Coddington, was undivided for two years.

Quincy's, may be briefly described as the Wollaston and Merry Mount Parks, and a portion of the Woodward estate, Coddington's, as the estate of the late John Quincy Adams.

For the purpose of this sketch, it is not necessary to accurately define their limits. In Mr. Adams' Three Episodes of Massachusetts History, on page 578, second volume, there is an interesting map showing all of these estates.

I have drawn largely upon this book of Mr. Adams.

He says that at this time there were about eighty families in Braintree, numbering perhaps five hundred souls.

The house of Edmund Quincy was probably built just before his death in 1637, and forms a part of the house built by his son in 1706.

Of late years it has been known as the Butler House, near Black's Creek, or Butler's brook. It is situated a little toward the Northeast from where the brook crosses Hancock street, near the new high school house. It is now owned by the Rev. D. M. Wilson.

In 1637, Bridge street (directly opposite) was the private avenue to this house.

The gate was at Adams street, near the present railroad bridge.

The lane as it was termed by Pattee, was at a later date, the "Farms Road" running in a zig zag sort of way to Squantum. It was discontinued in 1803, except the portion now called Bridge street.

Edmund Quincy, was succeeded by his son Edmund, born in 1627, died in 1697. He was, in turn, succeeded by his son Edmund, third of the name, born in 1681, died in 1738.

He was judge of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, from 1718 to his death.

Again quoting from Mr. Adams, "Mr. Quincy's new house, was raised in 1706. The portion in which was the chamber next the brook, mentioned in Judge Sewall's diary, was comparatively new, for it had after a fashion not uncommon then, been built on to the older dwelling, which, afterwards, relegated to menial uses, had already stood there for nearly seventy years.

The entire building still remains a noticeable specimen of the best domestic architecture of colonial times. One room has on its walls, the queer old Chinese paper, which tradition says, was hung there in 1775 in honor of Dorothy Quincy's approaching marriage to John Hancock."

In 1640. John Dassitt is granted twenty eight acres. They comprise the upland lying on the east side of Hancock street, extending from Adams to Washington street, and bounded by Coddington, and Washington streets, the low land towards the east, and north east, being its bounds in that direction.

Standing at the Quincy gate, in 1640, and looking toward the south there is no recorded evidence that a house was visible.

Moses Belcher, was grantee from John Dassitt, in 1685. The heirs of Moses Belcher, were grantors in 1699, and one Moses Belcher, owned land on the West side of Hancock street in 1733.

The houses of the early period, were of two distinct types. We shall find a few specimens of each that have not been remodeled, so as to be unrecognizable.

Those of the wealthier class were in general, square with two stories, and two chimneys, and a low roof called a hip roof, a door and hall in the middle, and two rooms on each side.

The farmers, or poorer class, built their houses with one or two stories, and a pitched roof with a huge chimney in the centre. The roof of the smaller houses was often extended to within a few feet of the ground in the rear.

The front door was in the middle. There was one room on each side.

We will designate these houses as first, second and third type.

An evolution of the first type is the larger house of a later period.

It has a railing along the eaves or on the roof, a porch, sometimes a cupola and ornamentation.

We will now journey southward on Hancock street, taking the several estates in their order, and learning what we can of their history.

At the junction of Adams and Hancock streets at the parting of the ways stands the house of Charles H. Porter, built by his father, Whitcomb Porter, in 1854.

At our right hand stands the Adams Academy building erected in 1871, at a cost of nearly twenty-nine thousand dollars. It was built from the accumulated earnings of more than two hundred and eleven acres of land bequeathed by President John Adams.

We have already spoken of the land on which this building is placed as probably being a part of a purchase by Moses Belcher in the last half of the seventeenth century.

On the 16th of August, 1733, a second Moses Belcher conveyed to the Rev. John Hancock thirteen acres, bounded easterly by the country road, southerly and westerly by John Beal, northerly by Leonard Vassall.

Mr. Hancock built a house thereon. He was ordained minister of the First Church in 1726. His son, Governor John Hancock, was born in this house, Jan. 12, 1737. It was destroyed by fire in 1759. The south east corner of the Academy building rests upon its site. Aug. 22, 1748, Lemuel Bryant bought the estate of John Hancock. July 13, 1752, Josiah Quincy bought it from Bryant. It was subsequently conveyed to John Adams, who in 1822, bequeathed the Hancock lot, so-called, together with other lands, for the uses of the Academy. The Hancock lot extends southerly on Hancock street to the Brackett estate and westerly to Goffe street.

The Old Colony railroad built in 1845, divided it in twain. Mr. Horace B. Spear states that before the railroad was built, the land on Adams street where his house stands, also the houses of Charles A. Howland and Mr. Carr belonged to Adams and extended back to Goffe street.

The railroad company bought the strip on Adams street, northeast of the railroad, and later sold it. The Vassall estate was the present Adams estate, on Adams street. Leonard Vassall built the house in 1731, and sold the property to President John Adams in 1787.

Continuing our journey down Hancock street, on the west side, we find Dimmock street, running to Goffe street on Presidents hill. It was named for Wm. R. Dimmock, the first master of the Adams Academy. He died when the school was at the zenith of its prosperity. The next two houses are built on the Hancock lot. The first, is owned by Miss M. Flora Underwood, the second by John W. Hall. The latter was built by Captain Underwood sixty years ago. The land is held by its occupants under a ninety-nine years' lease, from the trustees of the Academy fund.

The next estate is owned by Miss Nancy Brackett, who inherited it from her father Lemuel Brackett. He bought it from John Beal. The house was built in 1827. The estate extended to Goffe street. Miss Brackett was born in the Brackett house on Canal street, one of the oldest houses in town. Jeffrey R. Brackett son of Lemuel built the large house on Goffe street, directly west of his father's house. The tenth mile stone from Boston, on the highway of 1648, is built into the stone wall on the front of this estate.

Mr. E. W. Marsh, says that the next house south of the Brackett estate, was built by Deacon Samuel Savil, son of Doctor Elisha Savil, and father of Josiah Savil. He died in 1844 aged eighty years. This estate extended to the burying ground and west to Goffe street. The house was built near 1820. It is an excellent specimen of the first type before mentioned. Deacon Savil lived on the Beals farm at Squantum from about 1790 to 1815. Farther south on this estate there was an old tavern owned by Ebenezer Veazie, and afterwards by his sons, Ebenezer and Mottram.

On the south corner of Saville street is the house formerly occupied by the Quincy Stone, (now National Granite) Bank. Mr. Marsh says it was built by Elisha Turner, who carried on a tailoring business there. It is owned by Henry H. Faxon.

We now come to the Hancock House. Pattee says: "The first house on this spot was built in 1806. It was kept as a tavern by Col. James Thayer, until 1815, followed by Capt. Young, and "Deacon Samuel Savil, then by Daniel French from 1824 to 1837. In the latter years, the old house was removed, and a new one built, at a cost of five thousand dollars, called the Hancock House. It has since been enlarged."

About 1870, it was bought by Henry H. Faxon, and for several years occupied as a boarding house for the students of the Academy. In 1894, buildings of one story, for stores, were erected on three sides of it. The main building is again occupied as a hotel.

Crossing the private way leading to the railway station, we come to the City Hall. This is a stone building erected in 1844, on land bought of Daniel French. Total cost of land and building, $19,115.93. Previous to its erection, Mr. French had here a row of six or eight sheds for the accommodation of church people and others. Beyond them, close to the burying ground, an engine house stood. Next to it, and extending back to the railway, is the ancient burying ground. An interesting history of this cemetery has been written for the Historical society by Mrs. Wilson P. Marsh.

The oldest head stone bears the date of 1666.

Pattee says: "that previous to 1809 it was unfenced and neglected. Cattle were permitted to roam at large over it. In that year measures were taken to prevent further desecration.

Pattee says: "This year(1844), the Rev. Doctor Lunt and the ladies of the Unitarian society held a fair, the proceeds of which were for the purpose of adorning and constructing a more suitable enclosure around the ground. The present appropriate iron fence was built from the receipts of this fair."

In the distant future an interesting question may arise as to the ownership of this property, if it falls within the meaning of the decision of the Supreme Court "that when town and parish were one and the same, the occupation of land for purposes incidental to worship impressed upon it a parochial character and upon the separation, such land becomes the property of the parish."

QUINCY, SATURDAY, FEB. 22, 1896.

Banquet to Faxon Guards.

Company F, more familiarly known as the Faxon Guards, and their friends were right royally entertained at Faxon hall, Thursday evening, by Hon. Henry H. Faxon.

Company F is made up of seventeen young ladies with Miss Cornelia Elliot as captain. They organized last winter and were drilled by Lieut. Kincaide of Company K, Fifth Regiment, M. V. M., until they became very expert in manœvre. When they first organized they were without rifles, but Mr. Faxon becoming interested, one night at drill, presented each with a rifle and box of confectionery for ammunition. Since then he has adopted the company and because of his help and good will they called themselves, and became generally known as, "the Faxon Guards," and later on as Company F. Until Thursday evening the Faxon Guards have always done the entertaining, giving many drills in this city and surrounding towns for sweet charity's sake. Mr. Faxon thought it time they were entertained and repaid in part for their faithful drill work, and for always furnishing entertainment for others, hence the reception and dance.

For several months the young ladies in Company F have been talking of and looking forward to the affair, Mr. Faxon promising them a fine entertainment before the season was over. As a result of the promise over eighty handsome invitations to a reception and dance were sent out, reading as follows:

Company F
will receive their friends
Thursday evening,
February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-six, from 8 to 12 o'clock, at
Faxon Hall,
Quincy, Massachusetts.
Matrons,
Mrs. Leslie B. Hardwick,
Mrs. Eleanor F Sproul,
Mrs. Abigail B. Spear.

Accompanying the invitation was an admission card, and Mr. Faxon's card. All having fine vignettes of Mr. Faxon.

The admission card read:

Company F's RECEPTION
Thursday Evening,
February Twentieth,
Eighteen Hundred and Ninety-Six,
From Eight to Twelve o'clock,
Faxon Hall.
Present this card at the door.

The hall was artistically trimmed with bunting and palms. On the platform were large potted palams and the stacked arms of Company F.

From eight to nine a reception was held the guests being received by the matrons, Mrs. Arthus E. Sproul, Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick and Mrs. Samuel H. Spear, being introduced by the aids and members of Company F.

During the reception and for the dancing, Monk's orchestra discoursed most inspiriting music.

At nine o'clock the first strains of the the grand march rolled out, and soon all were in line lead by floor director Mr. Henry L. Kincaide, and a pretty march it was, the ladies all looking bewitching in their dainty gowns, showing all the colors of the rainbow scintillating among the black suits worn by the men.

The order of dance was one of the most appropriate and handsomest seen for several seasons. The star spangled banner occupying the upper left hand corner, and the stacked arms the lower right hand corner, with a shadowy camp scene in the back ground.

Lieut. Henry L. Kincaide who was of such valuable assistance to the young ladies of Company F when they organized last winter, was floor director, assisted by Mr. William S. Osborne, Mr. Frederick E. Goss and Mr. James L. Edwards. The order of dances were.

Quadrille, "Sleigh Bells."
Waltz.

Shortly after ten the grand march for supper was formed, Mr. Faxon with Miss Brown leading the way, followed by the matrons and their escorts, floor director Mr. H. L. Kincaide and Miss Litchfield, the aids and Faxon guards and guests.

The dining hall was prettily decorated with bunting and cut flowers. At the ladies' plates were fragrant pink roses and for the men there were pinks.

The places at the tables were designated by card and after all were seated close attention was given for some time to the good things set before them by caterers T. D. Cook & Co., of Boston.

The menu cards were very elaborate and in keeping with the invitations and dance orders. The front page was embossed with the words "Menu" in gold, the letters further ornamented with shells and seaweed with a bright lobster coming up from a sea of gold below. One inside page contained Mr. Faxon's latest photograph, while on the opposite page was the menu as follows:

MENU,
Chicken Croquettes, French Peas.
Lobster Salad.
Olives, Salted Almonds.
Rolls.
Assorted Fancy Cake.
Ice Creams.
Chocolate Tarfait. Neapolitan.
Cafe Parfait.
Small Fancy Ices. Spun Sugar.
Coffee. Lemonade.
Crackers and Neufchatel Cheese.

After supper Miss Cornelia Elliott, captain of the Faxon Guards welcomed the guests and said she wished to thus publicly thank Mr. Faxon for all that he had done for them and for the good time they, with their friends, were enjoying tonight. She said the Faxon Guards were proud of their name [applause] and in closing wished Mr. Faxon many, many years in which to reap the reward, for the many good seeds he has dropped by the wayside in past years. [loud applause]

In responding Mr. Faxon welcomed his guests and said he was proud of the Faxon Guards. He said his remarks were along historical lines and he would go back fifty years. He had taken particular pains to write it off so that his remarks should correspond with the copy he had already given the reporters [laughter] and then again some of those present might (?) remember back fifty years. [laughter]. I have a reminiscence relating to an event which occurred on this historic spot about fifty five years ago. A little red house stood here (not a little red schoolhouse) [applause] and in it was given a benefit for a blind fiddler. I was present and danced. The floor sloped towards the middle and we all got there in a bunch. It was a high old time. [applause] To conclude the festivities we undertook to carry a chicken coop into the house, but failed because of the narrow entrance. If I had been as giddy [applause and laughter] then as I am now I should either have stretched the doorway or squeezed the chicken-coop so as to have carried out the hilarious feature of the occasion." [applause]

Mayor Adams had been present, earlier in the evening but left just before supper. Mr. Faxon said this upset him somewhat as he had some more remarks written off [applause] however he should look upon Mr. Sproul as Mayor and so proceeded.

Your Honor and Friends:

I am glad to welcome you upon this occasion and trust that the joys of this festive gathering will linger in your memory for many years.

To those who cannot be with us on account of illness I tender my sincere sympathy. May they soon be restored to perfect health. I have no doubt that you all feel safe in this presence.

Mr. Mayor, behold those rifles. Look upon the fair experts who know how to handle them with deadly precision. Suppose an emergency should arise whereby our city might be in danger from a foreign foe. Such invaders would surrender at the sight of our valiant Company F.

If John Bull should claim a slice of the territory of Quincy as he has demanded from Venezuela, we need not appeal to the President for action. No. We would say to Captain Elliott, "Call the Faxon Guards together," and she would issue an order to this effect: "John, retire from this soil at once if you desire to return to the old country alive."

It would not be necessary to wait upon a cowardly and tardy United States Senate and House of Representatives; instead of that we would lodge that miscellaneous body of legislators in the most remote quarter of oblivion.

Ladies and gentlemen, I will not weary your patience by any further remarks. It gives me great pleasure to introduce His Honor, the Mayor, who I believe will in dorse my sentiments as to the safety of Quincy in case of war.

Mr. Sproul said it was a rather sudden election. He was glad to have his ability recognized and should try to govern wisely. He should straightway proceed to have the roads in Quincy nickelplated and order the city council to vacate City hall that the Faxon Guards might have suitable quarters. [applause.] Mr. Sproul's remarks were witty and did His Honor much credit, and he sat down amid a storm of applause.

Mr. Faxon said "When that boy of mine found out that Mayor Adams had not stopped for supper he thought the old man was in a box and quietly sent me a note telling me to try and alter my remarks but I knew the old man would come out all right [laughter] and he has" [loud applause].

During the applause an adjournment was made to the dance hall, where dancing was resumed and thoroughly enjoyed until half-past twelve. At the close of the last strains of "Home, Sweet Home," Capt. Elliott called for three cheers for Mr. Faxon which were given with a will and thus came to an end one of the most delightful parties ever given in Quincy.

Maple lodge, K. & L. of H., held an enthusiastic meeting Wednesday evening at which six candidates were elected to membership. After the meeting the second championship whist tournament between Maple lodge and Friendship lodge of South Boston was held. Owing to the stormy evening there were not as many tables as usual.

In the inquest return on the death of Benjamin A. Brooks killed at South Quincy, Feb. 8, Judge Humphrey finds as follows: I find that the death of said Brooks did not result from any negligence of said Railroad company, its servants or agents, but that it was apparently due to a reckless violation of the statute which makes the act of walking on a railroad a penal offence.

The concert given Feb. 15, under the auspices of the Guild of the Great Teacher was a great success. The programme was arranged and managed by Mr. Harry W. Porter which was a sufficient guarantee of something good in the music line. Every participant was recalled several times and most generously responded. Those to take part were; Miss Towle, contralto soloist; Miss Florence Emery, soprano soloist; Miss Marion Sherman, reader; Mr. Waterhouse, tenor soloist; Mr. Coonly 'celloist; Mr. Robert Porter, violinist.

The Board of Managers of Public Burial Places held an adjourned meeting at City Hall, Monday evening. The meeting was called to complete the organization of the board, but the rumor that some member was likely to resign rather threw cold water on the meeting, as each was waiting to see who the member was that was to resign, and they therefore sat and looked at each other all the evening and indulged in a kind of smoke talk, the only vote passed being that Mr. Elijah G. Hall should act as clerk of the board until a permanent clerk was elected. The next meeting of the board will be held two weeks hence.

Quincy will be well represented at the dinner of the Past Sachems' Association of the Red Men tonight, Feb. 22. Mayor Adams is one of the principal speakers, and Past Sachems Fairbanks, McAnarney and Jordan of the Wollaston Tribe will attend. The banquet will be at the Thorndike, Boston, at 6 30. The committee have spared neither time nor labor in their efforts to make this meeting the most successful and memorable of any in the history of the association.

Barnby vesper service will be held at the Wollaston Unitarian church on Sunday. The quartette will sing the following pieces composed by Barnby: "Sing and Rejoice," "Abide with Me," "Sweet is Thy Mercy Lord," "Now the day is over." Miss Hayes will sing a solo from the "Messiah" at the morning service.

Granite City Club Banquet.

Between forty and fifty members of the Granite City Club had a social time at the United States Hotel, Boston, Wednesday. It was the occasion of their first annual dinner, and it proved a grand success.

The members commenced to gather about six o'clock, and at seven the time designated for the feast, forty-four were ready to take seats at the festive board.

After enjoying an excellent bill of fare, which this noted hotel is capable of furnishing, Mr. Joseph C. Morse, president of the club, called the members to order, and expressed his thanks for the pleasure it gave him in seeing so many members present, and the success of this, the first annual dinner of the club.

A short and pleasing address by His Honor, the Mayor of Quincy, was then listened to with much attention. Short impromptu speeches were in order by officers and members of the club, followed by singing and stories; and two hours flew by quickly.

The members did not begin to think of home until President Morse announced hat the 10.15 train would leave in fifteen minutes; then all began to fancy it was time to start; and after a closing chorus, his social gathering came to an end.

An Elegant Party.

One of the most elegant dances that has been given in the city this season was the subscription leap year party, which was given by Mrs. Chandler W. Smith and Mrs. Eugene H. Sprague, at the Knights of Honor hall, Wollaston, on Wednesday evening.

The guests as they arrived were ushered before the patrons of the affair, Mr. Herbert W. Lull, Mr. Eugene H. Sprague Mr. Chandler W. Smith and Mr. Frank A. Page.

The costumes of the ladies were beautiful. The music was sublime, and the lunch which was served during the intermission by Hendrie was excellent.

A list of those present appeared in Thursdays LEDGER.

WEST QUINCY.

The ten-year-old son of George A. Mayo of West Quincy is seriously ill with typhoid fever.

The alarm Monday morning which confused the firemen came from Box 47. Jeremiah Sheahan saw some smoke coming from his house and thinking that there was a fire ran to the box and pulled the hook several times which was the cause of the confusion.

There was an Italian party on California avenue Tuesday evening, and when the affair broke up and the parties started for home there was a dispute which ended in two of the party coming to blows. Cesidio Coletti, another of the party, attempted to act as peacemaker and he stepped between the two men to separate them, but his good intentions ended in the usual way, for some one hit him with a black jack, so he says, which left a big hole in the top of his head. He reported the matter to the police, Wednesday, and they are now looking for the alleged assailant.

SOUTH QUINCY.

Last evening Doble's hall, Water street, was comfortably filled by a large company that had assembled to receive Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Raleigh, who had recently been married, and to wish them many pleasant days together.

The stone sheds have been shut down thus far this week on account of cold weather.

Mr. and Mrs. Eben F. Mitchell entertained the Crystal whist club on Wednesday evening.

Miss Hattie Chisholm and sister are to spend a few days with their aunt in Saugus, Mass.

On Sunday morning the congregation listened to a most eloquent and inspiring sermon by the Rev. Dr. Fredrick J. Stanley, lately of Japan. His subject was, "God's Footprints in the Occident and Orient." Monday evening Dr. Stanley gave his notable lecture on "The Marvelous Treaty of Peace between China and Japan," in the same church.

HOUGHS NECK.

Johnson Bros. are building a new house at Rock Island.

John J. Day is building a new house on Sea street near Peterson's fish market.

Constables,—Peleg Brondson, Edward A. Houghton, Maurice Pierce, Timothy McDermott, Peter McIntyre, John Donahue, John E. Shields, John H. Tucker, J. W. Thompson, Stephen A. Meagher, Jr., Elbridge Blackman, Edwin L. Crossman.

The A. P. A. had a full ticket in the field for selectmen, auditor and school committee, but it did not go.

Musical.

One of the pleasantest social functions of the season at Wollaston was the musicale which was given by Miss Olney at her home on Grand View avenue on Tuesday evening. It brought together a most congenial company of musicians and lovers of good music.

Some of the best soloists in Wollaston took part. Mrs. Frank H. Sprague gave in most excellent taste "Thou Ring upon my Finger," from Schumann, and also "Good bye sweet day" by Vanner; Mr. Edward E. Bullock sang a magnificent tenor solo; Mrs. Amos Towle Leavitt played effectively a piano selection from Nevin as well as one of Helmund's minuets; Miss Bjorkman, the well-known violinist, gave a brilliant Romanze; Miss Caroline Raymond Lord rendered with skill a solo upon the piano; and Miss Olney, piano, Miss Edith Olney, violin, and Miss Bjorkman, violin, rendered with equisite finish a symphony.

After the music chocolate was poured.

QUINCY POINT.

A change has been made in the hours of the preaching service at the Quincy Point church. It will be held at 2 30 P. M instead of in the morning.

A horse attached to Wrisley's grocery wagon became frightened on Washington street, Wednesday, and ran toward the Centre. When opposite the residence of T. F. Drake the team collided with a post, breaking the shafts, whiffletree and cross bar. Mr Drake captured the horse before he did any further damage.

An opportunity will be given next Wednesday evening to hear Mrs. Livermore, the renowned lecturer, in this city at the Quincy Point church. With "Wendell Phillips" as her subject. It will be a treat that should not be missed.

First Church.

Rev. Dr. Young with prophetic vision preached from "the Kingdom of God is at hand," Sunday morning last. The fact that arbitration can now take the place of wars, and all the signs of this closing century show a better condition approaching the ideal.

At vesper service in the afternoon, he dwelt upon the perfect, peaceful imagery in the psalm, "The Lord is my Shepherd." His musical voice lent added melody to the sentences, as he took each verse in the psalm and brought its full meaning to the small number who braved the weather.

Couches.

A home isn't complete today without a couch, and it's only the possession and actual using that proves their worth. Times have been, and not so long ago, that a couch was considered a most expensive luxury. Today things have changed, and just how we have helped to bring this about will be shown when you see our attractive, serviceable, easy-to-lie-on couches that we are selling at $8, $10 and $12. Then there's the kind that sends you to dream land almost as soon as you touch them

There's positive comfort in a Couch, more so than any other piece of furniture we know of. Own a couch by all means. Life is worth living at all times, but it's worth twice the living if you own one of our couches.

Young Men's Christian Asso.

Rev. P. S. MacGregor, a Scotch Evangelist, will speak Sunday at 4 o'clock. His subject will be "Refuges of Lies Swept Away." Mr. Sidelinger will conduct the song service.

The annual Junior Conference will be held March 27 and 28, at Watertown.

The first of a series of games of chess was played Wednesday evening in the Association parlors. There were eight entries including the crack players of the city. The tournament will continue every Wednesday evening.

Saturday will be a genuine gala day at the Association. First will come the boys' meeting at 9 30, followed by the gymnastic class at 10 30. At this time the gallery will be reserved for the parents. At 3 o'clock the Intermediates will play basket ball, after which they will have a pop corn picnic. In the evening there will be another basket ball game by the young men, followed by steamed clams. Members will be admitted free to the gymnaseum and the clam supper, but others will be charged an admission of 10 cents. Boys will not be admitted, except where accompanied by parents.

One of the most interesting auxiliary meetings ever held in Quincy was that of last Monday. Rev. Preston Gurney gave an interesting talk on "Helpers." Following this came reports from the members who had attended the recent conference at Whitman. Many new ideas were suggested by which the auxiliary could increase its usefulness, such as the appointment of a committee on visitation of sick, a reception to mothers, plans for securing money for furniture, visitation of other auxiliaries, etc. The auxiliary was never in a more prosperous condition than at present.

Several of the expert chess players of the city will open a Chess Tournament. These gentlemen have kindly consented to play at the Y. M. C. A rooms at the request of the Association managers, so that all lovers of the game and all who desire to get pointers may feel free to drop in. It is hoped that a large and enthusiastic club may be organized. Everyone will be welcome tonight.

Electric Light Plant.

The Committee on Manufactures of the Legislature gave a hearing at the State House Friday on the bill to enable the city of Quincy to establish its own electric lighting plant for municipal purposes, without first purchasing the plant of the existing company.

Those present at the hearing were Mayor Adams, President Bryant of the City Council. Henry M. Faxon, Representatives Thompson and Newcomb, John R. Graham, Hon. John F. Merrill, C. F. Austin, City Solicitor Blackmur and John Cashman.

Mayor Adams, in opening for the city, asked for a continuance as there were several other petitions of similiar character to be heard before the same committee. This request was refused as the committee thought this an independent matter

Mayor Adams and President Bryant of the City Council spoke in favor, and they were cross questioned at length by E. W. Burdett, counsel of the Quincy Electric Light Co.

Henry M. Faxon of the company spoke against the petition and the hearing closed.

Money Bag Party.

The "Money Bag Party" held Monday night at the parish house of Christ's church was a decided success. The chapel was tastefully decorated and in one corner of the main room, Mrs. Ricker, Miss Wilkins and Miss Brewer sold old fashioned candy and pop-corn.

During the evening a musical programme was rendered as follows:

Chorus, "Banks of Allan Water."

Solo, "Comin' Thro' the Rye," Miss Hastings.

Duet, "Heart and Home," Masters Warren Mitchell and Charlie Taylor.

Solo, Mr. Hersey.

Duet, "Larboard Watch," Mr. Bates and Mr. Hersey.

Solo, "The Bailiff's Daughter of Islington," Miss Hastings.

"John Peel," by Mr. Hersey and chorus.

Solo, "My Pretty Jane," Mr. Bates.

Chorus, "Duncan Gray."

During the intermission old fashioned cake, doughnuts, gingerbread and cookies with tea and coffee were for sale. Miss Flint and Mrs. Brewer presided at the teatable while the coffee and cake were served by the young ladies of the guilds, and all were quaintly gowned in dresses of our grandmother's day with their hair done high and powdered. There were many striking costumes and we hope our grandmothers looked as pretty as the ladies did on this occasion.

The affair was under the management of Miss Perkins, Miss Wild, Mrs. C. T. Hardwick and Miss Howe, and praises are due these ladies for a very enjoyable time.

Q. F. R. A. Annual.

For the Patriot.

Letter from the State House.

BOSTON, Feb. 19, 1896.

Every broad act of legislation is sure to be the basis of further legislation, either in extension or in modification of the principle first laid down, or to provide for its consequences. Among the plenty of illustrations which might be cited are the metropolitan water act of last year and the Boston subway act. Already the towns and people in the affected metropolitan district are coming to the legislature for compensation for losses. The manufacturers who lose their property want to have financial satisfaction. The town of Holden, which was not taken into the account at all, wants to be recompensed for the loss it suffers in the practical obliteration of its neighboring town of West Boylston, and so it goes. It seems that Boston has planted a thrifty crop of lawsuits, as well as a water plant, in taking this large area. So, in the case of the subway, rival interests are already petitioning for the use of it. One of the propositions is that every company which runs street cars within ten miles of the state house shall have the right to enter the subway. Another is that Boston shall not forbid any company to use the subway upon equal terms with another and still other ideas are proposed. When the subway is ready for use, then the effort to monopolize it will doubtless break out afresh and the virtue of the legislature will be put to a severe test.

The old effort of last year to permit fraternal beneficiary associations to employ paid agents has been defeated in the house. It was argued that if the employment of such agents were permitted the weak lodges would canvass for new members and would become strong. In reply, it was urged that nothing would suit the old line companies better than this, and one of their representatives was quoted as saying that this bill would be their first start upon a toboggan slide and that they would soon come to an end if they resorted to this way of doing business. The debate brought out the fact that a large proportion of the members in the fraternals themselves do not want permission to employ agents, but prefer to rely wholly upon their fraternal principle. The house was almost unanimous against the bill.

The extension of the civil service reform idea is seen in the bill reported from the judiciary committee to appropriate $12,000 for the extension of the principle in the labor service of cities. In spite of the opposition of the politicians to the principle of civil service reform, it continues to gain power and it proves its worth by its results. It is to be observed, in connection with the subject, that Mr. T. F. Keenan of Boston has put in a bill to exempt from the civil service act all honorably discharged Union veterans and all who have received a medal of honor from Congress. Though the hearts of the people are warm for the veterans, yet the principle of an honest and efficient civil service has come to stay.

The house finished the biennial amendment on Tuesday and at the final vote every member was on record but two. The final vote was 176 yeas and 49 nays and six pairs. The resolves were divided so that two roll calls were taken on them. One was on the amendment relating to state officers and the other was on the election of members of the legislature. With one or two exceptions the vote was the same on each question and no member changed sides. There were eight Democrats who voted for the amendment and seven Republicans who voted against it. Otherwise the vote was on party lines. Great difference of opinion exists regarding the final fate of the amendment.

Signs increase that there will be one of the biggest contests over taxation which has ever been seen in the legislature. The "merchants' municipal committee of Boston," which is the same as Mayor Quincy's cabinet, consisting of Republicans and Democrats, has presented petitions for a constitutional amendment and for changes in the tax laws which the movers in the Anti-Double Taxation League regard as going far beyond their own propositions in their radical nature. It is proposed to raise the taxes for local expenses from taxes on real estate, corporation franchises and upon collateral legacies and successions. There will be, henceforth, if the legislation passes a great exemption of personal property which is taxed. The passage of these measures is urged in the interest of the prosperity of the state, while the opposition of the farming element seems to be aroused more than ever. The first sign of the feeling occurred in the house on Wednesday afternoon over a mere question of committee reference. The clash between the two sides was sharp, but the opponents of the municipal committee won by a large majority. It is said that the arts of the wealthy are being used already upon the legislature to carry the bills.

It looks at this time in the year as if the legislature would have its hands full of important business till well into the summer and as if it would be impossible for the members to finish in time for any of them to go to the national Republican convention, either as delegates or alternates. This taxation issue is one which will occupy much time of the legislature. It is one of the most important questions of the sessions. It has been fought over for years without any evident gain to either side. It demands the closest consideration which the ablest talent in both branches can give it. There is the redistricting of the state for councillors and senators and the reapportionment for representatives which will occupy considerable time. The woman suffrage fight looms up in the distance with heavy fortifications in the shape of thousands of names of petitioners from all parts of the state. The amount of business is evidently going to exceed that of any previous year, for it equals the record already and the branches continue to suspend the rules to admit new matter.

Anything which touches the doctors is always sure of a large audience at the state house. So it is not at all strange that the old hall of the house has been filled with remonstrants against the desire of the state board of registration in medicine that it may have more power. The board wants to enforce the spirit of the law more thoroughly and of course those who are held down by the regulations want to be as free from restrictions as possible. The hearing recalled the former hearings when hundreds of doctors were working to prevent the adoption of the registration law at all. The contest against state regulation is always animated on the part of the interested classes, but the good of the public wins in the long run. There has just been reported a bill for the establishment of a new state board of chiropody to keep out swindlers and frauds in this line of business and to prevent its being used as a cover for gross immorality, as it has been to the injury of honest practitioners. Of course the rascals will try to defeat the bill but the petitioners made out a plausible case.

RULE.

IS IT A SUSTAINER?

How much manual labor do you think you do in a day? A post-man averages about 353 foot-tons. An ordinary laborer 350 tons. A very hard day's work would be 400 tons. A clerk or bookkeeper may fall as low as from 15 to 20 tons. In Weston's recent walk to Albany, 150 miles, in 60 hours, we calculate his work was no less than 1005 foot-tons, and his food consisted entirely of

H-O

Oatmeal. As an ideal sustainer, H-O meets every demand.

Quincy Historical Society.

The Quincy Historical society held an important meeting Saturday afternoon at its rooms in the Adams building, Quincy. Fifteen new members were admitted and Mr. Edwin W. Marsh was appointed to write a memoir of George L. Gill.

The following letter from Hon. Charles Francis Adams to Librarian Spear was read:

Jan. 31, 1896.

My Dear Sir:

Referring to our conversation of two days since, I would say that it seems to me proper, as it would be interesting, that some simple monument such as you suggest, in memory of Abigail Adams, should be placed on top of Paynes hill.

A cairn of rough stone, like that erected by Mrs. Titus to commemorate the landing of Miles Standish at Squantum, would best answer the purpose. It should also contain a tablet with a brief inscription. This portion of the monument I shall be happy to supply as my contribution. The monument would be interesting, as it would indicate the spot from which Mrs. Adams and her young son, John Quincy, then a boy of less than eight, watched the smoke and listened to the guns of the battle of Bunker Hill on the 17th of June, 1775. You will find a reference to it in my "Three Episodes of Massachusetts History."

The incident was one which made impression on the mind of J. Q. Adams, and to it he subsequently made frequent and feeling reference.

A proper memorial of that incident would, therefore, hardly be otherwise than interesting.

Believe me, etc.,
CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.
W. G. SPEAR, ESQ.

The society voted to build the cairn, the date to be decided upon later.

Abigail Adams was the wife of John Adams, the second president of the United States. She was the second of three daughters of Rev. William Smith, the settled minister for more than 40 years of the Congregational church at Weymouth. She was born in Weymouth Nov. 11, 1744, O. S. The advantages of acquiring an education during that period were few and owing to her delicate health she did not enjoy those few opportunities, and the knowledge gained by her was rather the result of the society into which she was thrown than of any elaborate instruction.

October 25, 1764, then nearing her twentieth year she married John Adams and for the ten years following this union she passed a quiet and happy life, having her residence in Boston or Braintree.

During the second ten years of her married life she was left much alone with her children, her husband being absent upon public duties. In June, 1784, she sailed for London to join her husband, then the American Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and she was the first representative of her sex from the United States at the Court of Great Britain.

At the expiration of President Adams term of office she returned to Quincy (which had been set off from Braintree) and from 1801 to the day of her death October 28, 1818 she remained uninterrupted in Quincy, retaining her faculties to the last.

At the conclusion of the meeting, the society adjourned to the First church chapel, to listen to a paper by Mr. Edward H. Dewson, entitled "The history of Hancock street and the Training Field, past and present, covering a period of 257 years."

Hon. J. White Belcher of Randolph presided at the chapel gathering and introduced Mr. Dewson who occupied nearly one and one-half hours in the reading. It was a very interesting paper and was listened to with interest by the large number present. It will be published in the PATRIOT from week to week.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

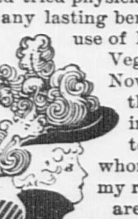

There is a misiake in your report of the death of Benjamin A. Brooks on Friday evening, the 7th inst. He had only left the house a short time before, having been choring around all day, and as customary with him had been to the news store to hear the news and taking a short cut home on the track, caught his foot in a frog which threw him down, and before he could recover himself the train ran over him. Your report would make it appear that he was asleep on the track, and that he had been to Boston which is incorrect. He had been in my company at home all day and during the evening until just before the accident.

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:

"I cannot begin to tell you what your remedies have done for me. I suffered for years with falling and neuralgia of the womb, kidney trouble and leucorrhœa in its worst form. There were times that I could not stand, was sick all over and in despair. I had not known a real well day for 15 years. I knew I must do something at once. I had tried physicians without receiving any lasting benefit. I began the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Now, I have used 9 bottles; my weight has increased 25 lbs. I tell every one to whom and what I owe my recovery, and there are 15 of my friends taking the Compound after seeing what it has done for me. Oh, if I had known of it sooner, and saved all these years of misery. I can recommend it to every woman."—KATE YODER, 408 W. 9th St., Cincinnati, O.

Should advice be required, write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., who has the utter confidence of all intelligent American women. She will promptly tell what to do, free of charge. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is easily obtained at any druggist's, will restore any ailing woman to her normal condition quickly and permanently.

Board of Trade.

The Quincy Board of Trade is now in good working order and has literally got down to work. At the monthly meeting Tuesday evening, in the Durgin & Merrill block, the committee on standing committees reported the following list which was adopted:

Ways and Means,—R. F. Claflin, Roger H. Wilde, Delcevare King, H. M. Federhen, and Marshall P. Wright.

Railroads and Transporation,—John R. Graham, Luther S. Anderson and John A. Duggan.

Municipal Affairs,—S O. Moxon, Lester M. Pratt, Russell A. Sears, William A. Hodges and James H. Elcock.

Manufacturing and Mercantile Affairs,—John F. Merrill, Henry L. Kincaide, Fred B. Rice, Walter T. Babcock, Frank F. Crane, William T. Shea and Charles M. Bryant.

New Enterprises. — Clarence Burgin, Eben W. Sheppard, John Swithin, Henry O. Fairbanks, and George H. Field.

Taxation and Insurance, — Charles A. Howland, Henry M. Faxon and George F. Pinkham.

Highways,—H. T. Whitman, John Cashman, Andrew Milne, George G. Saville and Theodore Parker.

Legislation,—James Thompson, Charles H. Porter and W. G. Cortbell.

The books of the corporation were opened for signatures and the following became members by signing the bylaws and paying dues of $5 for 1896:

Charles F. Adams, 2d,
John R. Graham,
Clarence Burgin,
Rupert F. Claflin,
John Swithin,
Frederick L. Jones,
James H. Elcock,
Herbert T. Whitman,
Henry McGrath,
John F. Merrill,
Theophilus King,
Andrew Milne,
James F. Burke,
Henry L. Kincaide,
George H. Brown,
Frank F. Prescott,
Frank S. Patch,
Stephen O. Moxon,
James Thompson,
George H. Field,
John F. Welch,
Frank F. Crane.

Six other books, one for each ward of the city, were prepared for applications for membership and may be found at the following places:

Ward One, National Granite Bank.

Ward Two, office of Quincy & Boston Street Railway.

Ward Three, McGrath Bros.

Ward Four, S. B. Little's store.

Ward Five, Post Office.

Ward Six, Thomas Gurney's store.

President Adams gave notice that an outside shoe firm had already written concerning location. Referred to Committee on New Enterprises.

Theophilus King understood that there was a petition in the City Council for a location for a freight railroad among the quarries on the North Common. He believed this a measure in which the Board of Trade should be interested. Others took a similar view, and it was referred to the Committee on Railroads and Transportation to report next week at a special meeting of the directors.

Ex-Senator Merrill thought the proposed parkway was another measure in which the Board of Trade should be interested, and it was referred to the Committee on Legislative Matters.

There were also informal talks as to the kind of industries to be encouraged, duties of the Committee on Municipal Affairs, and the best ways to obtain members.

A special meeting of the directors will be held next Thursday, Feb. 27.

District Court, Quincy.

Daniel J. O'Connell was fined $7 for drunkennes at Quincy.

John Laury, Jr., was fined $7 for assault on Karl Gustaf Winquist.

Coleman McDermott and Mrs. Dolly Lynch were arraigned for committing adultery at Wollaston and were held in $700 each for the grand jury.

Annie Vance was arraigned for fornication with Coleman McDermott at Wollaston and sentenced to two months in the House of Correction.

John Sheahan, Jr., was arraigned for drunkenness at Quincy. Case continued one month.

James Stone was sent to the State Farm at Bridgewater for 8 months for being a tramp at Milton.

Herman Hermansen, Harry Karr, John Jacobsen, Thomas Jacobsen and Hack Nine were fined $5 each for drunkenness at Quincy.

Michael Conley was fined $5 for drunkenness at Quincy.

Depot Fire.

The train shed of the Old Colony depot Boston was partly destroyed by fire on Monday.

The fire started in the freight department or office occupied by the New York and Boston Despatch Express company, and originated from a stove upset. The train shed, it will be remembered, was in two parts—the older near the depot proper and the new further out. The new shed was destroyed and also the roof of the old and a few cars were burned or damaged.

All outward trains were discontinued for two hours and the first of the afternoon the South Boston station was used as a terminus for both outward and inward trains.

News of the Boston fire and a mixed false alarm in Quincy, caused considerable excitement in this city. The central fire station apparatus run to Atlantic for nothing. With the bad travelling and bitter cold it was a hardship on firemen and horses. But our firemen take no chances and are to be commended for responding at all times and not allowing the doubt to rest on the wrong side.

Boston is to have a "horse show" in April. There will soon be more rivalry than ever between Boston and New York, as Boston ladies are having some stunning gowns made for the show and are prepared to outshine their New York sisters.

Parkway Hearing.

A parkway or boulevard from Boston through Quincy along the shore front to the Blue Hills Reservations seems almost an assured fact. Seldom has this city pleaded a cause so ably at the State House, and it is a pleasure to note the hearty cooperation of Boston in the movement.

Among those present were: Mayor Adams, President Bryant, Councilmen Sprague, Rice Parker, Field and Nickerson, William N. Eaton, John R Graham, Herbert T. Whitman, Henry M. Faxon, S O. Moxon, Henry W. Reed, J. Frank Faxon, W. W. Adams, R J. Tisdale, Mr. and Mrs. Titus, John F. Merrill, W. A. Hodges, John A. Duggan, Andrew Milne, Rev. D. M. Wilson, George H. Brown, John C. Randall, Dr. J. A Gordon, Dr. J. H. Gilbert, E H. Dewson, Representatives Thompson, Newcomb and Flint, John Galvin and representatives of the PATRIOT.

The arguments were reported at length in Tuesday's DAILY LEDGER. Those to speak in favor were Mayor Adams and Herbert T. Whitman of this city, Charles Elliot a former civil engineer of the Metropolitan Park Commission, Mayor Quincy of Boston, ex-Mayor Hodges of Quincy, City Solicitor Bailey of Boston, Sigourney Butler, Esq., and others.

City Solicitor Barnard of Somerville opposed on general principals claiming his city was getting nothing in the park line. Representative Manchester of Winchester also opposed as a bad precedent.

The hearing was completed.

Route of Parkway.

As the route of the proposed parkway is not generally known or understood by the citizens of Quincy, and as the route has been somewhat changed from the original plan, the following description of the route as now proposed according to the map hung in City Hall may be read with interest.

Starting from Neponset bridge it follows Hancock street to Atlantic street crossing the railroad by the existing overhead bridge, which, however, will have to be widened. It then turns to the east and follows the shore to Squantum street, which it follows to Squantum Head.

Starting again from where the Parkway first intersects with Squantum street it follows the shore along Atlantic beach, Norfolk Downs and Wollaston Park to the Sailors' Home. It then turns and crosses the marsh over the dike at Pine island, going in the rear of Pine island, crossing a branch of Black's creek, and enters Merry Mount park.

Passing through the park it follows the course of Furnace brook to Hancock street, thence along Hancock street to Bridge street, then follows Bridge street, which it is proposed to widen and straighten, to Adams street, which it follows to the residence of Hon. William B. Rice.

Leaving Adams street it turns to the right and follows generally the course of Furnace brook until it again strikes Adam's street, to the left of Eaton's ice pond. It then follows closely the course of Furnace brook to West Quincy, crossing Reardon street.

After crossing Reardon street, it leaves Furnace brook and crosses Cross and Copeland streets passing in front of the Willard school to Miller street which it crosses and follows in this direction until it again strikes Furnace brook which it follows to Willard street, thence to the Blue Hills Reservation.

It is proposed to change the course of Furnace brook, beginning at Reardon street so that it will follow the Parkway.

New England Seashore.

The winter cruise of the Quincy Yacht club was enjoyed by a large number on Thursday evening. Mr. Henry G. Peabody of Boston was at the helm and although his guests were seated in Hancock hall they felt the thrill and pleasure of yachting along the New England shore. Beautiful views often finely colored were given of the picturesque shore, interspersed with yachts of National and local renown, including the America, Puritan, Mayflower, Volunteer, Vigilant, Defender, Valkyrie, Gossoon, Fortuna and Jubilee, also the Mab, Gleaner, Beatrice, Moondyne and others. A view of the Q. Y. C. clubhouse, Commodore Pettengill and Measurer Harrison were shown, but the one to provoke the most merriment was a snap shot of ex-Commodore Faxon about to board a yacht. Many of the scenes were familiar to yachtsmen, and others hope soon that they may take the cruise in reality.

Materials Come High!

—You've no idea how expensive dental materials are. Bought in small quantities they're specially so—like coal by the basket. It's no wonder dentists of limited practice charge big prices—they have to to live. That's all right—they'll always have plenty of work at those prices.

But we prefer to do do differently—because we can afford to. Our's is a very extensive practice—16 large offices in leading cities—requiring wholesale purchase of supplies. We guarantee our materials the best made, but we use a vast amount and command both cash and quantity discounts.

We spoke in last ad. of our work being divided among specialists in each department as one reason for our low prices—this buying to advantage is another reason.

OUR MOTIVE IN QUOTING THESE EXTRAORDINARY LOW PRICES—Our place of business, 78 Beach street, opposite U. S. Hotel is one of the nearest stores to the Albany, Old Colony and N. Y. & N. E. Depots, rendering it the most convenient place for those who travel on these roads to make purchases.

We hope the same inducement that has obtained for us the largest hotel and restaurant trade in the city, namely, low prices and a true representation of our goods to the buyer, will have the same favorable results—a larger and increasing trade—with the patrons of these roads.

We do not pay freight or express charges on goods going out of town sold at these prices.

Today.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

Be swift to love your own, dears,
Your own who heed you so;
Say to the speeding hour, dears,
"I will not let thee go Except thou give a blessing;"
Force it to bide and stay.
Love has no sure tomorrow,
It only has today.

Oh, hasten to be kind, dears,
Before the time shall come
When you are left behind, dears,
In an all-lonely home;
Before in late contrition
Vainly you weep and pray.
Love has no sure tomorrow,
It only has today.

Swifter than sun and shade, dears,
Move the fleet wings of pain;
The chance we have today, dears,
May never come again.
Joy is a fickle rover,
He brooketh no delay.
Love hath no sure tomorrow,
It only has today.

Too late to plead or grieve, dears,
Too late to kiss or sigh,
When death has laid his seal, dears,
On the cold lip and eye,
Too late our gifts to lavish
Upon the burial clay;
Love has no sure tomorrow,
It only has today.

Notes and Comments.

—This year the city of Brockton will be called upon to pay $63,280 on the principal of outstanding loans and $48,818 40 for interest on bonds. This will make $112,098.40 that will have to be raised this year before the department appropriations are considered at all.

—February is doing a good deal of blowing. It can afford to, says the Mansfield News, being the birth month of two such famous men as Washington and Lincoln.

—Waltham is having a hot discussion over the erection of a new high school building to cost $37,000. If Waltham can build a new high school for $37,000 it better build it and say nothing. Quincy would be glad if it could build its two grammar school-houses at the same rate.

—The first electric locomotive ever built to take the place of a steam one has just been shipped from the Baldwin works in Philadelphia. This engine is expected to pull an average freight train at the rate of 80 miles an hour, and a passenger train at a far higher rate of speed.

—Boston maintains her supremacy as a brain centre. Mrs. Cleveland was obliged to send here to obtain a governess for the White House babies.

—A young woman in bloomers astride of a horse is one of the daily sensations in Boston. It is dollars to doughnuts, says the Mansfield News, she will receive a proposition from the Brockton fair management to appear on the society's track next fall.

—The first certificate of title under the Torrens law has been issued in Chicago. How long will it be before the same thing can be said in Massachusetts?

—It is all right, sometimes, to say a man is homely enough to stop a train. He usually is, in the estimation of the woman whose train he steps on.—Mansfield News.

The divorce industry in North Dakota is a paying business. Fargo has the most of it, and it is estimated that the presence of the divorce colony means from $3,000 to $5,000 per month for the hotel men of the city. It also means from $5,000 to $10,000 for the local attorneys.

—Chicago is going to try to raise $10,000 for a bronze statute, on the lake front, of Dr. George F. Root, the composer who wrote "There's music in the air," "Rally round the flag, boys," and "Tramp, tramp, tramp the boys are marching"

—Lime water is good for chilblains. Use strong and hot. A saturated solution of alum in water, used hot, is also a curative.

—Dr. Cyrus Edson has made public the secret of his consumption cure, which he now calls aseptolin. In 228 cases treated with it in New York, improvement was noted in all but four and a cure is expected in at least half of the whole number. It looks as if aseptolin would conquer consumption as antitoxin has overcome diphtheria.—Somerville Journal.

—The total salmon pack of the Pacific coast during last year for the full spring and fall seasons, was 2,034,877 cases. Of this amount 627,000 cases were packed on the Columbia River, 637,000 cases in Alaska, and 512,877 cases in British Columbia.

—The War Department has adopted a policy of privacy in regard to the fortifications on our sea coast, and visits to Fort Warren in Boston harbor, and other points of interest are to be prohibited. No other country has ever made it so easy for foreigners to obtain a knowledge of its defences as it has been in the United States. At last a change of policy is noted, and the work on the coast defences will proceed without the supervision or inspection of the agents of power that may some day in the future feel called upon to assail them.

—Senator Cook, of the Second Worcester district, who is serving his first term in the Senate, is chairman of the Committee on Prisons. "It has been the custom heretofore," says the Boston Traveler, "for this committee to spend the state's money frequently for cigars during their investigation of the penal institutions. This year Senator Cook notified the committeemen that he should approve no bills for fragrant Havanas." Senator Cook deserves the thanks of the state. It is time that this petty pilfering by committees was stopped.—Gardner Journal.

—The Pawtucket Gazette says "the difference between a bond issue by public subscription and a bond issue by private deal is about $7,000,000 in Uncle Sam's favor."

—In 1712 there were 60 students in Harvard College in four classes, under the instruction of two professors. Now the catalogue gives the names of 3600 students and 366 professors. The freshman class numbers 462, this year, 277 of which belong to Massachusetts.

—In 1894 the percentage of deaths from diphtheria in Boston was 0.27. In 1895, during only half of which antitoxin was used, the percentage was less than 0.15.

—The Pawtucket Gazette says with much truth that "science is going too fast when a man cannot think another is a liar without getting knocked down for it. The world doesn't stand in need of apparatus showing people's thoughts. Why, the police would have to be quadrupled, and then the killing couldn't be stopped. We don't want to read people's unspoken and unwritten thoughts, nor do we wish our own read.

—One of the encouraging signs of the times is the effort being made in many large cities and towns to place the best books of the public libraries in close connection with the scholars in the public schools. It is the best method of creating a relish for good solid reading, and killing off a desire to read the sickening trash found at the news stands. It's a good thing, push it along.—West Worcester Chronicle.

—The population of Washington, "the city of magnificent distances," was estimated in the beginning of last year to have a population of 280,000. It is laid out over 69 1-4 square miles.

—Mr. J. Malcolm Forbes of Milton made his first address to the House, the other day. He is the richest man in the House of course, and one of the most unassuming. He sits in the third division in the second row from the front, and is quite Democratic in his ways. He had only a few words to say, and the House gave him its undivided attention.—Stoughton Record.

—A Kansas Populist is at work on a new scheme to increase the sum of human happiness. He is trying to cross the milk weed and the strawberry, so that people may raise strawberries and cream together.—New York Tribune.

—A bill has been introduced into the Massachusetts senate to compel all dime museum proprietors and managers of continuous show houses to pay $1000 annual license for the amusement privilege, to the city or town where they are located, and also compelling all other places of amusement to pay a license of from $200 to $500

—A lamp expert recommends cheese cloth for wiping the lamps and adds: Never use scissors to trim a wick. A visiting card is one of the best trimmers.

—The Roxbury Gazette says that "Tom Reed doesn't have to be cured by a patent medicine in order to get his picture in the papers."

—If the Boston liquor licenses were to be auctioned, the Roxbury Gazette has an idea that Henry H. Faxon of Quincy would bankrupt himself in an endeavor to purchase every one of them.

—The state writing ink which must be used on all legal documents is said to be pretty hard on pens, and no laundry can remove it from the clothing it happens to touch.

—Mr. Edison passed his forty-ninth birthday last week, but he was too busy to stop and celebrate. What a wonderful amount he has accomplished for the world.

—The Massachusetts Street Railway Association asks the legislature to allow saving banks and insurance companies to invest in the bonds of any street railway organized under the laws of Massachusetts.

—A committee of the British association has found that the Hawaiian islands can boast of a very respectable animal world of its own. All the land and fresh water shells are peculiar to the locality, while 57 of the 78 species of birds and 700 of the 1000 species of insects do not exist in any other portion of the globe.

—A reporter of the Enterprise was in conversation with a man the other day who had been absent from Brockton for 26 years. He said that when he left he sold a piece of real estate for $500, and thought he did well. Just to get a clear idea of the advance in land values, he went and got a price on the same property while there, and the figure given was $22,500. That gave him an impressive idea of just how the place has advanced.

—At a meeting before the committee on taxation at the State House, recently, it was stated that Boston has $16,000,000 of church property exempt from taxation; Worcester, $2,000,000; Newton, $1,069,000; Springfield, $1,500,000; Lynn, $1,065,000. and Cambridge, $1,285,000.

—The legislature should find it in its way to pass the bill repealing laws holding cities and towns liable for injuries caused by parties falling on ice and snow. They are nine times out of ten unjust suits, the injuries are caused through lack of due care and it often happens that their prevention could only be accomplished at a ruinous expense to tax payers.—Waltham Free Press.

—The duration of the Tennessee Centennial and International Exposition has been extended from three months to six months, and the time for holding the big fair has been changed from the fall of 1896 to the spring, summer and fall of 1897. This change was decided upon for the same reasons that caused the postponement of the Chicago World's Fair from 1892 to 1893—the development of the enterprise to such dimensions that it was impossible to get the Exposition ready at the time originally named.

—The editor of the Stoughton Record, who knows what he is talking about, says, "the new clerk of the House, Mr. Sleeper, is getting along finely, and knocking into "a cocked hat" all predictions that a change of clerks would inextricably complicate and amazingly delay public business."

—There are only twenty-four towns in the Commonwealth not supplied with free public libraries. Can any other state in the Union beat this?

—A little ten-year-old girl stood near an uptown hotel in Washington the other day soliciting alms. In her hand she had a badly soiled note, which she offered to each passer-by, but most of them were too busy to read it, and contented themselves with dropping a small coin in her outstretched palm. Finally a benevolent old gentleman took the note and read it. His hand was withdrawn from his pocket, and he simply said: "Very remarkable," and passed on. The note read: "To the Charitable: The bearer is a widow with four small children to support and is very destitute. A few cents may save her from starvation."

Anecdotes.

"Do you believe that George Washington was refused by five women before he finally succeeded in getting married?"

"Certainly. Why not? Very few women would care to be known as the Mother of their Country."

Intending Purchaser: "Is this an old horse?"

Horse Trader: "I should say not. Who did you think was running this stable anyway, George Washington?"—Drake's Magazine.

Just Awakened.—Mrs. Hiram Daly—"Have you any reason for not being up, Bridget?"

The New Cook—"Phaix, I'm not a slape-walker, mum; thot's the rayson!"—Puck

"Jennie," said little Mabel to her big sister at breakfast, "did you tell papa?"

"Tell papa what?" asked Jennie.

"Why, you told Mr. Buster last night if he did it again you'd tell papa—and he did it again. I sore him!"

And then papa looked at Jennie over his glasses.

Jiggs—"Did you enjoy yourself at Whistler's wedding?"

Jaggs—"Well, partly; but I fear I made a sad mistake."

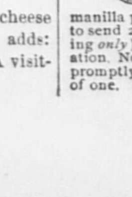

Jiggs—"How so?"

Jaggs—"Why, you see I went there after I had been somewhere else, and when I went up to congratulate Whistler I wished him many happy returns."

The skeleton in many a household is the peculiar weakness of the wife and mother, or of the wife who ought to be a mother and is not. Happiness is destroyed by the presence of the secret sickness that may lurk like a grinning death among the most luxurious homes. The most terrible thing about this condition of affairs is that it is entirely needless. There is no reason in the world why every woman in the world should not be strong and healthful and capable of fulfilling her whole duty as a wife and mother. Many women go on month after month, and year after year, becoming weaker and weaker, because of a very natural hesitancy they feel in consulting a physician. They know that if they go to a doctor for treatment, the first thing he will insist on will be "examination" and "local treatment." This must of course be distasteful to every modest woman. They are generally as unnecessary as they are abhorrent. Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures positively, perfectly, permanently, all varieties of "female weakness" and disease. It is designed to do this one thing, and it does it. It is the only medicine now before the public for woman's peculiar ailments, adapted to her delicate organization by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in these maladies. It cannot do harm in any condition of the system. Its sales exceed the combined sales of all other medicines for women

Every woman will be healthier and happier for following the friendly, practical counsel contained in Dr. Pierce's great universal doctor book: "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." It is the most comprehensive medical work in one volume in the English language. It contains 1008 pages, fully illustrated. 680,000 copies have been sold at $1.50 each bound in cloth. The profits are now used in printing half-a-million free copies bound in strong manilla paper covers. To get one you have only to send 21 one-cent stamps (to pay cost of mailing only), to World's Dispensary Medical Association, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y. Send promptly before all are given away if in want of one. They are going off rapidly.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

All is not harmony with this year's Council on the proposed schoolhouses and it is possible that the much needed buildings will be further delayed. Certainly not much progress has yet been made, and there were dissension at the meeting Monday evening.

Councilmen Barker, Cleaves, Geary and Rinn were the absentees.

Communications.

The Mayor forwarded the petition of Henry Talbot for soldier's relief. To Committee on State Aid.

The Mayor forwarded the following appointments which were confirmed:

Weighers of Coal,—Herbert D. Adams, William W. Cushing, E. Frank Mitchell, George P. Mead, Frank S. Patch, Eben W. Sheppard, Frank W. Crane and George B. Pray.

Measurers of Grain,—Frank W. Crane and Charles H. Hersey.

Pound Keeper,—Franklin Jacobs.

Councilman Lamb presented a petition of West Quincy citizens asking for an appropriation of $1,000 for the draining of Cross street between Crescent street and Reardon's field. To Committee on Streets.

Councilman Russell presented a petition dated Dec. 23, 1895, calling attention to the muddy condition of Centre and Columbia streets. To Executive Department.

Petitions were received from Paul Revere Post, G. A. R., for license to use Hancock hall for entertainments and from J. F. Costello for license to run four bowling alleys. To Committee on Licenses.

The Quincy Quarry Railroad presented a petition for the approval of its plans for a location from South Quincy to the North Common. Laid on the table. Later Councilman Anderson offered an order for a public hearing, March 2, at 8 o'clock, which was adopted.

The N. E. Telephone and Telegraph Co. petitioned for a location of poles on Beale street, Newport, Old Colony and Standish avenues. To Committee on Streets.

Report of Committees.

The Committee on Claims, on petition of Ellen A. Murphy for refund of tax overpaid, reported an order returning to her $11 46. Adopted.

The Committee on Licenses on petition of F. A. Rogers of Arlington street for license to keep four horses, reported leave to withdraw, as such license must come from the Board of Health. Adopted.

The same committee reported order granting F. C. Merrill an innholder's license also a license for a billiard and pool room, and granting C. F. Veazie a job wagon license. Accepted and adopted.

The Committee on State Aid, on petition of James F. Moran, recommended he be paid $6 per week, dating from Feb. 1. Councilman Holt said he had investigated this case and found the petitioner had a wife and two children; he was out of work and unable to do any work. The report was adopted.

The Committee on Finance reported ought to pass on order authorizing the Treasurer to borrow $250,000 in anticipation of taxes. Under suspension of the rules the order was passed to be ordained.

The same committee reported ought to pass an order appropriating $500 to present the city's case for a boulevard before the Legislative committee. Under suspension of the rules the order was passed to be ordained.

The Committee on Printing reported, ought to pass, on order authorizing the printing of the City Book. Under suspension of the rules the order was passed to be ordained.

New Schoolhouses.

At this point President Bryant said he had a communication which had been sent to him, which he had neglected to read but would do so now.

The communication was from the Chairman of the School Committee notifying the Council that it had approved plans of S. O. Moxon for two school buildings.

This brought Councilman Sprague to his feet and he proceeded to score the School Board.

He said he hoped after last year's experience there would be no call for an undue amount of oratory on this question. This year, that there might be no mistake, he had written all those interested in the schoolhouses of last year and had arranged a meeting with the School Board to look at plans. All of the architects were represented at this joint meeting and plans were presented and examined. These were the plans to be decided upon by the School Board. Mr. Moxon presented his plans which called for 8 foot corridors and walls 12 inches thick. I asked him if he considered these dimensions sufficient and he replied that he did. Monday, Feb. 10, a meeting of the School Board was called to approve plans and at this meeting a new set of plans were presented by Mr. Moxon and were accepted. In these plans were features embodied in the plans of other architects. He presented an entirely new set of plans and they accepted them. If Mr. Moxon has a right to present new plans he hoped others would have an opportunity to present new plans. He believed it a wrong proceeding, and he hoped the School Board would be required to further consider plans.

Councilman Badger offered an order appropriating $75,000 for the grading and fencing of land owned by the city at the Rail and Norfolk Downs and for the erection thereon of two brick school buildings according to plans of S. O. Moxon.

Councilman Field moved the order be laid on the table until council had seen plans and know what we are doing. The order committed us to one set of plans.

Councilman Badger said it was essential that these buildings should be ready for occupancy at the opening of the fall term and we have no time to defer, as all of the the contractors say it will require six months to erect these buildings. It has been stated that Mr. Moxon had presented plans he had no right to present. If he could conceive ideas which others did not he had a right to present them, and if the city can gain anything we should accept the plans the School Board has accepted.

Councilman Field could find no authority of the School Board to get up specifications. Do they expect the council to vote away $75,000 without having any voice. They are doing something they have no authority to do. They are simply to approve the plans we present to them. He was not ready to commit himself.

Councilman Rice said if he understood it right this did not originate with the School Committee. At the first inspection of plans Mr. Moxon's were the best. The changing was not until after consulting with the Committee.

Councilman Anderson thought the simplest way to get rid of the matter was to refer it to the Committee on Public Buildings.

Councilman Field's motion to lay it on the table was lost and the order was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

Councilman Rice offered an order appropriating $4,000 to regrade Adams street, between Furnace brook and Whitwell street

[ONE THOUSAND MILES IN FLORIDA]

Then there is another relic of olden times to see at St. Augustine, in addition to those mentioned in the PATRIOT last week, Fort Marion, built over two hundred and fifty years ago. This of coquina rock also, but so hardened and blackened with age that it bore but slight resembleance to the pretty bits of shell formation brought home by us and labelled "Coquina."

Four days at St. Augustine, and how crowded full they were of pleasure. Just how to see everything, to accept every invitation, to eat and to sleep at proper and appointed times became a problem; and then there were the business meetings, two or three sessions daily. Business hardly seemed compatible with so much to attract outside, be the food for the mind never so good.

There was the tea at Old Fort Marion given us by the ladies of St. Augustine. The government military band stationed on top of the fort, and is it any wonder the tea had a finer flavor because drank with its music in our ears. There was other music too. Across the narrow strip of island and across the mirror-like surface of the river came the pound, pound of the breakers on the ocean beach. A beautiful hard beach where the boys often take their bicycles and ride for miles and miles.

Back from the fort, following the sea-walls all the way—we had barely time to make ourselves presentable for dinner and what followed—a ball, given us at our hotel that evening by the Military Company.

An oyster roast on the ocean beach for the next afternoon and a moonlight concert at the fort for the evening. A reception and hop at the San Marco; and the last night a dinner at the Ponce de Leon, with a dance and supper for us after it at the Alcazar. Truly after that supper those of us who spoke frankly declared that with the dinner and the supper we had, in the words of the old lady, "eaten our sufficiency full."

Saturday morning had come and it was our last at St. Augustine. Many of us felt more like staying right there, sure we would find nothing more beautiful and that nowhere would we be made to feel so much at home. The train stood waiting, however, the military band tried to make us feel gay, our new friends flitted about saying good-bye, until the last one was spoken and we drew slowly out from the station with the strains of "Au'd Lang Syne" in our ears.

And now to see what Palm Beach and southern Florida scenery is like; not that we were to travel the entire distance that day. First was a visit of two hours at Daytona, on the Indian river. Every available carriage was pressed into service and stood in readiness at the station. But, alas! we were too many for them, and it became simply a matter of "first come, first served." It was a pleasant walk however along the river front, and if we were obliged to give occasional advice to our carriage friends, to teach them in fact how to manage their steeds, it was none to their discredit. Following so closely the driving of the quills, the driving of horses except that one Pegasus would naturally cause some timidity.

Perhaps the pride of Daytona is its beautiful Ridgewood avenue, four miles long, broad and straight, bordered with live oaks. From these oaks hang yards and yards of the feathery gray moss, so delicate and graceful when swayed by the breeze; and then, with sunlight shimmering through, what light and shadows. To take this drive is indeed to enjoy it and to remember it.

From Daytona we went back a few miles to Ormond to spend Saturday night and Sunday morning; and here a change came over the spirit of our dreams. Our hotel was in a beautiful spot facing the Indian river. At the back was the ocean beach, hard and smooth, where twenty carriages could be driven abreast. About us were the palms, and tropical scenery, but—a cool breeze was blowing from the ocean—the sun had hidden his face completely—there was indeed a suspicion of rain in the air, and all of this in Florida, when up to this time not a shiver from any one of us. It didn't matter that great logs were blazing in the hugh fireplace as we turned in doors, that this same fireplace was hung with grey moss and shining green leaves, in such a manner as to have aroused at any other time our keen appreciation for the artistic, no—we were quite sure we did not care for Ormond, did not want to stay a half day, could not see why we stopped anyway, and all of this in one short half hour because—simply because the wind blew cold in Florida.

Yes, it was this alone that made us so critical, and no lack of beauty in Ormond. The truth of this was proven next day, when with the sun shining brightly, carriage after carriage drew up to the door to take us this way and that; some of the drives leading through veritable tropical thickets, where the palms and undergrowth brushed the wheels in passing. "Yes, Ormond is pretty, after all." "It was the weather;" we said, when on our way again for Palm Beach. G W. P.

Castle Square Theatre, Boston.

The opening night of the extraordinary double bill offered this week by the Castle Square Opera Company, consisting of "H. M. S. Pinafore" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" has demonstrated beyond all doubt the versatility of Mr. Rose's company and their complete triumph in one of the most arduous tasks ever set an opera company. "Pianafore" opened the evening and was given with a swing and dash delightful. Then came a harder task. Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" one of the most difficult compositions known to the operatic stage. But the company were equal to the undertaking. Foremost of all should be named Miss Lane the prima donna of the company. Rarely does one see such dramatic power joined with to such exquisite sweetness of voice and so many personal graces. The present double bill will be continuee for another week. The management announces that arrangements have been made with the street car company and that special cars will leave the theatre at the close of every performance direct for every railroad station.

How the Liquor Bill Figures up.

The actual direct money outlay for drink can be readily estimated from government reports and is in the neighborhood of one billion dollars. It is worth remembering that the consumption of malt liquor in the United States is now more than one billion gallons a year, and of distilled spirits one hundred thousand gallons per year. The consumption of malt liquor having increased in the last ten years by nearly 100 per cent. and that of distilled spirits by about 50 per cent. There are returned to the government, in the shape of internal revenue taxes and license money, perhaps one hundred and seventy-five million dollars leaving the direct cost nine hundred and twenty-five million dollars.

In other words, we are lavishly pouring into the saloons nearly one billion dollars annually, while the whole interest of our lawmakers is centered on getting back about one-sixth of this amount. Truly this is a case of saving at the spigot and wasting at the bunghole. But the figures given do not include the indirect cost.

In answer to an inquiry whether he had not made his estimate too high, General Dow defended the figures that he named, saying that he considered "the indirect cost equal to the direct cost, as we've always insisted since the temperance agitation began."—Temperance Cause.

Household Receipts.

BANANA JELLY. Soak a half box gelatine in a half pint of cold water ten minutes; add to this a full pint of boiling water, the juice of two lemons and a half pint of granulated sugar. Stir it well together and strain through a jelly bag or fine wire strainer. Pour this an inch deep in a mould, add a few slices of banana and set out doors in winter, in the refrigerator if summer, until it hardens, keeping the remainder in a warm place. As soon as the first stiffens put another layer of jelly and bananas, again putting away to harden until all is used.

FISH HASH. Take of cold boiled vegetables—potatoes, beets, carrots, turnips and parsnips—equal parts, pick previously freshened salt fish one-half as much as there are vegetables, flavor slightly with onion, pepper and salt, add a bit of butter and fry with no water till brown. Serve portions on slices of toast laid on a platter.

SCRAMBLED EGGS. Have the skillet on the fire with hot water in it. Break in a dish ten eggs, which must be undoubtedly fresh. Pour the water out of the skillet and put in a lump of butter. As soon as the butter begins to bubble, pour in the eggs and with a silver knife cut from underneath and stir. As soon as the eggs begin to set, put in more butter and some salt, with a very little pepper. Have a hot covered dish, and send to the table immediately they are done.

BOILED PUDDING. One cupful of sour milk, one-half of a cupful of molasses, one-half of a cupful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of soda dissolved in hot water, one-half of a tablespoonful of salt, about two and one-half cupfuls of flour. Boil one and one-half hours. Eat with sauce.

Results Tell the Story.

A vast mass of direct, unimpeachable testimony proves beyond any possibility of doubt that Hood's Sarsaparilla actually does perfectly and permanently cure diseases caused by impure blood. Its record of cures is unequalled and these cures have often been accomplished after all other preparations had failed.

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills, biliousness, jaundice, indigestion, sick headache.

The leather apron worn by the blacksmith is mentioned by Pliny as in use in his time.

If asked the question "Have you got a stomach?" it would be safe on general principles, to answer "Yes." But, if you are sure of it; that is, if you ever feel any distress after eating or any pains of whatever description in the region of the stomach, you have got something more than an ordinary stomach; in other words, you have got a diseased stomach. The stomach is a powerful muscle, and the proper remedy for a tired muscle is rest. Try the Shaker Digestive Cordial, for this product not only contains digested food, which will nourish the system without any work on the part of the diseased organs, but it aids the digestion of other foods as well. You can test its value in your case for the trifling sum of 10 cents. Sample bottles at this price are carried by all druggists.

Mortgagee's Sale of Real Estate.

BY Virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Thomas Kennon to the Abington Savings Bank, dated February 4, A D., 1890 and recorded with Norfolk County Deeds, Lib. 632, Fol. 601, for breach of the conditions contained in said Mortgage, and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, upon the premises described in said Mortgage, on WEDNESDAY, the eleventh day of March, A. D., 1896, at half past one o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises described in said Mortgage, viz:

A certain lot or parcel of land with the buildings and other improvements thereon, lying on the northwesterly side of Squantum street, in Quincy, in Norfolk County and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, containing twenty thousand square feet and being the northerly half or part of a lot of land in said Quincy delineated on a plan drawn by Mr. Case (and to be recorded herewith). Said lot is bounded and described as follows:

Beginning on said street at a point two hundred and thirty-six [23] feet southwesterly from land of John A. Billings, thence north 40 degrees west to other land of said Billings; thence northwesterly, northerly, northeasterly and easterly with said land of Billings to said Squantum street; thence southwesterly two hundred and thirty-six [236] feet to the point of beginning. Being a part of the same premises described in a deed from Alicia E. Marden to said Kennon, dated 18 November, 1884, and recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds, book 628, page 251.

Two Hundred Dollars to be paid by purchaser at the time of sale; further terms at the sale.

Mortgagee's Sale.

BY Virtue and in execution of the power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Henry C. Weeden and Amy E. Weeden, wife of said Henry C., in her own right, to Benjamin D. Weeden, dated March eleventh, A. D., 1890, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, libro 634, folio 110, which mortgage has been assigned by said mortgagee to me, the undersigned, as trustee, by assignment dated April 20, A. D., 1894, recorded with said Deeds, libro 712, folio 141, and for the purpose of foreclosing said mortgage for breach of the condition thereof, will be sold by public auction on the premises hereinafter described, being the premises described in said mortgage, on MONDAY, the ninth day of March, A. D., 1896, at one o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, namely:

A certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon, situated in Quincy, in the County of Norfolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a stake near a Willow tree on the northeasterly side of a street called Palmer street, shown on a plan drawn by H. T. Whitman, surveyor, dated February, 1890, and recorded with said deeds, and filed as No. 559, at land conveyed by said Amy E. Weeden to John Quincy Adams, thence running northeasterly at right angles to said Palmer street, four hundred and sixty-eight [468] feet to a stake; thence turning at right angles and running southeasterly two hundred and four 65-100 [204 65-100] feet to a stake in the marsh line shown on said plan. From this point to the point of beginning the granted premises are bounded as follows: Northeasterly on salt marsh of persons unknown by the marsh line as shown on said plan, southeasterly partly on salt marsh late of Peter Bracket and partly on Ridge Hill, so-called, southwesterly by the sea to marsh land formerly of the town of Quincy, northwesterly by said last mentioned marsh land to said street, northeasterly again by said street to a point opposite the point of beginning; thence the line runs across said street to the point of beginning. Excepting out of said described premises a certain parcel of land containing about one acre conveyed by Samuel Andrews to Abraham Rich, Jr., by deed dated October 5, 1861, recorded with said deeds, libro 304, folio 17, to which deed reference is made for a particular description of the parcel excepted from this grant. And excepting, also, said Palmer street. Being a part of the premises conveyed by Mary A. Sheen in her right to said Amy E. Weeden, by deed dated Feb. 14, 1890, recorded with said mortgage, comprising lot three [3] on said plan and other portions conveyed by said deed from Mary A. Sheen.

$500.00 will be required to be paid in cash by the purchaser at the time and place of sale. Other terms of sale made known at the time and place of sale.

HENRY C. WEEDEN, Trustee,
Assignee of said Mortgage.

TOOTH TALKS - No 3
[Keep your eye on our "Dental Dissentations"—a new chat and new points every other week.]
Materials Come High!
—You've no idea how expensive dental materials are. Bought in small quantities they're specially so—like coal by the basket. It's no wonder dentists of limited practice charge big prices—they have to to live. That's all right—they'll always have plenty of work at those prices.
But we prefer to do do differently—because we can afford to. Our's is a very extensive practice—16 large offices in leading cities—requiring wholesale purchase of supplies. We guarantee our materials the best made, but we use a vast amount and command both cash and quantity discounts.
We spoke in last ad. of our work being divided among specialists in each department as one reason for our low prices—this buying to advantage is another reason.

Poetry.

Before the Dawn.

ALICE BROWN.

O harken all ye little weeds
That lie beneath the snow,
So low, dear hearts, in poverty so low!
The sun hath risen for royal deeds,
A valiant wind the vangauard leads;
Now quicken ye, lest unborn seeds
Before ye rise and blow.

O furry living things, adream
On winter's drowsy breast,
How rest ye there, how softly, safely rest!
Arise and follow where a gleam
Of wizard gold unbinds the stream,
And all the woodland windings seem
With sweet expectance blest.

My birds, come back! the hollow sky
Is weary for your note.
Sweet-throat, come back! O liquid, mellow throat!
Ere May's soft minions hereward fly,
Shame on ye, laggards, to deny
The brooding breast, the sun-bright eye,
The tawny, shining coat!

Miscellany.

Where Ignorance is Bliss.

The splendid steamship Adamant, of the celebrated Cross bow line, left New York on her February trip under favorable circumstances. There had just been a storm on the ocean, so there was every chance that she would reach Liverpool before the next one was due.

Captain Rice had a little social problem to solve at the outset, but he smoothed that out with the tact which is characteristic of him. Two Washington ladies—official ladies—were on board, and the captain, old British seadog that he was, always had trouble in the matter of precedence with Washington ladies. Captain Rice never had any bother with the British aristocracy, because precedence is all set down in the bulky volume of "Burke's Peerage," which the captain kept in his cabin, and so there was no difficulty. But a republican country is supposed not to meddle with precedence. It wouldn't, either, if it weren't for the women.

So it happened that Mrs. Assistant Attorney to the Senate Brownrig came to the steward and said that, ranking all others on board, she must sit at the right hand of the captain. Afterward Mrs. Second Adjutant to the War Department Digby came to the same perplexed official and said that she must sit at the captain's right hand, because in Washington she took precedence over everybody else on board. The bewildered steward confided his woes to the captain, and the captain said he would attend to the matter. So he put Mrs. War Department on his right hand, and then walked down the deck with Mrs. Assistant Attorney, and said to her:

"I want to ask a favor, Mrs. Brownrig. Unfortunately, I am a little deaf in the right ear, caused, I presume, by listening so much with that ear to the fog horn year in and year out. Now, I always place the lady whose conversation I wish most to enjoy on my left hand at table. Would you oblige me by taking that seat this voyage? I have heard of you, you see, Mrs. Brownrig, although you have never crossed with me before."

"Why, certainly, captain," replied Mrs. Brownrig. "I feel especially complimented."

"And I assure you, madam," said the polite captain, "that I would not for the world miss a single word that," etc.

And thus it was amicably arranged between these two ladies. All this has nothing whatever to do with the story. It is merely an incident given to show what a born diplomat Captain Rice was and is to this day. I don't know any captain more popular with the ladies than he, and besides he is as good a sailor as crosses the ocean.

Day by day the good ship plowed her way toward the east, and the passengers were unanimous in saying that they never had a pleasanter voyage for that time of the year. It was so warm on deck that many steamer chairs were out, and below it was so mild that a person might think he was journeying in the tropics. Yet they had left New York in a snowstorm with the thermometer away below zero.

"Such," said young Spinner, who knew everything, "such is the influence of the gulf stream."

Nevertheless, when Captain Rice came down to lunch the fourth day out his face was haggard and he looked furtive and anxious.

"Why, captain," said Mrs. Assistant Attorney, "you look as if you hadn't slept a wink last night."

"I slept very well, thank you, madam," replied the captain. "I always do."

"Well, I hope your room was more comfortable than mine. It seemed to me too hot for anything. Didn't you find it so, Mrs. Digby?"

"I thought it very nice," replied the lady at the captain's right, who generally found it necessary to take an opposite view from the lady at the left.

"You see," said the captain, "we have many delicate women and children on board, and it is necessary to keep up the temperature. "Still, perhaps the man who attends to the steam rather overdoes it. I will speak to him."

The captain pushed from him his untasted food and went upon the bridge, casting his eye aloft at the signal waving from the masthead, silently calling for help to an empty horizon.

"Nothing in sight, Johnson?" said the captain.

"Not a speck, sir."

The captain swept the circular line of sea and sky with his glasses, then laid them down with a sigh.

"We ought to raise something this afternoon, sir," said Johnson; "we are right in their track, sir. The Fulda ought to be somewhere about."

"We are too far north for the Fulda, I am afraid," answered the captain.

"Well, sir, we should see the Vulcan before night, sir. She's had good weather from Queenstown."

"Yes. Keep a sharp lookout, Johnson."

"Yes, sir."

The captain moodily paced the bridge with his head down.

"I ought to have turned back to New York," he said to himself.

Then he went down to his own room, avoiding the passengers as much as he could, and had the steward bring him some beef tea. Even a captain cannot live on anxiety.

"Steamer off the bow port, sir," rang out the voice of the lookout at the prow. The man had sharp eyes, for a landsman could have seen nothing.

"Run and tell the captain, cried Johnson to the sailor at his elbow; but, as the sailor turned, the captain's head appeared up the stairway. He seized the glass and looked long at a single point on the horizon.

"It must be the Vulcan," he said at last.

"I think so, sir."

"Turn your wheel a few points to port, and bear down on her."

Johnson gave the necessary order, and the great ship veered around.

"Hellow!" cried Spinner, on deck. "Here's a steamer. I found her. She's mine."

Then there was a rush to the side of the ship. "A steamer in sight!" was the cry, and all books and magazines at once lost interest. Even the placid, dignified Englishman, who was so uncommunicative, rose from his chair, and sent his servant for his binocular. Children were helped up, and told to be careful, while they tried to see the dim line of smoke so far ahead.

"Talk about the lane routes at sea," cried young Spinner, the knowing. "Bosh, I say. See! We're going directly for her. Think what it might be in a fog! Lane routes! Pure luck, I call it."

"Will we signal to her, Mr. Spinner?" gently asked the young lady from Boston.

"Oh, certainly," answered young Spinner. "See, there's our signal flying from the masterhead now. That shows them what line we belong to."

"Dear me, how interesting," said the young lady. "You have crossed many times, I suppose, Mr. Spinner?"

"Oh, I know my way about," answered the modest Spinner.

The captain kept the glasses glued to his eyes. Suddenly he almost let them drop.

"My God, Johnson!" he cried "She's flying a signal of distress, too!"

The two steamers slowly approached each other, and, when nearly alongside, and about a mile apart, the bell of the Adamant rang to stop.

"There you see," said young Spinner to his Boston girl, "she is flying the same flag at her masterhead that we are."

"Then she belongs to the same line as this boat?"

"Oh, certainly," answered Mr. Cocksure Spinner.

"Oh, look! look! look!" cried the enthusiastic Indianapolis girl, who was going to study music in Germany.

Every one looked aloft, and saw running up to the masterhead a long line of fluttering, many colored flags. They remained in place for a few moments, and then fluttered down again, only to give place to a different string. The same thing was going on on the other steamer.

"Oh, this is too interesting for anything," said Mrs. Assistant. "I am just dying to know what it means. I have read of it so often, but never saw it before. I wonder when the captain will come down. What does it all mean?" she asked the deck steward.

"They are signaling to each other, madam."

"Oh, I know that; but what are they signaling?"

"I don't know, madam,"

"Oh, see! see!" cried the Indianapolis girl, clapping her hands with delight. "The other steamer is turning round."

It was indeed so. The great ship was thrashing the water with her screw, and gradually the masts came in line, and then her prow faced the east again. When this had been slowly accomplished the bell on the Adamant rang full speed ahead, and then the captain came slowly down the ladder that led from the bridge.

"Oh, captain, what does it all mean?"

"Is she going back, captain? Nothing wrong, I hope."

"What ship is it, captain?"

"She belongs to our line, doesn't she?"

"Why is she going back?"

"The ship," said the captain slowly, "is the Vulcan, of the Black Bowling line, that left Queenstown shortly after we left New York. She has met with an accident. Ran into some wreckage, it is thought, from the recent storm. Anyhow, there is a hole in her; and whether she sees Queenstown or not will depend a great deal on what weather we have and whether her bulkheads hold out. We will stand by her till we reach Queenstown."

"Are there many on board, do you think, captain?"

"There are fifty-seven in the cabin and over eight hundred steerage passengers," answered the captain.

"Why don't you take them on board, out of danger, captain?"

"Ah, madam, there is no need to do that. It would only delay us, and time is everything in a case like this. Besides, they will have ample warning if she is going down, and they will have time to get everybody on the boats. We will stand by them, you know."

"Oh, the poor creatures," cried the sympathetic Mrs. Second Adjutant. "Think of the awful position. May be engulfed at any moment. I suppose they are all on their knees in the cabin. How thankful they must have been to see the Adamant."

On all sides there was the profoundest sympathy for the unfortunate passengers of the Vulcan. Cheeks paled at the very thought of the catastrophe that might take place at any moment within sight of the sister ship. It was a realistic object lesson of the ever present dangers of the sea. While those on deck looked with new interest at the steamship plunging along within a mile of them, the captain slipped away to his room. As he sat there, there was a tap at his door.

"Come in, shouted the captain.

The silent Englishman slowly entered.

"What's wrong, captain?" he asked.

"Oh, the Vulcan has had a hole stove in her and signaled———"

"Yes, I know all that, of course, but what's wrong with us?"

"With us?" echoed the captain, blankly.

"Yes, with the Adamant? What has been amiss for the last two or three days? I'm not a talker nor am I afraid any more than you are, but I want to know."

"Certainly," said the captain. "Please shut the door, Sir John."

* * * * * *

Meanwhile there was a lively row on board the Vulcan. In the saloon Captain Flint was standing at bay with his knuckles on the table.

"Now, what the devil's the meaning of all this?" cried Adam K. Vincent, member of congress.

A crowd of frightened women were standing around, many on the verge of hysterics. Children clung with pale faces to their mother's skirts, fearing they knew not what. Men were grouped with anxious faces, and the bluff old captain fronted them all.

"The meaning of all what sir?"

"You know very well. What is the meaning of our turning around?"

"It means, sir, that the Adamant has eighty-five saloon passengers and nearly five hundred intermediate and steerage passengers who are in the most deadly danger. The cotton in the hole is on fire and they have been fighting it night and day. A conflagration may break out at any moment. It means, then, sir, that the Vulcan is going to stand by the Adamant."

A wail of anguish burst from the frightened women at the awful fate that might be in store for so many human beings so near to them and they clung closer to their children and thanked God that no such danger threatened them and those dear to them.

"And, sir," cried the congressman, "do you mean to tell us that we have to go against our will—without ever being consulted—back to Queenstown?"

"I mean to tell you so, sir."

"Well, by the gods, that's an outrage, and I won't stand it, sir. I must be in New York by the 27th. "I won't stand it sir."

"I am very sorry, sir, that anybody should be delayed."

"Delayed? Hang it all, why don't you take the people on board and take 'em to New York? I protest against this. I'll bring a lawsuit against the company, sir."

"Mr. Vincent," said the captain, sternly, "permit me to remind you that I'm captain of this ship. Good afternoon, sir."

The congressman departed from the saloon exceedingly wroth, breathing dire threats of legal proceedings against the line and the captain personally, but most of the passengers agreed that it would be an inhuman thing to leave the Adamant alone in mid-ocean in such terrible straits.

"Why didn't they turn back, Captain Flint?" asked Mrs. General Weller.

"Because, madam, every moment is of value in such a case, and we are nearer Queenstown than New York."

And the two steamships, side by side, worried their way toward the east, always within sight of each other by day and with the rows of light in each visible at night to the sympathetic souls on the other. The sweltering men poured water into the hold of the one, and the pounding pumps poured water out of the hold of the other, and thus they reached Queenstown.

On board the tender that took the passengers ashore at Queenstown from both steamers two astonished women met each other.

"Why, Mrs.—General—Weller! You don't mean to say you were on board that unfortunate Vulcan!"

"For the land's sake, Mrs. Assistant Brownrig! Is that really you! Will wonders never cease? Unfortunate, did you say? Mighty fortunate for you, I think. Why, weren't you just frightened to death?"

"I was, but I had no idea anyone I knew was on board."

"Well, you were on board yourself. That would have been enough to have killed me."

"On board myself? Why, what do you mean? I wasn't on board the Vulcan. Did you get any sleep at all after you knew you might go down at any moment?"

"My sakes, Jane, what are you taking about? Down at any moment? It was you that might have gone down at any moment, or, worse still, have been burnt; don't mean to say you didn't know the Adamant was on fire most of the way across?"

"Mrs.—General—Weller! There's some horrible mistake. It was the Vulcan. Everything depended on her bulkheads, the captain said. There was a hole as big as a barn door in the Vulcan. The pumps were going night and day."

Mrs. General looked at Mrs. Assistant as the light began to dawn upon both of them.

"Then it wasn't the engines, but the pumps," she said.

"And it wasn't the steam, but the fire," screamed Mrs. Assistant. "Oh, dear, how that captain lied, and I thought him such a nice man, too. Oh, I shall go into hysterics, I know I shall."

"I wouldn't, if I were you," said the sensible Mrs. General, who was a strong-minded woman, "besides, it's too late. We're all pretty safe now. I think both captains were pretty sensible men. Evidently married, both of 'em."

Which was quite true.—McClure's Magazine.

Washing Silk Stockings.

All laundry operations are necessarily complicated by cold weather and frost. Cotton goods of strong quality are usually improved by freezing, but fine goods and linens that are allowed to freeze must be handled very carefully, or they will be cracked by being folded when they are frozen. It is, therefore, a good plan to dry valuable linens within doors in winter, even at the risk of their becoming slightly yellow.

Silk stockings ought to be dried within doors. The best way to wash these stockings is to make a strong lather of borax soap and lukewarm water. Wash the foot of the stocking thoroughly with the hand. Then lay the stocking on a board and scrub it thoroughly with a piece of white flannel, rubbing it with the flannel and lather of soap. If the stockings are black or dark in color, put a teaspoonful of ox gall in the lather used to wash them. When they are washed, rinse them thoroughly in three waters. Blue the last water if the stockings are pearl white or black, but not for delicate-colored silk. Dry the stockings indoors by pinning them wrong side outward on a sheet before the fire. When they are half dry turn them, put them on the ironing blanket and rub them the direction of the nap with a hard roller made by wrapping a small piece of hard wood in flannel. This makes them look smooth, and is far better than ironing.—Boston Budget.

Heat, Gas and Book Bindings.

"Low book shelves," said a furniture dealer, who is a lover of books as well, to a New York Times writer, "have an origin in reason besides the caprice of fashion. Heat is injurious to the binding of choice books, drying out the natural oil of the leather and making them warp and get out of shape. Most rooms are very warm in the upper parts and these five and six-foot book cases are a necessity rather than a notion.

"Cold is as hard on books as overheating, and an atmosphere that is too damp or too dry also injures them. The sun pouring in directly on the shelves fades the bindings.

"An open fire is another necessity in a library; books require good air like a human being, and gas ought never to be used where good books are kept. Candles are hard on the eyes, though, and therefore should be avoided; oil or electricity are all better than gas, which acts as readily on binding as it does on silver. In lieu of tarnishing, however, it effects their elasticity and pliable qualities."

HANCOCK ST. HISTORY.

SECOND INSTALLMENT OF PAPER BY EDWARD H. DEWSON.

Returning to the junction of Hancock and Adams streets, we will again journey southward taking the estates on our left hand or the east side of the street. It will be remembered that all the land on this side, from this point to the training field or meeting-house green, (twenty-eight acres,) was in 1640 granted to John Dassitt, by the town of Boston. Mr. Marsh says: The first house we find on this side was built by Samuel Littlefield, the house previously standing on this site, having been burned in 1835-6. Later, it was successively owned by Gideon F. Thayer and his son, then by F. E. Edson and J. Alba Davis and lastly by Cotton Center Johnson in 1863. A little farther south, near the big tree in the sidewalk of the E. B. Pratt estate, there stood soon after the close of the war of 1776, the house of John Pray.

We have not the date of its erection. Pattee states that Pray manufactured shoes there, being the first who engaged in that business in this town.

The old house was brought in the seventies, by Lysander S. Richards who removed it to Alleyne terrace, corner of Alleyne and Hancock streets, where it now stands remodeled. Next, is the house of the late Edwin B. Pratt. This is of modern construction. Pratt brought of Francis M. Johnson. He, of Warren Marsh, who came from Boston and built it in the early fifties.

We come next to the house of Mrs. L. G. Horton, built by Ebenezer Chamberlain a little later than 1811. It is of the first type. A piazza has been added.

Near it is a small two story house of modern appearance. It was formerly Mr. Horton's bake house.

In 1760, it was voted to remove the schoolhouse of the North Precinct "to nigh the ten mile stake to be placed in the road convenient as may." Its location was near the above house. It stood partly in the present road, where it remained until 1795. Pattee says "the third schoolhouse was erected on Hancock street opposite the ten mile post in 1763. It was to be placed there provided John Beal will allow a piece of land in exchange for the land where the old pound stood.

The next house, is a modification of the first type, inasmuch as it is only one room deep, and has an addition on one-half of the rear, but it is lacking in simplicity. It was built by Charles Newcomb soon after 1811. In 1827, it was owned by his son George, later Thomas Adams became its owner. He was high sheriff of Norfolk county. The small building in the yard was his office. The estate is now owned by the heirs of A. W. Russell.

The next house was built by Moses R. Marsh in 1817. It also is a modification of the first type, somewhat modernized. It is the property and residence of Doctor John A. Gordon. Beyond it, there was for many years the shoe shop of the Marsh's, later removed to Faxon avenue.

The next house was built by Edmund Marsh a little earlier than the other. Saville avenue has been opened south of it. The house is a good specimen of the modified first type, unchanged and well preserved. Henry H. Faxon brought this property and erected a wheelwright and blacksmith shop near Doctor Gordon's line. Later, Doctor Gordon acquired it and removed the shop.

The Marsh's were grantees from John Whitney and Joseph H. Dorr, Boston, and Jonathan Webb, Quincy.

The next estate was sold by Jonathan Webb Oct. 19, 1816, to Josiah Saville, father of the late George Saville. The house was built on the south corner of Saville avenue soon after. Originally it was of the first type. In 1855 a new roof was put on. Other changes have altered and improved the appearance very much. It was bought by Cotton C. Johnson in 1867. The present owner is John O. Hall.

The next house on the corner of Faxon avenue was built by Johnson since 1867 on the site of the blacksmith shop of Josiah Savil.

We now come to the Burrill house (so called) on the south corner of Faxon avenue. It is owned by H. H. Faxon. It has been modernized, but retains the distinctive features of houses of the first type. It was probably built by Moses Belcher late in the seventeenth century, but we have no positive evidence of this. Interest attaches to it, because it denotes the north-western bound of the training field of 1640.

It will be remembered that in 1640 John Dassitt, one of the signers of the covenant of "The First Church of Brantry" was granted twenty-eight acres by the town of Boston, on which all the houses on the east side of Hancock street that we have described stand. March 31st, 1685, Dassitt conveyed to Moses Belcher four acres of land, bounded on the south by the Training Field. Nov. 30, 1699, heirs of Belcher, conveyed to John Beall, five acres, four of which were bought of Dassitt, as above.

In 1793 Norfolk County was created and in that year the will of Moses Brackett was probated in which he bequeathes the above estate to his daughter Joanna wife of Seth Burrell, and Mehitable, wife of Samuel Nightingale. The partition was made Feb. 6, 1806. "Joanna Burrell having four acres lying on the north-westerly part, together with the north-west half of the house, and half the cellar under the southwest part of said house, and bake house thereon standing, said land bounded south-west on the training field, thence running through the chimney on a straight line through the middle of the well, then turns north-west and runs to a stake near said Burrell's common house." The rest to Mehitable, wife of Samuel Nightingale.

Joanna's property was subsequently conveyed to Seth Burrell.

The Training Field, and estates adjacent to it will be treated later in this paper.

WEST SIDE OF STREET.

Resuming our journey down Hancock street on the west side, we find that the building next to the burying ground is the Town Hall, and schoolhouse of 1816, now occupied by stores, and the upper part until recently, by the district court. Pattee says "the land was bought of John Briesler for six dollars per square rod. It contains fifty-five rods and five feet and cost three hundred and thirty-nine dollars.

The resolutions provided for the erection of a wooden building, thirty by fifty-five feet, twenty feet high. It cost $2,127.19.

Pattee further states, that in 1819, the town voted to add that portion of the land purchased of Briesler, not occupied by the new Town House, to the burying ground, reserving on the south-east side, and south-west end, eighteen feet, for the purpose of erecting tombs. The Town House remained here till 1841, when it was moved to near the site of the Coddington school house. After remaining there about fourteen years, it was moved again to nearly its former site, where it was remodeled and additions made. Mr. Marsh states that "it now stands on land formerly of Samuel Copeland." It originally stood to the north of its present location, upon land bought of Briesler.

In the spring of 1844 "the town voted to annex to the burial ground about one-half acre of land, being that on which the Town Hall had stood."

Mr. Horace B. Spear born in 1822, attended school here. He states that the school rooms were on the lower floor, the entrance being on the south side. The north side of the building was then close to the cemetery. There was a yard on the south and west sides. The building is now owned by Henry H. Faxon.

Next to it was the boot shop of Peter Turner, part of it occupied by Hayward as a paint shop. Next was the house of Samuel Copeland, now greatly changed, and owned by Mr. Faxon. Mr. Marsh says Copeland owned it sixty years ago and occupied it many years since. He kept a meat market in the north-east corner.

The adjoining estate on the south, reaching to Granite street, was bought April 25th, 1815, of Elijah Adams of Boston, by John Briesler, senior.

Mrs. Nash, grand-daughter of the above, states that her father John Briesler, junior, entered into partnership with his father January 1st, 1816. They continued together until May 3d, 1831, when he bought the whole property of his father, and in 1837 erected the present store. Their business was West India goods, and groceries. He was born Jan. 30, 1794, and died May 9, 1877. He left a widow and three children.

NOTE.—Mr. Dewson requests that corrections and omissions in the above historical paper be sent to the PATRIOT for publication, instead of to him; although if anyone prefers the latter course he will be glad to receive their letters and see that they are recorded. At his suggestion the PATRIOT will inaugurate an historical and genealogical column upon the completion of the history of Hancock street, probably March 28 or April 4—[EDS.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

The absent members at the special meeting of the City Council Monday evening were, Councilmen Little, Phillips, Rinn, and Russell.

President Bryant read the call for the meeting, after which Councilman Anderson presented a petition of the Quincy Quarry Co., for the approval of its locations and map of its engineer, for its extension from a point near the Quincy Adams depot to the "North Common."

Upon request of Councilman Anderson this petition was laid on the table.

Councilman Anderson then offered an order for a public hearing at the Council chamber on Monday, March 16, the same to be advertised in the Quincy DAILY LEDGER.

In support of his order Councilman Anderson said by the charter of the Quincy Quarry Co., the road must be located within one year and the directors find themselves short of time, and thus the special meeting.

The order for a hearing was adopted.

Adjourned at 7.50.

Loan Collection of Portraits.

Great interest is felt in the coming portrait exhibition, and that it bids fair to as successful as the one last year goes without saying. Many portraits of great interest are promised, among them Charles Dickens by Alexander, Pope Leo XIII, and Calve by the French artist, Chartraud, Vigee le Brun by herself, Benjamin Franklin by Du Plessis, Edward Everett by Young, Ada Rehan by Sargent, besides a large number of Copleys and Stuarts. One of the most interesting features of the exhibition will be the eight portraits sent by Mr. R. Hall McCormick of Chicago, from his famous collection.

About 200 minatures are promised, among them that of Major John Andre by himself. The portrait was presented by Andre to one of the Styvesant family and has been kept in its quaint frame to the present day. It is intended to make the opening reception a gala occasion, and tickets at $3 00 each are being sold rapidly. There will be music by the cadet band, and light refreshments served. During the exhibition there will be three afternoon teas, presided over by a few of the patronesses, assisted by several young ladies. These will doubtless form one of the great attractions. The poster makes its appearance this week and is of the most original design and tells the story of the portrait exhibition perfectly. It was chosen on this account, although the other designs, about fifty in all, were very clever. These will be shown in a side room off the hall and will form an attractive corner. The hours of the exhibition are from 8 30 A. M. to 10 P. M. and on Sunday from 1.30 P. M. to 5 P. M. Admission 50 cents, Sunday 25 cents.

The Quincy Patriot.

QUINCY, SATURDAY, FEB. 29, 1896.

No Agreement.

As the first of March draws near there is a feeling of uneasiness on the part of those engaged in the granite industry, both the manufacturers as well as the men, for the reason that the bill of prices has not been adjusted as yet, and it is doubtful if it will be, for the fight, if such it can be called, has simmered down to a contest for supremacy.

Among the most important matters asked for by the cutters last December was that a day's labor should be eight hours, and the elimination of what is known as the discrimination clause.

A number of meetings have been held between the two committees and while a number of small matters still remain unadjusted the most important question unsettled is the discrimination clause.

The men are firm in their demand to have that clause stricken out, while the manufacturers are just as firm in their wish to have it remain in, and here the whole matter hinges. March 1st is the time the agreement expires.

Many of the cutters are strongly opposed to a strike although they have the promise of support from other unions.

All agree that there is considerable of that going on now but how much more so would it be was there no bill to act as a stay upon those who are disposed to abide by and live up to the bill of prices.

Secretary McAdam of the Cutters' Union when interviewed, said things looked bad, and although he personally was not in favor of striking, many of the men were, and he could not tell the outcome.

James Duncan, of Baltimore, secretary of the of the Granite Cutters' National Union, arrived in Quincy Thursday night and was in conference with the Cutters' committee Friday, and was present last night at a joint meeting between the Manufacturers' and Cutters' committees. An effort will be made to settle the differences in a peaceable manner, and it is hoped it may be successful.

What the outcome of this meeting will be it is hard to tell, but the condition of affairs in the granite industry for the balance of the year will depend on what understanding the two committees come to.

After the joint meeting of the two committees the cutters will hold a mass meeting to hear the report and take such action as seems expedient.

A Republican Club.

In response to invitations sent out among the more prominent Republicans, the following gentlemen met in Durgin & Merrill's block Tuesday evening to take some action toward the formation of a Republican club:

John F. Merrill, Warren W. Adams, Frederick L. Jones, Lester M. Pratt, Charles A. Howland, John Q. A. Field, Russell A. Sears, Warren H. Rideout, George H. Field, Harry W. Read, Albert Keating, Charles H. Johnson, James P. Clare, Henry O. Fairbanks, T. H. Newcomb, Stephen O. Moxon, H. B. Brown, Walter S. Pinkham and Wellington W. Mitchell.

John F. Merrill presided, and he stated that it had been thought advisable to form a Republican club in Quincy, and for that reason the meeting had been called.

Remarks followed by nearly every gentleman present, and it was noted that there were about as many ideas expressed as there were gentlemen present.

Some thought a great mistake had been made in ignoring the Ward and City Committee as a committee and that it would cause the impression to go forth that it was for a select few. Others thought the invitation should have been a general one and still others thought that the proper method had been taken, and after the organization had been completed an invitation would be extended to all Republicans to become members. There should be no division between this club and the Ward and City Committee or with any other organization, as it did not aim to antagonize any of them, but all should work together.

The general idea seemed to prevail that it would be well for the club to let municipal politics alone and confine itself to National and State affairs.

Warren W. Adams moved "That a Republican club be organized in Quincy."

Walter S. Pinkham offered an amendment, "to further the interests of the party in National and State affairs."

This caused some discussion. The amendment was voted down and the original motion carried.

It was then voted that a committee of seven be appointed to include the chairman, to formulate a plan for the organization of this club and report at a future meeting.

The committee consists of the following gentlemen:

John F. Merrill, Warren W. Adams, Charles H. Johnson, Frederick L. Jones, George L. Miller, Henry O. Fairbanks, Harry W. Read.

It was then voted that each of the committee invite three other gentlemen, one of whom shall be the chairman of his Ward committee to be present at the next meeting.

The meeting then adjourned until Saturday evening.

Ninetieth Birthday.

Mrs. Sarah A. Burrell was ninety years old Sunday, and many of her friends in Quincy and adjoining towns called to congratulate her. She is very smart for an old lady and has good use of all her limbs, except a wrist, which she accidentally injured a few weeks ago by a fall. Her hearing and eyesight are also very good. She has attended the Universalist church nearly every Sunday during the past year until winter set in; and is looking forward to good, pleasant weather, so that she can go out again. She is believed to be the oldest lady in the city, and certainly one of the smartest. She has been keeping house until she went to visit one of her daughters, Mrs. Lovell, in North Weymouth, about Thanksgiving time, where she had the fall. She is now stopping with another daughter, Mrs. N. B. Furnald, on Washington street. We intend to call and see her when she is one hundred years old.

Board of Trade.

The directors of the Board of Trade held a meeting Thursday evening and talked over informally quite a number of matters. The committee to whom was referred the matter of the extension of the Quarry railroad was not ready to report and asked further time.

The matter of the proposed change in the grade of Hancock street was brought up and was referred to the Committee on Highway Improvements.

This brought up the advisability of a board of survey to establish all street grades, which was discussed at length.

The Committee on New Industries was not ready to report.

Vesper Music.

The music sung at 4 o'clock vespers at the Unitarian church on Sunday will be:

"Saviour when night Involves the Skies," Shelley
"Seek Ye the Lord," J. V. Roberts
"Just as I am," Schnecker
"O Saving Victim," Tours
"Grant us Thy Peace," Gounod
Tenor Solo, "Be Thou Faithful," St. Paul Mendelssohn

J. Roland Orcutt, well known at North Weymouth as a storekeeper and postmaster, died Saturday evening, aged 55 years. He leaves a widow.

CITY BRIEFS.

The will of Margaret M. Hade has been filed at Dedham.

A Christian Endeavor column appears in the LEDGER every Friday.

It is a sure sign of spring when you see the boys playing marbles.

Spring is coming if we can judge by the fine weather we have had the past two days.

George W. Jones has received the spring style in hats and makes a good window display.

Work on the new bowling alleys near Wilson's market is being rushed toward completion.

The board of managers of the Adams Academy will meet for organization next Wednesday evening.

Albert Keating is building a large addition to the store occupied by A. F. Hall on Washington street.

There was no Quincy business at the Norfolk county probate court in Hyde Park on Wednesday.

The Woodward Institute will probably be enlarged before the opening of the fall term in September.

F. P. Loud was on Saturday elected one of the executive committee of the 58th Regimental association.

Mr. Gibbs the Temple street fish dealer appeared out this week with a handsome new wagon, horse and harness.

George W. Penniman has severed his connection with the Boston Standard, because of his State House duties.

Merrymount lodge, A. O. U. W., initiated two candidates at its meeting Tuesday evening and received one application.

Mayor Adams, City Treasurer Gray and Chairman Claflin made a visit of inspection to the police station Wednesday evening.

Criminal court business has been light this week, and will probably continue so until after next Monday, town meeting day.

The young men of the Congregational church have been invited to a social gathering and turkey supper on March 4.

Clerk John P. S. Churchill of the District Court has removed his Boston office from 23 School street to 39 Court street.

Mr. E. H. Dewson's historical paper will be continued weekly in the PATRIOT and on Mondays and Fridays in the DAILY LEDGER.

W. H. Fay, who has been confined to his home by illness for nearly eight weeks, made his first appearance on the street Thursday.

Henry H. Faxon was among the guests and speakers at the reception of the Boston Woman's Christian Temperance Union on Monday evening.

The degree staff of Mount Wollaston lodge, I. O. O. F., went to East Weymouth Thursday evening to work the third degree for Crescent lodge.

Mr. and Mrs. John Burbeck, formerly of this city, spent the 22d here. They were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pratt of Edwards street.

By a new rule of the telephone company, subscribers who use the instrument at the central telephone office will be charged the same as non-subscribers.

Sunday was Mr. A. L. Hood's last day as chorister of the Centre Congregational church. He will be succeeded by Mr. Sidelinger of Weymouth.

Monatiquot lodge, K. of P., had a banquet and dance at Braintree, Wednesday evening, largely attended by members of the order of Braintree and Quincy.

The annual parish meeting of the Universalist society of this city will be held at the church, on Thursday evening next.

The body of Rev. George E. Allen of Fall River who died Feb. 19, was brought to Quincy, Monday for burial at Mt. Wollaston cemetery. He was 67 years of age.

At the drive-whist party at the Granite City club rooms on Wednesday evening, the lady's prize was won by Mrs. Joseph C. Morse, and the gentleman's by Deputy Sheriff Field.

George Petterson of Houghs Neck was quite badly kicked by a horse last week. One blow struck him in the chin and the other in the arm.

George L. Miller left his carriage standing in front of Miss Hubbard's store for a few moments Monday evening, when a swill team came along and run into the carriage capsizing it and breaking a wheel.

The Tufts College Glee club does not attempt the classical, giving preference to rollicking college songs which the majority of people who go to hear college boys sing, prefer. Aren't you going to hear them March 4th?

The house committee of the Quincy Yacht club met and organized on Tuesday evening. Mr. Fred B. Rice was re-elected chairman, and Mr. C. Eaton Pierce was elected secretary. A set of house rules were drawn up, and other minor business was transacted.

Henry H. Faxon has presented the newspaper correspondents of this city with handsome bound volumes of "Men of Progress of Massachusetts." The book contains one thousand biographical sketches and portraits of leading business and professional men in the State.

The twenty-second was passed in a very quiet manner in Quincy. The provision stores in the centre kept open during the morning hours. In the afternoon there was nothing for excitement except to witness Rogers Bros. housing ice. Saturday evening three drunks arrived from Boston and were locked up.

The home of William H. Mulligan on Union street was blessed with a pair of twins on Sunday evening. As the wife had presented her fond husband with two or three pair, on former occasions, it was not so much a surprise to him, as it might have been to some other gentlemen in this city. God bless this numerous household.

Mr. Alexander Carlson met with a peculiar accident on Feb. 21. He was seated at the dinner table at his boarding house on Quarry street, when a flying rock weighing twenty-five pounds from a blast at the Craig & Richards Granite Quarry crashed through the window and struck him on the head inflicting a painful injury. He was removed to the City Hospital.

The Italian Social club held an entertainment and dance at Hancock hall Saturday evening, which was attended by the larger part of the Italian residents of Quincy. The drama "Primo Maggio" ("The First of May") was presented by members of the club, the several parts being well taken. There was also pleasing vocal solos by Dr. De Amezaga being accompanied by Mr. A. Devoto of the Conservatory of Music, Boston, and also solos by Mr. A. Brogi and Annie Brogi. The floor was cleared for dancing at 10 o'clock.

The first social of the N. E. O. P. was held in Faxon hall Wednesday evening. At 8.15 the grand march was formed led by Mr. Frank A. Souther and Miss Beatrice Porterfield, who were followed by fifty couples. From that time until twelve o'clock the dancers kept time to the fine music rendered by Bates' orchestra of Braintree. This social was pronounced by all a most enjoyable affair and when it was announced that the next social would take place March 12th, it was greeted with loud applause. Much credit is due to the floor director, Mr. Frank A. Souther and his aids, Mr. Thompson B. Crane and Mr. C. Leonard Hewson, for the able manner in which the social was conducted.

Another night lunch will locate near the PATRIOT office today.

Here's a problem for somebody: On what day of the week will Feb. 29 fall next time?

The debate on biennial elections of the Y. M. C. A. debating club to have been held Thursday evening was postponed one week.

Children born today will not have another birthday until 1904. The LEDGER hopes to record Monday the names of all arrivals on Feb. 29. Happy fathers will please forward for publication.

The bill to increase the salary of the Norfolk County commissioners to $5000 has been referred to the next Legislature; also the bill to increase the salary of the district attorney for this district.

Secretary Colton, George H. Sidelinger and George H. Brown of the Y. M. C. A. attended the banquet of the State Committee of the Y. M. C. A. at the Brunswick, Boston, Thursday evening.

Col. C. H. French has entertained many of the school children of the city at Hancock hall this week with some grand views of Alaska and Chicago. He gave lectures on Monday and Tuesday evenings and Tuesday afternoon, and will give others this afternoon and evening. Alaska is a much different country when pictured by him than most people imagine.

The Quincy Fishing club held its annual outing at Ponkapoag on Thursday, and made a day of it, dinner being served at 1 o'clock by Caterer Nash. Whether the club captured any fish is a matter of guess but one thing is certain there did not appear to be any surplus fish in the market this morning. There was thirty in the party.

WEST QUINCY.

Mr. Walter Brockbank of Cambridge visited relatives in West Quincy Sunday.

F. J. Fuller has received a large consignment of glass jars, which indicates that the popularity of Shawmut Spring water is on the increase.

No Commissioner of Public Works that Quincy has yet had has been enabled to stop that river that flows peacefully along Copeland street sidewalk, from the depot down. Will Commissioner Knowlton do any better?

Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Folsom, well known in West Quincy where they have resided for many years, observed the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage on Wednesday by a family gathering at their home off Miller street. It was their original intention to observe the event by a large gathering, but owing to a recent death in the family the gathering was limited to the immediate family, although many of their neighbors called during the day to extend their congratulations as well as to present them with a number of gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Folsom enjoy remarkably good health and bid fare to live to observe their diamond wedding twenty-five years hence.

Miss Abbie Nutting, bookkeeper for E. H. Doble & Co., has been at home sick this week with a severe cold.

The sidewalk on Copeland street, from Common street down, is receiving a coat of stone chips with a gravel top dressing.

Considerable complaint is made of the gang of young men who loaf on the street corners nights at West Quincy and make themselves a nuisance by blocking up the sidewalks so that ladies in order to pass must go into the street. When they see the officer approaching they scatter only to come together again as soon as his back is turned.

Mr. Richard A. Cole, who has been sick at his home on Cross street for the past few weeks, is now convalescent.

The Young Men's entertainment given last week at the M. E. church was a grand success. It was in charge of Mr. Charles Barron, Mr. Clarence Trask, Mr. Alex. McWilliams. The young men were assisted in the supper by Mrs. C. Goucher, Miss Mary Trask, Miss E. F. Kimball, Mr. Charles Gragg. Supper was served in vestry after the entertainment, the programme for which was:

Piano solo,—Miss Haskell.
Song,—Mr. W. Hersey.
Banjo solo,—Mr. F. Bassick.
Reading,—Miss McKenzie.
Cornet solo,—Mr. Horton.
Mandolin,—Mr. F. Bassick.

QUINCY POINT.

John R. Graham is preparing to build a new shoe shop on Sumner street.

Auctioneer F. F. Crane sold the estate of Mrs. Josephine Abbott, at East Weymouth, at auction Saturday, to Charles Hall of Quincy Point.

The large audience at the Washington street church at Quincy Point on Wednesday evening inspired Mrs. Livermore to make one of her noblest efforts. From her personal knowledge of the anti-slavery movement and of her subject "Wendell Phillips," she gave a most interesting lecture, of an hour and thirty minutes. It was not only a notable production for a lady in her 75th year, but for a lady of any age, and she received the closest attention. At the close she held a reception, and all present were pleased to meet her. Mr. T. B. Pollard presided and introduced the speaker as one who had done much for the advancement of women.

Benjamin Johnson has the contract for frames in which the "Quincy" bicycles will be shipped. The 5000 require considerable lumber.

F. F. Crane is to have another of those combination sales of horses and carriages about April 1. He advertises that goods should be consigned before March 16.

E. S. Beckford is doing the electrical work at Graham's new house.

Rogers Bros. have completed their work housing ice, having cut and housed all they desire.

Mr. James Murdock of Quincy Neck, who has been quite ill for the past week, is slowly recovering, and it is hoped he will be about again soon.

A Delightful Place.

We are pleased to know that some of our citizens are at Hotel Royal Poinciana, at Palm Beach, Florida. It is certainly one of the most delightful spots we have seen on this continent at this season of the year. The air is so warm and balmy, one begins to think he is near the Garden of Eden. Near this hotel one can see growing cocoanuts, bananas, pine apples, oranges, lemons, and other tropical fruit. We noticed the following ladies and gentlemen from Quincy and vicinity are registered at the Royal Poinicana: Miss Pfaffman, Mrs. John Shaw, Dr. A. G. Durgin, H. P. Kittredge, J. Walter Bradlee, F. R. Crane.

A Bicycle Record.

As the bicycling season of 1896 will shortly open we think that some of our Atlantic readers may be interested in the records of century runs and longer runs made last season by an Atlantic enthusiast, though no longer a "young" rider of Squantum street. These long runs were all made on a 33-pound Lovell diamond cycle.

1. Middletown, Ct., to New York city.
2. Millers Falls, Mass., to Atlantic.
3. Atlantic to Plymouth via Nantasket, Cohasset and Duxbury, returning via Hanson and Whitman.
4. Portland, Maine to Atlantic.
5. Atlantic to Worcester via Walpole, Franklin, Milford and Grafton, returning via Westboro and Newton.
6. Atlantic to Plaistow, N. H., and return by different route.

These runs were all made by an amateur and we should be pleased to have the records beaten the coming season by any Atlantic rider. Who will it be?

ATLANTIC.

Washington's birthday passed off quietly in Atlantic with the exception that some boys on Billings street, celebrated with fire crackers. The Bijou pool parlors under Music hall were patronized all day.

George E. Swett, formerly of Atlantic, now located in Wyoming, was the guest of Walter P. Hill on Saturday of last week.

Mrs. S. M. Bennett and Miss Bennett of Newbury avenue spent Washington's birthday and Sunday in Rockland, as the guests of Mrs. F. B. Clark.

The sunlight at Music hall, Atlantic, on Washington's birthday was well attended and the dancing was enjoyed so much that dancing was continued well into the evening.

The congregation at both morning and evening service at the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, on Sunday was very large as has been the case of late. The pastor preached both morning and evening and with the assistance of the choir in the morning the service was very enjoyable. The singing at the evening service was by a quartette.

Sunday was a gala day in the Atlantic Methodist Episcopal church. A goodly number were present at the morning service to hear the pastor's discourse on "God in his Sanctuary." At 12 o'clock Sabbath school was opened with encouraging attendance of seventy. Teachers were in their places and the whole service seemed to be a benediction to all. At 6 o'clock an enthusiastic Epworth League meeting was held in the vestry led by Mrs. Shanor. A large number attended the evening service and listened with interest to the sermon of Rev. Harvey Fleming an alumnus of Wooster University, Ohio, which was very eloquent and interesting. The junior chorus won golden opinions, truly God is blessing his people. The best seats are open to all strangers every Sunday. Come one come all.

Mr. Howard S. Baker of Billings street spent Sunday with his relatives in Rockland.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bottume of Stonington, Conn., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Bennett, of Newbury avenue.

Miss Eva Bassett of Walker street attended a whist party given by Mr. and Mrs. Stecker of Dorchester, formerly of of Atlantic, on Friday evening of last week.

Mr. Walter P. Hill and Miss Agnes C. Bennett of Atlantic attended the joint appearance of Nordica and Calve in "Aida" and "La Navarraise" at the grand opera, Mechanic's Auditorium, on Tuesday evening.

The first of a series of Tuesday evening entertainments to be held in Music hall, Atlantic, was given Tuesday evening to a good sized audience. Mr. Charles Otis Judkins, humorous and dramatic impersonator, assisted by Mr. E. Jarvis Josselyn, pianist, entertained the audience most admirably.

The Pilgrim Fathers at their meeting Monday evening indulged in a mock trial which proved so enjoyable that the court adjourned for two weeks there not being time to conclude the hearing. Eben Stocker was the judge, George E. Todd, clerk of the court, and James Tilton, sheriff. On complaint of Miss Maud Rice, Dr. D. A. Bruce had become the defendent in a suit for mal practice and administering chloroform to a cat, illegally, with malice, etc. Lawyers for the prosecution, C. F. Merrick and James Churchill; for the defence, H. W. Read and C. R. Safford. Great sport may be expected when the pleas and charges are made. The jury is an "up to date" affair, being made up of both ladies and gentlemen and a disagreement is looked for.

A party of six from Atlantic went to the concert in the Association hall, Charlestown, Tuesday evening, where Miss Clyde Robbins was a reciter. Though so young, Miss Robbins is doing excellent work in her chosen profession. Not the least of her charm is the lack of the unreal style of the schools, she has naturalness that permits her to have an original conception of her part.

The Ladies' Benevolent society of the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, held their usual monthly supper and entertainment at the church Wednesday evening. There was a crowded house at the entertainment at which time "Grandmother's Memories," consisting of readings by Mrs. Charles R. Safford illustrated by tableaux, which were the best ever given in Atlantic, red lights being used to make pictures more vivid.

Incidental to the tableaux was a lullaby by Miss Annie Hall and duet by Mr. C. R. Safford and Mrs. W. F. Cummings with guitar accompaniments by Mrs. L. A. Bassett. Special mention may be made of the love making scene by Mr. Hall and Miss Curtin, which fairly captured the young ladies, it being so realistic.

In addition to the tableaux were piano solos by Miss Southworth and Miss Hill, piano duet by the Misses Priest, and singing by a double quartette composed of Mrs. Matthews, Mrs. Cummings, Miss Annie Hall, Miss Susie Hall, Messrs. H. W. Read, Thomas, Owens, and Curtin.

Those receiving foreign mail are mourning over the receipt of wrappers without contents, and papers broken open before reaching New York, as shown by inspectors' stamps.

Mr. Smith of Billings street has moved his family to Philadelphia.

Contributions for the relief of the suffering ones in Armenia are being received in Atlantic by Mr. Frank Jenkins of Billings street. It is intended to forward sums received to be used in connection with other funds by the American Board of Missionaries. Parties who are desirous of contributing for the above purpose are invited to do so this week.

Mr. Edward W. Crocker is to move from Clive street to the house formerly occupied by Mr. Hale on Botolph street.

Sabbath evening Rev. J. W. Kingsbury will speak in the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, upon "The Home Imperilled by the Saloon." The following is one of the testimonials to the merits of this lecture. "I have heard many lectures on temperance, but I can truthfully say this is the most effective temperance lecture to which I ever listened."—Joseph F. Scott, Supt. of Mass. Reformatory.

Odd Fellows' Sociable.

The first of a series of sociables under the auspices of Mt. Wollaston lodge, I. O. O. F., was held Wednesday evening at Odd Fellows' hall, and was largely attended by the members and their ladies. A very enjoyable affair it proved to be, and much credit for the success of the affair is due to the committee, consisting of C. M. Jenness and E. Frank Mitchell.

When the larger part of those to participate had arrived, Chairman Jenness called order and introduced Representative James Thompson, who in a few words presented the lodge with a handsomely framed oil painting of P. G., Dudley Folsom, one of the oldest Odd Fellows in the city, in behalf of C. M. Jenness and Albert E. Foster.

The picture which was a perfect likeness, was done by Mr. A. E Foster while Mr. Jenness manufactured the frame.

Then came solos on the banjo and mandolin by Frank Bassick, and a piano duet by the Misses Miller.

Next in order was a social dance in the banquet hall, music being furnished by Hanson's orchestra, while in the lodge room, those who desired were given an opportunity to play whist.

A collation of ice cream and cake was served during the evening.

—First class work and perfect satisfaction is Frank A. Locke the piano tuner's motto—see ad., cut of piano. tf

WOLLASTON.

A meeting will be held in the Wollaston Unitarian church on Monday evening, March 2, 7.45 o'clock which will undoubtedly attract a large and appreciative audience. The meeting is to be held in the interests of the Sunday School of that society. The subject discussed will be "The Relation of Parents to the Sunday School." The following well known persons are expected to speak: Miss Sarah L. Arnold, a Boston school supervisor; Rev. Edward A. Horton, president of the Unitarian S. S. society; and Rev. Thos. Van Ness, pastor of the Second church of Boston. After the speaking an informal reception will be held in the vestry. Invitations have been extended to the Unitarian societies in Quincy and Neponset to send large delegations.

Mr. Wm. Thompson and family will occupy the Fairbanks house, Central avenue.

Communion service will be observed at the Wollaston Congregational church next Sunday evening.

At the Duck's Nest alleys on Saturday, the silver cracker jar was won by Mr. Fratus, who put up the highest regulation score that has ever been put up in those alleys, 627; the silver cake dish was won by Mr. Briggs, 285, candle pins; the pipe by Mr. Whittemore for pool.

William A. Jordan of Wollaston was re-elected secretary and treasurer of the Past Sachems Association of Massachusetts. Ex-Mayor Fairbanks was appointed chairman of the executive committee and a member of the reception committee. The banquet on Saturday was attended by 150 and was a grand success.

Eighty-five boys and girls with radiant faces and large appetites sat down to seven well laden tables in the vestry of the Wollaston Unitarian church on Saturday afternoon. They did not have very much to say, speech making and small talk was not in their line just at that time. They had salads, escalloped oysters, rolls, cakes, candy and cocoa. After the spread they played games.

The owners of dogs and cats in the neighborhood of Belmont street, Wollaston, have been excited the past few months by a wholesale poisoning of those animals. On Wednesday morning five dead cats were found within a radius of a few hundred feet. It is pretty well known who the miscreant is, and if sufficient evidence can be obtained it will go hard with him.

It is understood upon excellent authority that pressure has been brought to bear upon Mr. W. H. Brasee to accept the postmastership of Wollaston. If this takes place, and there is no doubt but what Mr. Brasee can have the appointment if he so desires, it will simplify a vexed problem and again unite the Wollaston Democracy. There is no reason to doubt but what he will accept the position. Rumor has it that he has been in Washington this week.

The Elliott club of Wollaston met with Mrs. H. T. Whitman on Wednesday evening with President Saxe in the chair. The subject discussed was Africa. Able papers upon the subject were prepared. The "Partition of Africa" was treated by Mr. R. R. Freeman; "Mashona Land, Kimberly and Barney Barnato" by Mrs. W. H. Brasee; and "Republics of South Africa" by Mrs. A. G. Olney. After the presentation of the papers there was an informal discussion upon Dr. Jameson's raid and the Transvaal troubles.

Work was commenced upon the new Nickerson & Sherman block at Wollaston on Thursday morning.

The Guild of the Good Shepherd, held every other Sunday evening, in connection with the Wollaston Unitarian society will hold its regular meeting, Sunday at half past six o'clock in the vestry of the church. Mr. Hall of Quincy will lead the meeting. All are especially invited to attend.

The Ladies' social circle of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Wollaston, will hold a business and sewing meeting Wednesday March 4, at 2 P. M. at Mrs. C. H. Durgin's.

Reception at Wollaston.

The reception given by George and Martha Washington, at Mrs. Ross', Central avenue, Wollaston, on Wednesday evening, under the auspices of the Ladies' Society of the Methodist church, was a great success. The house was packed by friends who came to pay their respects to the distinguished pair.

Mr. and Mrs. Washington were finely personated by Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Emerson, who were dressed in Continental style. Several of the guests also wore the costumes of many years ago.

Music was furnished on the violin by Miss Bjorkman with Miss Wilder as accompanist. Rev. C. W. Wilder read an article on "Washington as an Athlete," and also the words of a song that Washington once sung to the twin sons of Chief Justice Ellsworth, of Connecticut. Miss Mabel Hastings gave a recitation and General and Lady Washington, on being introduced to the audience, made brief addresses. Coffee and cake were served.

Fine Entertainment.

A very pleasing entertainment was given at Doble's hall, last Thursday week. It was arranged by Mrs. Gracie J. Lawton of Quincy, formerly of Braintree; and nearly every selection received applause; and the one by Miss Marshall of Boston was rapturously received, and three times she was called out. There was also some fine selections by Ellis orchestra:

Song. "I don't want to play in your yard," was sung in costume by a little miss of Boston, Miss Polly Marshall.

Solo, Mrs. Bell Morton.

Piano Solo, Miss Mamie Walsh of Boston.

An original dialogue by 6 girls, "The New Year's Call."

Solo, Mrs. M. C. Holmes.

Piano, Violin, Cornet Solo, William, James and Mary McConarty.

Recitation, Miss Polly Marshall.

Recitation, Miss Edith Marshall.

Piano Solo, Miss Mary McConarty.

Recitation, Miss Frances A. Tate.

Instrumental Duet, Miss Mamie and Maud Walsh.

Song, Miss Genevieve Tate "Alabama Coon."

Duet, Miss Nellie Kelly and Miss May Haynes.

Song, by 6 little girls, "Betty and the Baby."

Song, Miss Genevieve Tate.

By special request Mrs. Lawton played her piece, Gov. Greenhalge March.

Piano and Cornet Solo, Mr. Harry Huntington and Miss Haskell.

Piano Solo, Miss Marie Coughlin.

A Fine Entertainment.

The entertainment by the Young People's Christian Alliance at the Universalist vestry on Wednesday evening was by home talent, and very much enjoyed. Mrs. Emma A. Burrill announced the pieces, and the following was the programme:

Piano solo,—Miss Swift.
Reading,—Miss Gertrude Walker.
Solo,—Master Mitchell.
Reading,—Miss Nellie Galvin.
Cornet solo,—Master Huntington.
Reading,—Miss Walker.
Solo,—Mrs. Craig.
Reading,—Miss Galvin.
Solo,—Mrs. Morton.
Solo,—Master Mitchell.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

The men's meeting on Sunday at the Y. M. C. A. will be addressed by Mr. J. E. Merritt, the physical director. He will speak upon, "The true Athlete. The meeting will commence at 3 30 P. M. There will be a rousing song service including solo singing by Mr. Albert L. Hayden. All men will be made welcome.

Saturday morning at 9.45 o'clock there will be a meeting for boys, addressed by Secretary Colton. Parents should see that their boys coming to the gymnasium leave in time for this meeting.

SOUTH QUINCY.

Mr. Harry Moyes of South Quincy has gone to Barre, Vt.

Mr. Arthur Steer spent Washington's birthday with his parents on Rodman street.

Miss Mary Gallagher has accepted a position as clerk at the Phoenix pharmacy.

The granite business has taken a boom and from now out things will be rushing it is hoped.

Mrs. Michael Daly of Water street fell last week at her home fracturing a rib.

Miss Catherine Tinker of Franklin street has gone to Concord, N. H., on a two weeks' visit to her parents.

The flag was at half mast on the Adams school Tuesday in respect to a third grade pupil, Willie Haynes, who died suddenly Monday.

Work has begun on the new fish market on Water street.

The ladies' auxiliary of the St. John's C. L. & A. A., will hold a leap year party after Lent.

Mr. Nelson Hersey has just purchased a horse and is now prepared to do all carting and jobbing promptly. As spring is coming, and you will want to move, remember that Mr. Hersey is prepared to accommodate you.

The afternoon meeting at the Calvary Baptist church will be addressed on Sunday by Rev. A. M. Merrell of Boston, who will speak of his personal experiences as a missionary in Africa. Mr. Merrell was under Bishop Taylor, of the Self-support Mission, and knows what it is to be left alone in the heart of Africa without support.

MILTON.

The railroad crossing gates at East Milton have been frozen for a week.

Rev. Mr. Dougherty will preach at the Congregational church Sunday for the last time. The society will then hear candidates from whom to select a pastor.

Mr. D. J. Brown gave an entertainment and supper Tuesday evening to the Sunday school of the Baptist church.

The young people are looking forward to the coming leap year party of the 400.

A pleasing musical and literary entertainment for the benefit of the Congregational church was given at Ellsworth hall on Wednesday evening. Those to contribute were: Miss Mary Webster, pianist; Miss Edna Louise Sutherland, reader; Miss Gertrude Dennis, violinist; Miss Edna Josslyn, soprano soloist.

It is claimed that the recent caucus was not called according to the caucus act and all of the candidates nominated have filed nomination papers.

The Warrant Committee, which have been considering the several articles in the warrant for the annual town meeting to be held next Monday, make the following recommendations:

Appropriations: Schools, $45,000 and the sum of $2,500 for deficiency; highways, $30,000, of which $1,000 shall be reserved for the employement of a competent road engineer; improvement of cemetery, $2,000; Public library, $1,200 and dog tax; support of poor, $7,500 and gross receipts of sales at poor farm; fire department, $15,000; police department, $15,000; street lighting, $8,960; salaries of town officers, $5,500; Town Hall and lot, $1,000; State aid, $1,000; printing, $1,300; miscellaneous general, $2,000; interest, $6,500; abatements, $5,000; contingent fund, $4,000; assessors, $425; health department, $1,500; Memorial day, $200; insurance, $1,500; hydrants, $6,300; extension of fire alarm, $1,900; for Sewer commissioners, $40,000; electric lights on Randolph avenue $600; on Pleasant street, $300; Capen street, $40; horse sheds at school houses, $1,000; transportation of school children, $2,500; rebuilding Pleasant street, $10,000; enlargement of Pleasant Street school, $4,000; rebuilding sidewalk on Adams street, $1,000; electric lights on Hillside street, $400; plank walk on Thacher street, $900; clerk for selectmen, $300.

Surprise and Presentation.

The many friends of Mr. Jasper B. Wentworth of Dorchester gave him a royal surprise at his residence on Tuesday evening. The company were all members of the Round About club, and anything but a grand good time with them is out of the question. Covers were spread for twenty and at the conclusion, Mr. John McNutt in a few well chosen remarks assisted by Mr. George W. Bean, presented Mr. Wentworth with a beautiful bust ornament from the members of the club, and which had been ingeniously concealed beneath a large exquisite floral bell that occupied the centre of the table. Mr. Wentworth, though dumbfounded for a few minutes showed he was equal to the occasion and his words of gratitude were admired by all.

Andrew and Philip.

In the Centre Congregational church, a strong organization of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip was formed early in January, with the following officers:

President,—Ernest D. Gourd.
Vice President,—Rev. E. N. Hardy.
Recording Secretary,—H. Everett Crane.
Corresponding Secretary,—W. W. Parry.
Treasurer,—Walter C. Sampson.
Chairman of Social Committee,—Delcivare King.
Chairman of Devotional Committee,—Albert L. Hayden.

Bi-monthly cottage prayer meetings are held in various parts of the parish under the auspices of the Brotherhood, and already the organization is exerting a strong influence in the church.

The invocation was by Rev. Edward Norton, Scripture lesson by Rev. Preston Gurney, responses were led by Rev. Carleton P. Mills, prayer by Rev. E. A. Robinson, sermon by Rev. George L. Perin, D. D. Hymns were read by Rev. G. B. Shanor and Rev. J. E. Bagley, and Rev. C. W. Wilder pronounced the benediction.

District Court, Quincy.

John Johnson was fined $5 for drunkenness at Quincy.

Axel Carlson was fined $5 for drunkenness at Quincy.

George A. Collier was fined $5 for drunkenness at Quincy, and $10 for assault on his wife Lucy Collier. Collier got a little money Monday and immediately filled himself up with rum. He went home about 9.45 that evening, but the supper his wife had prepared he did not like for he wanted meat. He then went out and returned shortly after 11 o'clock and drove his wife out of the house. When she attempted to go back he grabbed her by the throat and choked her.

Charles Gallagher was arraigned for drunkenness at Quincy, and given two weeks in which to pay a fine of $5.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

The Shawmut Spring Water stands second to none as a pure drinking water. Hundreds of families are using it every day. It is an important factor in maintaining health, building up and restoring the organs of digestion to healthy action. Cures Rheumatic, Kidney and Bladder troubles, when drugs have proved useless.

Send your order for a 5-gallon sample package. If you don't like it, it costs you nothing. Drink it and you will be satisfied of its purity.

The Wisdom Of Trading Here.

Confidence in the people you trade with, should be the first principle of shopping with the thinking buyer.

If one needs the services of a physician, he naturally has a preference, and its nothing but confidence in the man you talk with that leads you to follow his advice to the letter. The sole aim of the clerks in many of the stores of today, seems to be the one object of selling goods, no matter by what means or by what misrepresentations.

At this store things are different, the great fundamental principle of this business is to keep the interest of our patrons at heart—misrepresent nothing, and sell the best the market produces at money-saving prices. These methods alone account for the success of this business and the confidence the people have in our store system.

County Finances.

In an interview with the Journal, Ex-Commissioner J. Q. A. Field replies to personal statements of Chairman Morrell of the County Commissioners, as to contracts for granite, denying that he ever had a contract with the County Commissioners; but that he did have one with the builders.

Continuing the interview, he says, "Investigation shows that there has been paid out in building, furnishing, heating, etc., over $395,000. Contracts for the same I find on file to the amount of $279,338, leaving $115,572 paid out for which I find no contracts on file.

"Chairman Morrell is reported as saying that if the Commissioners had laid out all the highways asked for last year, the damages would have doubled the amount asked for, namely, $20,000. I find as a matter of record that in June, 1895, about a month after the bill was signed making them that allowance, that transfers amounting to $21,500 were made from seven items. A total of $21,500, which Chairman Morrell discovered in one month that he would not need for the purpose named in his estimates.

Nov. 6, 1895, there were transferred $10,500, making a total of $32,000. I think this is significant, as it shows that they did not require the money for the purpose for which it was appropriated, which fact was the contention of the remonstrants at the hearing at the State House last year.

"I find by the Commissioners' report that the county expenditures for 1895 were $197,325.65. Of this was paid for the addition to the Court House $10,092 38; for repairs and furnishings, $84,304.95; a note $5,000; total, $99,397.33; leaving the sum of $97,928 32 for ordinary expenses.

"Allowing $2,000 for the average repairs and furnishings, and a note of $10,000 to be paid in 1896, we find a total of $109,928 32 needed for 1896. From this sum deduct the receipts, which amount to $11,446.61, and the cash on hand, $8,255.04, making a total of $19,701 65, we find the required amount for 1896 to be $90,226 67.

"The Commissioners have asked for $132,500 in excess of receipts, or a total of $143,946 61. Will the Chairman please explain for what purpose the balance of $53,719.94 is to be paid?

"The county records show that for 10 years prior to 1892 the average annual county expenditures were $70,000, and this sum included extra expenses paid for an aqueduct, new boilers and an electric lighting plant at the Dedham Jail, new drainage and the Truant School.

"The Chairman states that Norfolk County has the lowest tax rate per $1000 of any county in the Commonwealth. Is that any argument for unnecessary expenditures? He further states that Congressman Morse and others were at the hearing last year before the Legislative Committee.

"Does he recollect that the witnesses admitted that they knew nothing about the facts, but merely thought that the county ought to have good buildings, something which nobody denies?

"I have to say to Chairman Morrell that, as far as I am concerned, if the judgment of the present Board of County Commissioners was but to go beyond the original intention, as regards the changes in the Court House (and as proof of the original intent I would refer him to contract made with the architect), the public could criticise the judgment only. But it is the business methods employed in carrying that increase into effect that I criticise and which I, for one, would like to see some light thrown upon."

School Committee.

The School Committee held its regular monthly meeting Tuesday evening at which all members were present.

There was no business to occupy the attention of the board in open session, and they almost immediately went into executive session to consider the annual budget of appropriations.

—The officers of the new Dorchester Savings bank have been elected, and it is proposed to start business at once, either at Upham's corner or Field's corner.

IT IS something very unusual for a weekly paper to issue five numbers in February, but the PATRIOT gives full measure this month.

THE SELECTION of Mr. W. H. Brasee may solidify the Wollaston Democracy, which is already practically solid, but how will the Democrats of the city feel if they have already endorsed Mr. Burns?

THE SELECTMEN of Milton estimate that the tax rate of the town for the next nine years will increase $1.19 per $1000 each year because of the Metropolitan sewer. It won't be a taxpayers' paradise long at that rate.

THE HEARING before the legislative committee at the State House, Wednesday, on the libel law was well attended by newspaper men from different parts of the State. The Quincy LEDGER and PATRIOT were represented by their editor. The OBSERVER was represented by F. W. Crooker.

ONLY A DOZEN towns now have municipal electric lighting plants, viz: Braintree, Danvers, Hingham, Hull, Marblehead, Middleboro, Needham, North Attleboro, Peabody, Reading, Wakefield and Wellesley. Besides Quincy, the cities of Taunton and Waltham and the town of West Springfield aspire to have plants of their own. In Quincy the arc light supplied by a company cost $75 per year; in Braintree which has a municipal plant the cost fluctuates. In 1894 it was estimated at $47.55, while in 1895 it appears to have been $84.17. If the cost is to double each year Quincy does not want a municipal plant.

SOME PAPERS do not seem to understand that the representation in the Massachusetts House is based on the legal voters—not on the population or the registered voters. The LEDGER pointed out in its issue of Dec. 14 that if the membership of the House remained the same, which has not yet been determined by the Legislature, Norfolk county without Cohasset would be entitled to thirteen as for the past ten years. The basis of representation would then be 2,337, and Quincy with 4,325 legal voters would lack but 339 of being entitled to two at the start. But Quincy is gaining more rapidly than the towns of the county and there is no question but it should have two representatives by itself beginning next year.

BECAUSE THE sum of $75,000 has been named, possibly off hand, in the first draft of the order for new schoolhouses, it does not follow that that sum will finally be appropriated, or that it is actually necessary for the construction of schoolhouses after any plan proposed. It is said that the estimate for nine-room buildings under the plans approved by the School Committee will not exceed $32,000 each, which would be less than Fall River and New Bedford pay for eight-room buildings. The cost of the Lincoln building of eight rooms was $24,150 or $3,020 per room. The proposed buildings are of nine rooms requiring a material change in construction, and at $32,000 each would make the cost per room but $3,555.

At the time the appropriation was made for the purchase of the school lot at "The Rail," objection was made by some that it would cost a large sum to make it fit to build upon. It now seems that the estimate for this work is $2,500, which must be included in the order, but this should not be charged up against any architect. Even with this extra cost, Quincy may secure nine-room buildings for $35,000 or less, which is as low a figure as in other cities. However would it not be a good idea to appropriate $75,000 "or so much thereof as may be necessary," and not borrow the whole amount unless needed? This might keep the city debt down $5,000 to $10,000.

Golden Wedding.

Fifty years ago, Feb. 26 Mr. Abraham Rich led to the altar Mrs. Anna Maria Andrews of Quincy, and the Globe says: "The happiest man in the Quincy market Wednesday was Mr. Abraham Rich, the senior member of the firm of Rich & Matthews, the oldest fish dealer in the market.

Mr. Rich was 75 years of age the 20th of last month, and Mrs. Rich was 70 last Sunday. He was born in Wellfleet, down on the Cape, and has been engaged in the fish business one way or another all his life.

He has been for the past 25 years in business in the market, and is probably the best known of anybody there in his line of business.

Mrs. Rich was a Charlestown girl. Both enjoy the best of health.

There were 80 friends present at the little orthodox wedding, which took place in Quincy 50 years ago, and of this number 14 are alive, among them being the groomsman and the bridesmaid, which is rather an interesting fact.

Owing to the illness of Mrs. Matthews, the only living child of Mr. and Mrs. Rich, and the wife of Mr. Rich's partner, no very elaborate celebration took place.

St. George Anniversary.

Granite lodge, No. 193, Order Sons of St. George, celebrated its tenth anniversary by a concert and ball at Hancock hall, Friday evening, Feb. 21, by a large gathering of the members with their friends and ladies.

A pleasing concert opened the exercises consisting of remarks by Past President James Rapson; songs by Mr. John P. Penhall, Mr. Ernest Tutton and Mr. Chas. Craig, recitation by Mr. Priestly, selection by the Quincy Male quartette; duet by Misses F. and B. Holton; dulcimer solo by Mr. H. Johnson, negro sketch by Dan Haley, harmonica and banjo solos by Mr. Charles Barron, violin solo by Miss Priestly, and scientific ball punching by Mr. John Robertson.

At the conclusions of the entertainment came the dance which was under the direction of Boston Commandery, No. 2, U. S. K, as follows: Floor Director, Sergt. F. Norris, of Boston; assistant floor director, Col. W. Crowe of Boston; aids,—Lieut A. Sheather, Sergt. W. Woods, Comrade A. Parson, Comrade A. Sheatle, Bros. A. Richards, C. H. Spargo, Walter Deacon, W. Richards.

For the Patriot.

Letter from the State House.

BOSTON, Feb. 26, 1896.

The marble bust of Gov. Greenhalge by the artist Kitson which has been on exhibition for some weeks and will be presented in the house on Friday, is the gift of the people of Lowell. The state is much better provided with portraits of her governors than with their busts, for the bust of Gov. Boutwell, which used to stand in the state library and has been stored in the new library recently, is the only gubernatorial bust in the possession of the state. A plaster bust of Gov. Long used to stand on a pedestal in the old library and it is now stored in the new one. It was the work of a moulder named Pierre Millet, the brother of the French artist, who was desirous of trying his hand on so good a subject as John D. Long. But it was never regarded as a specially fine bust. It is said that Millet probably gave it to the governor. When the latter went out of office he gave the bust to Librarian Tillinghast, who sat it on the pedestal where stood a bust of John Todd. Nobody knew who Todd was and it became so annoying to explain repeatedly who he was that the librarian thought it would be better to put up the counterfeit presentment of a man who would be recognized by the people. But the state never paid anything for the bust and it has never had any official position. There are plenty of portraits of the old governors, the most recent of which were obtained by the unpaid commission of which Samuel J. Elder was chairman. They were given by the family friends at their own expense and the state gives them a first rate position. A marble bust of Gov. Ames is all ready for presentation to the state and it will probably be sent up before long. It was finished before the ex governor died. Besides these, there is a marble bust of Lucy Stone which her friends wish to give to the state. When the new memorial hall is finished, there will be a suitable place for exhibiting these memorials of the distinguished people of Massachusetts, but there is no suitable place now. From the present rush for statues on the state house grounds, it would seem as if all the niches in the temple of fame and all the available spots on her lawn besides would be filled by present candidates, leaving no place for future aspirants.

The woman suffragists are making a great show with their petitions both for municipal and general suffrage, but it does not yet appear how much will be the effect of the vote last fall against the proposition. Each side claims a great victory and only the action of the legislature will reveal what was its practical outcome. The hearings have not been begun yet, but the petitioners number several thousands.

It has never happened before, according to the statement of Speaker Meyer, that the funeral of an ex-governor has come at a time when the legislature would usually be in session. Hence no precedent existed for their guidance in the case of ex Gov. Robinson's funeral on Wednesday. Some of the leading members of the house were disposed to sit without regard to the obsequies of our distinguished public servant, but it was the judgment of both President Lawrence and Speaker Meyer that it would be more fitting to the occasion for the legislature not to do its business. This did not hinder the sitting of committees and sessions were accordingly held as usual on Wednesday forenoon.

Probably the feeling on the part of the legislature was due to the prominence of Gov. Robinson in the present life of the state. He was not a citizen laid on the shelf by old age or infirmity, but he was in the vigor of his powers and was looked up to by a great many men in the state as a strong Republican leader, even today, though he had retired to private life. I question whether the legislature would have adjourned out of respect to the memory of ex-Gov. Gardner, or ex-Gov. Banks, if his death had chanced to occur at the time of Gov. Robinson's, for there is a difference in the estimation in which public men are held. But now that the precedent has been established, it may be followed when the lamented dead is of less rank in the popular mind than George D. Robinson was.

The traditions which Gov. Robinson left at the state house were of the most agreeable sort. He was thoroughly Democratic in his ways. There always clung to him something of the air of the schoolmaster which he could never wholly outgrow. He was not of the nature to unbend himself wholly to the popular level, though there was not a man whom it was easier to approach. He lacked ostentation in public life. He was the furtherest removed from his immediate predecessor who insisted upon the title of "supreme executive magistrate" and who was fond of posing in the public eye. Robinson was strong-minded and positive in his convictions and was conscientious in the discharge of his public duties. At the dinner of the Boston Congregational club on Monday evening, Edwin D. Mead said of him that he was a distinctly religious man and that he rarely missed going from Boston to Chicopee on Saturday, when he was governor, in order to teach his Sunday school class the next day. Surely there have been few of our recent governors of whom the same could be said. He was a man who was accustomed to doing his own work for himself. He found it difficult to employ a private secretary at first. He used to write his messages with his own hand and used to do a great deal of work in his first term which he afterwards learned to put upon subordinates, with no detriment to the public service. He was one of the strong men of the state and he will be missed, though he was no longer in public life.

The committee on taxation has ended its hearings upon the exemption of foreign stocks from taxation and will next week take up the question of the exemption of municipal bond. The hearings have been shortened this year materially, only five having been given where about a dozen were last year. It is said that ex-Senator Durant, the counsel for the Anti-Double Taxation League and also its president, is more direct in managing and speaking than Richard H. Dana was and hence the hearings have covered the same ground in less time. The struggle is really more vigorous this year than it was last because of the attitude of the merchants' municipal committee of Boston. Though there is no connection between this committee and the Anti-Double Taxation League, yet each organization is for the further exemption of personal property. The committee wants to make a change which would at once add 20 per cent. to the present tax on real estate, trusting to the distribution of that tax over other interests to make it equitable for the entire community. But of course this very proposition will make it encounter the strenuous opposition of all who will feel the force of 20 per cent., but will not be by any means as clear about the other part of the theory. Hence it is not at all likely that the movement will succeed. Perhaps in the future, after several years more of discussion and after a demonstration by the rich men that they do not seek for this exemption in order to increase the taxes of the poor they may persuade a majority of the legislature that it will be for the interests of the state to pass the bill. But until there has been some such demonstration, it is probable that the scheme will be defeated, no matter whether it comes from a Democratic mayor of Boston, as it does this year, or whether the same body of men, practically, should present the same petition through the cabinet of some Republican mayor.

In the one contested election case in the house which has been carried to a finish, the majority of the committee on elections, and the majority of the house were in favor of seating the Democrat. The whole issue was, whether the intent of the voter could be reasonably ascertained. Some of the members thought it could and that the vote ought to be counted for the Republican making a tie and involving a new election. Others said that it ought not to be counted at all, leaving the Democrat with one majority and settling the case. It was conceded all around that if a new election were held the Democrat would be elected. The district is decidedly Democratic and only a quarrel gave the Republican his large vote. But they threw out the ballot and let in the Democrat. RULE.

Banquet at Greenleaf.

Mt. Joy Perceptory, Royal Black Knights of the Camp of Israel, held its third annual banquet at The Greenleaf, Monday evening, and a very enjoyable occasion it proved to be.

Previous to the banquet the following officers were installed for the ensuing year:

W. P.,—Frank Tinney.
D. P.,—Frank E. Hunter.
Chaplain,—A. M. I. McLeod.
Registrar,—Murdock A. Campbell.
Treasurer,—William McInnes.
First Lecturer,—John McPherson.
Second Lecturer,—Malcolm McKenzie.
First Censor,—Daniel F. Tinney.
Second Censor,—Hugh Gillis.
First Standard bearer,—Charles F. Archibald.
Second Standard bearer,—William J. McLeod.
Pursuivant,—Andrew Stewart.
Taler,—John Ross.
Committee,—M. C. McDonald, M. A. Campbell, A. M. I. McLeod, A. Stewart, F. Tinney, William McInnes, John McPherson.

Shortly after 9 o'clock the members entered the hotel and seated themselves in the banquet hall, and for an hour were busy discussing the menu.

This pleasant duty over, Chairman McLeod called order, and in a few words welcomed those present and tendered his sympathy to those who were unable to be present on account of illness. He then said the Royal Black Knight was to the L. O. L, what the Knights Templar were to Masonry. The order was instituted in the thirteenth century by descendents of William, Prince of Orange, to defend truth against all idolatry and infidelity, and to give every man liberty to worship God according to his own dictations; also to to support those in distress. The members aim to imitate the example of such patriarchs as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph with Moses, Joshua, and it purposes when joined in the bond of brotherhood to maintain inviolate the laws of God against the false worship of idols, as well as to support all religious rulers and states against their foes, foreign or domestic.

W. P., Frank Tinney, was next called upon, and in responding he thanked the members for the honor bestowed upon him. We are bound together to maintain the true religion founded on the Holy Bible. Let us protect these glorious principles. Let us respect each other as brothers, and be true to the country and flag of the United States. It is our duty to protect this flag, that the memory of our fathers who fought for it may be handed down to our children. We live in a free country, and enjoy rights as citizens, and let us see to it that by our actions we do not debase those great principles.

Other brief remarks were made by R. A. McQueen, Frank E Hunter, T. Walter Good, John Ross, Andrew Stewart, Malcolm McKenzie, M. A. Campell, C. F. Archibald and others.

Those present were: A. M. I. McLeod, W. J. McLeod, William Dawson, Frank Tinney, Frank E. Hunter, Daniel F. Tinney, Murdock C. McDonald, William McInnes, John McPherson, Hugh Gillis, R A McQueen, Andrew Stewart, A. Buchanan, D. V. McKenzie, James Beaton, M. A. Campbell, C. F. Archibald, Malcolm McLeod, Malcolm McKenzie, T. Walter Good, John Ross, Christopher J. H. Totman and PATRIOT representative.

Mid-Winter Festival.

There was a large gathering at the Congregational church Tuesday evening, when a very pleasing entertainment was given under the auspices of the Sunday School.

The programme was as follows:

Scenes from Cantata of Red Riding Hood. Mrs. H. T. Drake as mother, Miss Grace Isaac as Red Riding Hood, and Harry Moore as the Wolf.

There were also solos by Bessie Merrill, Edith Stanley, Maggie Bradford and Miss Dunbar, and singing by a large chorus.

Recitation, "Katie's Answer," Miss Sampson.
Songs of Seven.
Tableau, "The Coming Woman."
Reveries of a Bachelor.
Tableau, "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean."
Closing chorus.

The second night of the midwinter festival at the Evangelical Congregational church was even more of a pleasing success than on Tuesday. It opened at 6.30 with a fine supper by the Chapel Builders, when the attendance far exceeded the expectations. Escalloped oysters, salads, turkey, ham, pies, coffee, etc., were served by a bevy of pretty young ladies.

The entertainment of the evening followed, under the direction of Mrs. Wood, who received the hearty cooperation of the young people. It delighted the large audience. Miss Grace Isaac was a charming "Red Riding Hood," and Mrs. Herbert T. Drake, as "mother," was at her best. "The Blue Bells" was a hit of the evening with Bessie Merrill as the "wee bit of a blossom." The chorus songs were all good, and the effect of the tableaux was heightened by calcium light.

Each evening the King's Daughters sold home-made candies, and the two days' festival was a financial as well as a social success.

Route of Quarry Railroad.

The proposed extension of the Quincy Quarry railroad, when completed, will enable quarry owners on the North Common to enjoy the same transportation facilities, as those west of the Granite branch, and they will therefore be able to compete successfully with other places.

The route as shown by the plan accompaning the petition to the City Council is as follows:

Commencing from a point about 1,000 feet north of the Quincy Adams station, going north the track turns to the left, crossing the estate of the heirs of Daniel Baxter and crossing Granite street, near the office of Swithin Bros., by an overhead bridge fourteen feet above street. The line then runs nearly parallel with Gass place through land of the Adams Real Estate Trust, passing near numerous ledges and unoccupied quarries until near the quarry of Fagan & Ballou when it makes a long sweeping curve, crossing Quarry street and passing near the Matthews quarry and ending near what is known as the Carr quarry.

From the main line there are numerous spur tracks, the first of which runs into Field & Wild's quarry. Then comes the quarry of C. H. Hardwick & Co., which has a spur on each side of its quarry. Other spurs reach quarries of the Craig & Richards Granite Co., Merry Mount, Hitchcock, Dell, Fallon, and many others whose names do not appear on the map.

A Pleasant Gathering.

Miss Lizzie McAuliffe of Bennington street gave a very pleasant "at home" to her friends last evening. The evening was spent very pleasantly in games, singing, etc. Some very pleasing vocal solos were given by Miss Sadie Gleason, Mr. James McKay, Miss Lizzie Gleason and Mr. John Toland, all of South Boston. Mr. John Walsh gave a vocal solo, with Mr. John Ross as accompanist; Miss Jennie Griffin and Miss Lizzie McAuliffe gave recitations; also piano solos by Miss Mary Powers and Mr. Stephen Pierce.

Among those present were Miss Sadie Gleason, Miss Lizzie Gleason, Mr. James McKay, Mr. John Toland of South Boston; Mrs. Edward Power, Mr. John Ross, Mr. John Walsh, Miss Jennie Griffin Miss Nellie Griffin, Miss Mary Powers, Miss Katie Powers, Mr. Stephen Pierce. Ices and cake were served during the evening.

—There were 57 births, 28 deaths and 25 marriages in Holbrook in 1895.

International Arbitration.

By request, the pastor of the First Presbyterian church preached Sunday evening upon "International Arbitration." After speaking of the recent excitement over the Venezuela correspondence, he said that there are three methods of settling differences between nations: Back down, fight or arbitrate. The first course would soon make a nation of craven cowards. The second has always developed heroes, and war has therefore been lauded as the great source of courage; it has also been advocated as the solvent of industrial troubles. Until our generation war has been the staple of historians and the phrensy of poets. The great Russian Verestchagin has on canvas depicted it more truly as the sum of all horrors; and the philosophy of history is teaching us that war is organized pugilism and wholesale murder, developing for every hero many braggart and brutal cowards. War is always followed by widespread immorality and crime, and every apparent industrial betterment is paid for in long years of slow recovery. Arbitration is the method of Christianity and civilization.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

At the regular Sunday evening service of the First Presbyterian church of Quincy, Massachusetts, February 23, 1896, at the close of a sermon on "International Arbitration" by the pastor, the people (250 being present) by a general show of hands, directed the pastor to forward through William E. Dodge, of New York, these resolutions:

RESOLVE,—That we wish the governments of the United States and Great Britian, by formal treaty, to establish arbitration as the method of concluding all differences, which may fail of settlement by diplomacy, between the two powers.

RESOLVE,—That war between these nations, which stand in the forefront of Christian civilization, would retard the progress of the world and disgrace the cause of Our Lord Jesus Christ."—

Q. H. S. Debating Society.

The Quincy High School Debating Society met on Wednesday and Miss Burke, '97, vice president, presided.

Mr. William Walsh, secretary, presented his report.

The debate of last week on "Prize Speaking" was concluded. Mr. Coe and Miss Leake spoke.

Mr. Foley, the critic, then offered his report.

The election of officers was held next. Miss Rothwell and Mr. Wilkins were the candidates for president. Miss E. Healey and Mr. Nichols were nominated for treasurer. For secretary, Miss Joss and Miss Hayes were nominated.

The following were elected:
President,—Mr. Wilkins, '97.
Secretary,—Miss Joss, '97.
Treasurer,—Mr. Nichols, '97.

The entertainment followed:
Recitation, Miss Roche, '96.
Essay, Miss Leake '97.
Recitation,—Mr. King, '97.

The new debate was begun. "Resolved, That the Pupils have as many Duties to the School as the School has to the Pupil."

In the affirmative were Mr. Briggs, Mr. Foley and Mr. MacKenzie.

The negative was championed by Mr. Saunders.

The debate will be concluded next week.

The Quickest and Best.

The Atlantic Coast Line, via Richmond, Va., has again placed at the service of the travelling public the celebrated "New York-Florida Special." Here is one of the triumphs of railroading as it enables tourists to reach the beautiful winter resorts of the South with perfect ease and with luxurious surroundings. One night only between Boston and Florida. Exclusively Pullman Vestibuled rain composed of dining, sleeping, library and observaion cars. A perfect road-bed running hrough a section of the country historical and picturesque. The route is via Washington and Richmond to Charlestown, Savannah, Jacksonville, and St. Augustine. This is the quickest and best line also, to Thomasville, Brunswick, Aiken, Augusta and Middle Georgia.

Before deciding on your trip be sure to consult the illustrated pamphlets and descriptive matter of the Atlantic Coast Line.

Write to J. H. Johnson, N. E. A., 300 Washington street, Boston Mass, for illustrated books and pamphlets of the Southern Hotels. tf

TWENTY-ONE. Where could you expect to hear a better concert than that to be given in Faxon hall next Wednesday evening? Twenty-one college boys in vocal selections, mandolin and guitar playing. There will also be a reader to help entertain. Among the many selections which the boys sing the following are noted, "She Simply Shook Her Head," "At Twenty, Forty, Sixty," "She was but Seven," "Laugh Boys Laugh," and "The New Fashioned Girl." Don't fail to hear them.

Scrofula Bunches

Formed on my neck and humor broke out on my face. Sores came on my forehead and caused me much suffering. I took my doctor's prescriptions for the blood and other troubles, without much benefit. The scrofula not improving I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla upon the recommendation of my friends, and it has effected a permanent cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla has also given me strength and renewed health. I gladly recommend it as an effective blood medicine." MISS CARRIE M. WELLS, Sanbornton, N.H. P.O. address, Laconia.

WHAT HEADACHE IS.

The Danger Signal that Nature Gives to Women.

It Signifies That Serious Female Trouble Is Imminent.

Most female diseases manifest their presence by a headache.

When a dull heavy ache in the head is accompanied by disordered stomach, bad taste in the mouth, dull eyes, pains in back and groins, lassitude, nervousness, despondency and irregularity, it is time to locate the trouble and remove it. We will tell you right now that the symptoms indicate positively that serious womb trouble is imminent.

Don't let this fearful disease get you in its power. If you are uncertain, write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., giving full symptoms. Your letter will be read, acted upon and answered by one of your own sex, and without charge.

Note Mrs. Snyder's letter to Mrs. Pinkham.

"Before taking your remedies, day after day I would read the testimonials of women who had been cured by the use of your Vegetable Compound.

"At last I decided to write and tell you my condition.

"I had been examined by physicians who told me that my womb was very large and prolapsed, and also said there was a growth on the inside of the womb that must be out out; menstruations were so painful that I suffered for three days of every month, and it was impossible to get any rest. For two months I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Blood Purifier and Sanative Wash, and now I am entirely cured. I had suffered nine years, thinking there was no cure for me, and it only took five bottles of your remedies to cure me."—MRS. L. SNYDER, Trenton Junction, N. J.

OUR MOTIVE IN QUOTING THESE EXTRAORDINARY LOW PRICES—Our place of business, 78 Beach street, opposite U. S. Hotel is one of the nearest stores to the Albany, Old Colony and N. Y. & N. E. Depots, rendering it the most convenient place for those who travel on these roads to make purchases.

We hope the same inducement that has obtained for us the largest hotel and restaurant trade in the city, namely, low prices and a true representation of our goods to the buyer, will have the same favorable results—a larger and increasing trade—with the patrons of these roads.

We do not pay freight or express charges on goods going out of town sold at these prices.

School House Plans.

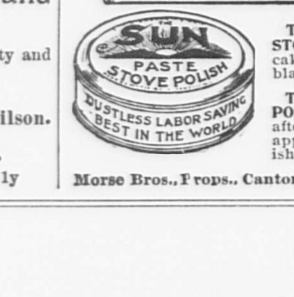

A member of the School Committee when seen in regard to the charges made by Councilman Sprague at the Council meeting of Feb. 17, said he did not know that Mr. Moxon had ever seen any of the other plans and did not see any reason in Councilman Sprague's claim. As a matter of fact there were other plans than those of Mr. Moxon presented at the special meeting of the School Board, and as the committee understood, at Councilman Sprague's suggestion. The committee did not consider that the time had, even now, expired for approving plans, and had other plans been presented at this meeting there would have been no hesitation in approving them. With the plans sent at this meeting by Mr. Moxon was a letter in which he stated that one member had objected to the corridors and he had widened them. The committee in view of the difficulties arising last year, by approving several sets of plans, had deemed it wise in order to expedite matters to approve of but one set of plans this year and in carrying out this idea they had selected those which seemed to meet with the most requirements, and if these did not meet the approval of the Council some other set would probably be approved.

He did not think the remarks were at all called for, as there had never been any suggestion that these plans must of necessity come through the Committee on Public Buildings of the Council.

Mr. Moxon was also seen by a representative of the DAILY LEDGER and asked if he cared to say anything for publication, in relation to the statements made by Councilman Sprague at the last meeting of the Council, concerning plans for school buildings.

He was found ready to talk and said: "I hardly think it necessary to make any comments, because I do not believe that the statements will be considered of importance, further than that they may indicate a repetition of the shiftless and obstructive tactics of last year, which prevented the building of the much needed school building. It may however be in order for me to say, that the plans as approved by the School Board do not contain a single feature which did not appear in them as first presented, and which were also contained in plans presented by me last year and withdrawn when the confusion became so apparent. In fact the present plans do not present any constructional "ideas" which are not embodied in the present Lincoln school building, but the addition of one school room gives a different appearance and allows more room for other conveniences. It also compels a comparatively greater cost of construction. So far as ideas are concerned, this is the "whole story." It is also an absolute fact, that up to the present moment I have not seen a single line of any of the competing plans, and have no knowledge whatever of their provisions or appearance.

"I am quite unable to understand just what the position of the Councilman is, or why he is apparently so unwilling to accept the decision of the School Board. It is possible that some one of the other plans has advantages, which, while quite apparent to Mr. Sprague, do not present themselves to the observation of the members of the School Board. But this would hardly seem to justify the extraordinary statements which the Councilman is reported to have made, and which have been published so broadly, as to become a serious reflection upon our community. It is unfortunate that our municipal affairs can not be discussed, and matters properly adjusted, without the public use of statements, so intemperate in their character, as to lead any one not closely conversant with the real facts, to be very unfavorably impressed by the published reports."

SATURDAY, FEB. 29, 1896.

Thanksgiving for His House.

Dr. Young recited at the Vesper services at the First church in a striking manner the following dainty poem by Herrick, one of the most exquisite lyrical poets, born in 1791:

Lord, thou hast given me a cell
 Wherein to dwell;
A little house whose humble roof
 Is weather proof;
Under the spars of which I lie
 Both soft and dry.
Where Thou, my chamber for to ward,
 Hast set a guard
Of harmless thoughts to watch and keep Me while I sleep.
Low is my porch as is my fate,
 Both void of state
And yet the threshold of my door
 Is worn by the poor,
Who hither come and freely get
 Good words or meat.
Like as my parlor, so my hall,
 And kitchen small:
A little buttery, and therein
 A little bin,
Which keeps my little loaf of bread
 Unchipt, unflead.
Some little sticks of thorn or brier
 Make me a fire,
Close by whose living coal I sit
 And glow like it.
Lord, I confess too, when. I dine,
 The pulse is thine,
And all those other bits that be
 There placed by Thee.
The worts, the purslain and the mess
 Of water cress,
Which of thy kindness thou hast sent
 And my content
Makes these and my beloved beet
 To be more sweet.
'Tis Thou that crown'st my glittering heart
 With guiltless mirth,
And giv'st me wassal bowls to drink
 Spiced to the brink
Lord 'tis thy plenty-dropping hand
 That sows my land.
All this, and better, Thou doest send Me for this end
That I should render for my part
 A thankful heart.
Which, fir'd with incense, I resign
 As wholly thine;
But the acceptance, that must be,
 O Lord, by Thee.

—Massachusetts is today, as she has often been before, the conspicuous exponent of scholarly eloquence in the national Senate. No state can boast of two such accomplished orators as our own Hoar and Lodge. When they speak the Senate listens, and the country listens, too, for their eloquence is more than any mere trick of rhetoric. It is logical, finished and profound, and it appeals not more to the ear than to the understanding.—Boston Journal.

—The American newspaper correspondents in Cuba now have an excellent chance to write accounts of their own executions.—Roxbury Gazette.

—It has twice been reported, within two weeks that Dr. Nansen, the Norwegian explorer, had found the North Pole, and that he was on the way home. Several unsuccessful arctic explorers, whose course lay from a different direction, however, ridicule the story of Nansen's discovery of the North Pole, and his finding it on land instead of in the open sea. If Nansen gets home safely without the assistance of a searching party he will be doing more than most of the other arctic explorers have done even if he has not found the North Pole. — Worcester West Chronicle.

—Weymouth is a great place for tramps. One hundred were accommodated one night last week.

—It is understood that a party of prospectors will leave Boston on March 12th, via the Boston & Maine, Central Vermont, Grand Trunk, Chicago & Grand Trunk, Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, and Denver & Rio Grande Railways, for a trip to Cripple Creek and return. Messrs. Steadman & Kellogg, the well-known bankers, have the matter in charge, and in a comprehensive circular, gotten out by these gentlemen the advantages of going early are set forth. They will be pleased to open communication with all parties interested in this section of the country. For further particulars address, Steadman & Kellogg, No. 8 Congress street, Boston, Mass.

—There are 1100 students at the Stanford university in California, but Mrs. Stanford continues to assert that it will be closed at once if the government's suit to recover $15,000,000 from her husband's estate succeeds.

—Senator Vest objects to the expenditure of $125,000 per annum for flowers for the White House.

—If one-half the time wasted in exploiting idiotic fads was devoted to some useful purpose—sawing wood, if nothing better offered — many people would be much better off, mentally, physically and financially.—Pawtucket Chronicle.

—In certain cities there is a strong tendency to introduce fads and hobbies into the public schools. A gentleman living in one of these unfortunate places complained that the school committee were so intent upon introducing type-writing, sewing, cooking, and other new fashions into the school which his daughter attended, that the fundamental studies were not receiving the time and attention which is needful for a sound education. Plainly the public schools cannot be expected to teach everything. If they are to fit the young to be cooks, dressmakers, carpenters and blacksmiths, where can the limit be drawn?—Milford Gazette.

—A list of taxable polls and estates of Dedham is being distributed to the inhabitants of that town. It is said to be full of valuable information; and a similar document in Quincy would be of great interest to tax-payers. Many persons are probably taxed on property they do not own, and others that shou'd pay taxes are overlooked.

—The smallest 7-month-old baby in this country, according to the doctors, is the healthy son and heir of Mr. and Mrs. William Maeley of New Brunswick, N. J. He weighs just three pounds. When born he weighed one and a half pounds. For the first six weeks he didn't grow an ounce. In fact, he didn't do anything but sleep. His mother and grandmother, Mrs. Dunn, nursed him carefully. He was always kept warmly wrapped in flannels, and was bathed in cod liver oil. After six weeks he began to grow a little. He was so small that a set of doll's clothes were procured for him, and his hands were so small that a silver quarter would completely cover one. He enjoys excellent health, has a good appetite and sleeps well.

—At a recent meeting in Brooklyn, N. Y., Rev. R. S. Storrs, D. D., for nearly fifty years pastor of The Church of the Pilgrims in that city, gave an impressive address upon "The conditions and advantages of a long pastorate." He claimed that the first requisite was a patient and reasonable people, who did not make impossible demands upon a minister, nor fail to appreciate his faithful and efficient work. Among the advantages of a long pastorate, he noted intimate acquaintance with persons and families, the larger confidence and love which come from many years, and the broader knowledge and discipline which result from long continued service in one place. The Congregational and Unitarian churches afford many instances of long and useful pastorates. Notable among them was Rev. W. H. Furness, D. D., of Philadelphia, at the time of his death probably the oldest settled minister in America. He was ordained pastor of the First Unitarian church of Philadelphia in 1825, was sole minister till 1875, and has since that time been senior pastor.—Milford Gazette.

—The proposition made by Mayor Quincy's council of business men, that a law should be passed levying taxation throughout the state on real estate alone, relieving personal property from direct taxation, providing for a succession, or inheritance, tax, and for a general distribution of quasi-public corporation taxes, to take the place of state and county taxes, is one that is likely to be discussed a good deal before it is adopted. It has long been generally recognized that the present method of taxing personal property is inequitable, because of the ease with which personal property can be concealed and its owners so escape taxation. There has been a growing feeling, too, that a single tax on real estate would meet all taxation requirements in the best and fairest way.—Somerville Journal.

—Joseph L. Lovett of the villa of Emile, Penn., has in his possession the original deed for the land comprising his farm, bearing the signature of the Duke of York and William Penn. The family have had the farm in continuous possession, in the direct line of descent, for 212 years.

—The wine of Cyprus, famous in olden times, and moreover, the wine with which Iago makes Cassio intoxicated, has found no buyers this year, and is a glut in the island. People pour it out, waste it, or give it away. One would think they would drink it.

—Queerer suit at law was never brought than that of H. Magill against the Osage council. Magill was going through the reservation when the Indians caught and tied him, cut his hair and held a war dance around him. He sues for $10,000, and the council offers $500 to settle.

—The city of Waltham is taking the initiatory steps toward owning the gas works.

—A bill has been offered in the lower branch of the Legislature providing for a half-mill tax on all taxable property in the state, to be distributed to the cities and towns in proportion to the average attendance in the public schools for each preceding year.

Castle Square Theatre, Boston.

The Castle Square Theatre presents for the present week the great double bill, Pinafore and Cavalleria Rusticana, which has crowded the beautiful theatre for the past week. The Pinafore stage setting is a work of art, while the Cavalleria Rusticana scene is one of the most telling ever placed on the stage. A feature of each performance is the playing of the celebrated intermezzo by Mr. Herschfeldt, the musical Director. Rarely does one hear finer musical phrasing or more perfect unison than by the Castle Square Orchestra in this number. For next week, Mr. Rose announces The Mikado, being the last of the Gilbert and Sullivan season. The cast will be a strong one and the production in every way worthy of the high standard maintained by the Castle Square since May 6th last. As a further addition to the already strong company, the engagement of Mlle. Fatmah Diard is announced by the management. Mlle. Diard comes direct from Paris where she has spent some time perfecting herself and her fine soprano voice under the mentorship of Marchesi, the famous Parisian teacher. Mlle. Diard has filled several important engagements on the other side, notably with the Carl Rosa Opera Company.

[ONE THOUSAND MILES IN FLORIDA]

Palm Beach at last at half past eight at night. And there was the "Royal Poinciana" with lights streaming from every window to give us welcome; just how brilliant an illumination this was, can be imagined when you know the hotel has rooms for one thousand people. Yes, it is an immense building in the Colonial style, with broad piazzas and massive white columns. A change from all the Spanish architecture at St. Augustine; but it is a hotel built by the Jonas Flagler system, that built the Ponce de Leon, the Alcazar, and the hotel at Ormond.

Of course it was too dark to judge of what was round about us out of doors, and we were too eager for dinner to allow curiosity the ghost of a chance to assert itself. Perhaps it was this hunger too that kept us from being overawed by the vastness of the dining-room when once we were inside. Ample room for nine hundred to be seated. What a small party we were after all, but never mind, the appetite of nine hundred was certainly condensed and distributed among our three or four hundred, for was it not two hours after our dinner hour.

Morning came and we had to give but one look from our window to realize what a gloriously beautiful spot we had reached. We lost no time in starting forth to explore and enjoy. Which way first? There was the beach back of the hotel, with a broad walk leading to it, bordered with palmetto and oleander trees. In front down across the lawn and gardens was the lake. Along the lake front hard shell walks under the palm trees, passing one after another beautiful winter homes. It is a narrow strip of land this Palm Beach lying between Lake Worth and the ocean, not more than half a mile wide, but all tropical fruits grow there. We found oranges, lemons, limes and bananas, and most common of all the cocoanut palms. If we left the lake front to follow some of the trails through to the ocean what a delight it was; tall palms above our heads, thickets of the dwarf kind about our feet all in a tangle with other tropical growth. Such a pathway through the wood we could simply look and draw long breaths and look again.

Now if we reached the ocean between eleven and twelve, bathing seemed to be the one thing in everybody's mind, and to go one day was to be on hand, without fail, the next for another dip. The water was so warm, seventy-two to seventy-four degrees, it had a fascination we did not try to resist. The breakers were a little awe inspiring perhaps to the ladies, and were allowed to expend some of their energy, before an introduction was sought, but then the men even had to keep a careful eye out or behold they were treated, without ceremony, and a stray foot or hand sticking from the water was their sole representative for a moment or two.

Up from the beach and into the swimming pool to get rid of some of the sand. The water in the pool is of the same warmth and some preferred this place to bathe without the breakers.

Having used up our mornings in lazy rambling about followed by the ocean bath we were ready for lunch and then another kind of pleasure awaited. There were trips up and down the lake in the afternoon on the steamer, one of the old-fashioned kind with wheel at the back, which sent the boat through the water without the quiver and jar common to steamers now used. Stops would be made to visit pineapple plantations and vegetable farms and we were not brought back until darkness had overtaken us and the moon made for us a clear pathway.

Oh yes! it was indeed a beautiful spot to stay in, and from Sunday until Wednesday was all too short a time for our visit. Garden of Eden it has been called many times and we certainly felt we had left Eden behind when we once more crossed the lake to the main land, and with our faces turned to the north realized we were starting for home. To be sure we would make one or two short stops but not many days were left to us before we would be in Washington again and going our separate ways home.

One night and day were spent at Jacksonville. The city chartered a steamer to take us for a sail up and down the St. John's River in the morning, and in the afternoon drives and sight-seeing about the city filled in the time and then at ten that night we were off again. Did I say we were off, I mean we were to have been. Instead most of us had taken our first nap before the start was actually made. There had been an accident on the first section of the train which left us here to go west. This happened when but a few miles out from Jacksonville and although not serious caused a little fright. One of the axles broke and fortunate it was that the train had not attained great speed. We gave a sigh of relief that it had not happened to us and that nothing serious had marred the pleasure of any in our party when so near the journey's end.

Charleston was reached the next morning. It was but the night before the Mayor of the city heard of the intended arrival of three or four cars of northern visitors. To hear was to act at once, however. A telegram was sent us saying there would be carriages at the station to take us to the hotel for breakfast. After breakfast they would be again in waiting to give us a drive of two or three hours about the city —and what a drive to remember. A warm sunny day with the mist just lifting off the water and disclosing to us Fort Sumter. Through street after street with the charming old southern houses much like those spoken of in Savannah. Then winding in and about we came upon the darkies every where, more than we had seen before. At the doors, the windows, standing in the gateways and in groups upon the streets. All with wide open eyes and mouths at the procession we made. Outside the city in the country the colored women were seen hoeing in the fields. Everywhere we realized we were in a southern city; a city different in so many ways from those at the north.

After dinner we were driven again to the station and with one night more came Washington. A drizzly—damp Washington too that made us realize how fortunate we had been to have Florida weather as it should be. The good-byes had to be said and sorry we were to say them; but there was a prospect of being together again next year at Texas and it was with this hope many times expressed that we gave the last hand shake. G. W. P.

—Marshall Field, the great Chicago merchant, says that "the standard of business morality has been perceptibly falling in this country during recent years, and is still falling." That isn't to be wondered at when large firms accused of selling plated goods for solid are mulcted in the sum of only one cent, as was the decision of a judge only a few days since.—Franklin Sentinel.

The man who eats because he is hungry is, thus far, on a level with the brutes. The man who stops eating the moment his hunger is appeased is the wise man. Nature needs no more food than she calls for. Continued excess brings about indigestion or dyspepsia, with loss of flesh, strength, sleep, ambition and mental power; and an accumulation of aches, pains and many dangerous local maladies.

The stomach now can do nothing alone. We must appeal to some artificially digested food which can also digest other foods. That is to say, we must use the Shaker Digestive Cordial. The effect is prompt and cheering. The chronic pain and distress ceases. Appetite presently revives. Flesh and vigor gradually come back, and the sufferer recovers. But he must be careful in future. A trial bottle for 10 cents.

Household Receipts.

FARINA SOUP. Melt two to three tablespoonfuls of butter in a sauce-pan; when hot stir in three-quarters cupful of farina and continue stirring until it begins to color, then pour in one quart of boiling water and let boil one-quarter hour. Season with salt and pepper. Before serving beat two yolks of eggs in the soup dish with a spoonful of cold water, then pour over boiling soup.

EGG TURBOT. One dozen cold hard-boiled eggs, chopped fine, one and one-half pint of cream gravy seasoned highly with pepper and salt, celery salt and a little mixed parsley; mix with the minced eggs the juice of half a lemon, stir them into the gravy and bake with cracker crumbs strewn over the top. Serve hot.

HALIBUT OR COD CUTLETS. Have the fishdealer cut halibut into cutlets of a size suitable each for one person. Boil in separate cloths; lay upon platter and pour upon each a spoonful of drawn butter sauce in which one teaspoonful each of pickled capers, onions and cucumbers have been mixed. Garnish with tiny gherkins.

BANANA FRITTERS. These are very fine. Beat with an egg beater the yolks of two eggs light, then add, cut in pieces, two large bananas or three small ones, and beat again until the two are mixed to a light pulp; now add a teaspoonful of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of melted butter, a scant half cupful of milk, the whites of the two eggs beaten stiff and a cupful and a half of flour with a scant teaspoonful of baking powder. Beat all well together with an egg beater. Drop from a spoon in deep hot fat and fry a light brown. They should be like a puff ball. Serve with a whipped sauce.

Unanimously Adopted.

At a meeting of the Massachusetts Press Association, held at the United States hotel in Boston, recently, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, for several years past the newspaper publishers of Massachusetts have petitioned the Great and General Court for the laws relative to libel calculated to right certain existing wrongs; and

Whereas, they have waited long and patiently for the relief to which they believe they are clearly entitled; and

Whereas, there is now before the legislature a bill designed to prevent speculative suits for libel, and to promote equitable treatment of publishers by giving retractions and corrections an acknowledged status in court for appraisal at their estimated worth in mitigation of damages; therefore be it

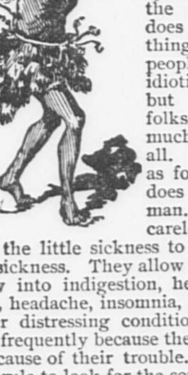

Resolved, by the members of the Massachusetts Press Association here assembled to ask the Massachusetts Legislature, now in session, to give us the relief asked in the direction of fairness as between man and man under the principle of equity and justice, to which we believe ourselves entitled in common with every other class of citizens of this Commonwealth.

The White House Free.

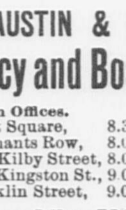

The White House, the historic home of the presidents, and the beautiful grounds surrounding it, will be given in miniature with every copy of The Boston Globe next Sunday. Every American knows and reveres this famous old mansion, and it will be so pictured on The Globe art supplement that any child may cut it out, put it together and set it up as a permanent ornament of the home.

The circulation of The Globe last Sunday, 274,189, was greater than ever before in its history. lp.

—Recent reports in regard to the acquisition of property by negroes are surprising to many who have not carefully watched the march of events. On Emancipation day the statement was made in a public address at Memphis, Tenn., that the negroes in the thirteen southern states, including Missouri, and leaving out Maryland and Delaware, pay taxes on $136,300,000 worth of property.

The Indian medicine man cures by charms and incantations. He frightens away the "evil spirit" who causes the sickness. He does all sorts of things that civilized people would call idiotic and barbaric, but the civilized folks are not so very much ahead after all. They do just as foolish things as does the medicine man. They go along carelessly, and allow the little sickness to grow into the big sickness. They allow constipation to grow into indigestion, heartburn, dizziness, headache, insomnia, and a hundred other distressing conditions. They do this frequently because they do not know the cause of their trouble. It is a pretty safe rule to look for the source of 9-10ths of human sickness in this one simple and appallingly prevalent trouble. Another foolish thing that smart people do is to take some alleged remedy for constipation and keep on taking it, day after day, month after month and year after year. Perhaps it is better to take the medicine than not to take it at all, but of course if they stop taking it, their trouble will come back. This last statement is true of every other medicine prepared for this purpose except Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. One "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. They are gentle and efficient in their action, permanent in their results. You don't become a slave to their use, as with other pills.

How the Liquor Bill Figures up.

Merely for the sake of understanding the question better let us enumerate the items of this expense, due entirely to the use of strong drink. They are the cost of sickness; loss of intelligent labor by contractors; expense to taxpayers from pauperism, insanity and crime; the last including the extra cost for the support of courts, jails, penitentiaries, reform schools, etc.; accidents resulting in the destruction of property, mishaps, wrecks,—and on the railroads alone this amounts to a large sum; losses by fire, through carelessness,—tobacco and whiskey work hand in hand in this destruction of property; bad workmanship; bad business conduct, such as carelessness about preserving a stock of goods or about harvesting and caring for farm products, and the like; the repudiation of personal debts, which works so much harm in the business world; waste, etc.

Who will say, as he casts his eye over this imperfect inventory of the indirect cost of liquor drinking, that General Dow was wrong when he put the indirect cost equal in magnitude to the direct. But, as if this were not enough, there is still another phase of the cost, which, for the sake of clearness, needs to be set forth separately. It is what may be described as the negative cost, or, if you will allow an Irish way of putting the matter, it is the loss of the gain that we do not make. In this category must be placed loss of time, which of course means the loss of labor, idleness and the general demoralization of society, which is one of the most important items among all those mentioned.—Temperance Cause.

[Concluded]

FEW DEATHS in Massachusetts have caused such general regret throughout the State as that of ex-Governor Robinson on Saturday. It was always a pleasure to hear him speak, and his record as Governor was highly satisfactory. Great inroad has been made in recent years in our ranks of ex-Governors and only six remain: Boutwell, Claflin, Long, Brackett, Russell and the present executive.

Mortgagee's Sale.

BY Virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain second mortgage deed given by Ellen A. Cartwright and James Cartwright, both of Quincy, in the County of Norfolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to Julia E. Gay of Boston, in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth afore said, said mortgage bearing date September 28, A. D., 1894, and recorded with the Norfolk Registry of deeds, book 721, page 355; and for breach of the conditions of said second mortgage deed, and for the purpose of foreclosing the equity in the same, the property described in said second mortgage will be sold at public auction on MONDAY, March, 16, 1896, at four o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises described in said second mortgage deed, meaning to sell whatever equity there is in said property hereinafter described and set forth, said property being subject to a first mortgage made in favor of one W. T. Babcock, for the sum of nineteen hundred dollars ($1900.00), with interest, recorded with the Norfolk Registry of Deeds.

The premises hereinbefore referred to are described as follows: Being a certain piece or parcel of land with the buildings thereon situated in that part of said Quincy known as Wollaston Park, being lot numbered 398 on plan of Charles S. Miller, dated April 10, 1890, and recorded with Norfolk Registry of Deeds, Book of Plans 13, page 555, and bounded southeasterly by Beach street, fifty feet; southwesterly by lot numbered 397 on said plan, eighty-four feet; northwesterly by land now or formerly of B. A. Gould, fifty feet; northeasterly by lot numbered 399 on said plan, eighty-four feet; containing 4,200 square feet, be the same more or less. Said premises will be sold subject to the first mortgage hereinbefore referred to, and all unpaid taxes and assessments, if any.

$200 00 in cash to be paid at the time and place of sale.

JULIA E. GAY,
Second Mortgagee.

Mortgagee's Sale of Real Estate.

BY Virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Thomas Kennon to the Abington Savings Bank, dated February 4, A. D., 1890 and recorded with Norfolk County Deeds, Lib. 632, Fol. 601, for breach of the conditions contained in said Mortgage, and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, upon the premises described in said Mortgage, on WEDNESDAY, the eleventh day of March, A. D., 1896, at half past one o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises described in said Mortgage, viz:

A certain lot or parcel of land with the buildings and other improvements thereon, lying on the northwesterly side of Squantum street, in Quincy, in Norfolk County and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, containing twenty thousand square feet and being the northerly half or part of a lot of land in said Quincy delineated on a plan drawn by Mr. Case (and to be recorded herewith). Said lot is bounded and described as follows:

Beginning on said street at a point two hundred and thirty-six [236] feet southwesterly from land of John A. Billings, thence north 40 degrees west to other land of said Billings; thence northwesterly, northerly, northeasterly and easterly with said land of Billings to said Squantum street; thence southwesterly two hundred and thirty-six [236] feet to the point of beginning. Being a part of the same premises described in a deed from Alicia E. Marden to said Kennon, dated 18 November, 1884, and recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds, book 628, page 251.

Two Hundred Dollars to be paid by purchaser at the time of sale; further terms at the sale.

ABINGTON SAVINGS BANK,
Mortgagee.

By GEORGE A. BEAL, Treasurer.

Abington, Feb. 12, 1896. 15-3w

Mortgagee's Sale.

BY Virtue and in execution of the power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Henry C. Weeden and Amy E. Weeden, wife of said Henry C., in her own right, to Benjamin D. Weeden, dated March eleventh, A. D., 1890, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, libro 644, folio 110, which mortgage has been assigned by said mortgagee to me, the undersigned, as trustee, by assignment dated April 20, A. D., 1894, recorded with said Deeds, libro 712, folio 141, and for the purpose of foreclosing said mortgage for breach of the condition thereof, will be sold by public auction, on the premises hereinafter described, being the premises described in said mortgage, on MONDAY, the ninth day of March, A. D., 1896, at one o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, namely:

A certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon, situated in Quincy, in the County of Norfolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a stake near a Willow tree on the northeasterly side of a street called Palmer street, shown on a plan drawn by H. T. Whitman, surveyor, dated February, 1890, and recorded with said deeds, and filed as No. 559, at land conveyed by said Amy E. Weeden to John Quincy Adams, thence running northeasterly at right angles to said Palmer street, four hundred and sixty-eight [468] feet to a stake; thence turning at right angles and running southeasterly two hundred and four 65-100 [204 65-100] feet to a stake in the marsh line shown on said plan. From this point to the point of beginning the granted premises are bounded as follows: Northeasterly on salt marsh of persons unknown by the marsh line as shown on said plan, southeasterly partly on salt marsh late of Peter Bracket and partly on Ridge Hill, so-called, southwesterly by the sea to marsh land formerly of the town of Quincy, northwesterly by said last mentioned marsh land to said street, northeasterly again by said street to a point opposite the point of beginning; thence the line runs across said street to the point of beginning. Excepting out of said described premises a certain parcel of land containing about one acre conveyed by Samuel Andrews to Abraham Rich, Jr., by deed dated October 5, 1861, recorded with said deeds, libro 304, folio 17, to which deed reference is made for a particular description of the parcel excepted from this grant. And excepting, also, said Palmer street. Being a part of the premises conveyed by Mary A. Sheen in her right to said Amy E. Weeden, by deed dated Feb. 11, 1890, recorded with said mortgage, comprising lot three [3] on said plan and other portions conveyed by said deed from Mary A. Sheen.

$500.00 will be required to be paid in cash by the purchaser at the time and place of sale. Other terms of sale made known at the time and place of sale.

Therefore be careful of the first impression. On entering a strange house one gets his first impression from the hall. If this looks bare the impression is bad.

The hall should be furnished, not of course with bric-a-brac and rocking chairs, but appropriately, that is with a simple hall stand. They are rich, handsome, convenient, and add a constant air of welcome. Wonderfully low in price; in rich quartered oak they cost from $5.50 to $25.00.

March.

Windy and muddy, and fitful and dark—
  Sloughs for our footsteps and clouds overhead;
Oh! for the notes of the bluebird and lark,
  Whispering hopes that the winter has sped

Ah! there is blue smiling out of the sky—
  Never a day but has one gleam of light;
Never a winter that clouds did not fly;
  Never a time but a day followed night.

Here is a blossom right down at our feet,
  Pearly and pure as the first flakes of snow;
List to the songs of the warblers so sweet,—
  Smiling is hope, and forebodings may go.

Miscellany.

"A BUNCH OF VIOLETS."

"Violets, fresh violets, fresh English violets," sang out a childish voice on the clear March air.

It was after five o'clock and this little cry was almost drowned in the chorus of shouts from the swarms of newsboys just starting out with their evening papers.

Violets! the word barely distinguishable in the wild clatter of the street, made me pause, for I instantly remembered that my sister had told me to bring her home a bunch of violets.

I turned and there behind me stood a tiny morsel of humanity with a large basket of moss filled with fragrant English violets.

I beckoned the little fellow aside, to be clear of the hurrying throng in the street, and began fumbling in my pocket.

"A bunch of violets, sir?"

I stepped back with a start, as he lifted up his face; something in the expression of the wan little countenance smote me with a vague thrill of recognition that at first I was at a loss to account for.

I made a feint of choosing the best bunch in the basket, and then took another look at the appealing little face.

It was the eyes; surely there never was but one other pair like them, such deep, languorous blue eyes shaded with long black lashes. They belonged to the most tragic chapter of my life; they were the eyes of the only woman I had ever loved, and here before me in this little child were their exact counterfeits.

As I gazed at the little waif, my thoughts left the busy scene around me and reverted to other days.

I was like one in a trance, until he touched my hand and said: "Here are your violets, sir."

"What is your name, my little fellow?" I inquired as I took the flowers and handed him the money.

"Leroy Rivers."

"Leroy Rivers! Could this boy be Gertrude's child?" I exclaimed involuntarily to myself. Rivers was certainly the name of the man she had married, but why is he selling violets!

His mother, if it could be possible that Gertrude were his mother, must be rolling in wealth.

All these perplexing thoughts entered my head in a moment.

The boy fixed his basket and started on, but I stopped him.

"Where do you live?" I asked.

"I live on S—— street, sir."

"With your father and mother?"

"Mamma and I alone, she sews all day, while I sell violets to help her," replied the child with a manly air.

"Where is your father?"

"I haven't any father."

"What is the number of your house on S—— street, my little man?"

"Number sixteen."

I drew a gold piece from my pocket, placed it in his hand, and hurried away, feeling like one in a dream. Could it be possible that I had given money to her child,—the child of the proud, heartless Gertrude St. John, who had so cruelly left me for a wealthy suitor, blighting my life's happiness.

The more I turned the matter over in my mind, the more incredible it all appeared.

I had been fooled by a chance resemblance; Gertrude's eyes were bewitching me again as of old, I thought with bitterness. Nevertheless, I must get Louise to look up this woman and satisfy my misgivings. Should it turn out that I have been mistaken, we will help the poor creature for the sake of the chance resemblance. My good sister Louise had been very bitter against Gertrude, but, I reflected, she will indulge any whim of mine, and it is time old scores were forgotten.

I had no chance to broach the subject to Louise that evening, however, for we had guests to dinner and a whist party afterwards.

I was pre-occupied the whole evening, so absent-minded and forgetful that my partners were all disgusted with me. I am something of an expert at whist, but I could not give my mind to it on this evening, and had to endure the chaffing and mockery of my lively-spirited guests as best I could. I thought constantly of Gertrude in that unknown house in S—— street. I contrasted her plight with my own luxurious home filled with happy and distinguished friends whom my success in the world had drawn around me. At the thought of her faithlessness I am afraid I enjoyed a moment of grim triumph at the terrible reversal of fortunes which fate had brought about. But this unworthy feeling, which I am loath to confess, was quickly replaced by a sense of pity for the misfortunes of the girl I had loved so dearly. I could not bring myself to speak to Louise on my all-absorbing topic when the evening was over. It was very awkward, seeing upon what a slight foundation my suspicions rested. I have a mortal dread of being laughed at.

Next day I looked in vain for my little namesake. (I ought to have mentioned before that Leroy is my own name.) I loitered for an hour in the neighborhood where I had met him the evening before, but in vain.

That evening after dinner I carried my sister off to the library with me for a long talk, as I informed her. I was not long in unburdening my mind of the problem that vexed me. I described the incident of the night before while purchasing her violets and asked her what she thought of it.

"It is impossible that it could have been Gertrude's child," Louise declared, "the eyes may have been very like, but—"

"I know all that Louise; but how can you account for the name Leroy Rivers. I have thought of every conceivable explanation. Rivers is undoubtedly dead—his money has been lost in some way, and Gertrude is supporting herself and little boy by sewing in that wretched place in S—— street. Imagine Gertrude St. John in the character of a poor sewing woman. The thought is too dreadful. You must look her up, Louise. She will hardly remember you after ten years. We must induce her to let us help her somehow."

"You appear to take the matter strangely to heart. Gertrude is certainly less than nothing to you now. When I think of the suffering she caused you, I cannot but feel that fate has served her right. You are having your revenge, Leroy."

"No, Louise, don't say that. Such revenge is not sweet. In these past twenty-four hours I have thought of Gertrude only as the sweet girl she was when I first loved her. I cannot bear to think of her in trouble. I must do something for her. Won't you help me?"

My good sister could not hold out against my entreaties. She promised to do as I had asked, though she persisted in thinking that my whole theory was too improbable to be taken seriously.

Two weeks passed without the subject being spoken of again between us, nor did I chance upon my little flower-merchant again, though keeping a constant lookout for him. I knew that my sister would not like to have me hurry her in the matter or offer any suggestions, so I held my peace until one evening she summoned me into her little upstairs study and bade me take a seat before her. I knew the end of my suspense was at hand.

"You were right, Leroy," said my sister coming at once to the subject. "The wretched woman in S—— street is none other than Gertrude St. John."

I could not forbear a cry of amazement. Much as I had expected this disclosure, it smote me with a shock of horror.

"I have been there twice," my sister went on, "the first time she was not at home, but yesterday I saw her."

"Did she recognize you?" I interrupted, unable to restrain my impatience.

"No. I wore a thick veil. Once or twice I thought she started strangely, and looked at me searchingly. Perhaps my voice seemed familiar to her. Oh, Leroy, she is the same beautiful Gertrude, only awfully pale and troubled looking. She told me she was a widow, and that she supported herself and little boy with her needle, but though I longed to ask some particulars as to the misfortunes that had brought her to such straights, I could not. Something in her look bade me respect her secret. She has the same proud spirit as of old. I did not tell her my name, but left some sewing for her to do, saying I would call for it day after tomorrow. I think I will then let her know who I am."

"We will hardly be able to be of much service to her otherwise," I assented. "Poor Gertrude! I would love to see her."

"My dear Leroy, your generous sympathy does you great credit, but it is only right for me to remind you that Gertrude has, in all probability, never once thought of you in all these years."

"The poor soul has had enough else to think of," I rejoined helplessly, and my sister did not deign to pursue the topic any further.

Two days later Louise drove again to S—— street and picked me up at my office on her way home.

"So you have been to see her again," I began, seating myself beside her in the carriage.

"Yes, I wore my veil going, but after I had been there a few moments she left the room and I removed it. When she returned and saw my face for the first time she almost fainted. Poor Gertrude! it was a painful shock to her feelings. She has not seen a face belonging to the circle of her old acquaintance in years, and she was especially fond of me in the old days, you know. She finally told me the whole wretched story, and I found myself crying with her before I knew it. She did not love her husband even at first; her father forced her to marry him on account of his supposed wealth, though, as you will remember, no one really knew anything about the man. He took her to a beautiful home in New York and there seemed to be no lack of money, but she discovered at last that he was a professional gambler. He had no reputable acquaintances, and Gertrude lived a life of absolute seclusion. Her heart was broken, but she was too proud to utter a complaint. Shortly after her little boy was born her husband lost all his money and died suddenly a little later. Gertrude's father had died meanwhile, and she was too proud to ask help or sympathy from any one. She has supported herself by dressmaking ever since. She has not been in Boston long, and had no idea we lived here."

"Did she ask after me?"

"Yes, and I told her I lived with you, but said nothing of the great success you have achieved since she knew you; it would sound like mockery after hearing her pitiful story. I am going to see her again soon, and, Leroy, I wish you would call on her too. I am sure it would make her very happy."

"It is the very thing I have been longing to do, Louise, and now that you have suggested it, I will go this very evening," I exclaimed, opening the carriage door and helping my sister to alight.

I at once sent a messenger to S—— street with a note to Gertrude, asking if I might call that evening. Receiving a favorable reply, I waited impatiently for the time to come.

I could never describe the emotions with which I first beheld Gertrude Rivers in her shabby little sitting room. Her little boy was sitting on a hassock at her feet, she was dressed in mourning, I believe, or at any rate something impressed me with that sense as she rose with outstretched hands to bid me welcome. She looked as beautiful as ever, the same wonderful eyes, but with a shade of sadness in their depths. Her voice, too, was the same and thrilled me as of old. The first awkwardness of the situation quickly disappeared and we were soon talking of old times. She repeated to me the sad story of her married life, but I refrained from telling her anything of my far different fortunes.

"I was weak and cowardly to marry as I did," she concluded, "and I cannot but feel that my sufferings have been in the nature of an atonement."

I felt that I loved her as dearly as ever, and I longed to ask her to make good the promise she had broken so long ago, but I dared not flatter myself that she still cared for me. I finally left, reluctantly, but with permission to visit her again.

I called often, and before a month was over had declared my love to her again and was accepted. We were as quietly married as if I had been the poor clerk of former days. After the ceremony I asked her how she would like a trip to Europe as a wedding journey, stopping in Paris long enough for her to purchase an outfit. She looked at me in surprise and asked if I really could afford such extravagant pleasure.

Then, with a smile of real triumph, I told her all.—Julia G. Yerza in Somerville Journal.

HANCOCK ST. HISTORY.

THE THIRD INSTALLMENT OF PAPER BY EDWARD H. DEWSON.

We come to Granite street, formerly Woods road, no record of its laying out. On this street, southwest from the Briesler house, is the house of Elisha Marsh now owned by Henry H. Faxon.

Col. A. B. Packard says it is not changed in appearance, and looks the same as when he was a small boy, and went to school to Mrs. Hunt opposite.

Before us stands the town pump. The well was dug about 1840 for fire protection.

On the corner of Hancock and Granite streets, where the Greenleaf house now stands, there was about the year 1810, the one story shoemaker's shop of Joseph Burrell. The lower floor front was occupied by Mrs. John Hunt, for a school-room, the rear was Mr. Burrell's shop. About 1828, Mr. Burrell built a dwelling-house south of this site. He was the father of Mrs. George L. Gill. Another daughter, Mrs. C. B. Richardson, contributes some interesting facts. She says "that her father when a boy resolved that he would have that beautiful corner for his house, and by working early and late, he earned enough during his apprenticeship, to pay, unaided by any one, the goodly sum required for it, on attaining his majority in 1811. Then he began improving it by setting out trees. There was not a toad on the premises. He therefore secured a supply, carrying them to it in a basket. So teaching his children their usefulness, and that they should never injure one."

Pattee says Miss Elizabeth Torrey kept school here in 1836 having removed from the Apthorp house.

Later, this estate was sold to Lloyd Goodnough a botanic doctor who built a wooden block on the corner where the shop had stood. Aug. 25, 1875, the block together with the dwelling-house then known as the Central house, was burned.

The Greenleaf house, now standing on this site, was built by Joseph W. Robertson, in 1876. During his ownership it was called the Robertson house. The estate adjoining the above, occupied by the Durgin & Merrill block, was as late as 1882, owned by Josiah Adams. His grandson J. A. Fenno, contributes the following interesting paper:

"Josiah Adams was the son of Deacon Josiah and Esther (Wesson) Adams. He was born Oct. 18, 1792. At the age of fourteen, he was apprenticed to Abel Whitney of Cambridge to learn cabinet making. Whitney, was brother of Rev. Peter Whitney, also of the second wife of Deacon Josiah, and of the wife of Deacon Ebenezer Adams. After seven years of semi-starvation, he returned to Quincy, with a few old tools and a freedom suit of clothes, which small though he was, hardly served to covered him. In 1814 he was with the Quincy Light Infantry at Dorchester Heights, serving about thirty days for which he received a pension in 1881, which he lived only one year to enjoy. He was married to Sarah P. Hardwick in 1818. He built the house near 1816. His father and grandfather owned in common, the land extending to the corner of Granite street, part of which was sold to Burrell and the remainder given to Adams, there was also given to him an old house that stood on the Adams farm near Pine Hill.

"This he carefully took down. It was then a very old house, but the timbers were sound. Between the frames was filled in with seaweed that had crumbled to dust. By swapping labor, he was enabled to get his cellar, and with seventeen dollars, and the remains of the old house he began to make for himself a home.

"He raised the height of the lower rooms so that the chambers were very low. Being short in stature they were all right for him, but inconvenient for those who came after.

"As originally finished, it had two front rooms with door and entry between, and a small room back of the entry. The second story was the same. A small room beyond on the lower floor, served for kitchen.

"As the years went by he changed and added to his house to suit his convenience, and it was a frequent remark that 'Siah Adams was sticking another piece onto his house.'

"When sold to Durgin & Merrill, in 1885 it contained eighteen rooms with floors of different levels and fifty-six doors. He was a very useful man. He worked here sixty-two years. He was 'jack at all trades,' maker of furniture, coffins, blocks, pumps, windmills, boats, guns, locks and clocks, sealer of weights and measures, surveyor of lumber, weigher of vessels. The old house now stands in the rear of the brick block, where it was moved in 1885."

Next is the cottage house built by Charles Hall in the twenties, later owned and occupied by the late G. F. Wilson, who built the store beyond, for groceries and meat.

About the year 1840, Charles P. Tirrell bought a building used for a tavern then standing on the Packard lot on the opposite side of the road. It was a cottage house. He moved it over and made considerable additions to it in the rear. It is being torn down at the date of this writing, to be replaced by a large building for bowling alleys. Mr. Tirrell's wheelwright shop stood next toward the south, where is now a handsome wooden building, occupied in part by his grandson, who is engaged in the same business.

Next, was a drive way to a stable in the rear, then a low two-story building, the first floor of which was used by Edward Hall, for a hat manufactory, and the second floor by Charles Hall, who manufactured boots. This has long since been removed. Next there was as late as 1860 an old building, built in the forties by John Mulford, for a bark house. Later Wm. Panton's currying shop stood here, still later it was converted into a store. Mulford also built the tan yard by the brook, now abandoned, also the dwelling-house beyond, for many years occupied by Wm. Panton.

Close to the Mulford or Panton house, on the North, there still stands an old building. The curb roof indicates that it was built many years ago. In the thirties it was used by Jonathan and Elisha Marsh, for coloring yarns for their factory. The Marsh's were partners in the manufacture of coach lace, in a one story building, that stood in the forties on the corner of Marsh and School street.

The next house was formerly John A. Newcomb's. Mr. Marsh says it was built by Micajah Adams, but the date of its erection is unknown. One Micajah Adams died in 1769 aged seventy-seven years. Another of the same name was a member of the Quincy Light Infantry in 1790. It was originally of the first type, previously mentioned. It has been remodeled; and the old house can no longer be recognized. The builder of the house was great grandfather of Mrs. W. A. Hodges. Mr. Newcomb's shoe shop stood close to the sidewalk a little toward the south. It has been removed to near the head of Granite street, where it still stands, a diminutive model of the first type of colonial houses. It is occupied by Nathaniel Nightingale and a fruit dealer.

The house of Abner Willett is next. It is old, but the date of its erection is unknown.

The house of the late Thomas M. Marsh stands next. This was built at an early date.

Beyond this toward the south, there was a small red building, long ago removed. It was used by Willett and Marsh for wool pulling.

The baker shop, occupied by Wm. A. Hodges, and the store just beyond, were early in the fifties kept by John and Henry H. Faxon.

Heirs of Thomas H. Plumer own the two buildings and dwelling-house now standing toward the south of the above named. Next are the house and tin shop of the late Ensign S. Fellows.

All these buildings south of the Marsh house are of comparatively recent date.

On the site of the Plumer buildings Pattee states that "1658, John Mills received authority to establish a house of entertainment in Braintree."

This was the second public house in the town. In later times it was known as the "Ben Faxon house." Col. Packard describes it as a long two story building. It was burned in 1843.

As late as 1860 the estate south of Fellows' shop made one lot on the corner of School street.

Mr. Marsh contributes the following in regard to it. "As early as the middle of the last century, there stood near the spot now occupied by the residence of Mr. Pattee, on School street, a peculiar house known as the Apthorp place. It stood a little back from the street fronting the south, and from the two ends curved one story wings extended to the street with a door in each, directly from the sidewalk. This enclosed a front garden protected from all the cold winds. The estate extended from the easterly line of the Judge Cranch place, (now James Edwards,) to what was lately the Fellows place. I think the house was built by Mr. Apthorp and was standing until about 1860.

The family were always of the church of England and in revolutionary times, were suspected of being faithful to the crown. There has been but one member of the family there in my time, an old maiden lady, known as Aunt Betsy, who came out on Sundays to attend the Episcopal church. Another William Apthorp though not then a resident of Quincy, gave to the Episcopal Society the lot on which their present church stands."

Quincy avenue is the continuation of Hancock street, south from Elm and School streets. It was built by the Braintree and Weymouth Turnpike Co. incorporated in 1803. The road was made free in 1857 or 58.

Elm street was in early times called "the road to Capt. Richard Brackett's landing" on Town river.

From the corner of this street we will begin our journey northward.

NOTE—Mr. Dewson requests that corrections and omissions in the above historical paper be sent to the PATRIOT for publication, instead of to him; although if anyone prefers the latter course he will be glad to receive their letters and see that they are recorded. At his suggestion the PATRIOT will inaugurate an historical and genealogical column upon the completion of the history of Hancock street, probably March 28 or April 4—[EDS.

The Tax Laws.

The matter of change in the tax laws of Massachusetts has been talked about so long that the faults which call for reform have had a chance to grow and develop largely. It is not surprising, then, that the changes proposed in the bill drafted by representatives of the business organizations of Boston seem to be radical and almost destructive. This proposed law will certainly appear so to the assessors of taxes in our cities and towns, who hold to the belief, traditional in their office, that property of all kinds, or evidences of property, must be taxed at least once, and twice if the law will permit it. For the merchants' bill proposes to tax only property which is in sight, which cannot run away or be concealed, and which really owes something to the state. Thus it is proposed to exempt all personal property from taxation, except as it passes through the probate court where an inheritance tax can be levied and collected. This goes to the state, and so does the proposed tax on the franchises of what we call quasi-public corporations—street railways and the like—the proceeds to be distributed among the counties. Local taxes, it is proposed, shall be levied upon real estate only.—Boston Commonwealth.

The City Council.

New business continues to be introduced into the City Council, but as yet no very important business has been transacted by the Council of 1896. At the meeting Monday evening a petition was introduced for the paving of a portion of Copeland street, which calls for a large appropriation, and there was a movement for fifty-ride tickets on the railroad. The Committee on Public Buildings promised a report on new schoolhouses in one week.

The only absent members were Councilmen Phillips and Rinn.

Communications.

A communication was received from Benjamin F. Curtis asking to be excused from attending the Council meetings. Request granted.

The Mayor forwarded the annual report of the Water Commissioners for 1895 which was referred to the Committee on Water Supply.

The School Committee submitted the following budget of estimates for the ensuing year which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PATRIOT has added the appropriations of last year.

	Estimates 1896.	Appropriations 1895.
Salaries,	$62,235	$59,680
Transportation,	1,000	1,000
Fuel,	5,500	4,500
Janitors,	5,100	4,870
Books, Supplies, etc.,	8,200	8,000
Evening schools,	2,800	2,800
Totals,	$84,835	$80,850

Petitions.

Petitions were received for the establishing of the grade on Liberty street from Lawyer's lane to Centre street. To Committee on Streets.

From E. S. Gilpatrick, for a common victuallers license. To Committee on Licenses.

For electric light on Elm street between Baxter and Walnut streets. To Committee on Streets.

From W. P. Martin for soldier's relief, and from Bernard O'Reiley for increase of State aid. To Committee on State Aid.

From Daniel Vining for a common victuallar's license. To Committee on Licenses.

From Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R., for license to give shows and entertainments in Hancock hall. To Committee on Licenses.

From H. Price for license for one pool table. To Committee on Licenses.

Reports of Committees.

The Committee on Licenses reported leave to withdraw a petition of Joseph Keene for a night lunch license, and John H. Sawyer and Abel Brown for common victualler's license. Accepted.

The same committee reported order granting a license to Hancock hall for entertainments, and to J. F. Costello for a bowling alley license. Adopted.

The Committee on Streets recommended that lights be established as follows: One incandescent on Liberty street extension; four incandescents on Trafford street; six incandescents on Independence avenue from Bennington street to Braintree line; three incandescents on Pearl street; one incandescent on Atlantic street, near railroad bridge; one incandescent on Park street, near residence of E. S. Litchfield; four incandescents on Walker street; four incandescents on Appleton street; one arc on Standish avenue, junction of Old Colony avenue; one arc on Brook street, corner of Intervale street. Read once and referred to Committee on Finance.

The Committee on Streets reported leave to withdraw a petition of N. E. T. & T. Co. of 1895 for location of poles on Water street. Accepted.

The same committee reported an order granting the N. E. T. & T. Co. a location for one pole on Washington street. To Committee on Ordinances.

Same committee order to establish grade on Hancock street, reported an order for a public hearing on the petition Monday, March 16. Adopted.

Motions, Order, etc.

Councilman Claflin offered a resolve that the Mayor request the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. to issue 50 ride tickets between Boston and Atlantic, Wollaston, Quincy, Quincy Adams and West Quincy at the same rates as 100 ride tickets are now issued. Adopted.

Councilman Lamb offered an order instructing the Chief Engineer to locate a fire alarm box at the junction of Copeland and Crescent streets. To Committee on Fire Department.

Councilman Lamb offered an order for one incandescent light on Fenno street between Hancock street and Wollaston avenue, and one incandescent light on Wollaston avenue between Hancock and Fenno streets. To Committe on Lights.

Councilman Lamb offered an order appropriating $25,000 for edgestones on both sides of Copeland street from Crescent street to Granite street, and the paving of Copeland street from Crescent street to Granite street and across Granite street to Water street. To Committee on Streets.

Councilman Rice offered an order changing the gas light in front of T. Reed's driveway on Adams street 50 feet to the north-east and the location of two incandescent lights between that point and Whitwell street. To Committee on Streets.

Eight o'clock was the hour designated for a public hearing on the petition of the Quincy Quarry railroad for a location to the North Common, but because of some informality this hearing went by default, and one is advertised to be held March 16. On motion of Councilman Anderson the hearing closed and the order was laid on the table.

At 8 03 the Council adjourned for one week.

His Word and Honor.

Abraham Lincoln when a young man went into the grocery business with a partner, and neither of them having any money they gave their joint note for $1,300. They were not adapted to the business. The partner spent his time in drinking and gambling; Lincoln spent his in lying on the counter reading law books. The goods being largely liquid disappeared, with no money in the end to meet the notes. The partner died, the firm failed, and young Lincoln owed $1,300 with not a cent to pay. He could have disappeared, or have gone through chancery, but he said, "No; give me time, and I will pay every dollar." And he did pay every dollar with interest, although it took him eighteen years to do it. So the people called him "Honest Old Abe." His honor and word were worth something to him. They carried him into the White House, and he is a worthy example to every youth and citizen of our country.

QUINCY, SATURDAY, MAR. 7, 1896.

The Governor Dead.

THE SUDDEN death of our popular and beloved Governor on Thursday morning has cast a gloom throughout the State. The funeral will take place from the Unitarian church, in Lowell, on Monday, and will be as simple as possible, as our late Governor decidedly objected to any military pomp and civic ceremonies.

Three times elected and always popular with the citizens of the Commonwealth, shows the high esteem of Massachusetts for Governor Greenhalge. He fulfilled the high offices to which he was elected with great credit to his constituents and himself. He was elected to Congress in 1888 after a hot campaign and his first contest for the governorship was one of the Bay State's most memorable campaigns. But his keen logic and eloquence on the stump won the day and easy victories followed in 1894 and 1895.

Quincy recalls with pleasure two enjoyable visits from Governor Greenhalge. His Excellency favored us with his presence and a speech at the dedication of our new High school building, Sept. 11, 1894, and was photographed in a group at the close. About a year later, Sept. 28, 1895, he attended our grand fete in aid of the City Hospital on President's hill, which he was pleased to term a red letter day for himself. It was children's day, also, and he gave them a reception, which was a proud day in the lives of many of our little folks. Mr. Greenhalge was also in Quincy before his election as Governor, speaking at Hancock hall during his first campaign, with J. Otis Wardwell Esq, and Rev. A. E. Winship.

Annual Water Report.

The Water Commissioners made their annual report to the City Council this week, and it contains much of interest to taxpayers and citizens. It will be seen from the figures that the income will more than meet the maintenance and interest, but that an appropriation is still required for the annual payments of debt.

During the year six miles of pipe have been laid and 54 hydrants set.

The unexpended balance on hand Jan. 1, 1895, for maintenance was $1,322 06; amount appropriated, $45,000; balance on hand Dec. 31, 1895, $14,075.69.

With this amount 306 new services were added, water mains were extended to Houghs Neck, also through West, Willard, Charles, and Robertson streets, Highland avenue and several other minor extensions.

The total amount received from the sale of water for the year ending Dec. 31, 1895, was $45,480 67. The estimated gross receipts for the year 1896 are $49,500; and the amount required for maintenance, $15,500.

The amount of water bills uncollected Jan. 1, 1895, was $9,008 63. On Jan. 1, 1896, the most of this amount had been collected or the water turned off except in some few cases where this was impossible on account of more than one house being supplied by the same service.

The board say that they are of the opinion that it would be a saving to the city if the ordinances were amended, so that regular bills may be paid annually and meter bills quarterly, and that the use of the receipts may be applied to the extending of service pipes, also that the department should have credit for the new hydrants set each year and that premiums received from the sale of water bonds should be credited to the department.

The water in the reservoir reached its lowest point, Oct. 12, being 9 66 feet below the overflow, which was .28 feet below the lowest point in 1894.

The average daily consumption during the year was 904,152 gallons, an increase of 106,153 gallons over the average of 1894. The total consumption during the year was 330,015,439 gallons. The maximum quantity used was 1,668,482 gallons on June 24, and the minimum quantity used was 625,-766 on Feb. 17.

Several conferences have been had with the Metropolitan Commissioners, and the board believe the present system can be reinforced if the consumption requires it and that the full benefit of the Metropolitan supply will be received within three years. With this assurance they feel it unwise to spend any great amount of money on the present basin or pumping station.

The total length of street mains Dec. 31, 1895, was 63 01 miles; number of services connected 2,560; number of hydrants, 332.

Tufts College Concert.

It was a stormy night but the boys were there; and those who braved the storm, enjoyed one of the finest entertainments of the season, Wednesday evening, at Faxon hall. The Glee club is one of the best in the State, while the mandolin and guitar playing would be hard to surpass. The reader, Mr. Schofield, was exceptionally fine and received many encores. It would be impossible to give the programme in full as each number was announced from an extensive repertoire. Perhaps the song most enjoyed was one entitled "Eliza Jane," a solo by Mr. Guy Pierce, the manager, accompanied by the Glee club The concert was given under the auspices of the Young People's Christian Alliance of the Universalist church. The committee of arrangements were, Mr. Arthur Peverly Mr. Herbert F. Nye, Miss Annie F. Swift, Miss Maud H. Cudworth and Miss Abbie Barnes, assisted by Miss Mary H. Cudworth and Miss Lillian Gay.

The Committee on Railroads reported on Tuesday in the House a bill authorizing the Old Colony Railroad Company to take land on Kneeland and Federal streets for a new station and to issue $1,000,000 in new stock to pay for the same.

The many friends of Mrs. Sarah A. Burrell will be pleased to know that she is improving every day, and can use her left hand quite a little.

Mrs. William Davis has returned, after a week's visit at Fair Haven and Rutland, Vt., where she was called to attend the funeral of her aunt.

The City Council will meet again next Monday evening, and are promised a report from the Committee on Public Buildings on new schoolhouses.

The committee on prisons of the Legislature reported adversely Monday on the bill providing for certain changes in the prison building at Dedham.

Mr. and Mrs. A G. Durgin arrived home yesterday from Florida. After the summer weather of Florida, old New England seemed to give them a cold reception.

William Bennett had part of the toes of one of his feet taken off at the Quincy depot Tuesday night by a barrel of beer which he was loading falling upon it.

The Quincy Quarry Railroad has petitioned the Legislature for extension of time for the proposed location to "North Common." It was admitted in the House Monday.

Chief of Police Hayden in his annual report will urge the necessity of a new police station, a police signal system and a patrol wagon. His estimate for this department for the ensuing year is $12,306.

The Trustees of the Thomas Crane Public Library organized Wednesday evening by the choice of Rev. E. C. Butler as chairman, Harrison A. Keith as secretary, and George W. Morton as treasurer.

There will be a meeting of the Fragment society in the Unitarian chapel, Wednesday afternoon, at two o'clock. Will the committee appointed for the church social of March 18th be present at this meeting.

The Committee on Public Buildings of the City Council have asked the School Board to approve of another set of schoolhouse plans, that two sets may be presented to the Council for consideration.

Mrs. R. Mitchell of South street, who has been seriously ill for the past six weeks, is now able to be about again; and her nurse, Mrs. M. C. Wood, graduate of the City Hospital, has returned to her home at West Quincy.

A Needham item in the Herald reports Mr. George G. Saville of this city to have purchased the George L. Cutting estate, consisting of house, barn and 18 acres of land on Highland avenue, at a price largely in excess of the assessed valuation.

Mr. Henry H. Faxon, who has been confined to the house since Saturday last with a severe cold, is out again, and is looking for that paper for signatures for membership in the new Republican club. He does not fear being blackballed and says nothing would suit him better.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Foster entertained the Crystal whist club at their residence on School street, Wednesday evening. After two hours play, refreshments were served and the guests were then treated to some musical selections on the banjo, mandolin and guitar by Mr. and Mrs. Foster and Mr. C. H. Penniman.

Sea street below the Adams farm was badly drifted Thursday morning. An attempt was made Wednesday to keep the street open and the attempt was partly successful, but the high wind in the night undid all the work and Thursday morning the milk man from Rock Island came across lots finding it a much easier method of getting through.

There is a movement on foot to close the stores in the centre at 6 o'clock on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings each week and papers to that effect are being circulated. This seems to be a move in the right direction, although many of the business men claim that business is so quiet now, that they cannot afford to close more than two nights as at present.

The feminine members of the Round-About club were entertained by Mrs. Jasper B. Wentworth at her pretty apartments in Dorchester on Wednesday afternoon. Roll call showed every lady member present and after partaking of a dainty lunch, and adopting a few resolutions, Mrs. William H. Mears of Chelsea extended an invitation to the entire club to enjoy her hospitality on next Tuesday evening, which is a sufficient guarantee of a red letter night.

The Quincy club of this city and the Algonquin club of Brockton have arranged to play tournaments in whist and pool beginning on Friday of this week at Brockton. March 12 they play at Quincy, March 17 at Brockton, and March 23 at Quincy. The whist representatives of the local club are: Elbridge Porter, Dexter E. Wadsworth, Russell A. Sears and J. Percival Sears. At pool: Warren Edwards, Herbert Porter and H. M. Federhen, Jr.

Saturday evening, a number of young ladies and gentlemen entertained themselves and guests at Mrs. John C. Randall's in a variety of ways. It was quite a vaudeville show. There were spirited skirt dancing, impersonations from drawings and acting, singing and instrumental music, fine reading by a talented Quincy girl, and a continued performance of fun and originality that rivalled Keith's. It is hoped this may be repeated as an appeal to some local charity.

A singular accident happened to a lady Tuesday afternoon, at the corner of Canal and Mechanic street. At the time of the improvements in that vicinity a catch basin was constructed and the entrance was directly at the corner. After awhile it was covered with a lattice work of iron but the rods were so far apart that the lady got one foot through and was unable to extricate it without help. She was in her uncomfortable position ten or fifteen minutes. The grating was covered with snow and she did not notice it as she approached. Commissioner Knowlton was early on the scene and also visited the lady.

Mrs. Hanson Bailey, one of our aged citizens, who has been quite sick for many weeks, is some better, but still is troubled quite badly with sciatic rheumatism.

A new Board of Health adopted regulations at its meeting Feb. 20 which are advertised today. There have been many minor changes and some additional rules.

Business still continues quiet at the District court, but perhaps it is the quietness that proceeds a storm, and a rush of business may therefore be expected at any time.

The New England Telephone Co. have modified their recent rigid order somewhat, and subscribers are again permitted to use the booth at the central station free of charge.

A gang of men was kept at work nearly all day Thursday shoveling off the sidewalk on School street. On Friday the city scraper was out cleaning out the gutters.

The Board of Managers of Adams Academy met and organized Wednesday evening and elected Mr. Charles H. Howland, chairman and Mr. James L Edwards, secretary.

Persons who have failed to find Geo. W. Prescott & Son among the subscribers in the telephone book should look for the old firm name which continued to be used by the telephone people.

There will be a public union meeting of the Guilds of the Wollaston and Quincy Unitarian churches next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock in the chapel of the Unitarian church, Quincy. Subject: "Theodore Parker."

Mt. Wollaston lodge of Odd Fellows are considering the erection of an Odd Fellows building and a committee has been appointed to look into the matter. Wanted, in Quincy, a large hall.

There seems to be a demand for another concert by the Tufts College Glee club as there were many who desired to go Wednesday evening that were kept away by the inclement weather.

President Graham of the Quincy & Boston street railway says that work rebuilding the line between Neponset and Quincy Point bridge will be commenced as soon as the frost is out of the ground. As the road is to rebuild it would not be a bad idea for the City Council to order the tracks into the middle of Hancock street.

There was not a large attendance at the annual parish meeting of the Universalist society on Thursday evening. George H. Hobby was elected Moderator, and after hearing the reports of committees, which showed the society to be in good financial standing, the meeting adjourned for three weeks.

Mrs. George Phillips gave a very pretty whist party at her home on Washington street Thursday evening. The prizes were won by Mr. C. G. Batson and Mrs. Frank Stoddard. Cake, ices and chocolate were served in the dining room by the hostess, after which Mrs. Morrill and Mrs. Woodsum of Braintree accompanied by Miss Grace Batson sang some very pleasing selections.

The magnificently illustrated "Story of the Great Rebellion" which is to be given at Hancock hall Monday evening, March 16, deserves the patronage of all. Over 125 stereopticon views will be shown. Mr. Nickerson, the narrator, under whose direction the whole entertainment will be, has been addressing the public for nearly 15 years and never fails to hold the attention of an audience.

One of the prettiest dancing-parties of the season was given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Atkinson Price of Adams street on Thursday evening. Congratulations and good wishes were showered on Miss May S. Rice and Mr. Homer Bigelow, Jr, whose engagement had just been announced. Frappe and dainty cakes were served throughout the evening, the time-honored but unhealthful caterer's supper being dispensed with; a commendable departure from conventionality.

Mr. D. Vinton Pierce of this city has had all the experience with New Hampshire floods that he wants at Centre Ossipee, although he was more fortunate than his neighbors who live on lower land, all of whom deserted their houses. He was advised to flee for safety but did not desert the ship. There was a river flowing down his driveway and great cakes of ice and logs were deposited on his front lawn. Some streets were blocked with ice 20 to 30 feet square and about 3 feet thick piled up to the limbs of the trees, and the town authorities used dynamite. The bridge and dam were carried away.

The Mutual Life.

The fifty-third annual statement of The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York has just been issued showing the operations of the Company for the year of 1895. The figures speak for themselves and are so extraordinary in their magnitude as to make it worthy of the special consideration not only of those who are insured in this great Company but of those who are interested in the progress of this, the greatest of our American financial institutions.

The distribution of benefits by this company in 1895 was wide and vast. The record of no other company in the world can equal it. The payments on account of matured death claims, endowments, annuities, etc., amounts to over twenty-three million dollars.

The agent for this company, Deputy Sheriff Field, is very well known in this city and very popular throughout the county, and any one in want of facts in regard to life insurance will do well to call on him.

Building Rumors.

It is rumored that the Quincy Savings bank will erect a large block on the present site. While such a movement has been contemplated Treasurer Burgin says no action has been taken as yet in that direction.

Anotner rumor is that Jordan, Marsh & Co. are to have a large branch store in this city on the property of Mr. Webb, near the corner of Hancock and School streets.

WOLLASTON.

Mr. George P. Keith, a former resident of Wollaston and son of City Clerk Keith, was on Monday elected a member of the board of selectmen of Hudson.

Mr. Al Williams, Jr., and Mr. Stephen D. Welsh of Wollaston returned on Tuesday from a three days' gunning trip to Walpole with a half a dozen fat rabbits.

Ex-Councilman Charles R. Sherman had a narrow escape from a serious accident at the Wollaston depot Wednesday. When boarding the train he slipped on the icy steps and was thrown violently against the brake handle, the force being sufficient to render him unconscious. He was taken into the depot and restoratives applied. Fortunately he was not seriously injured.

Mr. F. A. Rogers of Wollaston had a narrow escape from being killed on Saturday. His depot carriage which was standing opposite the depot, had a new horse hitched to it. Two trains passing each other at the station caused the horse to jump and run. Mr. Rogers grabbed him by the bridle, but the horse, which was a powerful animal threw him directly between his hind legs. The animal became frantic and began to kick but Mr. Rogers with great presence of mind locked his arms around the nigh leg and held on for dear life. Assistance soon came and extracted him from his perilous position.

The Rev. Edward A. Horton and Rev. Thos. Van Ness of Boston spoke before a goodly sized audience in the chapel of the Wollaston Unitarian church, on Monday evening, upon "The relation of parents to the Sunday School." The subject was very ably treated by the speakers, both from an ethical and a practical point of view. Delegations were present from Quincy and Neponset. Miss Arnold was unable to be present and speak. A light lunch was served after the speaking. Coffee was poured by Miss Taylor and chocolate by Miss Foster.

Mrs. Charles R. Sherman, who was quite severely injured some three weeks ago by slipping upon an icy sidewalk and falling, striking her head, is slowly convalescing.

The storm which has been hovering over the coast for the past week developed into a hurricane on Tuesday accompanied by driving sleet and snow. On Wednesday the storm increased in violence so that by afternoon the wind had attained a maximum velocity of 55 miles an hour on Blue Hill and 36 miles at Wollaston.

Mrs. Frederick Berry Smith will sing and Miss Thomas the violionist is expected to play at the vesper service 4 o'clock, Sunday at Wollaston Unitarian church.

The engagement is announced of Miss Susie L. Delano of Wollaston, and Mr. John W. McMillan of Boston.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet Friday, March 13, at three P. M in the Baptist church.

District Deputy Grand Regent Roberts will pay a fraternal visit to John Adams Council R A. of Wollaston, Monday evening March 9, at which time two candidates will be initiated.

Hodenosaunee Tribe, Red Men, Wollaston raised two hunters to the rank and title of warriors, at its last regular meeting.

The regular meeting of Wollaston lodge, I. O. G. T., will be held on Tuesday evenings of each week in I. O. O. F. hall. Two candidates were initiated last Tuesday and twelve more proposed for membership. The lodge will hold an entertainment and social March 31.

L. W. Nash, real estate agent, has sold for E. S. Thomas, house and stable on Central avenue, to George F. Cate, who will occupy in May. Mr. Thomas will build at once on adjoining land for his own occupancy.

The Atlantic team (D) of the Wollaston Bowling Club defeated Team A, at the Duck's Nest alleys on Tuesday evening, 2,203 to 2,166. Fratus was high on totals, 479; and Coe was high on singles, 206.

Team A of the Wollaston Candle pin club defeated team C on the Duck's Nest alleys on Wednesday evening 1139 to 1103.

DOWNS AND PARK.

Norfolk Downs should not always be overlooked by the city government. We also would like 50 ride tickets to Boston and should have been included in the order adopted by the City Council. Business at the Norfolk Downs station has rapidly increased and there are passengers for every train that stops.

It is seldom that so large and successful a dancing party has been held at Wollaston as the one which was given by the Squantum Yacht club in the K. of H. hall on Thursday evening. This was due to the good management of the committee who had it in charge,—Mr. Benjamin Sargent, Vice Commodore Hamilton Flood, Dr. F. A. Locke and Mr. Alfred T. Barstow. Over forty couples danced, filling the hall to its utmost capacity. The old and the young tars shook out a reef and went in for a jolly good time. The costumes of the ladies were elegant, the whole scene making a very pretty picture. The music was by Astrella's orchestra of Boston. Lunch was served.

We are pleased to report that the sick in the family of W. D. Given are convalescing.

Mr. Fred Loud has moved into the McKay house on Beach street.

The whist party at Alvar Polk's Monday evening was well attended notwithstanding the severe storm.

Mrs. L. H. Milberry and Mr. Loud obtained the King prizes.

Mrs. Annie E. Smiley of Ipswich, superintendent of Junior league, will lecture Wednesday evening, March 11, at Union chapel, Norfolk Downs. Subject,—"The New Woman of the Twentieth Century." This will undoubtedly be interesting and should be largely attended.

Mr. Stiles has moved his family from Natick, Mass., to Norfolk Downs, where he is employed in the store of W. B. Grant.

Mr. Herbert A. Snow, son of ex-Councilman Snow, is slowly recovering from pneumonia.

The first social held in the new Union chapel was a success. The supper was pronounced excellent and netted the society about $18.

A special meeting of the club will be held next Tuesday evening to consider the matter of appropriating $350 to rebuild the pier which was damaged by the storm and to make extensive repairs on the club house.

We call attention to the mortgagee's sale of real estate on Palmer street, Germantown, to be held Monday afternoon, March 9, at 1 o'clock. Notice of which is given in another colum of today's paper.

ATLANTIC.

Phineas Coombs has returned from Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. W. H. Yeoman has gone to Biddeford, Maine, to the bedside of her only brother who is dying of apoplexy.

Miss Susie Hall, of Walker street, has been quite ill with la grippe during the past week but has almost recovered.

Rev. Edward Norton, pastor of the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, addressed the Quincy Union, Y. P. S. C. E., at their bi-monthly meeting at the Presbyterian church, South Quincy, on Monday evening.

Rev. J. W. Kingsbury, the well known temperance speaker, lectured at the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, on Sunday evening. Owing to the disagreeable weather the attendance was scant, but those who attended were very much interested in the lecture.

One of the prettiest whist parties of the season was that given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Hall of Walker street on Friday evening. Guests were present from Boston, Ashmont, Dorchester and Atlantic. The ladies' prizes fell to Miss Hight and Miss Habermann, while Mr. Moxon and Mr. Hight carried away the gentlemen's honors. Light Refreshments were served throughout the evening and at the close of the game the guests sat down to a dainty lunch.

Arrangements are being made for a leap year party to be held in Music Hall, Atlantic, the latter part of March, which will undoubtedly be the leading society event of the season.

Rev. C. P. Mills of St. Chrysostom's church is holding Cottage meetings in Atlantic Friday evenings during lent. Thus far meetings have been held with Mrs. Clean and Miss Kate Nelson. At the last one there were 26 present and a deep devotional spirit was evident. The address by the rector, was one of intense spiritual life, a fitting supplement to the beautiful ritual.

Mrs. Moody, Billings street, entertains the meetings next Friday evening and all interested in such services will be made welcome.

The snow drifted a great deal on the sidewalks at Atlantic, so much so that in many places it was impassable.

Miss Blanche C. Bristol, of Uxbridge, who is attending the Wheaton Seminary at Norton, Mass., spent Wednesday with Mrs. George W. Hill.

The annual meeting of the Memorial Congregational church society, which was to be held on last Tuesday evening, was postponed one week; the necessary quorum not being present on account of the storm.

Twenty-five prominent young ladies and gentlemen gave a good minstrel show at Odd Fellows' hall, Neponset, on Thursday evening.

The Brotherhood Social.

Notwithstanding the storm, eighty young men gathered at the center Congregational church Wednesday night to enjoy the social and supper given by the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip. The whole affair was a decided success. A delightful entertainment was provided consisting of solo singing of rare excellence by Prof. Marshall of Boston; entertaining instrumental music by Master John Black, violinist; declaiming by Mr. Stacey Southworth, and humorous selections by Mr. H. S. Wessell, who from his large repertoire of chaste wit was a whole entertainment in himself.

At nine o'clock the company sat down to a bountifully provided supper to which they did ample justice. Supper finished, Mr. Delcevare King, acting as toast master, stated that the object of the gathering was acquaintance and social intercourse. He then very gracefully introduced the following speakers, Rev. Edwin N. Hardy, Messrs. James Merrill, R S. Atkins, C. R Tucker, H. S. Wessell, and E. W. Branch. This informal speaking proved so interesting that every one regretted that the clock on the wall indicated that it was high time to separate.

Great credit is due Mr. King and the social committee for the great success of the first Brotherhood social.

A New Book.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

The Shawmut Spring Water stands second to none as a pure drinking water. Hundreds of families are using it every day. It is an important factor in maintaining health, building up and restoring the organs of digestion to healthy action. Cures Rheumatic, Kidney and Bladder troubles, when drugs have proved useless.

Send your order for a 5-gallon sample package. If you don't like it, it costs you nothing. Drink it and you will be satisfied of its purity.

WEST QUINCY.

The young ladies of the West Quincy Epworth League are arranging for a grand entertainment to be given at an early date.

By an order received from the post office department the office at West Quincy will be known hereafter as Sub-station No. 1.

A final composition was reached at the insolvency court in Dedham Wednesday in the case of J. T. Carey of West Quincy, and the case closed.

The annual report of the Metropolitan Park Commission shows that $142,261.79 has been expended upon the Blue Hills reservation. Of this amount $87,381.55 was for land taken. The total number of claims were 189 and the total area 4,189 acres.

A public telephone station is to be established in J. F. Kane's store on Copeland street.

The displaying of the flags on the Willard and Adams school buildings Thursday, showed that both buildings are in need of new flags, especially the Willard whose flag is badly torn.

Division 5, A. O. H., are arranging an entertainment for the seventeenth of March.

SOUTH QUINCY.

The meeting night of the St. John's C. L. and A. A. has been changed from Tuesday to Thursday.

Capt. W. H. H. Rideout has been promoted one grade at the Boston custom house.

A series of meetings is to be held at the Baptist church, Franklin street, beginning tonight at 7 30. Evangelist Ward will speak every evening until further notice. Come and hear him.

The indications in the granite industry are that there will be plenty of work this spring, and that means business of all kinds in Quincy will take a boom.

The South Quincy progressive whist club held its last regular weekly meeting on Thursday night, which closed a series of most enjoyable social gathering. There were present Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dell, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Willey, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Ross, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Gillis. A royal repast was served by the hostess Mrs. Willey.

Visitation to Maple Lodge.

A union meeting to exemplify the work of the Knights and Ladies of Honor was held Wednesday evening with Maple lodge, and notwithstanding the very inclement weather there was a very large attendance. Among the visitors were Grand Protector, L. C. Tibbets of South Boston; Grand Vice Protector, Mrs. Golf of Worcester; Grand Guardian White of Medford; a elegationd of forty from Evening Star lodge of Somerville who came in a special electric, and delegations from Pearl lodge of Worcester; New England of Boston; Friendship of South Boston; Prient of Beachmont and Equity of Charlestown.

The degree team of Maple lodge under Capt. Horace O. Souther, worked the degree on two candidates in a manner that called forth many compliments from the grand officers on the excellency of the work. Two applications for membership were received.

At the conclusion of the business of the evening there was speeches by the grand officers and visitors interspersed with solos by Mrs. L. F. Tirrell.

MOTHERS MUST GUIDE.

Should Watch the Physical Development of Their Daughters.

Information They Should Furnish at the Proper Time—Knowledge by Which Suffering May Be Avoided.

Every mother possesses information of vital value to her young daughter. When the girl's thoughts become sluggish, with headache, dizziness, and a disposition to sleep, pains in back and lower limbs, eyes dim, desire for solitude, and a dislike to the society of children: when she is a mystery to herself and friends, then, her mother should come to her aid.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will, at this time, prepare the system for the coming change. See that she has it, and Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., will cheerfully answer any letters where information is desired. Thousands of women owe their health to her and the Vegetable Compound, and mothers are constantly applying to her for advice regarding their daughters.

IN CONNECTION with the proposed paving of Copeland street, a suggestion of a West Quincy man is worth considering, and that is to widen Miller street and extend it through the valley to the West Quincy depot. Betterments considered it might cost less than to widen Copeland street and it would be a more direct route.

FIFTY-RIDE tickets to Boston on the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. would be appreciated by Quincy people, and it is hoped that something may come from the resolve adopted by the City Council. It is a matter in which the new Board of Trade should cooperate. It would seem as if the increase in the sale of tickets would be a financial gain for the railroad.

WE CANNOT blame anyone in Atlantic for wanting a new depot, and in view of the fact that the present depot was a gift to the railroad they have a right to press their demand for something better. It will not be located probably in the fork of the main line and the Granite branch as suggested by our correspondent, as it is the policy to erect depots on the inward side. The new depot will probably come soon after the four tracks are put in and the street bridge widened.

IN 1894 a prominent citizen withdrew from the contest for the mayoralty nomination intimating that his services as president of the Quincy Granite Manufacturers' Association might be of more value to the city than if he were in the executive chair. In 1895 and again this year peaceful settlements have been effected between the manufacturers and the granite cutters, and President Thompson has truly been of great service to the city. He has not accomplished all this alone, but his influence has been felt, and all is well.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

For the Patriot.

Letter from the State House.

BOSTON, March 4, 1896.

Mr. Thompson of Quincy, the other day, put in the petition of the Quincy Quarry Company for an extension of six months of the time in which to locate its road and the house, on Monday, after the committee on rules had sat upon the case and reported that the rules should be suspended, set aside the rules which require that the matter be presented before the first Wednesday of February and that it be advertised according to directions by the secretary of state and referred the petition to the committee on railroads with instructions to hear the petitioners after such notice as the committee may direct.

Both branches have enacted the bill to authorize the Quincy and Boston street railway company to lease or purchase the property of the Braintree street railway company and to increase its capital stock.

The unusual circumstance occurred in the hall of the house on Friday of the presentation to the state of a bust of the governor during the governor's term of office. It was the opinion of Gov. Greenhalge,—and it seems to be the opinion of some of the legislature also,—that it would have been in better taste for the city of Lowell to have postponed its presentation until his term had expired. Most people doubtless have the idea that commemorations belong to those whose term of public service has expired, not to those who are still in official life where they may become unpopular before their terms expire; little thinking that his labors as governor were done, and his end so near.

Wednesday, March 4, was a day whose like has never been seen before at the state house. It was not long after nine o'clock in the forenoon that Capt. Hamlin in the ante-room of the governor's chamber, told all inquirers that the governor was dying and that it was only a question of minutes how long he could survive. Arrangements had been made by members of the staff at Lowell to telephone at once upon the death of the governor to the executive department so that the news should be received there first of all in Boston. So it continued through the day. A messenger waited in the outer room of the department to carry the expected news speedily to the courts in order that they might adjourn in memory of the illustrious departed. Every inquirer was told that the governor was expected to die at any moment. So it continued during the entire day. Not a word of cheer or comfort was received from Lowell, but only the reiterated message that his death was instantly expected. The senate and house met as usual under this shadow and went about their business. In the senate the special assignment was the report of the committee which was appointed to attend the funeral of ex-Gov. Robinson and to report resolutions.

It was an occasion to darken any public body,—the governor dying and the subject of the hour being the merits and honors of a distinguished deceased governor. The speakers felt the gloom upon the situation and never before has there been such a shadow over the legislative proceedings. The speeches in honor of ex Gov. Robinson were of a high order. Senator Irwin of Northampton was the first speaker and he brought to his theme the same genius for eloquence which marked his speech last year on the transfer of the codfish and this year upon the adoption of the resolutions in favor of an equestrian statue for Gen. Joseph Hooker. Other senators spoke eloquently, particularly Senator Chase of Holyoke, who told of the departed as the beloved school teacher of many of his personal friends in Chicopee. After the senate had adopted the resolutions and adjourned as a mark of respect, they were taken into the house where the eulogies upon the character and abilities of the departed were repeated. Messrs. J. H. Mellen of Worcester and Stone of Springfield spoke with particular effectiveness and rose to the height of the occasion, setting forth fittingly the high character of the lamented statesman and the extent of his service to the state. The house also adopted the resolutions unanimously by a rising vote and then adjourned. The shadow of Gov. Greenhalge's condition was upon all and the seriousness of the day will be long remembered.

The legislature is now at the height of the season of committee hearings. Such crowds of people as have been at the state house this week seem to have never been seen there before upon the errand of petitioners. The old hall of the house of representatives is brought into frequent requisition, while other rooms which are very large, are also needed for the accommodation of the throngs who bring business for the legislature to do. It might be thought that it would be impossible for so many people to be interested in matters before the legislature for them to give up their occupations and be at expense of travel and hotel bills to attend. But the demonstration is in the fact that they are on hand from all parts of the state and seem to have a great deal of important matter for their representatives to attend to.

The farmers are on hand in large number to protest against the arbitrary powers, as they term them, of the cattle commission. But the commission is so strongly grounded in the science of the tuberculosis question that it is not likely that the farmers can carry their point of abolishing the commission. Indeed, the farmers are divided among themselves and more than ever are becoming convinced that the course of the commissioners is for the good of the state as a whole and of the farmers in particular.

Remonstrances against a statue to Gen. Butler have been put in, signed by Henry Lee and several other Lees, John C. Ropes, the historian of Napoleon, who ought to understand military operations, Gamaliel Bradford and others. There is sure to be a fight over the question, for the friends and opponents of Butler take strong grounds on their respective sides. RULE.

Republican Club Formed.

A second meeting of those interested in the formation of a Republican club was held Saturday night in the rooms of the Quincy Quarry Co. in Dargin & Merrill's block.

John F. Merrill was elected chairman and Warren W. Adams secretary.

The committee appointed at Tuesday night's meeting to formulate plans for the organization of the club reported by-laws which were adopted.

It was voted that a charter list be opened to be kept open for two weeks, that there be one list and that the chairman use his own discretion in passing it to the different wards and that members pay $1 when they sign.

Warren W. Adams was elected temporary treasurer and the charter list was then passed about the room for signatures and it received the following names:

John F. Merrill, Charles A. Howland, Frederick L. Jones, Thomas Butler, Albert Keating, T. H. Newcomb, Russell A. Sears, Warren W. Adams, John O. Hall, Wellington W. Mitchell.

No reference was made to Municipal affairs and Chairman Merrill extends an invitation to all Republicans to sign the charter list which for the present is in the hands of Warren W. Adams.

Liquor Raids.

The Quincy police put on their war paint Sunday morning and went in search of intoxicants which were kept in an illegal manner. They made three raids and were successful in each.

It was but a little after 2 o'clock when Chief Hayden accompanied by Officers McKay, Ferguson, Bradley, Canavan, Nicol, Connelly and Murray left the police station armed with three search warrants authorizing them to search the within named premises and look for liquors.

The first place at which they called was that of Cessare Tantardini, at 32 Columbia street. Here the officers found one-half barrel of beer, three pints of wine and a quantity of empty jugs and barrels that had contained liquors, all of which they seized.

Tomaso Solito on Garfield street, also received a call, and here the officers carried away one keg of beer and some empties.

The third and last place visited was that of Joseph Casna, at 11 Penn street, where they seized 13 gallons of wine, 6 gallons of beer, and a lot of empties.

At the latter place they also found three men playing cards, whom they arrested for playing cards on the Lord's day. The three men gave their names as Giovvanni Salmero, Ambrogio Bianchi and Giovvanni Giacomeezzi.

A Questionable Title.

Who owns the right to the Town brook at the corner of Washington and Canal street is a question now in dispute between the City of Quincy and Mr. Albert Keating.

Last week Mr. Keating commenced the erection of a building over the brook at the corner. Friday Commissioner Knowlton called upon him and ordered him to stop work and not build over the brook.

Mr. Keating's claim is that part of Canal street bordering on the brook does not belong to the town or city as it was originally laid out by the County Commissioners and that he has a right to build over it and that the city cannot claim half of the brook.

On the other hand Commissioner Knowlton says, even if Mr. Keating's claim be true, that the retaining wall on the street belongs to the city and that Mr. Keating is using that wall for his foundation. He also finds by the records of the selectman that some years ago Mr. Keating made application to the selectmen for permission to build a temporary platform over the brook, which was granted.

Quincy Debating Club.

The debate on the question,—Resolved, That Massachusetts should hold her elections biennially—was held at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., Thursday night. Owing to the absence of one of the disputants, Mr. Craig had to support his side alone which he did very ably. In fact, all of the principal disputants showed careful preparation.

Mr. Harold Faxon and E. S. Litchfield, Esq, spoke in the affirmative.

When debate was thrown open to the house and Mr. Sampson, Mr. Southworth, Mr. Sargent, Mr. King and others spoke.

Mr. Colton, who was the critic of the evening, then came forward and in a friendly, yet specific way criticised the principal disputants. All felt that this inaugurated a very helpful plan.

A Strike Averted.

It was good news to the business men of Quincy to learn that a peaceable agreement has been reached between the Granite Manufacturers and employes and that an agreement has been entered into by these two organizations which is to remain in force for three years.

The final agreement was reached Saturday night it being nearly midnight when the settlement was finally agreed upon.

During the early evening the Manufacturer's Association held a meeting to consider the non-discrimination clause which the men had demanded should be eliminated.

This clause which has in reality been the point of contention reads as follows:

"It is hereby mutually agreed by and between the Granite Manufacturers' Association and the branches of the Granite Cutters' Union of Quincy, Mass., that no distinction shall be made by manufacturers between union and non-union men, neither shall members of the branches of the Granite Cutters' Unions make any distinction against any of the employes of the members of the Granite Manufacturers' Association."

After some lengthy discussion the manufacturers voted to eliminate this clause, the Cutters' Union having agreed not to discriminate against any of the non-union men who had left the Union during the lockout of 1892, and returned to work and to whom the manufacturers had given a bond to protect against the Union.

When this decision was reached the two committees held a joint meeting and the balance of the matters under consideration were readily adjusted so that at midnight when the meeting adjourned every point had been considered and acted upon.

The other changes and additions to the agreement and bill of prices in force last year are as follows:

Two new clauses have been inserted which will facilitate the business between the two associations more promptly, namely: "Any business referred to the Figuring Committees shall be decided within two weeks," and "any business referred to the Executive committees shall be decided within twenty-one days."

Article 3, was amended so as to read: "When a manufacturer fails to pay on the regular pay day he must give a satisfactory reason to the workmen's committee, or the workmen may suspend work."

A new rule was also added, "That any workman discharged shall be paid at once and Article 3, shall apply to this matter."

A new clause was added to the agreement reading as follows:

"This bill is to remain in force for three years with a proviso that if the eight hour day becomes general, that clause may be taken up before the expiration of this bill.

In relation to the prices paid for work in some cases a slight advance was made but the changes made as a whole are more particularly to make the bill less complicated and better understood.

THE BEST NONE TOO GOOD.

Americans Want the Best, and Know What is the Best.

Shakespeare wrote of the "bubble, reputation;" but reputation in business is no bubble. It is acquired only by years of patient, pains-taking, persistent and honorable labor, by knowledge, skill, judgment and integrity; and when a reputation thus acquired is staked upon the worth of a single article, it is the strongest possible guarantee that that article is always going to maintain the standard of value. Twenty-five years of unbroken reputation as the standard flour of the world is an unchallengeable warrant of the quality of Pillsbury's Best. Its sales have increased in that time eight thousand per cent. and its use extended throughout the civilized world. The Pillsbury mills have always been famous for maintaining the high quality of the output, no matter what the cost. The American housekeeper of a generation ago used Pillsbury's Best because it made the best bread, and the most of it to the barrel; millions of her decendants use it today for the same reason, and will have no other. That the American people want the best, and know what is best, is amply demonstrated in their constantly increasing demand for Pillsbury's Best. 1po 1t

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Hood's Sarsaparilla as a blood purifier and building up medicine leads everything ever produced. It is positively the best. Others may make the same claim. But there's this difference: We prove it. Not by antiquity, but by Merit. Not by what we say, but by what Hood's Sarsaparilla does. It has a record of Cures unequalled in medical history. It positively, perfectly and permanently cures when all other medicines fail. That the keen discrimination of the people recognizes its merit and the cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla, is shown by the fact that they buy Hood's Sarsaparilla in preference and to the exclusion of all others. Hood's Sarsaparilla has a larger sale than all other blood purifiers. It wins confidence everywhere because the statements in its advertising and testimonials are verified by all who take it. No other medicine has ever received such praise, or so many voluntary testimonials of wonderful cures. No other medicine possesses the peculiar combination, proportion and process used in preparing Hood's Sarsaparilla, and which give it merit peculiar to itself. This is the secret of its wonderful power, of its wonderful sales, of its wonderful hold upon the confidence of the people. This is why it cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Catarrh, Rheumatism, all Humors, Kidney and Liver troubles, Dyspepsia, That Tired Feeling, builds up the nerves, creates an appetite and strengthens the whole system. Its merit, its sales, its

REGULATIONS OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH

Of the City of Quincy.

At a meeting held Feb. 20, 1895, the Board of Health of the City of Quincy made and adopted, and do hereby publish, the following regulations:

REGULATION 1. No person shall collect, remove or carry in or through any of the streets, lanes avenues, places or alleys within the City of Quincy, the contents of any cesspool, vault, privy or privy well, the drainage of any stable, dwelling house, slaughter house, or other building in the city unless expressly licensed therefor by the Board of Health, upon such terms and conditions, and by such methods, as the Board may deem that the public health requires and upon failure to comply therewith, the license shall be forthwith revoked, and cancelled. No privy vault or cesspool shall be cleaned between 6 P. M. and sunrise.

REG 2. No person shall deposit the contents of any privy-vault or cesspool, or any other filth, upon any premises within the limits of the city, without first having obtained a permit to do so from the Board of Health. Nor shall any cesspool for the retention of waste water be within ten feet of any house unless the cesspool be cemented water-tight. No privy-vault or cesspool that is not water-tight shall be maintained within two rods of any well, spring, or other source of water supply used for drinking purposes.

REG. 3. No person, unless expressly licensed therefor by the Board of Health, shall collect, transport or convey, swill, fat, grease, bones, or any decaying, putrifying or offensive animal matter or vegetable substance through any of the public streets or ways of this city, and then only in securely covered vehicles or vessels, from which no liquid matter or odors can escape.

REG 4. All persons licensed by the Board to remove the contents of privy-vaults and cesspools, and all who collect and transport swill, refuse and offensive animal or vegetable substances, shall keep all carts, equipments and implements used therefor, disinfected and free from all obnoxious or offensive odors when not in immediate use, and shall not allow the same to become obnoxious or offensive to the public or to the owners or occupants of premises adjoining those where the same are kept or stored.

REG. 5. No person shall place, or cause to be placed, or empty, or cause to be emptied, upon any street, way, lane or sidewalk, any house dirt, offal or rubbish, any sewage, or the drainage of any sink or stable, or the contents of any cesspool, vault, privy or privy well. No person shall cast any decayed vegetable or dead animal substance into any cesspool or privy vault, or any well, cistern, reservoir, pond or waters within the city, nor drown or caused to be drowned, any animal in any of said waters. And the carcasses of animals dead of disease or killed for any cause, shall be buried at such distances from dwellings, or wells, or other source of water supply that no danger or nuisance can result; and no person shall establish or maintain any stable, swine pen, privy, privy well, cesspool or sink drain within six feet of any stream, watercourse or pond in this city, without a permit from the Board of Health.

REG 6. The keeping of swine, goats, cows or poultry in any part of the city where such keeping shall be held by the Board of Health detrimental to the public health or offensive to the neighborhood, is hereby prohibited, and after due notice by said Board to the owner or person in charge he shall forthwith remove the same or cause the same to be removed, from any place at which the keeping thereof shall be prohibited by the Board.

REG. 7. No person shall burn, boil, try or decompose any refuse substances either animal or vegetable, in such a manner that the same shall evolve odors or gasses obnoxious or offensive to the public or to the owners or occupants of adjoining premises.

REG. 8. Every occupant of any dwelling house, tenement or other building in this city shall keep such house or building, and the yard belonging to the same, free from all filth and from all substances having offensive odors.

Whenever a vault, cesspool, barn or cellar, or any building or premises of any description, becomes offensive, the same shall be satisfactorily cleansed, ventilated and disinfected, by the occupant or owner within such reasonable time as the Board of Health may in a notice therefor prescribe.

Whenever the Board of Health is satisfied on due examination that a cellar, tenement or building within the city, occupied as a dwelling house, has become, by reason of the number of occupants, want of cleanliness or other cause, unfit for such purpose, the occupants shall remove therefrom within forty-eight hours after written notice has been given them.

REG 9. When a householder knows that a person within his family is sick with small-pox, diphtheria, membraneous croup, scarlet fever or any other disease dangerous to the public health, he shall immediately give notice thereof to the Board of Health, unless he knows such cases have been duly reported by the attending physician.

When a physician knows that a person whom he is called to visit is infected with small-pox, diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles or typhoid fever, he shall immediately give notice thereof to the Board of Health.

REG. 10. No person from any dwelling where in a case of small-pox, diphtheria, membraneous croup or scarlet fever exists shall attend any school, church, or public gathering of any kind or take any book or magazine to or from the Public Library without a permit from the Board of Health. The Board will inform the librarian of all cases of said diseases, and until a written permit is given he shall allow neither books nor magazines to be taken to or returned from the dwellings where such cases exist.

REG. 11. In case of a death from small-pox, scarlet fever, membraneous croup or diphtheria, burial must be made within twelve hours, if practicable, and must be strictly private; and the body must not be exposed to view, or the coffin opened after the body has been placed therein.

REG 12. All cases of small-pox, membraneous croup, diphtheria and scarlet fever must be isolated to the satisfaction of the Board, and no visitors of any kind allowed. After the sickness is over the rooms occupied must be disinfected by the householder or by the Board of Health. They must be tightly closed and sulphur burned in them at the rate of two pounds per one thousand cubic feet of space. They must remain closed from six to twelve hours, then opened and aired thoroughly before further occupancy. The bedding must be well spread out and exposed to the same sulphur fumes, and all the furniture, walls, bedding, carpets, etc., must be washed in a solution of carbolic acid, chloride of lime or corrosive sublimate.

REG. 13. No child from a family, any one of whose members is sick with small-pox, membraneous croup, diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles or whooping cough, will be permitted to attend school until six weeks after the complete cessation of such sickness in the family. Children from tenements immediately adjoining those in which any of these diseases exist will likewise be prohibited, unless by permission of the Board of Health, and all children so prohibited, by reason of sickness in their families, before again attending school shall obtain a certificate from the attending physician and from a member of the Board of Health, that all danger of contagion is past.

REG. 14 Whoever has knowledge of, or has reason to suspect the existence of a contagious disease among any domestic animals in this city shall forthwith give notice thereof to the Board of Health.

REG. 15. Persons having the care or custody of such suspected animals, and having received a written or verbal order from the Board of Health for their restriction, shall neither sell, trade, nor in any way dispose of them, nor move or allow them to be moved from the place assigned, nor allow other animals not already exposed to come in contact with them till permitted so to do by the State Cattle Commissioners.

Whoever violates any provisions of regulations 14 and 15 shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or by imprisonment not exceeding one year; and whoever violates any provisions of any other of these regulations shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars for each offense.

Mortgagee's Sale.

BY Virtue and in execution of the power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Henry C. Weeden and Amy E. Weeden, wife of said Henry C. in her own right, to Benjamin D. Weeden, dated March eleventh, A. D. 1890, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, libro 6[illegible], folio 110, which mortgage has been assigned by said mortgagee to me, the undersigned, as trustee, by assignment dated April 20, A. D., 1894, recorded with said Deeds, libro 712, folio 141, and for the purpose of foreclosing said mortgage for breach of the condition thereof, will be sold by public auction on the premises hereinafter described, being the premises described in said mortgage, on MONDAY, the ninth day of March, A. D., 1896, at one o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed namely:

A certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon, situated in Quincy in the County of Norfolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a stake near a Willow tree on the northeasterly side of a street called Palmer street, shown on a plan drawn by H. T. Whitman, surveyor, dated February, 1890, and recorded with said deeds, and filed as No. 559, at land conveyed by said Amy E. Weeden to John Quincy Adams, thence running northeasterly at right angles to said Palmer street, four hundred and sixty-eight [4 8] feet to a stake; thence turning at right angles and running southeasterly two hundred and four 65-100 [204 65-100] feet to a stake in the marsh line shown on said plan. From this point to the point of beginning the granted premises are bounded as follows: Northeasterly on salt marsh of person unknown by the marsh line as shown on said plan, southeasterly partly on salt marsh late of Peter Bracket and partly on Ridge Hill, so-called, southwesterly by the sea to marsh land formerly of the town of Quincy, northwesterly by said last mentioned marsh land to said street, northeasterly again by said street to a point opposite the point of beginning; thence the line runs across said street to the point of beginning. Excepting out of said described premises a certain parcel of land containing about one acre conveyed by Samuel Andrews to Abraham Rich, Jr., by deed dated October 5, 1861, recorded with said deeds, libro 304, folio 17, to which deed reference is made for a particular description of the parcel excepted from this grant. And excepting, also, said Palmer street. Being a part of the premises conveyed by Mary A. Sheen in her right to said Amy E. Weeden, by deed dated Feb. 1[illegible], 1890, recorded with said mortgage, comprising lot three [3] on said plan and their portions conveyed by said deed from Mary A. Sheen.

$500.00 will be required to be paid in cash by the purchaser at the time and place of sale. Other terms of sale made known at the time and place of sale.

HENRY C. WEEDEN, Trustee,
Assignee of said Mortgage.

Which are You?

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

There are two kinds of people on earth today,
Just two kinds of people, no more, I say.

Not a sinner and saint, for 'tis well understood
The good are half bad, and the bad are half good.

Not the rich and the poor, for to count a man's wealth
You must first know the state of his conscience and health.

Not the humble and proud, for in life's little span,
Who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.

Not the happy and sad, for the swift flying years
Bring each man his laughter and each man his tears.

No; the two kinds of people on earth I mean,
Are the people who lift and the people who lean.

Wherever you go, you will find the world's masses
Are always divided in just these two classes.

And oddly enough, you will find, too, I wean,
There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.

In which class are you? Are you easing the load
Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?

Or are you a leaner, who lets others bear
Your portion of labor and worry and care?
—Harper's Weekly.

Notes and Comments.

—Stephen Salisbury is a citizen to rejoice in. Massachusetts claims him, nor shall Worcester alone be proud of the public spirit and generosity of the man who gives $170,000 for a museum of fine arts in his city. Worcester is fortunate, indeed, in having such a citizen. Mr. Salisbury is always in the forefront of all public-spirited work in Worcester.

—James R. Kendrick, third vice president of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, states that the road will certainly equip the Dedham Branch with electricity some time in the coming summer. No definite plans have as yet been made, and it is not even known what style of apparatus will be made use of for applying the motive power. The general idea, however, is to run more trains, and to have them lighter, and from this it may be inferred that the equipment will be either the trolley or some improvement of the trolley, as there is at present no engine which will give the lightness and cheapness desired.—Dedham Gazette.

—The leap year business has begun in earnest—a Nebraska man is suing a woman for breach of promise.

—The Chicago Times-Herald says, "Boston is notably one of the best governed cities in the world, and in municipal wisdom it is certainly far ahead of any of its sister cities in the republic."

—At a mass meeting at Cooper Union, New York, under the auspices of the Central Labor Union, last week, resolutions were adopted protesting against the passage of Senator Lodge's bill appropriating $100,000,000 for coast defences.

—Do not imagine that every man you meet with a long face is keeping Lent. Some of them have notes to meet, new twins at home, or other reasons for looking solemn.

—By a decision of the full bench of the supreme court on Saturday last, in the case of Wesley D. Kidder vs. the Fitchburg railroad, the defendants are compelled to carry the express matter which the plaintiff is engaged in transporting for customers on terms and under facilities equal to those given other express concerns doing business on this road. The decision takes the form of a mandatory order, from which there is no appeal by the road.

—There are 600 scholars in the Chinese Sunday school connected with one of Boston's churches. In the opinion of a good many people they attended Sunday school rather to learn English than religion.

—At a recent session of the probate court, held by Judge White at Dedham, the first account held by Samuel Crane, of Quincy, special administrator of Sally R. Sumner, late of Hyde Park, was allowed for the sum of $17,305 09.

—The Boston school authorities are now discussing the furnishing of cheap lunches to the pupils of the public schools. The experiment has been tried in some of the schools of Boston but it has been found that there is a tendency to "bolt" the food. One visitor found a boy who devoured three sandwiches, a piece of cake and a cup of chocolate in four minutes by the watch.—Mass. Ploughman.

—The newspapers have made many comments upon the sentence of Miss Flagler of Washington, who shot and killed a colored boy stealing pears in her father's grounds about a year ago. She was found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to three hours' imprisonment, with a fine of $500. Who wouldn't be a lady of position and influence.

—A Denver judge—may heaven's choicest sunshine flood the brow of the dear, good man!—has ruled obliging women in the theatres there, to remove their hats and bonnets while a performance is in progress. —Milford Journal.

—Among the bequests made by H. A. Massey, a Canadian, whose will was probated at Toronto, Ont., last week, is $50,000 to the American University, Washington, D. C., to erect a building to represent Canadian Methodism in that university; and $10,000 to D. L. Moody's schools at Northfield, Mass. The will contains twenty-nine bequests to charitable and religious institutions throughout the Dominion, which with the sums given shortly before his death amount to $1,100,000.

—The Somerville Journal thinks that the people are willing to let the Brooklyn inventor who claims that his bicycle boat can cross the ocean in seventy hours try it himself, if he sees fit.

We trust our senator and representatives will see their way clear to vote for the proposed law of libel, intended to protect reputable newspapers from attempted blackmail by shyster lawyers and avaricious clients.—Somerville Citizen.

—That Washington judge who made such a farce of justice by sentencing Miss Flagler to spend three hours in the reception room of the jail for the crime of manslaughter, ought to get six months himself somewhere pounding sand.—Fall River Globe.

—Justice Harlan in the United States Supreme court on Monday announced the decision of the court in the case of the United States versus Jane L. Stanford, executrix of the late Senator Stanford, of California in favor of the executrix. The government's suit was for $15,237,000, and was based on the government's grants to the Central Pacific railroad. If the government's claim had been made good, it would have wiped out the whole estate left by the senator, not only leaving Mrs. Stanford penniless, but cutting off all the beneficiaries under the late senator's will, including the $2,500,000 endowment of the Stanford university.

—It is rumored in Democratic circles that the two delegates suggested from the 12th district to the National Democratic Convention in Chicago are Hon. F. A. Hobart of Braintree and Hon. William L. Douglas of Brockton. We understand that the "Citizen" says that if he goes it must be understood that he favors the nomination of Hon. William E. Russell on a platform of sound money.—Norfolk County Gazette.

—The offer of all its maps and documents bearing upon the question of the Venezuelan boundary, which the British Royal Geographical Society has made to our State Department for the use of the commission now examining the matter, is a strong evidence of the disposition toward peace and good will on the part of Englishmen. Its significance is the greater for the reason that the British Government approves the offer of the Geographical Society. It is becoming more clearly apparent every day that the Boundary Commission whose creation was denounced as an offensive act looking straight towards war when the President sent in his message asking for it, is to exert the greatest moral influence for a peaceful and equitable settlement of the trouble. It is not too much to expect that its determination of the boundary will be accepted as conclusive by all parties to the dispute.—Boston Commonwealth.

—There is much truth in what the Beverly Times says: "The itinerant dealer is of no earthly use to a city. He never gives anything to churches or public enterprises. He has no interests in common with the community. He can swindle and quite frequently he does so with impunity. Contrast him with the home merchant who has a reputation for honesty and fair dealing to maintain. He also bears his share of the public burdens and he deserves your patronage. Since that time the property, which was in coal lands, and various holdings on real estate has increased to more than $14,921,828. The revenues from this vast estate last year were over a million dollars. The greatest expenditure was for the maintainance of the college, which required over half a million to support the 1524 students now under its care.

Indigestion is often taken for consumption. The word consumption means wasting away, and dyspeptics often waste away as badly as consumptives.

The reason people waste away is because either they don't get enough to eat, or they don't digest what they do eat.

If the latter is your trouble, take Shaker Digestive Cordial. This will help you to digest your food and stop your loss of flesh.

Shaker Digestive Cordial is made from herbs, barks and the juices of fruit, by the well-known Shakers at Mt. Lebanon. It possesses great tonic and digestive powers.

Shaker Digestive Cordial has cured many supposed consumptives (who were really dyspeptics) by simply helping their stomachs to digest their food, thus giving them nourishment and new strength.

The production of "The Mikado," is for the present week only. Mr. Rose's choice of operas is dictated largely by personal requests from his patrons. All are invited to send in their choice of operas, either by letter or in person. "These requests," said Mr. Rose, "are kept in such a thorough way that I can tell at a glance what my chances are on any particular opera. When the requests rise above two hundred, I begin to consider the piece called for seriously. When they rise to five hundred, I paste the leaf down, and underline the opera as soon as convenient; the five hundred mark settles it, I know then that the time is ripe. The opera to follow "Mikado" is already decided. It will be "Mignon," the romantic story of the child stolen by gipsies and brought up by them until purchased by a young student. She follows his fortunes, and finally wins him from his infatuation to an actress. The cast will be a strong one all the members of the company having parts for which they seem admirably suited. As for the production, that can safely be left to the exquisite taste which has brought such excellent results in the past to the Castle Square.

New Method of Taxation

Mayor Quincy gave a dinner on Saturday at the Parker House, which was attended by nearly all the Mayors in Massachusetts, together with the representatives of boards of trade in almost every city. From a political standpoint the gathering was a mixed one, Democrats and Republicans mingling as if there were no political parties.

About twenty mayors and twenty-five others were present. The following cities were represented:

Brockton, the Hon. Charles Williamson.
Cambridge, Colonel W. A. Bancroft.
Chelsea, the Hon. John C. Loud.
Fall River, the Hon. W. S. Green.
Fitchburg, the Hon. Henry F. Rockwell.
Gloucester, the Hon. David I. Robinson.
Haverhill, the Hon. Benj. F. Brickett.
Lynn, the Hon. Eugene A. Bessom.
Malden, the Hon. Clarence O. Walker.
Newton, the Hon. Henry E. Cobb.
Northampton, the Hon. Henry P. Field.
Quincy, the Hon. Charles F. Adams, 2d.
Salem, the Hon. James H. Turner.
Somerville, the Hon. Albion A. Perry.
Woburn, the Hon. Montressor T. Allen.
Worcester, Gen. Augustus B. R. Sprague.
Beverly, the Hon. Charles H. Odell.
Lowell, the Hon. William F. Courtney.

Mayor Quincy presided and delivered the opening address, introducing Hon. Jonathan A. Lane, who in a few brief remarks explained the plan and principles of the new method of taxation. He said the scheme outlined in the bill embodies three principles. The first is that hereafter in this State the local assessor shall confine himself entirely to real estate, and that the cities and towns shall meet their expenditures from local taxation on real estate only. The second important feature is that the State itself, and the State alone, should tax personal property, thereby relieving the cities and towns of a large expenditure in which they are now involved, and helping them to carry the increased burden which will at first fall upon them in the matter of their real estate. The third important feature in the bill is that it proposes to exempt capital engaged in manufacturing and in trade, in correspondence with the plans and methods of other States.

Now, in regard to these three features, which we must briefly discuss, it seems to me that the first is one which will commend itself to everybody. The next important feature, and one which you may wish to consider more, is how shall we make good the deficit or the difference which will result from throwing the burden of taxation upon real estate only? We propose to make up for it partly by taxing certain corporations as we tax them today; but the main source of revenue from this bill is expected to come from the Probate Court by means of an inheritance or succession tax.

This may strike you as a novelty and something which will not yield a sufficient return to make up the difference. We wish you to realize that the wealth of this State is flowing through that channel constantly and unceasingly, and that the entire wealth of the State reaches that point ultimately—and when it does there is no shrinkage. The government of Great Britain gets £11,000,000 sterling from that source—one-eighth part of its entire budget.

Hon. John D. Long said: "I am heartily in favor of this scheme, and when I say that, I want it to be distinctly understood that if you could carry out your scheme of fair, simple, straightforward tax by placing it on personal estate, I would just as soon have you do it as to place it on real estate. Now, let us take some of the objections which will be urged. The farmer may say: "My property is mainly in real estate, and it will work a hardship upon me." To be sure, the tax upon his real estate will be enlarged somewhat, but he will be relieved from the tax upon his stock, upon his tools and upon all articles of personal property, and the practical result will be that the burden will be shifted—not increased to any considerable extent.

Then, the owner of real estate on the seashore may say that real estate is valuable for summer residences alone, and that the increased tax on that real estate will be a hardship upon him. On the other hand, it will not add one penny to his expenses. Why? Simply because he will charge his Boston friend who comes down and hires his cottage enough more to cover the increased tax. But will he pay it? Certainly.

But the farmer may claim that he has no summer residents to hire his property, and that it increases the burden of taxation on his real estate, while it really depreciates its value. What is my answer to him? That the assessors of his town have common sense, and that if the shifting of this tax has had the effect of increasing the value of real estate on the seashore and diminishing his, the assessors will take note of that fact. In other words, gentlemen, if you will follow this matter out you will find that this change not only adds very little, even if things remain as they are to the taxes on real estate, but that whatever it does add is counterbalanced by some set-off in natural values.

John C. Cobb, chairman of the merchants' municipal committee, said:

Mr. Mayor and Gentlemen:

We find that every man who is thinking of building a factory takes the tax list and goes over it, and he finds he can go to my town, town of Milton, and pay $7 a thousand, or he can move his place 100 feet across the line into Mayor Adams's city of Quincy and pay a very much larger rate of taxation. That is one of the results of the taxation upon personal property. We find also, that the taxes on corporations are divided throughout the State in a manner which seems to us manifestly unfair. We find Nahant and Milton getting 60 per cent. and upwards of personal property, and Somerville getting only 7 per cent. Now, that is the point at which we have directly aimed, namely, to equalize this personal property tax and spread it over the State, as it should be. There is no possible justice in a tax on the Boston & Albany railroad going to the town of Nahant. That railroad is chartered by the people of the Commonwealth, is supported by a very large proportion of the people of the Commonwealth, but has no more to do with Nahant than it has to do with Chicago; therefore we say that the tax on the Boston & Albany railroad should be divided throughout the towns and cities of the State.

We have been making up some figures in regard to the cities and towns in the commonwealth, and intend to, classify the towns, so that every man can look at the schedule we are preparing, and see what class his town comes in, and what the meaning of that class is. I have those figures in regard to the cities of the commonwealth, and I would like to give them to you. In the first class, we have two cities—Everett and Somerville. Now, the effect of our change on the cities of Everett and Somerville will be that they will be entirely relieved from all personal property tax, and that they will have their tax on real estate reduced. Now, that is a surprising statement, but it is true, on account of the very small percentage of personal property that these cities have, and on account of their being relieved from the State and county taxes, which in these two cases would undoubtedly exceed the tax on personal property.

We next come to Class 2, which takes in the cities of Brockton, Chelsa, Malden, Marlboro, Medford, Quincy, Woburn and Worcester. They all come within a narrow range of percentage. These cities will practically arrive at the result of being relieved from any tax upon personal property and will have little or no increase in the tax on real estate, for the same reason—because of their small percentage of personal property.

The next class, Class 3, is the large class. It takes in the cities of North Adams, Pittsfield, Taunton, Beverly, Gloucester, Haverhill, Lawrence, Lynn, Newburyport, Chicopee, Holyoke, Springfield, Northampton, Cambridge, Lowell, Newton, Waltham, Boston, and Fitchburg. These cities present to us the real problem, which is so to adjust the tax as fairly to meet the needs of those cities, because the cities which I mentioned in the first and second classes are a small item, and those in the fifth and sixth classes are a very much smaller item.

Now, we have made figures in regard to Boston, which will substantially apply to all those cities. We have figured it out, and find that the change will result in an increase of 17 1-2 per cent. in the real estate tax in Boston, or an increase of 2 26 per $1,000, making the rate in Boston, $15, with the result that the citizens of Boston will be absolutely freed of the burdens of taxation and all other forms, except when a person dies and his estate goes through the Probate Court, at which time his property pays a succession tax.

Now, gentlemen, the whole question is, are you willing to add a couple of dollars a thousand to your tax rate for the sake of deriving the advantages which this law is going to give to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts? If you are willing to do that, the problem is solved, and we can go ahead on the lines we have laid down.

I am sorry to say that in the fifth class there is one city. That city is Salem. There is very little to be said about that fifth class. Salem, gentlemen, comes right in with my native town of Milton. Salem collects 41 per cent. of her tax on personal property and Milton collects nearly 65. All we have to say about those cities and towns is that they must look at this question for the good of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and not for their own personal and private interests.

Short addresses were also made by Alexander S. Porter, president of the Real Estate Exchange, and a member of the committee on taxation of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade; Colonel William A. Bancroft, Mayor of Cambridge; the Hon. Albion A. Perry, Mayor of Somerville; the Hon. Henry E. Cobb, Mayor of Newton; Mr. Stetson of New Bedford; the Hon. William S. Greene, Mayor of Fall River, and the Hon. John W. Coughlin, ex-Mayor of Fall River.

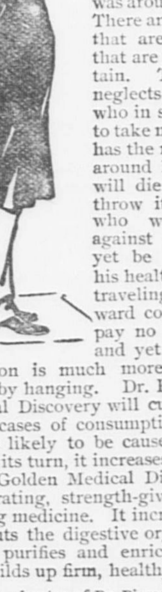

Literary Notes.

The March Number of Harper's Magazine opens with a new instalment of Caspar W. Whitney's "On Snow Shoes to the Barren Grounds," the most striking and novel narrative of travel given to American readers in recent years. "Acadian Bee Ranching," by Miss Ninetta Eames, with illustrations, presents a faithful and exceedingly interesting view of an important California industry. Mr. Black's new novel, "Briseis," continues its piquant and romantic social drama in London, with illustrations by W. T. Smedley. In the "Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc" the story of the Great Trial is the principal feature. Owen Wister contributes another of his characteristic Western stories. The Editor's Study, by Charles Dudley Warner, and the Editor's Drawer complete the Number.

Godey's Magazine for March is filled with matter that is timely, beautiful and interesting. Perhaps the most absorbing are two biographical articles: one "The Life of Cecil Rhodes," and the other called "The Senorita of the Sword." "A Winter on the Riviera" and "Lumbering in the Adirondacks" are seasonable; and the features appealing especially to women are "Club-Houses for Women," Miss Mary A. Proctor's experience as an astronomer and lecturer, which is told under the head of "Talks by Successful Women," and the "Fashion Department." The fiction is well varied, and includes a story by Edgar Fawcett.

Three notable papers by American women appear in the March Arena in addition to the two powerful and fascinating serials by Will Allan Dromgoole and Mrs. Calvin K. Reifsnider. One will prove of special interest to all persons interested in the public school system of the United States as it ably deals with "The Educational Crises in Chicago" and is from the facile pen of Marion Foster Washburn. A second is by Abbie Morton Diaz, who discusses the "Human Problem according to Law," and the third is by Margaret Noble Lee and deals with Bishop Doane and Woman's Suffrage. No great review has ever shown anything like the hospitality to women as The Arena and for this reason as well as the prominent part it has taken in the cause of social purity and vital fundamental issues which affect civilization, has made it the special favorite among the great reviews of America with women who think.

"From Day to Day" a department of notes, queries and correspondence conducted by Mrs. Lincoln, is a most interesting and valuable feature of the American Kitchen Magazine. The March number has also papers on "English Cooking Schools," "The Soil Factor in the Development and Prevention of Infectious Diseases," and much else of interest.

If a man knew he was going to be hanged, he would certainly make every effort to prevent it. He would do everything he could and strain every nerve to the last minute to get himself out of his predicament. Men have been saved from hanging after the rope was around their necks. There are ways of dying that are not so quick that are even more certain. The man who neglects his health, and who in sickness refuses to take medicine, really has the rope of disease around his neck. He will die if he doesn't throw it off. A man who would struggle against hanging may yet be careless about his health. He may be traveling straight toward consumption and pay no attention to it, and yet death by consumption is much more terrible than death by hanging. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. Consumption is likely to be caused by weakness and in its turn, it increases the weakness. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is an invigorating, strength-giving and flesh-making medicine. It increases the appetite, puts the digestive organs in perfect order, purifies and enriches the blood, and builds up firm, healthy flesh.

In one chapter of Dr. Pierce's great thousand page family doctor book—"The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," are scores of letters from people who have been cured of consumption, lingering coughs, throat and bronchial diseases by the use of "Golden Medical Discovery." Their full names and addresses are given and their cases were generally pronounced hopeless by the local doctors. Twenty-one (21) one-cent stamps, to pay for mailing only, will secure a free copy of this great book. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Liquor Seller and the Home.

What has the saloon done for the working man's home? Has it hung any pictures on the walls, or put a new carpet on the floor? Has it paid off any mortgage, or put any money into the savings bank, or given the wife a new winter dress, or painted a fresh bloom on the cheeks of the children? None of these things! The saloon has filled its own money-drawer at the expense of the home! There are men who, under No-License, tried to overcome their appetites, tried honestly and earnestly. And the result was that they began to feel free, and began to save money each week, and their wives and children began to be happy. But in many a home all this has changed. There isn't any money put by. There is hardly enough money to pay for rent and bread. The wife can't smile when she sees her husband coming. The children don't climb into his arms, because they are afraid of him.

Wherein is the saloon to be held responsible for this state of things? In that it opens its doors, and breathes upon the man passing, with the sole purpose of tempting him. And so long as it succeeds in this purpose, and gets his money, it doesn't care what becomes of him or his home. The saloon means broken Monday at the shops. It means hard collections and bad debts. The saloon means drunken teamsters and reckless driving. The saloon means a thousand little bank accounts stopped short and drained out. Shall it be Home Rule or Rum Rule? That is the question before house.—Temperance Cause.

WELSH RAREBIT. Select best American cheese, the milder the better, as melting brings out strength. To make five rarebits, take one pound cheese, grate and put in a tin or porcelain lined saucepan; add ale enough to thin the cheese sufficiently; place over fire, stir until it is melted. Have slices of toast ready for each rarebit, put a slice on each place, and pour cheese enough over each piece to cover it. Serve while hot.

POTATO SALAD. Potato salad is a nice dish for a light Sunday supper. Cut potatoes into dice, adding a generous portion of butter, half an onion shredded fine, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, all mixed well together and served cold. But when it is desirable for the salad to look nice as well as to taste good, mix the potatoes and onions, put them in a salad dish and pour over them a French dressing made with two tablespoonfuls of salad oil or butter, the yolk of one egg, and three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, mixing carefully the egg and butter, and adding vinegar gradually. The dish is then garnished with slices of hard-boiled egg and sprigs of parsley.

PEANUT SANDWICH. Buy a quart of fresh roasted peanuts. Remove the shells and red skins and chop them very fine. Mix with a little mayonnaise dressing and spread between thinly cut slices of bread.

BELVIDERE CAKES. One quart of flour, four eggs, three cupfuls of sugar, two ounces each of sweet curd and butter; work the two latter into the flour; beat the eggs and add to them enough new milk to make up a pint, all but half a gill, mix this with the flour, etc.; knead it for ten minutes only, and make the dough into flat circular cakes. Bake them in a quick oven for about a quarter of an hour, glaze with white of egg, sift sugar over them and a few chopped almonds.

Gay of Boston, in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth aforesaid, said mortgage bearing date September 28, A. D., 1894, and recorded with the Norfolk Registry of deeds, book 721, page 535; and for breach of the conditions of said second mortgage deed and for the purpose of foreclosing the equity in the same, the property described in said second mortgage will be sold at public auction on MONDAY, March, 16, 1896, at four o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises described in said second mortgage deed, meaning to sell whatever equity there is in said property hereinafter described and set forth, said property being subject to a first mortgage made in favor of one W. T. Babcock, for the sum of nineteen hundred dollars ($1900.00), with interest, recorded with the Norfolk Registry of Deeds.

The premises hereinbefore referred to are described as follows: Being a certain piece or parcel of land with the buildings thereon, situated in that part of said Quincy known as Wollaston Park, being lot numbered 398 on plan of Charles S. Miller, dated April 19, 1890, and recorded with Norfolk Registry of Deeds, Book of Plans 13, page 516, and bounded southeasterly by Beach street, fifty feet; southwesterly by lot numbered 397 on said plan, eighty-four feet; northwesterly by land now or formerly of B. A. Gould, fifty feet; northeasterly by lot numbered 399 on said plan, eighty-four feet; containing 4,200 square feet, be the same more or less. Said premises will be sold subject to the first mortgage hereinbefore referred to, and all unpaid taxes and assessments, if any.

$200.00 in cash to be paid at the time and place of sale.

JULIA E. GAY,
Second Mortgagee.

Poetry.

Spring Song.

DUNCAN CAMPBELL SCOTT.

Sing me a song of early spring,
Of the yellow light where the clear air cools,
Of the lith willows bourgeoning
In the amber pools.

Sing me a song of the spangled dells,
Where hepaticas tremble in starry groups,
Of the violets swinging their golden bells
As the light wind swoops.

Sing me a song of the gleaming swift,
Of the vivid Maryland-yellow throat,
Of the vesper sparrow's silver drift
From the rise remote.

Sing me a song of the glow afar,
Of the misty air and the crocus light,
Of the new moon following a silver star
Through the early night.

Miscellany.

HER FATE.

It was a dreary, chill March day, and Blanche and I betook ourselves to the conservatory to find a little summerlike warmth and have a pleasant chat over old times. The fountain, which tossed its wreaths of silvery spray into the bright, surprised faces of the velvety, pink azaleas, and dripped over the purple clusters of just-opened violets, made its plash heard above the desolate wind, and there was a sweet, subtle, spring odor in the air; so we were as cozily shut from the winter as the fairies in Elfland.

Blanche and I had much to say to each other, for we had been separated for the past three years, and never, until then, for more than a week or two at a time, in all our lives. She was my cousin, but seemed like my sister. I found her the same romatic, fanciful girl that I had left, more a child than a woman, in spite of her twenty-five years. She delighted in fairy tales, and was forever conjuring up romances from the commonest every-day life. She went mad after relics and antiquities, and was as full of quaint superstitions as any old lady in the land. She believed in dreams and fatalities, and was always prophesying in her quaint, half-grave, half-merry way that something good or something evil was going to happen. That day, as she made herself a little bower of the long sprays of a tangled ivy vine, and seated herself therein, she said suddenly: "Sarah, I really believe that something strange—whether of good or evil, I cannot tell—is going to happen to me."

I laughed, but had scarcely heeded what she was saying; I was thinking how lovely she was with all that bright bloom about her and the shining green sprays falling over her golden brown hair.

"You are very sympathetic, aren't you?" she said poutingly.

"Pardon me, my dear, but I was thinking of something else, Blanche; how strange it is that you've never fallen in love. Aren't you ever going to marry?"

"Why, Sarah, you stupid child," said she, "you know I have fallen in love, years ago; I'm only waiting for him to come. I think he will come soon."

I looked up in surprise.

"I certainly did not know it, Blanche; do tell me who it is," I said.

Without replying, she danced away upstairs, and returned bringing a little picture in a velvet frame, which she tossed into my lap.

"There he is, Sarah. I never, never will marry anyone but him; you remember I said so at first, and I say so still," said she emphatically.

"O, Blanche," I exclaimed half-angrily, "how can you be so absurd? I can't think you have been clinging to that silly superstition all these years!"

"Call it what you please," said she coolly, "but we shall see. I was beginning to laugh at it myself once, and I had almost made up my mind to marry Mr. Halbert, not because I loved him, but because it is so dreary to be always alone, and he's nicer than anyone I know; so noble and good and kind; but, Sarah, when I looked at the picture again it had such a changed expression! The eyes gazed into mine with such a strange, sad, reproachful look, that it startled me, and then I knew, if never before, that he was my fate. Isn't he splendid?"

"It is a handsome face, certainly," I answered musingly, for it brought me back so vividly to my schooldays.

Let me tell you how the picture happened to fall into Blanche's hands. We were at Madame Vere's school, Blanche and I, and one day Madge Keene, the ringleader of fun and mischief, chanced to spy in some newspaper the following advertisement:

"Young lady or gentleman if you are curious to see a correct picture of your future husband or wife, send fifty cents and stamp, together with a description of yourself, age, height, color of eyes and hair, to Madame X, the famous astrologist, and the photograph will be forwarded immediately."

"Aren't you curious to see your fate, girls?" asked she, bringing the paper into the room where a half-dozen were gathered, sitting dolorously over the next day's lessons, and reading the extraordinary paragraph aloud.

Of course we were all curious, and each resolved to patronize the famous astrologist at once.

"But how shall we ever do it, Madge, without being found out?" said Fan Reynolds. "Miss Peckham's worse than ever lately; she's never off her post."

Miss Peckham was a teacher who acted as a sort of sentinel in our hall, and, as Fan Reynolds declared, was just like a cat, creeping stealthily and hiding her hostile intentions with the sweetest smiles. But Madge Keene was as cunning as she, and it was she alone who escaped her vengeance in her manifold forbidden ways, and we felt comparatively safe in trusting anything to her. So when she assured us that she had planned a way, both to send and obtain the letters from the post-office, we began at once, the whole eight of us, to prepare the important documents, and the next morning they were duly dispatched. This was Monday, and Saturday the answer came, brought under the cover of the night, to a back entrance, by a good-natured kitchenmaid, who was bribed to act on the occasion, and received there by Fan, while the teachers were holding their usual Saturday evening consulations in the schoolroom—councils of war we call them—and Miss Peckham was, as we fancied, for a moment off her post. Oh, what a fateful package it was, and how eagerly we tore open the thin, yellow envelopes, receiving them one by one from Fan's triumphant hands!

Suddenly there was a slight rustle in the hall, which caused the eight yellow envelopes to disappear very quickly in eight ready pockets.

"'By the pricking of my thumbs, something evil this way comes,'" whispered Blanche solemnly.

Just then Miss Peckham's face made a shadow in the doorway, but to our unspeakable relief she only lingered a moment, taking a survey of the apartments, and disappeared as suddenly as she came. Each one drew a long breath, and after a few minutes the yellow envelopes were produced again and their mysterious contents brought to the light. The astrologist had made quite a good selection of pictures, though we were not all of us quite satisfied with the appearance of our future husbands. Madge Keene's was an elderly, spectacled gentleman, who seemed to be brooding over some melancholy fate, and Lou Denton recognized in Fan Reynold's fate, a butcher in her native town. Mine was the photograph of a well-looking but very young gentleman, whose face expressed a painful consciousness that he was sitting for a picture.

All the girls went into rapture over Blanche's picture; it was such a perfect face, such fine classic features, and large, deep, expressive eyes. It was an uncommon face, too, with a highbred, haughty look, mingled with an almost feminine sweetness, and Blanche declared solemnly then, as she did now, that she would never marry in the world if she could not marry the original of that picture. She took it out to look at it a hundred times in the day, and could talk of nothing else for a long time, and when we left Madame Vere's at last and our schooldays forever, and were again domiciled at home, she purchased this exquisite little frame for it and hung it in her own room just over the dressing-table, where she could gaze upon it to her heart's content, and there it had remained ever since for aught I know.

"Well," said Blanche, starting up suddenly, "he may come today, and I must look my prettiest. What if he should find me in this trim?"

I thought that she was very pretty, in her soft crimson wrapper, with her bright hair confined by a silver comb, in one great careless twist, and it was early in the day, and such weather that there was scarcely a probability of visitors.

"I hae a bonnie breastknot, and for his sake I'll wear't," she sang, as she tripped away upstairs, and when she appeared again she was radient in a "bodice blue," and was just arranging a cluster of violets for a "bonnie breastknot," when the doorbell sent a low, vibrant tinkle through the house.

Blanche flushed and paled in a breath.

"Visitors, certainly," said she.

"How do you know that?" I said, laughing at her eagerness. "I should think it very unlikely; it is early, and such an unpleasant day; it is probably a beggar or a peller, or the postman—he comes about this time."

"No," answered she, shrugging her pretty shoulders; "don't you know, child, that such people never ring like that? They couldn't if they should try. It was the hand of a nervous, sensitive, refined person that touched that bell; it may be Mr. Halbert—he always makes his appearance in stormy weather, though it didn't sound like his ring."

A servant opened the door.

"There are two of them," whispered Blanche, peeping through the glass door; "one is Mr. Halbert, but the other—O Sarah, I'm almost afraid to go out"; and she was a pale as a snow wreath.

I could not suppress the peal of laughter which rose to my lips. "Why, Blanche," I exclaimed, "I verily believe you are a little insane."

Mr. Halbert, hearing our voices, came across the drawing room into the library, with the familiarity of a frequent visitor, and Blanche opened the door of the conservatory.

"Oh, here you are, Miss Blanche," he said. "I've taken the liberty to bring a friend with me this morning, Mr. Castleton, just from Europe. I remembered your saying that you liked visitors on a stormy day particularly. How delightful it is here! You only need the bees and butterflies to make it summer. May I bring Mr. Castleton into fairyland also?"

Blanche greeted the gentleman with her usually pretty, unaffected manner, but her face was still very pale as she seated herself by my side, her cheek in close proximity to a cluster of crisp, pink cactus blossoms, and I was too bewildered, after a first glance at Mr. Castleton, to speak or move.

The gentleman's face was the exact counterpart of the one we had just been discussing, in the picture. Blanche sat as silent as a statue, with downcast eyes and folded hands. They stayed a long time. Mr. Halbert talked, and Mr. Castleton talked, and after a while Blanche ventured to raise her eyes.

"I am going to start on a southern tour tonight," said Mr. Halbert as he rose to go at last, "and I suppose Miss Blanche will predict misfortunes for me. She deems Friday a day full of mysterious evils; one that the fates frown upon invariably."

"She deems it a fateful one, Mr. Halbert," said Blanche, lifting her large, limpid, hazel eyes, full of mysterious meaning, though she laughed lightly as she spoke.

"It has always been so in my experience," said Mr. Castleton, "but not always unhappy. My Fridays are the 'fairest or the foulest,' as they are in the almanac."

"What do you think now, Sarah?" asked Blanche as soon as the door closed upon the two gentlemen. "Do you remember that it was on Friday that we sent those letters to the astrologist, and the pictures were sent on Friday, though we did not receive them until Saturday, and Friday he came. I believe I never thought of it before."

"And other happy events may happen on Friday." I added, laughingly. "But seriously, Blanche, I believe that you're a witch; you make me feel uncanny. Who ever in the world, besides you, has such strange things happen to them! What if you should really marry this Mr. Castleton? That picture can be no other than a photograph of his face."

"I shall marry him, Sarah," said she gravely.

"But perhaps he won't ask you to, Miss Vanity; he may be already married."

"No, indeed," said she; "I am sure he isn't. I should be perfectly wretched if I imagined he were."

She took the picture from my hands and disappeared unceremoniously.

Just one week from that day we met Mr. Castleton at a picture gallery down town. It had been cloudy and dreary weather ever since, and we had been dull enough, for Blanche was abstracted and uncompanionable. This morning, for the first time in many days, the sky was blue and clear and the air full of sunny spring warmth. Mr. Castleton was absorbed in one of Bierstadt's wonderful pictures, and did not see us at first, neither did I see him, but Blanche gave me one of her bright, delightful looks, and whispered eagerly: "There is Mr. Castleton."

Blanche was like herself this time and not like a statue; she talked and laughed in her old, happy way, making quaint, original comments upon the pictures, which seemed to amuse and interest the gentleman vastly. By and by they strayed away by themselves, quite forgetting me; but I was content that it should be so. I was in a hurry to read the end of Blanche's romance, it was more interesting to me than the pictures.

Mr. Castleton escorted us home, readily accepting Blanche's invitation to come in, remaining until late in the evening.

I listened while they talked and concluded that they were well suited to each other; as harmonious as a full major chord and yet very unlike, I fancied.

"This has been one of my bright Fridays," said he with a meaning look at Blanche as he bade us good-night.

After that he made a good many of his Fridays bright, as well as other days, if Blanche's presence had the power to brighten them.

One day I brough Blanche's mysterious picture downstairs to compare it with a photograph of Mr. Castleton which he had given us the day before and neglected to put it away again, throwing it carelessly upon the library table. Blanche and Mr. Castleton had been out driving and came in together. He seated himself by the table and his eye fell upon the picture at once. He took it up with a look of surprise.

"Miss Houghton," he said, "if I did not know that it was impossible, I should declare that this was an old picture of myself, taken in my college days at Hartford."

"That picture has its story, Mr. Castleton," said I foolishly.

"Tell me the story," said he; "I'm all curiosity."

"Indeed, I cannot," I answered; "at least not now, perhaps I will tell you sometime."

He looked mystified, but saw that it was a very delicate subject to both of us.

In a few days he asked Blanche to tell him the story, and she told him from beginning to end. He was as much pleased with its strangeness as she, and declared that if the astrologist could be found she should be rewarded handsomely.

Blanche insisted upon being married on Friday, and it was the sunniest day in the whole year, and they were the sunniest couple. I am sorry to say that not one other of the eight girls who answered Madame X.'s advertisement was as fortunate as Blanche, but each one found her fate in a far less romantic way.—The New Moon.

HANCOCK ST. HISTORY.

THE THIRD INSTALLMENT OF PAPER BY EDWARD H. DEWSON.

The large square house, standing on the corner of Elm street, facing on Hancock street has an interesting history.

Pattee says, "Previous to 1759, James Brackett had constructed a large and commodious house on this spot, for a public hotel. In looking over the old almanacs, before, during and after the revolutionary war, we find in the tables giving a list of the stage lines, "to the principal towns on the continent from Boston, with the names of those who keep houses of entertainment" that Mr. Brackett's hotel is the only house mentioned in Braintree. From this we infer that other taverns were not of much importance, and that Mr. Brackett's was the fashionable resort of that day. The first house was taken down and in 1794-5 the present one was erected on the site of the noted old Brackett tavern. There is no doubt that on this site a hotel was kept for a longer time than at any other locality in town, it having been occupied as a tavern, upwards of a century."

The hotel was discontinued about 1835. Mr. Francis Williams bought it in 1836 and remodeled it. He lived in it for forty years. It is now the property of Doctor J. F. Welch who has renovated and greatly improved it.

Next is the house of Joseph F. Berry, standing upon the site of Mr. Williams' currying shop. Before Mr. Williams built, there was a stable here, with hay scales in front, tended by Ben. Faxon.

The house of J. Henry Emery stands upon the site of Clift Rodgers' currying shop, which was close to Mr. Williams'.

The next dwelling-house now owned by Amos Churchill was built by Mr. Rodgers in 1854. The house and store adjoining were built by Samuel White in 1835. The store was his boot manufactory. He died in 1848. It is now owned by Thomas A. Whicher who also owns the building on the corner of Canal street called Hancock Hall. This was built in 1835 for the Orthodox society. They worshipped here until their new church was built in 1871. The Quincy Public Library was removed to it in 1874, and occupied it several years. Canal street was accepted by the town in 1829.

On the north corner of Canal street is the house of Wm. A. Hodges, next to it the house built by Mrs. John Brummet in 1844, who kept a millinery store in one portion of it. Mrs. John A. Green's is next, and beyond it a house built by Doctor Ebenezer Woodward on the library site, Washington street. John Q. A. Wild bought and moved it here.

Hancock street falls away from this point to the Town brook.

The slope before us is historic ground, having associations of the deepest interest.

About 1637, the first meeting-house of the First church was built here.

In the absence of positive evidence, there is a conflict of opinions on the subject of the first meeting-house. We accept the views of C. F. Adams and the Rev. D. M. Wilson.

It was here, when the survey was made for the highway in 1641.

At the meeting-house the road was divided passing by each end and uniting again beyond. It was here, standing in the middle of the road, when the first schoolhouse was built in 1679 on the town's land, one hundred and fifty-feet north of Canal street near the site of the house of Mrs. John A. Green. Benj. Tompson, son of Wm. Tompson, the first pastor, was master of this school for nearly thirty years. It was here in 1716, when the schoolhouse was abandoned and sold. It was here, when Thomas Bass built the old house now standing at the foot of the hill occupied by Mr. Jones. It was abandoned in 1732 and taken down in 1748.

Very interesting accounts of this meeting-house are given in Rev. D. M. Wilson's "Chappel of Ease and Church of Statesman" and in C. F. Adams' Three Episodes of Massachusetts History, page 593.

The house built by Thomas Bass, just mentioned, deserves more than passing notice. It and the Ruggles house, on Elm street, are the most interesting of the few relics of the past, that are left for us. Probably built between 1650 and 1660, it was sold to Benjamin Tompson in 1679, and by him sold to Benjamin Webb in 1700. The angle at which it stands to the present street, indicates that it fronted on the division of the road that passed by the east end of the meeting-house.

Benjamin Webb built a tan yard in the bend of the brook just below and carried on the business there for many years. In 1816 the tannery was owned by Anthony Baxter. From 1823 to 1860 it was owned by Francis Williams, who sold it to Joseph Adams, who operated it a few years. It was afterwards sold to J. Q. A. Wild, who dismantled it.

The old hide mill hewn out of a block of granite, the inside polished by constant friction in its use, served for a time as a watering trough at the corner of Hancock and Washington streets, and has lately been placed at the corner of Squantum street.

Crossing the brook we come to the fine estate of Col. A. B. Packard. Pattee says, that John Newcomb opened a public house here in 1803. Col. Packard states that his father, Wm. Packard, bought the place in 1815-16, possibly earlier. The present house was built in 1840. A large stable stood where the green house now is.

We have already noted that the tavern building was bought by Chas. P. Tirrell and moved opposite.

Pattee says that a public house was kept on this estate by a Mr. Cleverly who was succeeded by Marsh in 1794 and Arnold to 1802.

Wm. Packard sold a part of the stable lot in 1827 or 28 to Josiah Brigham, who built the store now occupied by Sanborn & Damon and the PATRIOT office.

Col. Packard acquired his estate in 1857. He and his brother Elisha bought the Hall estate where the Orthodox church stands, and later sold it to that society.

Capt. Brigham kept the usual dry goods and grocery store of his time. From it were graduated some of Quincy's best citizens.

S. Eaton Brackett, Charles Baxter and Elisha Packard, were clerks with him. Israel W. Munroe was his partner from 1830 to 1851. Horace B. Spear was with him as clerk from 1837 to 1851 and with his successor, Mr. Munroe until 1854.

Capt. Brigham lived in the house on Chestnut street, now owned by Geo. A. Brackett. It was built in the latter part of the eighteenth century, by Thomas Crane, father of the donor of the Crane Library. We will treat as a whole the estate on which the Orthodox church stands.

Mr. Marsh says that more than one hundred years ago it was owned by Theophilus Thayer who had a blacksmith shop on the corner of Chestnut (then Sea) street. His house stood ten to fifteen feet back from Hancock street facing toward the Briesler house. Several years previous to 1827, Capt. Josiah Brigham kept a store in the old blacksmith shop. It was a long, low one story building fronting on the meeting-house green or training field and extending down Sea street. After Mr. Brigham moved from it, a school for children under seven years of age was kept in a portion of it by Mrs. Lydia Packard, seven being the age for admission to a master's school. Mr. Horace B. Spear attended this school at one time, also that in the Burrell house kept by Mrs. Hunt. The charge for tuition was nine pence, (twelve and one-half cents) per week.

The dwelling-house was sold by George Thayer, son of Theophilus, to Charles Hall, known as bachelor Hall, who died there. Early in the forties it was occupied by Simon Gillett, proprietor of the stage line to Boston. He occupied the stable in the rear, already mentioned.

A mosaic of pebbles representing a horse, set in the walk before the door, is still remembered. Between this and the Brigham store John M. Gourgas, a noted lawyer, had an office as late as 1860. The last building occupied by him still remains. It has been raised and another story placed beneath it, which was used for a post office several years ago.

The Quincy Patriot.

QUINCY, SATURDAY, MAR. 14, 1896.

Postmaster Wilde Unfortunate.

Postmaster Wilde of Wollaston is confined to his house with a very severe attack of nervous prostration, caused primarily by the worry over the postmastership contest. On Sunday he was semi-unconscious, but on Monday he rallied and seemed to be much better. For the past two or three weeks his health has been gradually breaking down, when on Saturday afternoon the climax was reached while he was in Boston. He was found in a dazed condition and taken home by kind friends.

He had quite a sum of money upon his person when he started from home, which he lost. The money belonged to the post office department. Neither the department nor his bondsmen will lose anything as he has made the amount good and had it forwarded to Washington on Monday as usual.

For some time Postmaster Wilde has complained to his friends of a severe trouble in his head. On Saturday morning a friend dropped into the office and said, "How are you feeling today, Mr. Wilde?" "My head feels pretty bad this morning," was the reply.

Shortly after that conversation Mr. Wilde made up his regular post office account, and, having found out that the Mt. Wollaston bank could not very well change the bills on that day and not caring to keep them in his safe over Sunday, remarked to one of his assistants that he should go to Boston and call at the Mount Vernon bank where a friend of his, Mr. George W. Nash of Wollaston, was receiving teller, and have them change the money.

He took the 1.29 P. M. Boston train apparently in good health, although one or two gentlemen who saw him stated that he acted a little strangely. He had with him $600. He arrived in Boston all right.

Later he was found on the Common in a dazed condition and escorted to the depot, where friends took him in charge and he returned on the eight o'clock train.

From a number of questions which were put to him since his return it was finally possible to get some idea where he was on that eventful afternoon.

He went to Boston on the 1.29 P. M. train; he walked rapidly up Kneeland street to Washington street, and when opposite Benari's shoe store met Mr. Samuel King; he stopped and talked with Mr. King about a choir rehearsal; he continued on Washington to J. L. Hammett's school supply store, which he visited and bought some blocks for his little girl; while there he noticed that his head was not feeling right; he left the store and concluded to go out on the 3.15 train, but the pain increasing he started for Dr. George B. Rice's office on Boylston street, going up West street to Tremont to take a car; when near the corner of Tremont his head gave out completely; he became faint and sat down in a doorway; in a few minutes he revived enough to cross Tremont street and enter the Common; another fainting spell coming he sat down on a pile of lumber; after awhile a man came and sat down beside him; he has an indistinct recollection of the stranger going through his pockets but with nothing more than a feeble protest on his part, except that he sort of instinctively clutched his watch and held on to it; he half recovered from his stupor at about twilight; he got up and staggered towards the depot; a tipsy but kind hearted Irishman came along and offered to assist him to the depot, which he did and put him aboard the train.

After three days assiduous work upon the part of the doctors and attendants this is the story which he has told by piece-meal.

He has no idea why he should have gone to Boston that afternoon, or why he took the money with him. It was apparently the freak of an unbalanced mind.

Inspector Bowman of the Post Office Department visited Wollaston on Monday and audited Postmaster Wilde's accounts. After a thorough examination the accounts were found to be correct in every particular and everything about the office was in good shape.

The inspector spoke very highly of Mr. Wilde's management of the office. He had no doubt but what Mr. Wilde was suffering from a temporary attack of mental relapse caused by undue worry, and that it would be but a short time before he would be able to again discharge his duties at the office.

During the past two or three weeks Mr. Wilde has often times told the writer that he worried so much over the postmastership contest that it was seldom that he slept nights. This continual worry has finally resulted in bringing on brain trouble.

Drs. Richards and Gordon's diagnosis of Postmaster Wilde's case shows that he has congestion at the base of the brain upon the left side. The trouble has been coming on gradually. It reached its climax on last Saturday. His speech and sight were nearly paralyzed. Up to Thursday it was impossible for him to talk coherently or write his name, or use his reasoning powers to any extent. On Thursday afternoon there was a marked improvement, his speech gradually returning, as well as his sight. There seems to be no reason why, from now on, his improvement should not be assured. The sensational Boston papers that have so brutally slandered Mr. Wilde should now acknowledge their error and apologize.

Burglars Frightened Away.

Officer Barry prevented Wednesday evening what was doubtless an attempt to burglarize the jewelry store of John O. Holden.

It was just before 11 o'clock when the officer, who was standing in front of J. W. Nash's store, saw a man come out from between Miss Hubbard's and Holden's store and cross the street.

He thought at first that the man came from Miss Hubbard's but upon investigation he discovered by the tracks in the snow that the fellow had come from the corner of Holden's building.

Officer Barry then started to see who the man was. Upon his approach the fellow started on the run and the officer gave chase. It was rather a poor night for a sprinting match and the officer was unable to overtake his man. He, however, chased him through the public library grounds, through Spear street and into the Coddington' school yard, where the fellow went down toward the outbuildings, thence over a fence to Saville avenue where officer Barry lost track of him.

Further investigation in the morning showed that there were evidently two men in the affair and that the man whom Officer Barry chased was the one on watch while the other party was at work at the back door. The tracks in the snow showed that the fellow went through the cemetery, and then back of the buildings to the store. The door showed no marks as the parties were discovered before they had time to commence operations.

Round About Club.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Mears of Chelsea gave a reception and lunch to the members of the Round-about club Tuesday evening last, at their home in Fitz Terrace twenty members being present. The event had been looked forward to with great interest by the members of the club and their anticipations were fully realized.

One of the principal features of the evening was the "Mystery Party" in which the ladies played the most prominent parts and cost their husbands considerable shoe leather. The prize a beautiful oak sideboard was finally won by Miss Chrisabelle Mears.

CITY BRIEFS.

The City Council will meet again next Monday evening.

Judge Pratt was on the bench at the District court Monday morning.

Merry Mount lodge A. O. U. W., initiated two candidates at its meeting Tuesday evening.

Mrs. E. M. Litchfield and Mrs. I. M. Holt have gone south for a six weeks' trip.

Mrs. T. B. Fibely and Mrs. James Kenny of Brockton are the guests of Miss Mary Fibely of Main street.

Auctioneer Crane sold the H. C. Weeden estate at Germantown at auction, Monday, to J. Mullowney of Boston for $12,000.

Whicher's factory is now running five days a week and nine hours per day, from 7.30 to 12 and 12 30 to 4.30.

The officers of Bay View lodge, L. O. L., will be installed next Monday evening, on which occasion ladies will be present.

Arguments on the electric light bill of the City of Quincy were heard by the Committee on Manufactures of the Legislature Thursday morning.

Delcevare King is in demand at Y. M. C. A. gatherings, speaking on Saturday at the conference in Melrose; subject, "The Social Something."

The second of the series of games between the Quincy Club and Algonquin club of Brockton was played at the rooms of the Quincy Club Friday night.

The LEDGER has begun the publication of the births of 1895. It would be pleased to print them the same week they are born, but does not always get the news.

It is in evidence that March is still with us. The storm Wednesday afternoon was the roughest of the winter, and the snow drifted badly, but the fall was not as heavy as it gave promise of being.

The secretary of the Quincy Chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution has about fifty tickets for the reception next Tuesday at the Vendome, Boston. They can be had by calling at this office.

Democratic caucus for the election of delegates to the State and District conventions will be held on Thursday evening, April 2. The representation will be the same as for the State convention of 1895.

The Committee on Rules of the Legislature have decided to admit the petition of the Quincy Quarry Railroad for an extension of time for building proposed extension, and a hearing will be given March 17.

The reverend gentleman who was to have preached to the Presbyterians at Wilson Hall, Sunday morning disappointed the society, and Mr. O. C. Colton supplied the pulpit acceptably without preparation.

Hon. John F. Merrill of this city and Hon. Jediah P. Jordan formerly of Wollaston are candidates for Republican delegates in the Tenth Congresional district and announce their intention to support Hon. Thomas B. Reed for the Presidency.

It is rumored that another International alliance is to be made. Are our foreign friends looking for fortunes with Quincy girls, or in them? The old Quincy family stock has furnished some lovely girls with stamina, and we believe three are lately pledged to matrimony.

The Quincy Teachers' Association met in the High School hall on Tuesday evening, March 10. Prof. Perrin of Boston University gave a most interesting address on the topic for the evening, "Education in Germany." A quartette composed of Misses Moxon, Briggs, Coe and Hall, sang two selections which were greatly enjoyed.

The Crystal Whist club met Wednesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Penniman, and enjoyed a very pleasant evening, notwithstanding the storm that was howling outside. After two hours' play refreshments were served, which were followed by the monthly award of prizes, which were captured by Mrs. George T. Magee and Mr. Osborne Rogers.

Republican caucuses for the choice of State and Congressional delegates will be held next Wednesday. Wards One, Three and Five will be entitled to four delegates to each, and Wards Two, Four and Six to three each. In Ward One the Australian ballot will be used and the polls kept open from 4 to 9 P. M. Secretary Cleaves gave notice that nominations would be received until 7 P. M., March 13.

Rev. Mr. Butler was at his usual best Sunday morning, preaching from St. Paul's "Forgetting the things that are passed and pressing forward," There is much life in the church. The ladies are arranging for another supper and sociable for the parish and its friends. A cantata by the Sunday School children is on the tapis. Another Bible talk and paper will come at the Alliance meeting this afternoon.

The usual interesting debate was held at the High school Wednesday on the resolve—"That the Senate of the United States ought to be abolished." Misses Briggs, Butler, Cummings and Cahill spoke in the affirmative, and Misses Emery, Dunham and Edwards in the negative. The decision was in favor of the negative. Entertainment was furnished by Misses Winship, Healy, Duffield and Sweeney.

The late Francis B. Hayes, whose will is being contested at East Cambridge was for a short time a student in Quincy. Mrs. Hayes testified to the drunkenness of her wealthy husband; his gambling recklessness, unfaithfulness and indebtedness. Wednesday, W. R. Tyler testified that he had been a teacher in Adams Academy since 1874. Francis B. Hayes was a pupil there for six months in 1877, and witness thought he was either very indolent or very stupid. He was a very talkative boy.

The market men and provision dealers are no longer obliged to go to Boston for their supply. The Quincy Beef Company opened for business on Monday and has the handsomest stock of beef and mutton ever seen in this city. This company will handle the G. H. Hammond Company's products exclusively. The best of everything will be kept constantly on hand, and will be sold at wholesale only. The plant occupied by this company is complete in every particular, and the manager, Mr. G. H. Phinney, will take pleasure in giving you an opportunity to inspect both the building and the stock.

The City of Quincy, in common with other places in this Commonwealth, was in mourning Monday the day of the funeral of Gov. Greenhalge. The schools closed at noon the last hour of the morning session being devoted to appropriate exercises. In the afternoon during the hours of the funeral City Hall was closed and the places of business in the centre drew their curtains. The bell on the old historic First church was tolled for one hour. Many of the stores also displayed in their show windows throughout the day draped portraits of the late Governor.

Joseph N. Page, Jr., met with quite an accident at Faxon hall, Thursday night. Some time ago he underwent an operation at the City Hospital for trouble with his knee. During the past few weeks this knee has been troubling him and Thursday night while leaning against the wall in the basement his leg suddenly gave out. He fell striking his hip on the floor inflicting a painful injury, but how serious is not yet known. Dr. Garey, who was present, made a hasty examination and then sent the young man home. The physician said the injury might be a serious one and it might not, it being impossible to determine at present.

Patterson, the florist, will make a specialty of lilies for the next few weeks.

A large gang of shovellers were at work on the Germantown road, Thursday, breaking out.

Thomas W. Lincoln always gives satisfaction in awnings, and it is handy to have them made at home.

The annual meeting of the Evangelical Congregational society will be held on Monday evening.

The Board of Health report a clean bill of health as far as diphtheria is concerned, but there a few cases of scarlet fever.

The Aluminum Company is very busy at its works on Granite street, and has recently increased its electrical power.

John T. Cavanagh, acting superintendent of the Water Department, has resigned as a member of the board of Water Commissioners, and has been elected superintendent.

In the Legislature Thursday the bill providing that the work of dressing stone used in state and muncipal work shall be done in this commonwealth came up for a reading.

Ex-Commissioner W. N. Eaton went to New York Friday to identify the body of Hamilton Martin, who was employed by Eaton Bros. last summer and also to assist the authorities in locating his relatives.

The homestead of the late Charles C. Brackett to be sold next Thursday offers an exceptional opportunity to obtain a valuable estate It is a very desirable location, upon our main street, and worth investigating.

It was a very pretty party that gathered at Faxon hall Thursday evening, and the fifty or more couples present thoroughly enjoyed the four hours' dancing. It was the second of a series a assemblies held under the auspices of the local lodge of the New England Order of Protection.

A car on the inward Plymouth freight jumped the track just south of the Granite street bridge shortly after nine o'clock on Thursday night, all trains after that time being more or less delayed, as in order to pass the wreck the inward trains were run on the outward track between Dimmock street bridge and South Quincy. A wrecker was sent out from Boston but it was after midnight before the track was cleared.

SOUTH QUINCY.

The subject at the meeting of the South Quincy Literary club last week was: "Necessity and Experience as Factors in Civilization." The arguments appeared in Monday's LEDGER. Last evening L J. Pastor was to give his thoughts on the "New and the Old."

Miss Anna Molher, of Oswego, New York, is visiting Mrs. Robert Westly Peach.

Tuesday afternoon James Berry of West Quincy left his horse attached to an open wagon standing in front of F. H. Crane & Sons' grain store at South Quincy.

While thus left alone the horse became frightened at an approaching train and started to run. He ran across the depot platform overturning the wagon which he dragged bottom side up across the tracks. As he went across the tracks an outward express train was approaching which whizzed by within five feet of him. After clearing the train the wagon righted and the horse continued down the track to the depot, where he was captured. It was a narrow escape.

"Jack the Peeper" is getting in his work at South Quincy, in the vicinity of the Lincoln school. He made his first appearance some few weeks ago and made a nuisance of himself by peeping in at windows and chasing young girls who happen to be about. Several of the residents made up their minds to capture him and for several nights they were out gunning for him. The fellow, evidently knew what was going on, for he suspended operations. Tuesday night, however, he again appeared, and chased a woman who happened to be out alone. The citizens of that neighborhood have now become thoroughly aroused and if the fellow keeps at his tricks his capture is only a matter of time.

J. H. Bishop & Co. are building another shed near the Quincy Adams depot.

The fence along the railroad at South Quincy has been patched up so as to be presentable.

Miss Catherine Tinker of South Quincy has returned from a visit to her parents at Concord, N. H.

One of the old Elm trees on the Kendrick estate at South Quincy, recently cut down, measured five feet in diameter at the butt, and two lengths contained over a cord of wood.

It is said that there was no officer on duty at South Quincy Saturday night and citizens are inquiring if Chief Hayden thinks this section does not need protection.

At the Calvary Baptist church, Sunday, Rev. Morton W. Plummer of the Evangelistic Association of New England, preached at 10 30 to a large gathering. Subject, "The Cross of Christ." At 3 P. M. he gave a Bible reading on the Sunday School lesson, Luke 10:25-36.

Jesse P. Newcomb will be manager of the new Quincy Adams fish market opened this week on Water street. It promises to be a well conducted market and there is a good opening for it.

At the South Quincy Presbyterian church the pastor preached at both services on Sunday, as usual. In the morning the subject was "The Works of Faith;" in the evening, "The Danger of Seeking or Pretending to Know More than Jesus." The congregations were gratifying in point of size and interest.

QUINCY POINT.

Rev. Geo. Benedict of Haverhill, formerly pastor of the Washington Street Congregational church, will fill the pulpit of the Point church on Sunday, preaching both morning and evening. The morning service will be at eleven o'clock. In the evening his discourse will be delivered to the young people especially, though all are urged to be present. His subject: "A few words about your grand-parents and grand-children." It is hoped that the church may be well filled at both services, giving Mr. Benedict an opportunity to meet a large number of his former parishioners.

Chief of Police Hayden was called out at midnight Sunday night, to take charge of a man under the influence of liquor. It seems the fellow, who proved to be Daniel Sullivan, was driving along Howard street in a buggy but was too drunk to properly guide his horse and the result was that he was capsized, and being unable to help himself, Chief Hayden was notified. He took the man and carried him to Washington street, where Sheppard's man was aroused, a team procured, and Officer Connelly took the fellow to the police station. Dr. Welch was called to dress the deep gash which Sullivan had in his head from his fall.

A young son of Fred H. Smith was thrown from a horse Sunday, but fortunately escaped with a few bruises.

The Enterprise says: Mrs. Isaac Phillips of Quincy is the guest of her granddaughter, Mrs. C. F. Ransom of No. 1019 Warren avenue, Campello. Mrs. Phillips is an active old lady of 80 years and in full possession of all her faculties. She can remember perfectly when there were no steam cars, and has more than once walked from Quincy to Boston.

The man who died on the White Star line wharf in New York on Wednesday, as he was about to take the steamer for Liverpool, and who is supposed to have been H. Martin of Boston, was undoubtedly Hamilton Martin who last summer drove an ice wagon for Eaton Bros., on the Quincy Point route.

WOLLASTON.

The Epworth League will hold a sociable and entertainment at the Methodist church next Wednesday evening. The entertainment will consist in part of a spelling match. Ice cream and cake will be on sale and the members of the League will bring in envelopes their contributions to the funds of the League for the church expenses. If it storms Wednesday it will be held Thursday evening.

Israel Waterhouse of the board of Assessors returned Thursday from an enjoyable tour of the South. Most of his time was spent in Georgia and Washington, and he says he would have stayed longer had he expected to find such rough weather here.

Mrs. C. A. Gannett of Wollaston attended on Wednesday the fourth annual meeting of the Appleton Academy Association at the American House, Boston.

Team B of the Wollaston Bowling Club defeated team A on the Duck's Nest alleys on Tuesday evening, 2,336 to 2,276 McClintock was high on single and totals, 214 and 568.

Team B of the Wollaston Candle Pin club defeated Team A on the Duck's Nest alleys on Wednesday evening, 1168 to 1145. Starrett was high on total, 265, and Fairbanks on singles 93.

Postmaster Wilde's condition is much improved.

Wednesday's storm was the severest of the season. The wind at one time attained a maximum velocity of 60 miles an hour at Wollaston.

At the Duck's Nest February bowling tournament Bryant won first prize; Fratus, second; and Lyman, third.

Rev. F. E. Dewhurst, formerly of Wollaston will have a sermon in the Herald next Sunday on "Three Measures of Life."

Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Corthell entertained the "Gibson party" at their beautiful residence on Grand View avenue, Wollaston, on Saturday evening.

The Rev. James E. Bagley of the Wollaston Unitarian society, preached at the First Congregational church, Lowell, on Sunday. It will be remembered that this is the church where Governor Greenhalge attended.

The singing by the Wollaston Baptist quartette, on Sunday morning was especially good. "Freely ye have received, freely give," was the subject of Rev. Preston Gurney's discourse on Sunday morning

The Elliot club of Wollaston met with Mrs. Watson H. Brasee on Wednesday evening. The subject for discussion was Illustrations and Illustrators," and Dr. Wellington Record, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Saxe, and Mrs. Herbert T. Whitman were the essayists.

Officer James Beahn was on the sick list Tuesday night and Officer George McKay did duty at Wollaston.

The I. O. G. T. of Wollaston admitted three persons to membership at their meeting on Tuesday evening.

The regular confirmation service at St. Chrysostom's church, Wollaston was held on Tuesday evening, two persons being confirmed. The Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop of Massachusetts and the Rev. Carlton P. Mills conducted the services. Every seat in the church was occupied. The music was by the regular choir.

A large audience witnessed the presentation of "Who Spoke First" and "Dr. Baxter's Great Invention" in the vestry of the Wollaston Unitarian church on Tuesday evening. The different parts were strongly played. Those who participated were Mrs. Charles T. Baker, Mrs. George W. Bennett, Miss Fannie I. Lord, Hon. H. O Fairbanks, Mr. Walter M. Hatch and Mr. Charles T. Baker. The excellent music was under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Moorehouse.

Monday evening John Adams Council No. 1210, R. A., of Wollaston, received a fraternal visit from their deputy, A. F. Roberts of Cambridge. Bro. Roberts spoke interestingly on Royal Arcanum matters; its growth and what its future prosperity depended upon. It proved the most interesting meeting this year although the council room was pervaded by gloom and sorrow on account of Bro. C. F. Wilde. Some of the most prominent men of Wollaston took that occasion to express their disgust of the methods of the people who are circulating the false and unjust accusations against him. Members were instructed to strongly refute them whenever heard. A light lunch was served by the entertainment committee.

The members of the Methodist Episcopal church and congregation at Wollaston planned a very pleasant surprise for their pastor, Rev. C. W. Wilder and his family, on Wednesday evening. It occurred at the house of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Hastings, Central avenue. In order to disarm suspicion on their part Mr. Wilder and his family were invited to take tea with Mr. and Mrs. Hastings on the twelfth anniversary of there marriage. They were then informed that a few other friends had been invited to call in later in the evening.

Soon after eight o'clock, while the company were engaged in conversation in the parlor, the doors of the dining room were thrown open and Mr. W. C. Sanders presented Mr. and Mrs. Wilder, on behalf of their parishoners, an eight day cathedral clock, a beautiful parlor lamp and shade, and a barrel nearly filled with packages of groceries and other useful articles with which Mr. Wilder was assured his parishioners intended to pound him.

The pastor found difficulty in his sudden surprise, in responding fittingly to these expressions of kindness and appreciation on the part of his friends.

The violent storm was a great disappointment to a large number who had intended to be present.

The fourth quarterly conference for the current conference year will be held on Tuesday evening next in the vestry of the Wollaston Methodist Episcopal church. Rev. J. H. Mansfield, D. D., will preside.

John Adams Council, Royal Arcanum, has appointed a committee to prepare a series of entertainments for the benefit of the Council. The proceeds will be devoted to worthy objects. From what is known of the plans of the committee there can be no doubt that these entertainments will be among the best ever presented in this city.

The regular monthly sociable of the Wollaston Congregational society was held on Thursday evening. An excellent supper was provided. Mrs. Albert H. Brock read a selection; Mrs. Amos T. Leavitt played a piano solo; and a quartet composed of Mr. William E. Howard, Mr. Robert B. Witham, Mr. Chas. A. Tanner and Mr. William P. Clark sang three selections.

Patriotic Celebration.

The seventeenth of March is the anniversary of the evacuation of Boston by the British and the event is to be fittingly observed next Tuesday at hotel Vendome, Boston, by the Daughters of the Revolution, Daughters of the American Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Baldwin's Cadet band is to play in the hall. Bugler Henry of the Loyal Legion is to announce the speakers. There will also be music by the Revolutionary Fife and Drum men dressed as Revolutionary soldiers. Officers from Fort Warren, the Navy yard, the "Enterprise" and "Wabash" will be in uniform. Prominent men and women are among the speakers.

The new combination engine, which is to take the place of Hose 1, arrived on Wednesday and is now at the Central station, although it will probably not go into commission until open weather.

ATLANTIC.

The Misses Annie and Mattie Clean entertained a party of friends Wednesday afternoon from two till five o'clock at their home on Billings street. Literary games of a new and novel nature were introduced, which were entered into with much enthusiasm. Mrs. Bruce, Mrs. Yeoman and Miss Lizzie Glover carried off the first honors, while the booby prizes fell to the lot of Mrs. Glover and Mrs. Scholes. Mrs. Bruce favored the company with some fine selections on the piano, and a dainty lunch closed a most enjoyable afternoon.

The attendance at the "Orange supper" given by the Ladies' Benevolent society in Memorial church, Atlantic, on Wednesday, was greatly affected by the blizzard. There were quite a number there to supper, but owing to the fierce storm and the few members who stayed in the evening it was decided to give the entertainment at some future date.

Mr. Charles Hall of Walker street, is confined to his home with sickness.

Mr. and Mrs. George S. Burr are rejoicing over a little son, born Wednesday

Mrs. L. A. Bassett of Walker street entertained the Ladies' Afternoon Whist club at her home on Thursday afternoon. A very pleasant afternoon was spent in the fascinating game and the honors were taken by Mrs. Charles L. Coe, Mrs. Elijah G. Hall, Mrs. James E. Curtin, and Mrs. Stephen O. Moxon, who fortunately took the "booby." A dainty lunch of sherbets, confections and other delicacies were charmingly served by the hotess.

The Methodist church, Atlantic, was well attended at both morning and evening services on Sunday. In the evening the pastor preached an eloquent sermon on "The Worst Woman that ever Lived."

Rev. Edward Norton preached a memorial sermon on the late Governor Greenhalge at the Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, on Sunday morning last to a large sized congregation. In the evening he gave the third of a series of sermons on the Lord's prayer, taking as his text, "Thy kingdom come." Several selections were charmingly rendered by a quartette of young ladies, composed of Misses Moxon, Briggs, Coe and Hall. Misses Coe and Hall also favored with a duet, which was very enjoyable.

The Misses Kolb of Clive street entertained a large party at whist at their home last Saturday evening.

The society connected with the Memorial church, Atlantic, met for their annual meeting in the church last Tuesday evening but owing to the small numbers present it was decided to postpone meeting until Friday evening the 20th inst.

The Burnham & Duggan Railway Appliance Company is increasing its capital for the manufacture of the Duggan safety switch.

WEST QUINCY.

The blows struck on the fire alarm bells at 7.30 this morning were caused by a break in the circuit near box 49.

Christopher Keenan of Douglas street met with a peculiar accident at the Willard school last week. He, with others, was going up stairs from the basement when the foot of one of the boys in front of him struck him a savage blow in the face cutting his lip quite badly and bruising his jaw. A physician was called and dressed the wound but the boy is still in considerable pain, as he cannot talk, and food has to be given him through a tube.

Officer Murray had quite a rough experience while doing police duty at West Quincy, Saturday night. He was chasing two Finns, who were creating a disturbance when he fell and jammed his face with considerable force on the frozen sidewalk, and as a result Jim lost considerable skin from his nose and chin. But he got his man just the same.

T. L. Williams is busy moving his stock of goods from West Quincy to his new store on Hancock street, Quincy.

It seems that the torn flag that was flying from the Willard school last week is not the only flag they have, but the one they display in stormy weather. Their new flag is put out on pleasant days.

There has been a large petition sent to the presiding Elder and Bishop from the members and congregation of the M. E. church at West Quincy asking the return of Rev. A. A. Brown the coming year.

A FEW REMARKS. Since opening this store in June, 1887, we have always catered to the hotel, restaurant and boarding house trade in Boston and vicinity, and have not striven to increase our family trade until recently. The former buy their groceries, with few exceptions, of the wholesale grocers or of the large retailers (some 5 or 6) in the wholesale department. The reason is plain—they can buy cheaper. "Catalogue" prices are for the family trade. While our hotel and restaurant trade has increased from year to year, until we have one of the largest in the city, the family trade has not grown in proportion. Why? Because we have quoted the same prices to the family trade as our neighbors, and there was no particular reason why they should buy of us. We have decided for the present to sell to the family trade the same as we do to the other. Our place of business, 78 Beach street, is one of the nearest stores to the Albany, Old Colony and New England depots; thousands of people who come in and go out on these roads pass our door every day; and this price list was prepared especially to secure their trade. Realizing that a great many of them could take their purchases with them, we make a price as low as possible over net cost of goods, therefore we are unable to pay freight or express charges on goods going out of town. Another point: We want those people who take their purchases with them to be paid for their trouble; we cannot afford to sell goods quite as cheap if we have to deliver the goods out of town.

Our prices are in many instances from 10 to 20 per cent. cheaper than any "catalogue" list; our goods are of standard quality; every salesman in this store is instructed to never misrepresent goods; we want your orders, not only once, but for all time, and we propose to use you so well that you cannot afford to go elsewhere.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep n absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

The Shawmut Spring Water stands second to none as a pure drinking water. Hundreds of families are using it every day. It is an important factor in maintaining health, building up and restoring the organs of digestion to healthy action. Cures Rheumatic, Kidney and Bladder troubles, when drugs have proved useless.

Send your order for a 5-gallon sample package. If you don't like it, it costs you nothing. Drink it and you will be satisfied of its purity.

THE WAY in which several of the Boston dailies wrote up the Wilde case is not a credit to modern journalism. Column after column of sensational stuff, padded out with irresponsible and in many cases slanderous gossip, has been spread before a credulous public for the past few days. Reporters were sent out from Boston to write the case up and "make a good story out of it." Is it to be wondered that people refer to an improbable story as "a newspaper yarn?" Such papers and their fake stories do more to undermine the confidence of the public in the modern newspaper than any other three causes combined.

The case is not so very complicated, neither does it require columns in which to tell it. If Mr. Wilde, a citizen, had gone to Boston and lost the money under similar circumstances very little would have been said about it, or, if Postmaster Wilde had passed through a like experience without losing any money, the world would probably never have heard of it. But the combination of Postmaster Wilde and the money created a sensation; first, because he was a government official; second, because it was supposed that the money belonged to the government and that his bondsmen would have to make it good; third, because a great many people jumped at the conclusion that he was covering up a shortage in his accounts and was putting up a job on the government.

But a careful analysis of the situation shows that the two latter suppositions are incorrect; first, because he has made good the shortage ($592.44) out of his own funds without calling on his bondsmen; second, Post Office Inspector James Bulman, after a rigid examination of his accounts and vouchers has declared them to be correct; third, Mr. Wilde is today a wreck, both mentally and physically, a consultation of physicians (Doctors Gordon and Richards) having been called.

To jump on a man when he is down is bad enough but to rub it in is confounding. What Mr. Wilde went through mentally last Saturday hundreds of people have passed through.

DIVIDED UP among the appropriations, the receipts of Norfolk county do not receive much consideration when the appropriations are being made, and yet they are quite large. It is only since October 1, that the fees received by the registrar of deeds have been turned over to the county. In two months these amounted to $1,646 62 and in the spring months they are much larger, and the total may amount to $10,000 annually. Would it not be more satisfactory to the tax-payers if the receipts were not included in the different items, but a definite amount named for each, as in the city of Quincy. The county receipts of 1895, aside from cash on hand, loans and county tax, were $29,321.07, and should be $40,000 this year with the fees included.

The Masquerade.

If any party ever felt the need of a large hall it was the masquerade held at Hancock hall, last week Friday evening, under the auspices of Francis L. Souther Camp, S. of V.

For the most part the costumes of the ladies were of home manufacture, yet none the less attractive as they gave an example of woman's ingenuity, for many of them were very tastefully gotten up. Then there were scores of ladies and gentlemen who made no attempt to disguise themselves other than wear a mask.

At the conclusion of the fourth dance came the unmasking, and the heretofore mysterious persons on the floor became known, and glad were the maskers to take off their disguises, as it was uncomfortably warm.

Dancing continued until 2 A. M., a supper being served in the lower hall by the members of the camp during intermission.

Board of Trade.

The regular monthly meeting of the Quincy Board of Trade was held Tuesday evening with about 25 in attendance. Mayor Adams presided and R. A. Sears, Esq., was secretary pro tem.

At the suggestion of Walter T. Babcock, a hearing was given to a patentee and manufacturer of school desks who were seeking a new location. The patentee said he had been in business since October, 1893, and that his business amounted to over $100,000 per year, and gave many minute details as to his business, which promised well. He personally wanted no assistance and did not care to take any stock in the company which should erect a factory and manufacture the desks. But he would give a long guarantee to take the product at a price to be agreed upon. He desired his friend to be manager of the factory, as he knew that his desks would be satisfactory. The manufacturer said a three-story manufactory of wood, 100x40, would be ample and also gave estimates of capital, etc. Employment would be given to from 40 to 50 at wages from $4 to $18, and to more if the casting were made in Quincy.

The whole matter was referred to the committee on ways and means.

Large Shoe Manufactory.

Clarence Burgin presented the desires of a large shoe concern, who were prepared to lease a four story building 50x300 provided it should be erected; one that would give employment to from 500 to 700. Also of another manufacturing concern which employed girls. Referred to committee on new industries.

Quarry Railroad.

L. S. Anderson offered resolutions as to inestimable value of the proposed Quarry railroad and giving the unqualified approval of the Board of Trade, which were adopted.

The committee on transportation was requested to appear at the hearing of the City Council in favor of petition.

Railroad Fares.

John R. Graham for the committee on transportation promised a comprehensive summary of suburban fares at an early date, and was given more time.

The committee on highway improvements had no information before it when it met concerning proposed buildings on Hancock street. It had since been learned that a four story $25,000 block was to be erected. The committee was requested to attend the Council hearing.

Mr. Keating's Improvements.

Albert Keating said he was present in response to the general invitation in the LEDGER to see if the Board of Trade would encourage citizens who contemplated improvement. He had commenced the erection of a building at the corner of Washington and Canal streets which would add taxable property to the city and greatly improve an unsightly corner.

The chairman asked if there was not a question as to ownership.

Mr. Keating said he had been in possession sixteen years and knew no claimant.

If he had encroached it was innocently. The late John Q. Adams had told him that the town, had no claim because a street abutted. He claimed property as an abutter. If city or anyone else owned it, he was ready to buy.

No action was taken, and the meeeting adjourned at 9 35.

Whist and Pool Tournament.

The first meet in the whist and pool tournament, between members of the Quincy club of Quincy and the Algonquin club of Brockton, was held March 6, at the rooms of the latter in Brockton, and a number of the admirers of the Quincy team went up to give encouragement to the home teams. Brockton won at whist but Quincy came off victorious in the pool contest.

The Quincy boys were very much pleased with the reception given them by the Brockton club and enjoyed a very pleasant evening. At the conclusion of the tournament they were shown through the rooms of the Commercial club which is one of the largest in the State.

Quincy Yacht Club

The executive committee of the Quincy yacht club organized on Tuesday evening with Charles F. Pettengill as chairman, and James S. Whiting as secretary. It was voted that Commodore Pettengill and Mr. H. M. Faxon be authorized to purchase a tender for the club; to adopt the rules presented by the House Committee; that Commodore Pettengill and Secretary Whiting be a committee of two to investigate and report upon an insignia for caps; that Mr. George G. Saville, Mr. Walter B. Holden and Mr. George Jones constitute the Membership Committee for the ensuing year; and that Commodore Pettengill and Secretary Whiting be a committee to procure estimates for the proposed new ladies' and reading rooms.

The sum of $25.15 was netted at the recent yacht club entertainment.

For the Patriot

Letter from the State House.

BOSTON, March 11, 1896.

In the house of representatives on Wednesday a bill was introduced by Mr. Lowell of Boston to give Lieut. Gov. Wolcott the same salary as the governor receives. This is one of the formal steps necessary for the transfer of the government from the hands of the dead to those of the living. Of course, if any man performs the full duties of an office permanently he is entitled to the compensation which is regarded as a measure of the service rendered. The eulogies over the departed chief magistrate will be spoken later, but the government must go on. There will be some report to the legislature from the committee of 20 senators and 100 representatives which was sent to the funeral in Lowell on Monday and there will probably be a day set apart for the ceremony, and this will be wholly separate from the public commemoration which it is proposed to hold on April 19 in Boston. No person is living who can recall the popular effect of the death of a governor while in office, but it seems as if the people of Massachusetts appreciated their late governor as much as any was ever appreciated and it is not probable that either of the four before Gov. Greenhalge who have died in office have been mourned more sincerely by the people as a whole, regardless of party, race or creed. Yet his claim to the popular regard was won almost entirely during his last year as governor. Whatever he had done before that was not so conspicuously in advance of the records of other mayors, representatives, congressman and governors that it should give him more than an ordinary title to the esteem of the people. But during his last year he showed such an appreciation of the dignity and worth of the state, above all party considerations and inclusive of all races and creeds, that it struck home to the popular heart and the people have had a growing conviction for the last year that they had a large sized man in the governor's chair.

Lieut. Gov. Wolcott takes the place of the departed by virtue of the constitution and due notice of the change in the executive of the state has been sent to the national authorities and to the other states so that Roger Wolcott is now recognized as the head of the executive department of Massachusetts. He came in modestly, keeping Gov. Greenhalge's staff and making as little change as possible from the routine of his predecessor.

The biennial resolves have been agreed to by the senate by vote of 24 to 8 and four pairs. The vote was on party lines, except that Senators Irwin, Derbyshire and Bartlett were recorded against the amendment, though they are Republicans. Senator Irwin spoke against biennials and had the warm praise of President Lawrence who was considerably moved by the superior weight of argument which Irwin brought to his side. It is known now, though it was not publicly mentioned last year, that ex-President Butler is an annual election man. The question will now go to the people and will be voted upon at the November election. Opinions vary as to its chances. Some are sure beyond question that it will succeed, while others are as certain that it will be buried by a large majority. These predictions can be found regardless of party lines.

Having got biennials out of the way, the next problem for the legislature is the redistricting of the state for councillors and senators and the apportionment of representatives among the counties in proportion to their population. Doubtless politics will enter into the consideration, for it is always the tendency of the stronger party to take undue advantage of its strength, but it is to be hoped that the blunders of 1886 will not be repeated by which some very queer shaped districts were created in order to establish the supremacy of the party. The preparation of the plans will be a difficult task, and then will come the question of uniting the committee upon them and getting them to stand together to carry them through. The census shows that the country towns will suffer at the expense of the cities and the centers of political power will be still more distant from the little red school house. But this is inevitable and doubtless will continue until electric railways all over the state make neighbors of those who are miles apart by team. Then it will not be so lonesome to live in the country and the hill towns will grow again.

A plan has been proposed for a new place for the senate, in the extension where the office of the secretary of state now is. If they could be moved over there, then there would be nobody in the old Bulfinch part and it would be all the easier to proceed with the demolition which is sure to come sometime. But this plan is an illustration of the progress of the state house scheme from beginning to end. It began as a small matter. It grew by inches with no broad treatment of the question and now continues upon its tortuous course toward a totally new building in defiance of good taste, and toward the acquirement of the surrounding land so as to make a large display of the monstrosity.

The committees on military affairs and state house, sitting jointly, have reported unanimously that an equestrian or military statue of Benjamin F. Butler ought to be erected upon the state house grounds, or in the state house. Considering the recent death of George D. Robinson who led the strongest sentiment of the state in an effort to defeat Butler for governor because he was considered to be unworthy of the office, it seems as if the state was somewhat premature in passing favorably upon a proposition for a monument for the man who was defeated. Some remonstrances against the statue have been received, and if there could be a polling of the voters of the whole state, it is probable that there would be found so many dissenters from the idea of a statue that the project would be abandoned, at least for the present and it is to be hoped for all time.

The committee on constitutional amendments has reported against the popular election of legislative presiding officers, but the reform will come sometime, after the people realize more deeply than they do now the evils of the present system and see that the voters as a whole can be trusted with the broad interests of the public better than the selfish interests which grasp the power which can easily be seized when it is in the hands of a few men. The growing popularity of the proposition to elect United States senators by the people, the continued domination of the United States senate by great corporate interests show which way the current is setting and though this local reform may be delayed because the public do not realize its importance, yet it will be recognized in that future when a higher public spirit and a broader public intelligence rule in our political councils.

Another idea of improving the Australian ballot system has suffered an adverse report of the committee on election laws,—that of providing a stamp for marking ballots. The idea was that it would prevent tampering with ballots by pencils. But there is a feeling that a voting machine will be adopted in the near future, which will supersede the Australian ballot and be a great improvement upon it in way of prompt counting and impossibility of error. Founder's Day at Woodward.

Thursday of this week was the one hundred and fifth anniversary of the birth of Dr. Ebenezer Woodward. The day was fittingly observed at the Woodward Institute and honored in the carrying out of the following programme.

"Woodward Hymn" and "The Bird Carol," by the school.

Thoughts from Emerson, Georgiana Shea.

Double Trio, "Sweet and Low," Misses Curley, Rinn, Wilson, Thomas, Wright and O'Neil.

Selections from the "Prologue to the Canterbury Tales," Chaucer, Mabel G. McKenzie.

Swedish gymnastics, eight girls.

Violin solo, Clara L. Baxter.

"In Little Britian," Irving, May Sullivan.

Song, "Sur le pont d'Airgnon," eight girls.

Recitation, "Sir Patrick Spens," Mabel Drew.

Vocal duet, "Ich wollt' meine Lieb," Misses Flood and Bates.

A bit of nature from Hawthorne, Mary J. Dunn.

Violin solo, Edith Olney.

Scene from Dornroschen, "The Sleeping Beauty," Dornroschen, Ethel Babcock; Konigssohn, Edna Miller: Die Alte Frau, Mabel Pierce.

Quartette, "A Spring Song," Misses Flood, Bates, Drew and Walsh.

Ovid, "Metamorphoses, X," translated and read by Ruth Randall,

Ovid, "Metamorphoses X," recited by Clara L. Baxter.

Delsarte exercises, eight girls.

"Dear Woodward," school.

It is impossible to specify any one number as better than another. With no delay, and without special announcement, music, recitations and gymnastics were smoothly, and delightfully rendered.

After the exercises Rev. Mr. Butler and Father Roche paid well deserved and eloquent tribute to the thoroughness and efficiency of Miss Small and her corps of assistants. City Treasurer Walter Gray made some witty remarks, assuring the listeners, that when Miss Small's ambitions for the Woodward could be curbed, the much wished for new building would become a reality. In fact there was every reason to believe that Dr. Woodward's one hundred and sixth anniversary would be celebrated in more convenient quarters, the present building being inadequate for carrying out the terms of the will. Miss Small being really hampered by the present deficiencies.

Perhaps the remarks most warmly echoed by the listeners were those from Father Roche. Parents are growing more and more to feel how much they owe Dr. Woodward for the opportunities of the present, and this sentiment was warmly and eloquently expressed by Father Roche. It was also pleasant to hear him mention with gratitude the Rev. H. A. Philbrook, through whose suggestion the Institute's able principal was secured. Rev. J. H. Yeoman was also mentioned as one who spared neither time nor strength in the cause. And Rev. Elward Norton, whom force of circumstances made chairman of trustees through the exacting period of the Institute's forum, deserved thanks and praise. Father Roche expressed himself toward all his associates in the trusteeship with affection and told how gratifying to himself personally had been the kindly consideration, cordiality and harmony existing among his co-laborers.

When the reverend gentleman finished, all felt the truth and force of his words, and that by them his own reputation for Christian courtesy, charity and good sense was by no means diminished. Another name Fr. Roche mentioned with gratitude in connection with the Woodward Institute was that of George L. Gill, who so ably cared for its finances and to whom their prosperous condition is largely due.

The writer ventures to add another name to those already mentioned that of Rev. D. M. Wilson. Many will remember the controversy in regard to making the Woodward Institute a purely industrial school and the firm, gentle, and dignified manner in which Mr. Wilson contended for the present curriculum.

At that time it seemed as tho' there was no room for another high school in Quincy, and the task of forming one difficult and useless. Time, however, has proved that Quincy's school-days are by no means over and its already excellent institutions must be increased in number to satisfy the demands of our flourishing and promising city.

Rev. Mr. Wilder in a few well chosen words endorsed what had already been said. If fact all present felt as the Rev. Mr. Butler ably expressed it, the Woodard Institute fills a large place among us, and under its present regime may well be called a model school. F. C. B.

Quincy Debating Club.

The Quincy Debating Club held a very interesting meeting Thursday evening, the question being:—"Resolved, That Trade Unions are beneficial to the working man.'

Messrs. Bates and Scammell presented thoughtful arguments in the affirmative, and Messrs. E. C. Sargent and S. E. Wilson upheld the negative.

Theophilus King, Secretary McAdam of the Granite Cutters' Union, W. W. Parry and Alex Craig spoke interestingly from the floor, as all had had intimate experience with trade unions.

In combination, proportion and process Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiar to itself, and unequalled in true merit.

No other medicine ever possessed so much curative power, or reached such enormous sales, or made such wonderful cures, as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

It is undoubtedly the best medicine ever made to purify, vitalize and enrich the blood.

That is the secret of its success.

Read this statement:

"When my son was 7 years of age, he had rheumatic fever and acute rheumatism, which settled in his left hip. He was so sick that no one thought there was any help for him. Five sores broke out on his thigh, which the doctor said were sores. We had three different doctors. Pieces of bone came out of the sores. The last doctor said the leg would have to be cut open and the bone scraped, before he could get well. Howard became so low that he would eat nothing, and one doctor said there was no chance for him.

"One day, a newspaper recommending Hood's Sarsaparilla was left at our door. We decided to try this medicine. Howard commenced taking it the last of February, after having been sick for a year and a half. He hadn't taken it a week before I saw that his appetite began to improve, and then he gained rapidly. I gave him five bottles, when the sores were all healed and they never broke out again. The crutches he had used for four years were laid aside, as he had no further use for them. I give all the credit to Hood's Sarsaparilla." MRS. ADA L. MOODY, Fay Street, Lynn, Mass.

In Memoriam.

Amid the wild March storm Wednesday, descendants, relatives and friends of Mrs. Joshua Fisher gathered at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. George W. Prescott on Spear street, to pay the last tribute of love and respect. It was no empty feeling that drew neighbors from West Dedham, so long her home, to Quincy in such a driving storm.

Her serene face lay in a peace and beauty such as life can hardly give. The snowy muslin draped over her bosom, was just as she so daintily arranged it in life. The flowers she loved, pansies, white lilies and a sheaf of wheat were about her form. At her head there was a beautiful pillow of flowers bearing the word "SISTER" Rev. Mr. Butler in magnetic tones lead her children and relatives to a home beyond where her active mind may find broader scope for its activities. Born in a family of good New England old-time stock, her strong mind carried her body way beyond the Psalmists allotted three score and ten years.

Her progressive spirit made her restless at the hurried out reaching of our imperfect life of today. It will be many years that this lady will hold a remembrance in the hearts of those present at these last rites paid in affection and respect. A. E. F.

Was There a Jonah?

In view of the undeniable remnant of the superstitions even in this decade and among the most enlightened of people, the pastor of the First Presbyterian church thinks that he will be justified in preaching upon that seemingly sensational query of the above headline on Sunday evening.

For the lecture which was at last given last evening, when the worst snow storm of the winter was raging, had been postponed from Tuesday, March 3d, when a valve of the stereopticon proved to have been broken in transit, to Tuesday, March 10, when the tanks of gas were not shipped from Boston, through neglect.

However, more than one hundred people braved the storm, and were delighted with the beautiful views and interesting comments. The more than double that number who were disappointed on Tuesday evening, were compensated by an instructive lecture by the pastor, who came to the rescue in the emergency.

Do not forget the "Story of the Rebellion" to be told in Hancock hall, Monday evening, illustrated by stereoptican; 125 views, by Charles Sumner Nickerson. p!-1t

Don't think because you are sick and nothing seems to give you relief that you can't be cured.

There must be a cure for you somewhere.

If your doctor can't cure you, perhaps he has mistaken the cause. Anybody is liable to make a mistake sometimes.

One in three of us suffer from indigestion, and one out of three dyspeptics doesn't know it. That is, he may know he is sick, but he blames it to something else.

Indigestion is the cause of half of our dangerous diseases.

Shaker Digestive Cordial, made from tonic medicinal roots and herbs, is the most natural cure for indigestion. It relieves the symptoms and cures the disease gently, naturally, efficiently, giving fresh life, strength and health to sick dyspeptics.

The annual report of the officers of the society were read and accepted. The finances of the parish were discussed at length and the usual appropriations were made the total appropriations being about $6,000.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Which Bicycle Shall I Buy?

THERE is lots of deception in bicycles—enamel covers a heap of sin. To some people all bicycles look alike, and inexperienced buyers are often influenced in selecting a wheel, by some simple or inexpensive attachment, instead of by the most important features, THE STERLING QUALITY, THE SKILLED CONSTRUCTION.

UNSCRUPULOUS Agents will tell you anything to sell a wheel, but wheels of repute speak for themselves. Such wheels as these, and these alone, can be found at this reliable agency. Beautiful 1896 models for Ladies or Gentlemen, ranging in price from $50.00 to $100.00 Wheels that are worthy the name, Wheels that bring endless comfort to the owner, Wheels that are sold by an agency which is in the business to stay and which realizes the importance of selling for future prosperity, the very best wheels that American wisdom can manufacture. The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, MAR. 14, 1896.

New Every Morning.

Every day is fresh beginning;
Every morn is the world made new.
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you,
A hope for me and a hope for you.

All the past things are past and over.
The tasks are done, and the tears are shed.
Yesterday's errors let yesterday cover;
Yesterday's wounds, which smarted and bled.
Are healed with the healing which might has shed.

Yesterday now is a part of forever.
Bound up in a sheaf, which God holds tight,
With glad days, and sad days, and bad days which never Shall visit us more with their bloom and their blight,
Their fullness of sunshine or sorrowful night.

Let them go, since we cannot recall them,
Cannot undo, and cannot atone.
God in his mercy receive, forgive them!
Only the new days are our own.
To-day is ours, and to-day alone.

Here are the skies all burnished brightly;
Here is the spent earth all reborn;
Here are the tired limbs springing lightly
To face the sun, and to share with the morn
In the chrism of dew and the cool ot dawn.

Every day is a fresh beginning,
Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain,
And, spite of old sorrow and older sinning,
And puzzle forecasted, and possible pain,
Take heart with the day and begin again!

—Susan Coolidge.

Notes and Comments.

—The Waltham Free Press, says: "If some of the kind things which are now said of the late Gov. Greenhalge could have been said while he was living it would have been pleasanter for him." How often this is the case.

—There are 799 newspapers in this country over 50 years old; the QUINCY PATRIOT is one of this number; being 60 years old next January.

—In an establishment on the ice in the St. John river, about midway between New Brunswick and Maine, is a ranch where rum is sold day and night. That's keeping liquor on ice to a certainty.

—There is no doubt that the life of Governor Greenhalge was shortened by the strain of the extra-official duties which custom places upon the chief magistrate.

—Electric tanning is now the latest thing. Naughty boys think it is much better than strap tanning.

—It is gratifying to learn that the last trial of the torpedo boat Ericsson was held without injury to any one on board. If the new torpedo boat proves to be as destructive to the enemy as she has been to her crews, she will be indeed a terror of the seas.

—The rumor that some of the Boston dailies are to enlarge their sheets, to enable patent medicine advertisers to publish life-size portraits of their patrons, needs confirmation, perhaps, says the Mansfield News, although the tendency to such an affliction lately shown in some of those sheets would seem to be sufficient ground for fear.

—In one or two shoe shops in Brockton there is a workman who ekes out a very fair income by the prodigality of the other employes. He is ready to lend a dollar, two dollars, or any sum up to ten dollars at the rate of 5 cents on the dollar a month. It is rather a reflection on the prudence of the others that he does a good business, for they get paid off once a week, and there is no reason why they should get "strapped."

—It seems certain that New York legislature will pass the bill for the consolidation of New York and Brooklyn, which will give the enlarged metropolis an area of 359 square miles and a population of 3,000,000. New York has a tax rate of $1.91, while that of Brooklyn is $2.74.

—Professor Dolbeare, of Tufts college, is a great deal better known abroad than he is at home. He has just been called to England to give expert testimony in a law case.—Somerville Journal.

—It is a curious fact that a large proportion of the members of the senate live in country towns or small cities. The only cities of 100,000 or more inhabitants represented in that body are St. Paul, Indianapolis, Albany, Providence, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Newark, Detroit, Omaha and Denver; and not one of all the senators resides in any of the thirteen largest cities. This is not merely an accident of the present time. The rural districts have always been prolific in political leaders, and will probably always continue to furnish a considerable majority of our recognized statesmen.—Beverly Times.

—Petitions are before the Legislature asking that the salary of District Attorney Harris be increased from $2,100 $3,000.

—The Democratic state convention will be held in Music Hall, Boston, Tuesday, April 21.

—Cuban planters are in a most unfortunate situation. If they do not grind their sugar cane Gen. Weyler threatens them with summary punishment. If they do grind it the rebels hang them. They seem to be 'between the devil and the deep sea' and unable to swim.—Waltham Free Press.

—Hens are doing their best this month and the price of eggs has dropped wonderfully.

—It looks as if the few remaining redskins in Rhode Island were pretty nearly up to date. The surviving members of the Narragansett Tribe have voted to bring suit against the state for the sum of $4,000,000 as redress for damages incurred for taking their lands. Legal authorities assure them that they have a strong case.

—The Lieutenant-Governor has cancelled all engagements of a public nature till Patriots' Day, when the public memorial service of the late Governor will be held. He has also announced his intention of accepting invitations far more sparingly than has been the custom. He believes that the public will readily acquiesce in this decision, which is made necessary by the great demands on the time and strength of the chief executive.

—It is something very unusual for a weekly paper to issue five numbers in February, but the Patriot gives full measure this month.—Quincy Patriot.

Oh, but it's not unusual when there are five weeks in a month.—Roxbury Gazette.

Wonder where the Gazette found its new almanac which has five weeks in a month.

—The very simplicity of the funeral of Governor Greenhalge on Monday gave it an impressiveness, to the thoughtful at least, that might not have been exceeded by all the pomp and splendor of a military burial. It suggested, says the Boston Traveller, that the dead executive was a man of the people, beloved and honored not for his rank, but for the noble qualities that shone in him as part and parcel of the great body politic. So the lesson of an honorable life came home with added force to all who saw or shall read of the unostentatious ceremonies at Lowell.

—The Boston Commonwealth says, "there ought to be some protection for our governors; and if it takes a constitutional amendment to do it, let us amend the constitution to forbid the dining and lunching and banqueting of the chief magistrate "against the peace and dignity of the commonwealth."

Taken in Time

Hood's Sarsaparilla has acheived great success in warding off sickness which, if allowed to progress, would have undermined the whole system and given disease a strong foothold to cause much suffering and even threaten death. Hood's Sarsaparilla has done all this and even more. It has been taken in thousands of cases which were thought to be incurable, and after a fair trial has effected wonderful cures, bringing health, strength and joy to the afflicted. Another important point about Hood's Sarsaparilla is that its cures are permanent, because they start from the solid foundation of purified, vitalized and enriched blood. But it is not what we say but what Hood's Sarsaparilla does that tells the story.

Colonel James W. Scott's latest story is of a man whose wife was reproaching him for his fondness for and indulgence in poker.

"But, my dear," remonstrated the husband, "it is a very modest game, and we have only a ten-cent limit."

"But, why, Charles," urged his wife, pleadingly, "why have any limit at all?"—Chicago Record.

"You seem excited, dear, what has happened?"

"Poor Jack Murray, I have just rejected him."

"Oh, don't mind a little thing like that. Why, I reject him every six months!"

THE CITY COUNCIL.

Really the first debate of the City Council of 1896, was at the meeting of Monday evening, when the report of the Committee on Public Buildings on the order for new schoolhouses came in. As introduced the order calls for an appropriation of $75,000 for two brick schoolhouses according to plans of ex-Councilman S. O. Moxon. The Committee reported an amendment substituting plans of Bacon & Wright, and an interesting debate followed, which is reported at length below.

The only absent members were Councilmen Anderson and Rinn.

A communication was received from the Mayor stating that the appropriation of 1895 for "Miscellaneous Fire" and "Salary of City Officers" were exhausted. To Committee on Finance.

A communication was received from the Mayor forwarding a petition from West Quincy for a day patrolman. The Mayor in his communication said there were no funds. The petition was referred to the executive department.

The Mayor forwarded a communication in which he stated that a delay had been necessary in his petitioning the Massachusetts Highway Commission to lay out Washington street, as the commission required a plan to accompany the petition. This plan had just been completed and he enclosed a petition for the Council to sign.

The Mayor also sent a communication in relation to the death of Governor Greenhalge, enclosing resolutions which were adopted by the Council by a rising vote.

WHEREAS, in the death of Frederic T. Greenhalge this Commonwealth has lost an able, courageous and honorable chief magistrate, a man whose public and private life has won universal confidence and admiration; be it

Resolved, that this City Council representing the universal sentiment of this community hereby expresses our appreciation of the high qualities of mind and heart of our late governor. Actuated always by the highest motives of patriotism, ever ready to devote his talents unsparingly to his country or his state, unswerving in the path of right and duty, he won universal respect and admiration. His warm heart, his sound judgment and conspicuous ability, his unselfish devotion to the interests and needs of others, endeared him to all men and all classes. An admirable public officer, a true friend, and a loving husband his memory should serve as a model and inspiration to all.

Resolved, that the heartfelt sympathy of this body be given to Mrs. Greenhalge and her family in the great loss they have sustained.

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records and a copy of them sent to Mrs. Greenhalge.

A communication was received from the School Committee giving notice that they had approved the plans of Bacon & Wright with certain changes. To Committee on Public Buildings.

Chairman Sprague of the Committee on Public Buildings asked permission for his committee to retire for a few minutes, which request was granted.

Petitions.

Councilman Field presented a petition from residents of South Quincy asking for a right of way over a certain land owned by the city known as the water lot, to their property. To Committee on Streets.

Report of Committees.

The Committee on State Aid reported on petition of William P. Martin that he be granted Military aid of $10 per month. Adopted.

The Committee on Public Buildings had now returned and they reported an amendment to the order calling for the appropriation of $75,000 for two schoolhouses, changing the word Moxon to Bacon & Wright.

Councilman Badger of the Committee said he opposed. The School board have decided that the Moxon plans were correct and had drawn up specifications. He did not consider Bacon & Wright's plans as good as the Moxon. The school committee were requested to approve the Bacon & Wright plans and did so. The School board give their stamp of approval more emphatically upon the Moxon than upon the Bacon & Wright. We also have something tangible in regard to building in the Moxon plans. He says that the buildings can be built in five months, while Bacon & Wright say they require six months. Why go out of the city when we have better plans by one of our own citizens. It has been often brought before this council that everything that could, should be given to our citizens. The School board ask for eleven alterations in the Bacon & Wright plans and for but two in the Moxon.

Councilman Nickerson moved that the chairman of the school board be summoned to the Council meeting. Voted.

Councilman Sprague said it was no argument to say that preference should be given to residents for Mr. Wright was a resident. The question for us to decide is which are the better plans to adopt. He had word from Superintendent Lull that the specifications of the Moxon plans had been gone over carefully and were now iron clad. Yet Sunday fourteen changes were made in Bacon & Wright's and thirteen more in Moxon's besides what had been considered an iron clad one. Councilman Sprague then read from papers the differences in the two sets of plans in regard to the foundation walls below the cellar, the thickness of the walls and difference in material, the underpining, the floor timbers, girders and rafters and even the glass used in the window nearly all which he considered the Bacon & Wright superior.

Councilman Field said it seemed that the building called for by the Bacon & Wright plans was a little more expensive but still his contractor says he will build them for $32,000. The plans of Moxon call for the water closets in the centre and the Bacon & Wright plans on the side, but Moxon had changed his. Mr. Lull thought Moxon's corriders were sufficiently lighted but those of Bacon & Wright gets a still lighter corridor.

Councilman Badger said Bacon & Wright have not presented a full set of plans, nor a framing plan of any description, which was very important. It makes a difference whether you have the floor timber placed twelve inches or eighteen inches apart. He considered the Bacon & Wright plans incomplete. The order calls for plans and specifications. We have the specifications but where are the plans?

We should have a framing plan. The Moxon plans call for a Fuller & Warren system of sanitary arrangement but the Bacon & Wright call simply for a cesspool. That might be all right for Norfolk Downs where the soil is loose but it is not for West Quincy.

Councilman Rice moved that a recess of fifteen minutes be taken to examine plans. Voted.

After the recess Councilman Nickerson said he would like to have the architects come forward and explain their plans. He did not believe Mr. Moxon would bring in plans that were weak. There was no questions but what we could have the buildings by his plans in five months.

Councilman Little wished to explain his position. He had heard the specifications read and the plans explained and he had come to the conclusion that the Bacon & Wright plans were the superior and was positive the city would get the best building by them. He then told what he considered the advantages of the Bacon & Wright plans over the Moxon.

Councilman Field said it seemed to him in looking over the plans there could be no question in anyone's mind as to whose were the best. It seemed to him that if the Bacon & Wright plans and specifications were used, the architect looked after the building and the Commissioner of Public Works after them, that theirs were the best. In the Moxon plans he did not know who would look after them.

The Lincoln school needs repairs. There were no thresholds in the building and these plans of Moxon call for no thresholds while those of Bacon & Wright did. Every part of the Bacon & Wright specifications show the intention to have a building we shall be proud of when completed.

Councilman Nickerson said the foundation of the Lincoln school had not settled but that the cracking of the walls was due to the shrinking of the timbers.

Councilman Lamb hoped, with Councilman Nickerson's suggestion, that Mr. Moxon would come forward and explain about the foundation walls.

Councilman Nickerson suggested that these changes might make a difference in the price of the building.

Councilman Sprague said the changes made were largely in the specifications suggested by the school board. We are bound to decide on the merits of the plans and should not offer as an argument the length of time required to build.

Councilman Lamb thought these plans were copied after the Lincoln school.

Chairman Porter of the school board who had come in and being called upon said the committee had expressed their opinion on the plans. If the Council build on either plans they will be satisfactory to the committee. The Bacon & Wright plans are after the Lincoln school.

Mr. Porter explained the changes in the two sets of plans, and said for one he was opposed to the introduction of a wood cornice as in the Bacon & Wright plans. The school board have no prejudices, they feel assured if the changes made are carried out there will be two buildings perfectly satisfactory to the committee and city.

Councilman Field would like to ask if there were fourteen changes in the Bacon & Wright plans.

Mr. Porter then told of the meeting the committee held, at the request of Councilman Sprague, to approve the Bacon & Wright plans. He then read the changes the committee desired in both plans. He also explained at length the difference in the two specifications. Had he known what was to be done with the plans he would not have let them left him on Sunday. So far as he knew there had been no changes made in either of the plans. He thought the Bacon & Wright plans had suggestions which were of some value that would commend itself.

Councilman Rice asked of Mr. Porter if since approving the plans of Mr. Moxon the school committee still think the Moxon plans were the best.

Mr. Porter answered, that that question had never been brought up before the school board.

Councilman Claflin thought the plans had been discussed enough. At one time he had thought best to take the Moxon plans, then again he had thought it would be better to take the Bacon & Wright. He hoped the amendment would prevail and a step would be taken tonight.

Councilman Nickerson thought the Council should hear the architects. If Mr. Wright was not present that was his fault.

Councilmen Claflin and Field thought it unfair to hear one architect and not the other.

Councilman Phillips said there were some points he would like explained. Does either plan possess advantages in regard to light and floor space.

Mr. Porter said rooms in both building were equally well lighted, and the cubic contents was almost alike; the corridors in the Moxon plans are a little wider.

The motion of Councilman Nickerson that the architects come forward and explain their plans was lost by a vote of 10 to 8.

The motion to accept the amendment offered by the committee on Public buildings was then put and lost by a vote of 11 to 10. President Bryant voting in the negative.

Councilman Rice moved to lay on the table giving notice that he would substitute wood for brick. The motion was lost.

The order then took its second reading.

Adjourned at 9 45.

Profanity.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

I have been requested by a business man to write through your columns to parents and teachers, and especially to the School Committee and the police, calling their attention to the alarming prevalence of the use of profane language by school boys and others on our streets. Groups of lads stand on our street corners, obstructing the way, indulge in boisterous talk full of horrible oaths and but little less noisy obscenity.

There is need that parents should keep some oversight of the company kept by their boys, (and girls, also), and that they should not permit them to roam the streets when out of schools. Parents and teachers ought to instruct the children concerning the wickedness and vulgarity of profanity.

The School Committee would do well to make and enforce stringent rules on the subject; and more potent than anything else would be a few arrests of boys and men by the police for violating the statute against the use of profane or obscene language on the public ways.

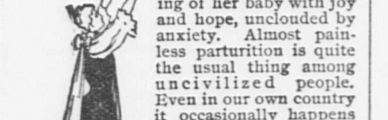

The Sunday Schools, in their one hour out of 168 hours can do very little, especially when it is remembered that this is only one of the evils to be combatted directly or indirectly by the sowing of the seeds of good. If the home, the public schools, the community, will arouse to the danger and the duty, more can be accomplished. And action is quickly needed.

Yours earnestly,
ROBERT WESTLY PEACH.

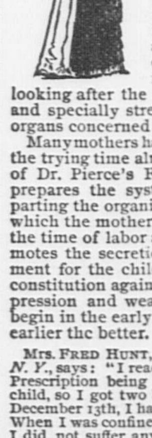

Quincy, March 10, 1896.

☞ "I'll tell papa on you," is the title of a new and most delightful song, composed by Fred. Lone, and published by J. Fischer & Bro., No. 7 Bible House, New York. Price, 40 cents. It is written in a sweet, flowing and graceful style, with a pleasing and effective accompaniment. We predict for it a merited success.

BABY'S COMING.

Nature intended that every woman should look forward to the coming of her baby with joy and hope, unclouded by anxiety. Almost painless parturition is quite the usual thing among uncivilized people. Even in our own country it occasionally happens with women in robust health and good condition. It ought to be the rule instead of the exception; and it is a fact that a very large proportion of the usual pain and suffering may be avoided by looking after the mother's general health, and specially strengthening the particular organs concerned in parturition.

Many mothers have been brought through the trying time almost painlessly by the aid of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It prepares the system for delivery by imparting the organic strength and elasticity which the mother specially needs; shortens the time of labor and of confinement; promotes the secretion of abundant nourishment for the child and fortifies the entire constitution against the after period of depression and weakness. It's use should begin in the early months of gestation—the earlier the better.

MRS. FRED HUNT, of Glenville, Schenectady Co., N. Y., says: "I read about Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription being so good for a woman with child, so I got two bottles last September, and December 13th, I had a twelve-pound baby girl. When I was confined I was not sick in any way. I did not suffer any pain, and when the child was born I walked into another room and went to bed. I never had an after-pain or any other pain. This is the eighth child and the largest of them all. I suffered everything that flesh could suffer with the other babies. I always had a doctor and then he could not help me very much, but this time my mother and my husband were alone with me. My baby was only seven days old when I got up and dressed and left my room and stayed up all day."

Household Receipts.

BOILED MACKEREL. Boil a whole fish. Lay in a bed of parsley and pour over it a slightly thickened sauce of melted butter with a couple of spoonfuls of chopped parsley mixed in it.

FISH CHOWDER. "Four pounds of fish, half a dozen slices of salt pork, put into the pot. When done very brown, take pork out, put in a layer of fish cut lengthwise, then a layer of crackers, small onions and potatoes sliced thin, mixed with bits of fried pork; then a layer of fish, and so on. Strew a little salt and pepper over each layer; over the whole pour a bowl of flour and water, enough to come even with the surface. Add a sliced lemon and a cupful of tomato catsup. A few clams are an addition. Cover so that no steam escapes."

PEACH SNOWDRIFT. Boil one pint of milk and one-half (small) of a cupful of sugar, and two smooth tablespoonfuls of cornstarch till thick; then add the stiff whites of three eggs, and pour over a dish of drained, canned peaches. Eat with sauce.

FRUIT SHORT-CAKE. One-half of a cupful each of sugar and sour milk, one-fourth of a cupful of butter, one egg, one-half of a teaspoonful of soda, flour enough to roll it out. Bake in an oblong tin, split in two layers and spread with jam. Eat with sweetened cream.

LEMON PIE. Bake, in two crusts, mixture of juice and grated rind of one-half of a lemon, one-half of a cupful of water, one-half of a cupful of sugar, one tablespoonful of flour, two teaspoonfuls of butter.

NEW STREET SUITS.

Much style attaches to duck or pique suits made with short jackets opening over vests and the same way of making leads in wool or mohair dresses intended for general wear. Independent jackets are also short, but blouse jackets belted in, give a change and the same shape is seen in suits of one material throughout. Numerous gowns also intended for ordinary wear, are made with round waists or slightly pointed and finished by a ribbon belt with collar to match and in costumes of every character, these two features are noticeable. Seekers after novelty, must of course feel disappointment, but on the other hand economists are glad to know that last season's styles are yet in vogue.

STRAPPED SEAMS

are of comparatively recent introduction, though by no means novel and they are conspicuous both in wool and thick cotton dresses for street wear. Skirts of thin cotton gowns are trimmed around the bottom in various ways, differences being effected by flounces of different widths, since they range from such as reach almost half way up the skirt, to quite narrow ones or three medium flounces may equal in depth, the single one of greatest width. Lace is the almost inevitable garniture for thin cottons and is used chiefly in white, but some black lace is seen on colored or white cottons and yellow lace again appears. On thick cottons, wools or silks, the binding becomes of great importance, because the skirts are untrimmed and it cannot moreover be too strongly impressed upon lady readers, that to secure the highest grade bias velveteen skirt bindings, great vigilance should be exercised. None are genuine except those having S. H. and M. on the label and the caution just given is needful, since because of their superiority, they are imitated in every conceivable manner.

GRASS LINEN,

according to Lord & Taylor, is to be extremely fashionable and brought out therefore in many varieties, is purchased eagerly. There are plain weaves releaved only by the unevitable ribbon belt and collar, but increasing gradually in price and richness, come those showing gilt threads or having gilt applique with the material cut out below and such fabrics will be finished preferably by gold lace. Colored threads in Persian combinations also vary handsome grass cloths.

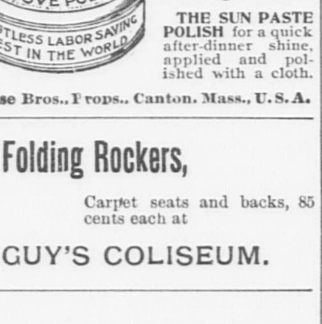

TAFFETA RIBBONS

in Persian colorings are a delightful study and set in high, wired loop become a distinctive feature in millinery. They form a splendid contrast to nodding black plumes and contribute effectively to those rich mixtures of hue that characterize the season. Much gayety also arises from colored or shaded straws in rough or fancy weave and the latter in highest types appear silken because of their refined lustre. Flowers are a lovely world and show great range, from the very small massed together to large ones placed singly.

"Mrs. M." Spring capes are in cloth, peau de soie or velvet and the usual trimmings are jet, lace, chiffon or pinked silk. Light tan cloth is especially stylish, whether for jackets or capes, but otherwise, black with lining of colored silk is chiefly noticeable.

"Lucy." Plain straw in millinery is used only as an offset to fancy or rough weave.

Alcohol Delays Digestion.

Will a glass of wine or beer, taken at meal times aid digestion? It will not, although such has been the belief of the laity and to some extent the idea has been entertained by physicians. Alcohol, by irritating the stomach, promotes a free secretion of gastric juice. Its peculiar and injurious influence upon this fluid destroys its power to convert the albuminous substance into peptones. This conversion is essential to healthy digestion. Alcohol, also interferes with the digestion by decreasing the vitality of the nerves and muscular tissues of the stomach.

The physician who prescribes alcohol in the form of whiskey, brandy or wine to aid digestion, may please his patient who suffers from a general prostration and tire, but in many instances he is inviting him to take the first step upon the downward path, so difficult to retrace. A physician, of all others, should not take upon himself any share of the responsibility of the production of drunkards.—Healthy Home.

Castle Square Theatre, Boston.

The production of "Mignon," Ambroise Thomas' charming Grand Opera, on Monday evening, at the Castle Square Theatre, was a most interesting occasion in every way. "Mignon" has never been better done in Boston. The company seemed especially well fitted to their parts. No small part of the honor of the evening should be given to Mr. Frank King, the scenic artist, whose clever brush has produced three scenes that brought forth rounds of applause, for they were in perfect taste in harmony of coloring. Mr. Hirschfeldt's orchestra is alone worth the price of admission, and the addition of the harp gives strength and coloring to the ensemble passages, and all the accompaniments are played with feeling. The chorus showed the careful and painstaking rehearsals that have been presided over by Mr. Jaxon. The romantic story of the opera itself is one that lends itself easily to lyric treatment. It is a story that appeals strongly to the sympathies of the audience, and the thorough way in which it is presented at the Castle Square Theatre should make it one of the record breakers of the season. "Mignon" will be continued next week, with the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

THE STUDIOUS GIRL.

An Interesting Letter From a Young Ladies' College.

Race Between the Sexes for Education. Health Impaired by Incessant Study.

The race between the sexes for education is to-day very close.

Ambitious girls work incessantly over their studies, and are often brought to a halt, through having sacrificed the physical to the mental. Then begin those ailments that must be removed at once, or they will produce constant suffering. Headache, dizziness, faintness, slight vertigo, pains in the back and loins, irregularity, loss of sleep and appetite, nervousness and blues, with lack of confidence; these are positive signs that women's arch enemy is at hand.

The following letter was received by Mrs. Pinkham in May, one month after the young lady had first written, giving symptoms, and asking advice. She was ill and in great distress of mind, feeling she would not hold out till graduation, and the doctor had advised her to go home.

——— College, Mass.

You dear Woman:—

I should have written to you before, but you said wait a month. We are taught that the days of miracles are past. Pray what is my case? I have taken the Vegetable Compound faithfully, and obeyed you implicitly and, am free from all my ills. I was a very, very sick girl. Am keeping well up in my class, and hope to do you and myself credit at graduation. * * My gratitude cannot find expression in words. Your sincere friend, MARY ——

P. S. Some of the other girls are now using the Compound. It benefits them all.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the only safe, sure and effectual remedy in such cases, as it removes the cause, purifies and invigorates the system, and gives energy and vitality.

One Boston house alone is selling 150,000 barrels of Pillsbury's Best a year. The people would never buy it at that rate but for one thing—Quality.

Quality made and quality maintains the fame of PILLSBURY'S BEST.

All the leading grocers in New England sell it.

REGULATIONS OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH

Of the City of Quincy.

At a meeting held Feb. 20, 1896, the Board of Health of the City of Quincy made and adopted, and do hereby publish, the following regulations:

REGULATION 1. No person shall collect, remove or carry in or through any of the streets, lanes, avenues, places or alleys within the City of Quincy, the contents of any cesspool, vault, privy or privy well, the drainage of any stable, dwelling house, slaughter house, or other building in the city, unless expressly licensed therefor by the Board of Health, upon such terms and conditions, and by such methods, as the Board may deem that the public health requires, and upon failure to comply therewith, the license shall be forthwith revoked, and cancelled. No privy vault or cesspool shall be cleaned between 6 P. M. and sunrise.

REG 2. No person shall deposit the contents of any privy-vault or cesspool, or any other filth, upon any premises within the limits of the city, without first having obtained a permit to do so from the Board of Health. Nor shall any cesspool for the retention of waste water be within ten feet of any house, unless the cesspool be cemented water-tight. No privy-vault or cesspool that is not water-tight shall be maintained within two rods of any well, spring, or other source of water supply used for drinking purposes.

REG. 3. No person, unless expressly licensed therefor by the Board of Health, shall collect, transport or convey, swill, fat, grease, bones, or any decaying, putrifying or offensive animal matter or vegetable substance through any of the public streets or ways of this city, and then only in securely covered vehicles or vessels, from which no liquid matter or odors can escape.

REG 4. All persons licensed by the Board to remove the contents of privy-vaults and cesspools, and all who collect and transport swill, refuse and offensive animal or vegetable substances, shall keep all carts, equipments and implements used therefor, disinfected and free from all obnoxious or offensive odors when not in immediate use, and shall not allow the same to become obnoxious or offensive to the public or to the owners or occupants of premises adjoining those where the same are kept or stored.

REG. 5. No person shall place, or cause to be placed, or empty, or cause to be emptied, upon any street, way, lane or sidewalk, any house dirt, offal or rubbish, any sewage, or the drainage of any sink or stable, or the contents of any cesspool, vault, privy or privy well. No person shall cast any decayed vegetable or dead animal substance into any cesspool or privy vault, or any well, cistern, reservoir, pond or waters within the city, nor drown or caused to be drowned, any animal in any of said waters. And the carcesses of animals dead of disease or killed for any cause, shall be buried at such distance from dwellings, or wells, or other source of water supply, that no danger or nuisance can result; and no person shall establish or maintain any stable, swine pen, privy, privy well, cesspool or sink drain within six feet of any stream, watercourse or pond in this city, without a permit from the Board of Health.

REG 6. The keeping of swine, goats, cows or poultry in any part of the city where such keeping shall be held by the Board of Health detrimental to the public health or offensive to the neighborhood, is hereby prohibited, and after due notice by said Board to the owner or person in charge, he shall forthwith remove the same or cause the same to be removed, from any place at which the keeping thereof shall be prohibited by the Board.

REG. 7. No person shall burn, boil, try or decompose any refuse substances, either animal or vegetable, in such a manner that the same shall evolve odors or gasses obnoxious or offensive to the public or to the owners or occupants of adjoining premises.

REG. 8. Every occupant of any dwelling house, tenement or other building in this city shall keep such house or building, and the yard belonging to the same, free from all filth and from all substances having offensive odors.

Whenever a vault, cesspool, barn or cellar, or any building or premises of any description, becomes offensive, the same shall be satisfactorily cleansed, ventilated and disinfected, by the occupant or owner within such reasonable time as the Board of Health may in a notice therefor prescribe.

Whenever the Board of Health is satisfied on due examination that a cellar, tenement or building within the city, occupied as a dwelling house, has become, by reason of the number of occupants, want of cleanliness or other cause, unfit for such purpose, the occupants shall remove therefrom within forty-eight hours after written notice has been given them.

REG 9. When a householder knows that a person within his family is sick with small-pox, diphtheria, membraneous croup, scarlet fever or any other disease dangerous to the public health, he shall immediately give notice thereof to the Board of Health, unless he knows such cases have been duly reported by the attending physician.

When a physician knows that a person whom he is called to visit is infected with small-pox, diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles or typhoid fever, he shall immediately give notice thereof to the Board of Health.

REG. 10. No person from any dwelling wherein a case of small-pox, diphtheria, membraneous croup or scarlet fever exists shall attend any school, church, or public gathering of any kind, or take any book or magazine to or from the Public Library without a permit from the Board of Health. The Board will inform the librarian of all cases of said diseases, and until a written permit is given he shall allow neither books nor magazines to be taken to or returned from the dwellings where such cases exist.

REG. 11. In case of a death from small-pox, scarlet fever, membraneous croup or diphtheria, burial must be made within twelve hours, if practicable, and must be strictly private; and the body must not be exposed to view, or the coffin opened after the body has been placed therein.

REG. 12. All cases of small-pox, membraneous croup, diphtheria and scarlet fever must be isolated to the satisfaction of the Board, and no visitors of any kind allowed. After the sickness is over the rooms occupied must be disinfected by the householder or by the Board of Health. They must be tightly closed and sulphur burned in them at the rate of two pounds per one thousand cubic feet of space. They must remain closed from six to twelve hours, then opened and aired thoroughly before further occupancy. The bedding must be well spread out and exposed to the same sulphur fumes, and all the furniture, walls, bedding, carpets, etc., must be washed in a solution of carbolic acid, chloride of lime or corrosive sublimate.

REG. 13. No child from a family, any one of whose members is sick with small-pox, membraneous croup, diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles or whooping cough, will be permitted to attend school until six weeks after the complete cessation of such sickness in the family. Children from tenements immediately adjoining those in which any of these diseases exist will likewise be prohibited, unless by permission of the Board of Health, and all children so prohibited, by reason of sickness in their families, before again attending school shall obtain a certificate from the attending physician and from a member of the Board of Health, that all danger of contagion is past.

REG. 14. Whoever has knowledge of, or has reason to suspect the existence of a contagious disease among any domestic animals in this city shall forthwith give notice thereof to the Board of Health.

REG 15. Persons having the care or custody of such suspected animals, and having received a written or verbal order from the Board of Health for their restriction, shall neither sell, trade, nor in any way dispose of them, nor move or allow them to be moved from the place assigned, nor allow other animals not already exposed to come in contact with them till permitted so to do by the State Cattle Commissioners.

Whoever violates any provisions of regulations 14 and 15 shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or by imprisonment not exceeding one year; and whoever violates any provisions of any other of these regulations shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars for each offense.

POINTS: Among the goods quoted in this list we wish to call attention to the Mohawk Valley Corn; we have 1200 dozen of this brand, and it is of excellent quality; 5½c. per can, 65c. per dozen. The spices quoted are all pure goods; best quality.

The Violet brand of Marrowfat Peas are the best you ever had in your life; just order one can; 9c per can, $1.00 per dozen.

Our Maryland Chief brand of early June Peas cannot be excelled; 11c. per can, $1.25 per doz; but we tell you frankly the Violet will suit you better.

Gallon cans of Bartlett Pears, 20c. per can, $2.25 per dozen, good quality; you probably will never be able to buy them again for that price.

Weymouth brand Tomatoes; northern goods, solid packed, red-ripe, extra large can, first-class in every particular; 8c. per can, 95c. per dozen.

The goods advertised at 3½c. per pound are all of standard quality, and sold elsewhere from 5 to 10c. per pound.

The QUALITY of our "OLD GOLD" Flour is equal to any sold. The quality of flour, my friends, does not depend on its extensive advertising.

Don't fail to try our Tea and Coffee; they are in line with the rest, and can't fail to suit you.

A FEW REMARKS. Since opening this store in June, 1887, we have always catered to the hotel, restaurant and boarding house trade in Boston and vicinity, and have not striven to increase our family trade until recently. The former buy their groceries, with few exceptions, of the wholesale grocers or of the large retailers (some 5 or 6) in the wholesale department. The reason is plain—they can buy cheaper. "Catalogue" prices are for the family trade. While our hotel and restaurant trade has increased from year to year, until we have one of the largest in the city, the family trade has not grown in proportion. Why? Because we have quoted the same prices to the family trade as our neighbors, and there was no particular reason why they should buy of us. We have decided for the present to sell to the family trade the same as we do to the other. Our place of business, 78 Beach street, is one of the nearest stores to the Albany, Old Colony and New England depots; thousands of people who come in and go out on these roads pass our door every day; and this price list was prepared especially to secure their trade. Realizing that a great many of them could take their purchases with them, we make a price as low as possible over net cost of goods, therefore we are unable to pay freight or express charges on goods going out of town. Another point: We want those people who take their purchases with them to be paid for their trouble; we cannot afford to sell goods quite as cheap if we have to deliver the goods out of town.

Our prices are in many instances from 10 to 200 per cent. cheaper than any "catalogue" list; our goods are of standard quality; every salesman in this store is instructed to never misrepresent goods; we want your orders, not only once, but for all time, and we propose to use you so well that you cannot afford to go elsewhere.

Poetry.

The Date for Easter.

FROM THE BOSTON TRANSCRIPT.

"Thirty days hath September,"
Every person can remember;
But to know when Easter's come,
Puzzles even scholars, some.

When March the twenty-first is past,
Just watch the silvery moon.
And when you see it full and round,
Know Easter'll be here soon.

After the moon has reached its full,
Then Easter will be here,
The very Sunday after,
In each and every year.

And if it hap on Sunday
The moon should reach its height,
The Sunday following this event
Will be the Easter bright.

Miscellany.

TURNING THE WALE.

The loom in the corner of the big kitchen had been silent for ten minutes, and Mrs. Desire Newburn still sat intently studying the pattern pinned up before her.

Then she looked across the room to the prim figure sitting upright in the high-backed chair by the fireplace.

"Prudence!" she called, "maybe you can tell me how to turn this pesky wale! It's funny enough that I can't remember!"

Prudence had been maid-of-all-work in the family for many years, and spoke with the familiarity of such long companionship. She answered sharply and quickly, "Never knew nothin' about weavin', er wanted to, either one! Meanest business on face of the earth! Better burn the ole loom up, and take some comfort rest o' yer days!"

Mrs. Newburn continued thoughtfully, as if not hearing Prudence's answer. "Mebbe Mis' Jim Griffin knows how, and I guess I'll slip over there this afternoon and see. Prudence, how's that biled dish doin'?"

"'I ain't doin' 's done!" answered Prudence crisply.

"Wal, then," said Mrs. Newburn, "it's so near noon, you may git that blue-edged platter out'n the settin' room closet; mind not break it now, and take up the heft of the dinner. The hired men'll be here 'fore you know it. Trust a hired man to tell when it's noon. I never knew one to work a minute after the clock struck twelve."

Prudence knit round to the seam needle and folded up her work carefully.

She glanced from the window as she stood up, and spoke quickly. "Somebody's a drivin' down the road tight's they can pelt. Bet it's Sime Payne aft' the doctor! 'T'ain't Sime, neither! Good land, it's Elder Jackson, and if he ain't comin' here too!"

Mrs. Newburn looked over Prudence's shoulder with keen interest. "Wal, of all this world!" she said excitedly, "what's he after, drivin' like that? I must say, I don't think it's jest the thing for a minister to be handlin' such a high-lifed hoss. Comin' after his dinner, most likely's not! Wal, if he can't eat biled dish, he can't eat nothin'!"

She snatched a clean apron from the bureau drawer, and smoothed her hair with both hands as she hurried toward the door. She waited an instant with her hand on the latch, till she heard a brisk rap. Then she opened the door wide, in a hospitable manner, and exclaimed with apparent surprise. "Why, Elder Jackson! It can't be possible it's you! Walk right into the sittin' room, and I'll have the men folks see to your hoss! Se' down in this rockin' chair! This fire's got down kind o' low, but I've got some pitch knots in the brick oven right here handy."

Elder Jackson blew his nose vehemently, and glanced around the room.

"You still keep up your reputation for good housekeeping, sister!" he said, with fervent admiration.

Mrs. Newburn answered complacently, "Well, yes, I hope so, elder!"

"Have you heard of the great out-pouring down't the Beedy neighborhood?" pursued the elder.

"Why no, I hain't!" was the disappointed answer, "but to tell the truth, I don't git out no'ers sence Josiah passed away, and I don't have no hankerin' to git out amongst folks."

Mrs. Newburn sniffed, and gazed solemnly in the fire.

"No, I s'pose so! I can feel for you sister, for since my own beloved consort was called to pass beyond the veil that's drawn before our sight, home don't seem like home, and I don't suppose any other companion will ever seem the same as Jane Eliza did. She was the best hand to mend footins' that ever lived."

The elder looked thoughtfully from the front window as he spoke.

"I have been thinking of the advisability of changing my situation," he continued.

"Dinner's ready!" she announced, crisply.

Mrs. Newburn led the way to the kitchen, where the hired men were already seated. They could hardly wait for the long prayer to be ended, which the elder made in a loud voice, standing behind his chair; when Mrs. Newbvrn began to pile the plates with openhanded generosity.

"Have you been to the mornin' meetin' elder?" she asked, as she passed him a plate piled high with cabbage, turnip and beets, potatoes and boiled pork.

"Well, no!" was the answer, "there was a minister from down along offered to preside at this meeting, and I had so much to do about the house, nobody to take a step, you know, that I got belated, and all kind of beat out. I don't enjoy as good health as I used to years back."

The elder was eating as if to satisfy his hunger was his first great aim, only finishing his dinner long after the hired men had left the table.

"Sister, I don't know when I've had the opportunity to sit down to such a bountiful dinner!" he said, as he attempted to rise, "your are a master cook and no mistake."

"Well, folks do say so," admitted the pleased woman. "I ain't wasteful, and nothin's ever slack-baked in my house, to be throwed int' the swill pail. Now step into the fore-room, Mr. Jackson, while I help Prudence wash up this handful of dishes!"

But the elder moved toward the loom, saying, admirably—

"You ain't forgot to weave, have you, sister?"

"No," she answered, with evident pride, "I'm happy to say I hain't. I never was afraid to weave with the best of 'em, but I'm willing to admit I don't know everything, for I've let it slip clean out o' my mind how the wale was turned that made this finger, and I used to know, for I wove this bed spread nigh onto forty years ago, when I was a very young gal," she added quickly.

"Now, sister, you would laugh if I should be able to assist your memory, shouldn't you?"

The elder sprang up to the high seat as nimbly as his age and the great amount of dinner he had eaten would admit.

"Now, ma'am, let us reason together! Take a seat beside me," he said, boyishly.

Mrs. Newburn sat beside him and watched his finger tracing the intricate pattern, as if she really believed him able to help her.

Prudence was finishing the dishes on the opposite side of the room, apparently oblivious and wholly indifferent to the honored guest.

The elder's eyes were on her as he spoke aloud with an air of great knowledge.

"You count all the threads on your side, while I count these. I used often to watch my departed mother turn this very wale."

"You don't say so!" was the delighted answer.

"Desire, listen to me," he whispered; and he caught her hand as she separated the mysterious threads.

"Sh!" The surprised woman glanced fearfully across the room. She was afraid Prudence had heard this bold entreaty, but Prudence still stood at her dishwashing like a statue.

"I'm sure this was the way my mother used to do," continued the elder aloud, still pretending to count and every moment glancing at the grim figure at the sink.

"Thou art the Desire of my heart," was the cautious whisper.

Mrs. Newburn shook her head appealingly and once more took up the forgotten pattern.

Suddenly she exclaimed with great enthusiasm, "There, there! I do declare, it's all come to me plain's the nose on my face. I never should 'a got hold of that in my mind if you hadn't helped me! Seems a special Providence your happenin' in ter dinner! Wal, I am so glad I didn't have to see Miss Griffin, and like's not she'd told of it all over the neighborhood."

"Desire!" whispered the elder.

"Keep still!" was the low answer, accompanied by a warning nudge of the elbow.

"Now, I've got that wale clear in my mind, I shan't forget it agin, and I guess I'll leave it, so we'll step into the settin'-room, elder, where you can rest a spell before evenin' meetin'."

"Mrs. Newburn deftly arranged her work about the loom, and the elder stepped down from the high seat reluctantly and followed his hostess to the sitting-room. He seated himself in the big rocking-chair, with its feather cushion, and looked at the fire Mrs. Newburn was rekindling, with deep anxiety depicted on every feature.

Then he said slowly and dolefully, "Nobody knows how lonesome I am since Jane Eliza was taken away!"

"Yes, I know by my own experience how you must miss her," Mrs. Newburn answered with warm sympathy, and the elder's face lightened perceptibly.

Mrs. Newburn wiped an imaginary tear from her eye as she brushed the clean hearth. "I've said a good many times to different ones," continued the elder in a trembling voice, "that I never could see anyone again who could take the place of the dear departed, but of late there has been a passage of Scripture uppermost in my mind, where it says, "It is not good for a man to be alone."

"Certain," answered Mrs. Newburn warmly, "you got anybody in your mind, elder?"

He turned his eyes from his contemplation of the fire to the woman who sat opposite, thoughtfully folding together the hem of her apron, and moved his chair nearer, glancing uneasily at the open door.

Mrs. Newburn noticed this, and hastened to say, "Oh, you needn't mind Prudence! she never listens and she ain't quick to hear anyway."

"Can it be," asked the elder, with slow intonation, as if exhorting a listening congregation, "that you mistook my meaning when we sat in the loom together, that you are the Desire of my heart?"

Mrs. Newburn could not have had a more exultant feeling as she listened to these words, but she shrewdly concealed her inward gratification, and said cautiously, after long hesitation, "Well, I don't know's I'm anxious to change my sittiwation! I'm pretty comf'tably off now, and more'n all that, I can't say as I 'prove o' your way o' believin'. I should want to stay in one place after I got settled to my liking, not git up and move every year or so."

"But," answered the elder, "I've been thinking of retiring from my arduous labors and of spending my last years in tilling a few acres of land. I have saved up money enough to buy a small farm if I could strike the right kind of a bargain."

This announcement only served to increase Mrs. Newburn's inward sense of gratification, and she decided in her own mind that she would give her envious neighbors the greatest surprise they ever had. It brought suddenly to her delighted mind the thought of this unexpected acquisition to her own few, hard-earned hundreds, but she did not allow a feature to betray her intense satisfaction. She spoke slowly and with much hesitation.

"It will not do to be hasty on such a solemn occasion. If I should consent to such an arrangement it would be with no disrespect to my dear Josiah's memory. I'm getting along in years, though I ain't old by any means. I can turn off work with any live woman in this town, and I ain't a mite afraid of work either! I don't suppose you've got any great amount of funiture, for you've allers been prudent, but Jane Lizy did have a handsome chany tea-set. Course you ain't disposed o' that, and you've got a good hair-cloth sofy and a mahogany table, and I ain't got neither one o' them things. How would it do to bring your stuff up here, and save me the trouble of packin' up my things, and Prudence wouldn't feel's if any other place was home, she's been here so long! Ain't either on us got any children to pester our lives out, and does seem to me we might take some comfort the rest of our lives, if we should make up our minds to jine hands."

It was the elder's turn to inwardly congratulate himself on so easy a conquest, and on this proposition, of which he had himself thought, but scarcely dared hope.

It had long been in his mind to find a place like this, where he could have a home and a worthy companion, and where his fondly cherish dollars could still remain at interest, and he could hardly realize that his dreams were about to become a fact. "We've known each other all our lives," he said, smiling sheepishly across the fireplace. "As long's the presiding elder's going to be present at these special meetings, suppose we ride over and see him, say this evening. There's a bright moon and you wouldn't be likely to take cold, it's so warm weather for this time of the year. We don't always have such weather the first of March.

"Seems rather sudden!" said Mrs. Newburn, blushingly, "but then I don't need any new clo'es, my checked silk dress is just as good as ever it was, and a great deal better'n half o' the brides have, and you're dressed up pretty fair. I don't know's they'd be any objection. Cheat them gossipin women out of a chance to talk and peek around, makin' up what they can't guess at. Well, of all this world! How true it is you don't know what a day'll bring forth! And to think you should bring it all clear to my mind about that wale! Ain't I glad I ain't got to display my ignorance to Mis' Jim Griffin!"

So that evening, without even telling Prudence of these surprising plans, leaving her to wonder at such dressing up for only an evening meeting, and why Mrs. Newburn should want the best white tablecloth brought out for supper, Elder Jackson and the woman he had chosen rode over across the pond and home again, just as the young moon and the evening star were setting behind the dusky pines in the west. The Elder was thinking how much would be saved by mending up the old clothes, long saved from years of preaching, and the new bride glowing with gratified pride that so much new furniture was to be added to her own, and secretly delighted that she could now turn off the hired man and save all that expense. Surely this was a day when the Fate, were indeed smiling upon these two, so suddenly united for life.—Ellen Rand Millet, Boston Transcript.

HANCOCK ST. HISTORY.

THE FIFTH INSTALLMENT OF PAPER BY EDWARD H. DEWSON.

THE TRAINING FIELD.

In imagination, we stood at Col. Quincy's gate in the year 1640, and looked toward the south. We will now stand at the head of Chestnut street and again imagine the time to be the year 1640. Looking toward the north, we will picture the scene and note the successive changes that the years bring.

All the land in sight not previously granted to individuals has been granted to the new town of 'Brantry' and the town, has begun to grant to settlers.

At our right hand a cart path is seen, obstructed by gates and bars. It is the "way" to Germantown, once Sea street, now Chestnut street. In 1808, it was laid out one and one-half rods wide, and called Sea street. To follow its route of the olden time, we must go down Chestnut street to Canal, thence follow the winding of Canal around the meadow past the historic "Brackett house," and the town farm to its junction with Coddington street.

Returning to our position at the head of the street, we see before us stretching away toward Col. Quincy's gate, traces of travel. It is the beginning of the "way" to Boston over Milton Hill, later to become Hancock and Adams streets. At our left hand we see the burying ground. In front about eight hundred and twenty-five feet distant we see the southern bound of twenty-eight acres of land, lately granted to John Dassitt, one of the eight persons who signed the covenant of The First Church in 1639. The few houses that form the nucleus of the settlement cluster about the brook behind us.

The inhabitants, are ordered to meet frequently to practise the use of weapons and military movements for protection from the Indians. They assemble in front toward the east.

The ground becomes known as the Training Field. In 1648 the traces of travel have developed into a highway sixty-six feet wide to Dorchester (now Milton) the west line resting upon the burial ground.

There is no record of further changes until 1688 when John Dassitt conveys to Moses Belcher, four acres of land bounded on the south by the Training Field. In due time a dwelling-house appears, supposed to be built by Belcher, exact date of erection unknown. We have already described it under the name by which it has been known during the present century, "The Burrell house."

It is probable that at about this time the house was built which during the past eighty years, has been known as the "Nightingale house." It stands near the corner of Temple and Washington streets. It is of the third type before mentioned. It is difficult to trace the title. At present we have learned only that Samuel Baxter was found living here in 1731. He inherited from his father John Baxter, who was born in 1638, died in 1719. John Baxter leased land in this vicinity in 1670. Our presumption that the house was built in the last half of the seventeenth century is based upon these facts. The west line of the estate stretches from the above corner, in a south-westerly direction, nearly to where we stand. It is bounded by the Training Field and the road to Germantown.

It is a triangle, the base resting upon the east line of Hancock street, which line is sixty-six feet from the burial ground. It extends from the Germantown road, where we are standing, about eight hundred feet northerly to the "Burrell estate," the side lines converge at a point about three hundred feet from the base line.

During thirty years Ensign Samuel Baxter encroaches upon the Training Field, and in 1731 when it is proposed to erect a meeting-house thereon, his fence is found extending westerly from his house toward the highway, but when about sixty feet from it, making a right angle and running south toward where we stand, taking about one-half an acre. The precinct committee are doubtful about his title but being ordered to place the meeting-house as near to Ensign Samuel Baxter's as the land will admit of, they place ten feet of the southern end close to the fence at the south-west angle, and bargain with him for one-fourth of an acre, the shape of a right angle triangle, giving exact measurements that enable us to locate it. But the committee failed to take and record a deed.

The changes here during sixty years that follow appear to be that Samuel Baxter, son of Ensign Samuel, encroaches upon the Training Field or Meeting House Green, as it was then called, and recovers most of the land that his father had first taken from the precinct, and afterward sold to it.

The meeting-house was completed in 1732. Pattee gives a full description of it. He states that the question was put in the committee whether at the raising they should purchase bread, cheese, sugar, rum "sider" and beer at the cost of the precinct, and it passed in the affirmative. In 1790, Lydia Baxter, widow of the second Samuel, sells to the precinct, one-half an acre and four rods, lying to the south of the meeting-house, a deed is taken and recorded and the parish is again in possession of the original training field.

June 7th of this year, Lydia Baxter sells to George Mears one-half an acre. He obtains permission from the town, to frame his house upon the Training Field, and it is in due time erected. As we stand at the corner of Chestnut street, it is the house at our right hand, belonging to the heirs of the late Doctor Charles S. French. In 1792 the town of Quincy is incorporated. In this year Lydia Baxter sells to Peter Hardwick, two and one-half acres of land, and he sells to the new town a piece of land for a pound. It is thirty-one feet square situated in the angle formed by the addition in the rear of the Baxter (Nightingale) house, which places it on the corner, later made by the building of Washington and Temple streets.

Three buildings of recent date, used for stores, stand next south of Doctor French's house, and next to them is the house built by Peter Hardwick one hundred years ago, precise date unknown. We will note the changes in this locality, as nearly in chronological order as possible. In 1795 a schoolhouse is built on the extreme northern point of the Training Field, so near to Seth Burrell's line, that disputes arise between him and the town.

Pattee p. 329, gives an interesting description of this house. It was twenty by twenty-eight feet, a plain two story building. A drawing of the front elevation may be seen on the town records. The upper story was used as a town hall, and in the winter a ciphering school was kept in the same room. The grammar school was kept in the room below. The first town meeting held in this hall was Dec. 8, 1796. The cost of the building was ninety pounds. The late Mrs. Mann and Mrs. Jillson now living, sister of Horace B. Spear attended school here. Their recollections assisted us in locating the building.

In 1797 the Baxter (Nightingale) house with barn and one-third of an acre of land is sold to Abel Hayden. In 1802 the town voted to adorn the green on which the First church stands with trees. In 1805 Henry Hardwick becomes the owner of two and one-half acres of land, the site of the present Adams block.

In 1806 as already stated, the partition of the Brackett (Burrell) estate was made. Not long after this, precise date unknown, a house is built by Samuel Nightingale on the site now occupied by Henry H. Faxon.

In 1810 The Hingham Turnpike, (now Washington street) was built, the Quincy end resting on the Training Field at the town pound. Travel over this road, crossed the Training Field, passing south of the schoolhouse, which stood in the direct line. In 1815 the schoolhouse was burned. In 1817 the cellar was filled up.

Joshua Torrey who inherited from his Aunt Joanna Burrell, had a house about this time that stood to the eastward of the present Association building. He and Nightingale had moved forward to the line that travel took from the turnpike across the Training Field thus encroaching upon it.

Between the Torrey house and the Burrell house, there was a wheelwright shop. East of the Nightingale house (now Faxon's) a blacksmith shop stood where Coddington street is, on the corner of Coddington street is a grain store. Next to it is the one story building owned by The Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Co. Beyond it is a building owned by the Trustees of the City Hospital. It was built by Gideon Thayer. It was occupied in the fifties by Mr. Hayden, whose wife kept a drug store there. It is now a hotel.

The Quincy Patriot.

QUINCY, SATURDAY, MAR. 21, 1896.

Y. M. C. A. Building.

The directors of the local Young Men's Christian Association are seriously considering the advisability of endeavoring to erect a building which will not only accommodate its present large membership, but also give it a building which will yield a good income from rentals, and be a credit to the city.

For some time they have realized, that in order to embrace the opportunities for a much larger work, the Association must have more room. The introduction of the industrial educational work two years ago was an experiment which has more than met the expectations of its most sanguine promoters. From the first, some of the classes have been over-crowded. The small hall, which was originally intended for meetings and receptions has been devoted entirely to this department. The small committee room and the parlor are used for classes. This department now includes the following studies: clay modeling, free hand drawing, monumental designing, German, vocal music, debating club and Bible classes.

The intention is to erect a handsome business block in the city and the plan which has been suggested is to make it, so far as possible, a granite building, one that will set off the Quincy granite to the best advantage. Such a building, located in a prominent place, would not only attract the attention of all visitors to the city, but would be advertised throughout the world, as are other Association buildings.

As in other cities, such a building would be erected by the generosity of the citizens. Malden is just about to dedicate such a building costing nearly $100,000. Last year Springfield, Fitchburg, Melrose, Amesbury and North Adams dedicated similar buildings.

Orangemen Install.

Officers of Bay View, L. O. L., were installed by District Officer T. Walter Good at Orangemen's hall, 110 Hancock street, Monday evening. Previous to the installation ceremony the Daughters of John Adams Ladies, L. O. L., were introduced and welcomed by the worthy master. The following are the officers for the ensuing year:

Worthy Master,—M. A. Campbell.
W. D. M.,—R. A. McQueen.
Sec.,—M. McLeod.
Treas.,—W. F. McCalder.
F. S.,—John McKenzie.
Chap.,—A. M. I. McLeod.
Con.,—W. McInnis.
A. C.,—Hector Gillis.
I. T.,—James Beaton.
O. T.—John McClay.
Foreman on Law,—I. McPherson.

At the conclusion of the installation ceremony, the members and ladies, some sixty couples, repaired to the banquet hall where a supper was in readiness by Caterer Nash.

Returning again to lodge room the Chairman of the Committee, Mr. McLeod, took charge of the meeting, and in his opening address expressed his regrets, that owing to engagements elsewhere some of the state and district officer were unable to be with them. He spoke of the objects of the order, and was followed by Worthy Master M. A. Campbell, Past Master T. Walter Good, Worthy Mistress Miss Annie Munro, and others.

A. O. H. Anniversary.

Hancock hall was filled to overflowing Tuesday evening on the occasion of the thirteenth annual entertainment under the auspices of Divisions 5, A. O. H., the entertainment being given by the Van Dono's Vaudevilles, headed by Eddie Van Dono, the comical clown juggler.

The programme consisted of an act full of startling and funny novelties including the original blind folded juggling by Eddie Von Dono, which perfectly captivated the house and called for spontaneous outbursts of applause; Dan Haley, negro comedian; William A. Short, baritone; Dick and Kittie Hanlon the child musical prodigies; Frank T. Bassick the musical Dutchman; John J. Daley tenor soloist; Messrs Donovan, Anderson and McConnell, tumblers; Master Joseph Murphy the boy xylophone soloist; Patrick Barry the Irish fenian woman; D. J. Ring, comic elocutionist; Con Duggan original parodist and William Wilson, piano soloist.

The entertainment closed with a sidesplitting afterpiece, entitled "The Siamese Twins" the cast being as follows:

Dr. Graham, — Mr. Ed. Donovan.
Agent for the twins, — J. W. Walsh.
Pat Malone, } The Twins, { R. J. Gray.
Jim Crow, } { John S. Ross

Cairn to Abigail Adams.

It is rumored that the erection of a monument to the memory of Abigail Adams by the Quincy Historical society is to be postponed for another year. This is a great disappointment to many in the society and it is said an effort is to be made by them to have the cairn erected this year on the seventeenth of June or the Fourth of July.

To many it seems fitting that the erection take place this year, as several of the Adams family are now in our midst. There is Miss Elizabeth C. Adams and Mr. Isaac Hull Adams, only living granddaughter and grandson of Abigail Adams.

Hon. C. F. Adams,2d, our present mayor may not be mayor next year and it would be pleasing to many to have the monument erected during his administration.

A meeting of the Quincy Historical society should be called and the matter fully discussed. There is yet three months before the seventeenth of June and much can be done in that time.

Brockton vs. Quincy.

The second meet in the whist and pool tournament between members of the Quincy club of Quincy and the Algonquin club of Brockton was held Mar. 13, at the rooms of the Quincy club in this city.

Some fifteen members of the Brockton club came down to see their teams carry off the honors, but in this respect they were doomed to disappointment for the Quincy boys came off victorious at both whist and pool, which was very gratifying to the large number of the members of the Quincy club who were present.

At the conclusion of the games refreshments were served and an hour or more passed in a social manner.

About forty of the Quincy club went to Brockton Tuesday night to witness the third meet in the whist and pool tournament between the Quincy and Brockton clubs. The Quincy club came off victorious in the pool contest by 14 points but lost at whist by one point.

The Quincy and Brockton clubs have now met on three occasions, and the grand totals show Brockton to lead at whist by 7 points, and Quincy at pool by 44 points.

Parish Meeting.

The annual Parish meeting of the Evangelical Congregational society was held Monday evening and these officers elected: Clerk, James Baxter (for his 37th year.) Treasurer and Collector, H. Walter Gray. Standing Committee,—Richard D. Chase, William H. Mitchell, E. W. Branch, Theophilus King, C. T. Sherman, T. H. Wason, H. Walter Gray, William S. Williams, Edward Southworth, W. T. Isaacs, Henry E. Crane.

The annual report of the clerk and treasurer was read and accepted. Some other matters were discussed but action was deferred until a future meeting.

The Citizens' Temperance Committee and the Temperance Committee of the Quincy Christian Endeavor Union, will hold a joint meeting Saturday evening, at the Y. M. C. A. rooms. All persons interested are invited. It is proposed to begin this year's campaign early.

Mr. and Mrs. George Spooner of Canal street entertained about twenty-five friends at whist Wednesday evening. First honors went to Mr. Spooner and Mrs. Cashman, and the consolation prizes to Mr. W. R. Drake and Mrs. Sprague. Ices and salads were served, and a very enjoyable evening passed.

The number 23 was struck on the First church bell at 7.35 Wednesday evening and thinking there must be a fire the crowd rushed to that box only to find that it had not been opened. Investigation showed that the First church bell was the only one to strike and how that happened is a mystery yet unsolved.

The family of Edwin Harris of Union street is extremely unfortunate. Sunday their son Russell was taken sick with scarlet fever and Tuesday Mr. and Mrs. Harris and the other two children were taken sick with the same disease. The son Russell died Tuesday. It is a sorry case as Mr. Harris has not been very successful of late.

Among the recent important real estate transfers is that of Peter B. Turner to Henry H. Faxon, of his estate on Faxon avenue, comprising buildings and 7700 square feet of land. Mr. Faxon has sold to the Quincy & Boston Street Railway company a lot in the rear of the car house including a portion of the Turner lot and comprising 4676 feet.

Harry Talbot was arrested Tuesday by Officer Furnald upon a warrant charging him with forging the name of John Fallon & Son to an order for $20 dated May 10, 1895 and payable May 17, 1895. It is alleged that Talbot gave this note to W. W. Jenness in payment of a bill. A hearing will be held Tuesday, March 24. He is out on $100 bail.

Over 600 entries have been made for the futurity stake to be trotted and paced at Readville next summer. The following are by John R. Patrick Donahoe, the veteran publisher and founder of the Boston Pilot was eighty four years old Tuesday. About fifty years ago he was a compositor in the QUINCY PATRIOT office and won the love and respect of his associates. Tuesday he remained at his home, 350 Shawmut avenue, and received many tokens of loving remembrance in the shape of gifts and beautiful flowers.

Again has Mrs. Sarah A. Burrell been called to mourn the loss of a dear one. Only a few weeks ago one of her grandsons, Mr. George A. Lovell, died from pneumonia. His mother, Mrs. Burrell's daughter, who has been very ill, died Thursday. She was a sister to Mrs. N. B. Furnald and Mrs. J. M. Glover of Quincy; and they have the sympathy of a host of friends, in their great sorrow. The funeral will be held on Sunday at 1 30 o'clock at North Weymouth.

Mrs. Marshall P. Nye, Coddington street, has been quite sick for several days.

The heavy rain Thursday carried off nearly all the snow and it is hoped there will be no more this year.

The public schools closed on Friday for the spring vacation of two weeks. The new term will open April 6.

Representatives Thompson and Newcomb were the guests of the Weymouth Game club Saturday evening.

The Charles C. Brackett estate on Hancock street was sold at auction on Thursday at the assessed value. The first bid Auctioneer Crane received was $2,500, and with one bound it jumped to $3,000. It then went by bids of $100 and $50 to $3,600 at which price it was knocked off to Mr. Horace B. Spear. The estate is on the main street of the city, contains over 11,000 feet of land, and includes an eight-room dwelling and stable.

A quiet wedding took place Monday, March 9, the contracting parties being Miss Eva Miller and Mr. James Frazer both of Glencoe place. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. R. Breed. The happy couple are spending their honeymoon at Weltaboro and Philadelphia, Pa., the bride's old home. They will return by the way of New York. May their life be one of happiness is the sincere wish of their many friends and acquaintances.

The encroachment now claimed by the city on the part of Albert Keating is only a few inches on Canal street, and now that an engineer has defined the line Mr. Keating sees his error. This however, will not affect his improvements unless the city goes further. As for slight encroachments like this on the street it is possible to find them on nearly every street of the city.

ATLANTIC.

The attendance at Memorial Congregational church, Atlantic, last Sunday was very large. In the evening the pastor gave his fourth, of a series of sermons on the Lord's Prayer, taking as his text "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Mrs. W. F. Cummings sang a solo at the evening service.

Mrs. Waterhouse of Newbury avenue is reported as very sick with pneumonia.

Miss Mamie F. Delano of Portland, Maine, is spending the week in Atlantic as the guest of Mrs. George W. Hill.

Many cats and dogs in Atlantic have been reported as either poisoned or missing, including a valuable dog the property of Mr. John T. Hunt of Squantum street, which was poisoned but by prompt work and medicine Mr. Hunt hopes to save his dog. The same trouble has been experienced in Wollaston of late, so it looks very much as if some one in our vicinity had an intense interest in that kind of work. If the parties who are doing that in Atlantic are found out, they may be assured of a good warm reception, and several people are now trying to ferret out the rascals.

A leap year party which without a doubt will be the leading society event of the season is to be given by the ladies in Music Hall, Atlantic, on Friday evening, the 27th inst. It is to be strictly private, and of a very refined character. The ladies who have it in charge intend to leave no stone unturned in the way of arrangements.

Ladies of a jealous nature will have to keep their eyes on their husbands, as they are being quickly captured by single ladies and other men's wives.

Arrangements have been completed by the many friends of ex-Councilman Wm. H. Owen for the grand testimonial concert to be tendered him at Music hall one night the coming week. Many people from Boston will attend and the programme as arranged will be very interesting and refined.

Mrs. B. E. Boyden entertained a number of her lady friends at her pretty home on Botolph street, last Tuesday afternoon. Whist was enjoyed and Mrs. Safford, Mrs. Nichols and Mrs. Whitaker were the fortunate ones and carried away the souvenirs. A dainty collation of ices and cake was served by the hostess.

Nellie Sullivan of Atlantic avenue is sick with diphtheria.

Spring mud up to the ankles in many places is plenty on the sidewalks in Atlantic.

Frank Johnson of Appleton street was detained from his business several days early this week by a severe cold.

WEST QUINCY.

James Hayes, one of the conductors on the West Quincy line of electrics, is at home sick with the mumps.

Sherman Gould, who has been connected with the store of E. H. Doble & Co. for a number of years, has severed his connection with that firm to enter another business.

An invitation has been extended to the Committee on Streets to take a ride over the Quarry railroad this afternoon.

The Finns of West Quincy have their club as well as other nationalities, by what name they call themselves is not known nor does it matter, suffice to say that they have a club room in the basement of Forester's hall. They met there Thursday night as usual, and along about 9 o'clock a discussion was entered into which resulted in a free fight which was only quelled when Officer Canavan put in his appearance and arrested the three leaders in the fracas. They gave their names as Manuel Johnson, Andrew Erickson and Mat Lagie, whom he took to the police station and locked up. They were arraigned in court this morning.

The South Quincy Literary Club.

At the meeting of this club on Friday evening, Mar. 13, Mr. L. J. Pastor, was the lecturer and for forty minutes interested the members present on the subject "The new and the old."

Before taking up the subject announced, Mr. Pastor read an essay on "Truth," in which he set in shining contrast the nobility and advantages of truth as against falsehood.

The essay proved a suitable preface to the subject to be discussed, "The new and the old," in as much as investigation had exploded many false beliefs and customs and made possible the changes which make the present as compared with the past so distinctly different.

The lecturer compared "the new and the old" in agriculture, medicines, chemistry, and in other things of equal importance, proving that no belief, custom, system or institution can be too sacred for investigation and eradication; for upon truth alone has been reared a structure of social and moral excellence incomparably more beautiful and munificent than anything of the past.

SOUTH QUINCY.

The coupon plan worked admirably at the Adams school last week, in securing funds for a new flag. When the school was dismissed at noon each pupil was presented with one and only one, five cent coupon, which he was requested to sell. Thus all did a little, and the idea was so popular, that when the pupils returned to school two hours later, they brought in $14.75. Principal Nowland and his assistants were greatly surprised at the success of the plan, and a new flag in which a great many will have a financial interest will soon float over the Adams school building.

L. J. Pastor the druggist has just put in a handsome new soda fountain.

Rev. M. W. Plummer, evangelist still continues his bible readings at Calvary Baptist church, Franklin street. Each afternoon at 3 o'clock will be particularly to Christians, but all are welcome.

Mr. James Lent of East Boston spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. William Coppin of Penn's Hill.

Mr. Walter J. Davis a brother of Mrs. Lester M. Pratt, died at the latter's residence Wednesday after a lingering illness of consumption, aged 37 years. Mr. Davis formerly resided in Quincy but of late years has resided in Roxbury. He came to Quincy again last December and has since resided with his sister, Mrs. Pratt. He leaves a widow and one child.

George Gavin of South Quincy has accepted a position on the night desk of the Boston Globe.

Rev. Morton W. Plummer, Evangelist, gave a bible reading at the Calvary Baptist church Monday, at 3 P. M. It was especially helpful to Christian's desirious of knowing more of the deep truths of God's word. In the evening he preached to quite a gathering notwithstanding the storm. At the close of the meeting one soul deeply convicted of sin, accepted Jesus as the only one to take away sin and went away rejoicing in the "New Joy of Salvation." All are welcome to these meetings as they continue afternoon and evening.

The car of the Braintree, Randolph and Holbrook line, due in Quincy at 9 o'clock, ran into a drove of cattle on Independence avenue, near the residence of John Q. A. Field, Wednesday night, killing two of the cows and injuring several others. The car did not leave the rails however and the passengers were uninjured, except for a shaking up. Another car on the same line also ran into a swill team near the same place but no damage was done. The spot where both accidents occurred are very dark.

Counciman Russell has the sympathy of his many friends in the loss of his wife, Jeanie B., who died Friday morning at his residence on Endicott street of consumption.

Thursday afternoon Rev. E. N. Hardy conducted funeral services on Pearl street under circumstances of pecular sadness. Five weeks ago Mr. Clifford an athlete in strength suddenly passed away leaving a wife and two small children. The wife a victim of typhoid fever follows him this week. A cheerful home is broken up, and two beautiful children are orphans.

DOWNS AND PARK.

The Squantum yacht club held another of its social dances, Thursday night at Knights of Honor hall, Wollaston, which was quite largely attended, despite the stormy weather and bad walking. The jolly yachtsmen were out in full force, and with them on this voyage of pleasure were many of their friends and ladies. That a good time was enjoyed goes without saying, for anything that the Squantum boys manage could not be otherwise

Mr. Benjamin Sargent had charge of the floor and was assisted by Mr. Hamilton Flood and Mr. C. D. Sargent, the committee of arrangements, Dr. F. A. Locke, Mr. Benjamin Sargent and Mr. Hamilton Flood, while the reception committee consisted of Commodore Burkhardt, Vice Commodore Flood, Secretary Campbell and Measurer Crocker.

Music was furnished by the Astrella orchestra.

Inadequate Transit Facilities.

MESSRS. EDITORS—Please allow me a few lines in which to call attention to the inadequate transit facilities which the street railway company furnishes to the residents on the company's loop at Norfolk Downs. A car leaves Neponset for Quincy by way of the loop at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and no car thereafter leaves Neponset for that route till 10.20 at night. This arrangement, as anybody can see, is a very inconvenient one for people who reside on the loop. From 5 to 7 o'clock P. M. is the time when there is the most need of cars running over the route mentioned, and yet at that time no cars whatever are run there. Whoever got up this arrangement must have had a spite against the people who reside on the loop, and there is urgent need of an arrangement which will better subserve the convenience of such residents. My business is in Boston, and if I could, should come home every night on the electric cars, but cannot do so, for, in order to be sure to reach Neponset in season to take the aforesaid 5 o'clock car, I should be obliged to leave Boston before 4 o'clock. I hope that this matter will be agitated till the present abominable arrangement gives place to something more in accordance with public needs and necessities.

WOLLASTON.

Mr. I. Howland Jones of Wollaston, who has been in Europe the past two years, is at home.

Miss Howard of Wollaston is visiting friends in New York. She will be absent about three weeks.

Team C defeated team D of the Wollaston Bowling Club 2,339 to 2,162, on the Duck's Nest alleys, Tuesday evening. Lyman was high bowler on singles and totals,—202 and 498.

The PATRIOT understands upon excellent authority that Postmaster Wilde will not be removed nor asked to resign. He will continue to be postmaster at Wollaston, and when he recovers, it is understood that he will be re-appointed. The government is very favorably impressed with Mr. Wilde and has expressed a desire to do what is right. His re-appointment was practically decided upon, but on account of his sickness will be held in abeyance for a few weeks.

Harry E. Gifford of Wollaston is to have charge of the association headquarters at Onset this season.

Mr. Wendell G. Corthell of Wollaston, has been appointed administrator of the estate of the late James L. Corthell of Whitman.

Mr. Isaac G. Wilbur of Wollaston is recovering from a severe attack of sickness.

Mr. C. E. Finch, master of the Wollaston school, made a very interesting address before the Wollaston Baptist Sunday School on Sunday on the Bible.

The February candle pin prizes at the Duck's Nest alleys were won by Fratus, first, 100 trip ticket, score 274; second, Battison, bowling ticket, 256; third, Briggs, bowling ticket, 236. The January single string regulation pin prize of a box of cigars was won by Lyman, 183.

Dr. George L. Richards of Wollaston is soon to become a resident of Fall River. Dr. Richards has had quite an extensive practice in that city for some time.

Team B of the Wollaston Candle Pin club defeated Team C at the Duck's Nest alleys on Wednesday evening 1190 to 1144.

Mr. M. R Sparrow of Wollaston is suffering from a severe cold.

Wollaston Lodge, 237, I. O. G. T., met in Odd Fellows hall, Wollaston, Tuesday evening with an attendance of 40. Three candidates were initiated. The entertainment for the "good of the order" consisted of remarks by C. T. A. G McKinlay, reading by Miss Cleverly of Merry Mount lodge, remarks by Bro. Gillispie, L. D., song with encore by Bro. Archie Merrill, remarks by Bro. S. Kay, reading by Sister Jordan, remarks by Bro. Glass, song and encore by Bro. Lawrence. All enjoyed a good time until 10 30 when the meeting adjourned until next Tuesday.

The Sharers' Ten, King's Daughters, Wollaston will give an excellent entertainment followed by a reception at the Wollaston Baptist church on Tuesday evening next. Their programme appears in another column.

President Litchfield of the Massachusetts Benefit Life Association has issued a public notice explaining the action of the association in requiring somewhat larger payments, and expressing a readiness to meet policy holders and further explain.

A pleasant sociable was held on Wednesday evening March 18, by the Epworth League at the Wollaston Methodist Episcopal church. The entertainment consisted of music, games and a spelling match. Ice cream and cake were served.

The Ladies' society of the Wollaston Methodist church will hold a sale and entertainment on Wednesday evening next at the home of Mrs. W. C. Sanders, the president of the society on Beale street at 7 o'clock. Aprons and other fancy articles will be on sale, also home made confectionery, ice cream and cake. No charge for admission.

Rev. Dr. J. H. Mansfield, presiding elder of the Boston South District of the Methodist Episcopal church, made his fourth quarterly visit of the present conference year, to the Wollaston church on Tuesday evening, when the quarterly conference met in the vestry of the church. The following named persons were elected trustees for the ensuing year: A. M. Bjorkman, W. R Campbell, F. Charlton, A. J. Colgan, J. N. Emerson, J. L. Nesbitt, W. F. Nichols, W. C. Sanders, Israel Waterhouse. The stewards elected were as follows: F. Charlton, J. N. Emerson, Mrs. J. N. Emerson, F. F. Grant, Miss A. M. Merrill, J. L. Nesbitt, W. I. Powell, J. M. Ranson, W. C. Sanders, Mrs. W. C. Sanders, Mrs. R. C. Sprague, D. A. Stiles, W. J. Thompson.

At the vesper service at 4 P. M., on Sunday, at the Unitarian church, the quartette will sing the following selections:

"Come unto me," — Lansing
"The Shadows of the Evening Hour," — Williams
Solo, by Miss Hayes.
"There is a green hill far away," — Gounod
"The mellow eve is gliding," — Holden

One of the best sociables which has ever been given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid society of the Wollaston Unitarian church was the one which was held on Thursday evening. Notwithstanding the severe storm there was a large attendance of the parishoners. The vestry was very tastefully decorated with potted plants and cut flowers, and illuminated with piano and banquet lamps.

The programme, which was both musical and literary was of surpassing merit. It consisted of piano duets by Miss Wellington and Miss Hunter; readings by Miss Hudson; piano solos by Miss Thayer and Master Mitchell; cornet solos by Miss Damon; and a banjo duet by Mr. William E. Howard and Mr. James C. Hall, Jr.

After the entertainment ice cream, cake, and coffee were served. The coffee was poured by Miss Wellington and Miss Fairbanks.

The committee of arrangements consisted of Mrs. Walter J. Wellington, Mrs. Charles M. Bryant, Mrs. Eugene H. Sprague, Mrs. Edward L. Mitchell, and Mrs. Joseph N. Smith.

—First class work and perfect satisfaction is Frank A. Locke the piano tuner's motto—see ad., cut of piano. tf

Anti-Tobacco Rally.

The members of the Christian Endeavor Temperance Committee of the Evangelical Congregational church, believe that the use of tobacco and other narcotics is one of the greatest curses of the present time, and, in order to set people thinking about this, they have arranged to hold, in the auditorium of the church, on Sunday evening an "Anti-Tobacco Rally." In this effort, the Christian Endeavor Society of the church will be supported by the Y. M. C. A., the Quincy C. E. Union, and the W. C. T. U. workers of the city. Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, who has charge of the department of narcotics of the W. C. T. U. is to be the speaker of the evening. Miss Smith, a talented soloist and a pupil of Sig. Augusto Rotoli of the N. E. Conservatory of Music, will lend an additional attraction to the service by her singing. The proceeds of the regular evening offering of the church, will on this occasion, be devoted to advancing temperance work in Quincy. The public is cordially invited.

QUINCY POINT.

Rev. George W. Coon of Weston, a former pastor of the Point church, will fill the pulpit on Sunday. Morning service at 11 o'clock.

Rev. George Benedict of Haverhill who preached at the Washington Street Congregational church last Sunday was greeted by large congregations both morning and evening.

The fair at the vestry of the Washington Street Congregational church, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society, closed most successfully last Friday night. An excellent entertainment occupied a portion of the evening, the following named taking part:

Male Quartette,—Mr. G. A. Sidelinger, first tenor; Mr. M. E. Wight, second tenor; Mr. Albert L. Hayden, first bass; Mr. Charles Tower, second bass.

Mixed Quartette,—Mrs. R. H. Newcomb, soprano; Mrs. L. M. Hersey, contralto; Mr. M. E. Wight, tenor; Mr. Charles Tower, bass.

Mr. Herbert A. Hayden, accompanist.

Miss Lucy Brown, reader.

Duet,—Miss Bessie Brown and Master Harold Newcomb.

Flag Drill,—Miss Grace Lapham, Miss Bessie Brown, Miss Beatrice Adams, Miss Victoria Carter, Miss Annie Carter, Miss Alice Caldwell.

The entertainment given wholly by Point residents compared favorably with those of the preceding evenings.

The fair receipts were larger than the Ladies' Aid Society expected and were increased by a most acceptable check from Mr. H. H. Faxon and a gift from Mr. Henry D. Federhen.

The fair committee were as follows.

All these ladies did much to make the fair successful:

Door keeper—Mrs. F. S. Barry.

Apron table, Mrs. T. H. Newcomb and Mrs. Samuel P. Hayden.

Fancy tables, Mrs. M. E. Wight, Mrs. C. W. Newcomb and Mrs. G. P. Eaton.

Flower table, Mrs. T. B. Pollard and Miss M. L. Thomas.

Pop Corn table, Miss Annie Glidden and Miss Mamie Cain.

Pound table, Miss Bessie Carter.

Candy table, Miss Bertha Hayden.

Cake table, Mrs. T. B. Thomas and Mrs. Wm. Chubbuck.

Fishing pond, Miss M. Gertrude Sampson.

Post office, Miss Lillian Glidden.

Art Gallery, Miss Bertha Hayden, Miss Mildred Sampson.

Supper committee, Mrs. J. A. Lapham, (chairman), Mrs. E. S. Holmes Mrs. Daniel Higgin, Mrs. S. P. Hayden, Mrs. T. H. Newcomb, Mrs. M. E. Wight, Mrs. G. P. Eaton, Mrs. C. W. Newcomb, Miss Parker, Mrs. Fred Drake.

Ice Cream, Mrs. H. M. Federhen, Mrs. T. B. Thomas.

Entertainment Committee, Mrs. G. P. Eaton, Mrs. C. W. Newcomb, Miss Bessie Carter, Miss Bertha Hayden, Mrs. F. S. Barry.

On Thursday evening those who tended table were dressed in "ye olden thyme" style and looked charming in their antique costumes.

They do say that Mrs. J. A. L. is queen of the culinary department.

The church debt must decrease when the ladies undertake to assist in paying it.

MILTON.

Milton people want a street railway, and want it bad, a fact that is very evident by a monster petition containing 475 names which has been presented to the Quincy & Boston street railway, asking them to extend their line from the present terminus in East Milton to Mattapan, there to connect with the Norfolk & Suburban street railway for Dedham.

The Sunday School of the Baptist church went on a sleigh ride Tuesday afternoon.

George Clements driver of Hose 2, who was injured some two weeks ago by being thrown from his horse, has reported for duty once more.

The Granite club are arranging for a social and entertainment at Rugby hall, March 31.

Joseph Pearce is on the sick list.

A petition with 540 names is to be presented to the Quincy & Boston street railway asking them to extend its line to Mattapan.

The house of John Graham at East Milton was damaged $100 by fire at 5 40 Wednesday. The family were aroused by a crackling in the attic and upon investigation found a lively blaze in progress. The department responded promptly and earned the thanks of Mr. Graham for their prompt response and efficient work. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

The selectmen have appointed John H. Tucker as driver of the hurry-up wagon and Lucius Damon as night patrolman.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

HOUGHS NECK.

It was pretty windy down at Houghs Neck last week. Mr. Stanley Mears says that one day he was carrying a pail of water from his house to the barn and the wind blew so hard that it blew the water all out of the pail.

The snow was so deep on Sea street, near the Adams barn the first of the week, that it was on a level with the tops of carriages.

The Q. & B. tracks on the Houghs Neck line between Mosquito bridge and the Willows are buried beneath several inches of sand.

The old Wollaston depot which was on its way to Houghs Neck to be used as a Sandwich depot is now flatter than a pancake, a recent wind storm having blown it over and made kindling wood of it.

A small sloop yacht was noticed sailing about off Houghs Neck on Sunday. Early bird.

Shawmut Spring Water.

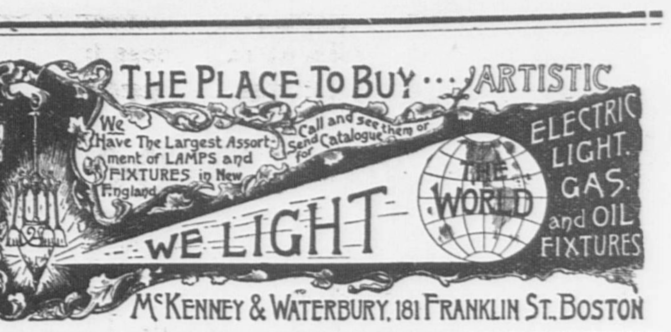

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

The Shawmut Spring Water stands second to none as a pure drinking water. Hundreds of families are using it every day. It is an important factor in maintaining health, building up and restoring the organs of digestion to healthy action. Cures Rheumatic, Kidney and Bladder troubles, when drugs have proved useless.

Send your order for a 5-gallon sample package. If you don't like it, it costs you nothing. Drink it and you will be satisfied of its purity.

Liquor Licenses for State.

The Committee on Liquor Laws of the Legislature has reported Tuesday a bill calling for the payment into the state treasury of all liquor license fees of the commonwealth. Although the bill, as reported, is but a step, they consider it a long step in the right direction, and are hoping that it may become a law.

One clause of the bill provides that the license money shall be paid into the state treasury, and another that the state tax now levied on all cities and towns be abolished.

Mr. Faxon advocated this bill because he believes that if such a law is enacted it will benefit temperance local option in obtaining the votes of those who, although favoring temperance, are frequently led into voting for license by the consideration of the effect the license fees will have on the revenues of the city or town, as the case may be.

He claims that if the state tax is abated and the license fees paid into the treasury matters will be very nearly equalized; for, although he does not hope to get Boston and some of the other large places on the no-license idea, he does think it will effect the situation in some of the smaller places. He thinks such a law would be a brace to some of the weak spinal columns of voters who believe in no-license, but still continue to vote against it out of consideration for the license fees.

Norfolk county would gain over $100,000, and Quincy's tax rate would be reduced $1 per $1,000.

Free College Education.

The weekly meeting of the Quincy High School debating society was held on Wednesday. President Wilkins opened the meeting, and Miss Joss, '97, presented her report as secretary.

Under unfinished business the entertainment of last week was concluded: Miss Johnson, '97, gave the following recitation: "The Pied Piper of Harlem," in an extremely pleasing manner.

The election of officers followed: These nominations were made, those marked with an asterisk being elected.

President,—*Mr. Wilde, '96.
Vice President,—*Miss Briggs, '96.
Secretary,—*Mr. Nichols, '97; Miss Cummings, '96.
Treasurer,—*Miss Emery, '96,

The debate followed: "Resolve, That the State Ought to Furnish Free a College Education to All Who Desire It."

The affirmative was taken by Miss Garrity, Miss Gavin, Miss Annie Healy and Miss Catherine E. Healy. The negative by Miss Leake, Miss Melzard and Miss Peterson.

159th Anniversary.

The Charitable Irish Society banquet in Boston Tuesday was a complete success. The large dining hall of the Parker house, where the meeting took place, was tastily decorated with the national colors, as well as Ireland's emerald hue, and the dates, 1737—1896, denoted the 159 years which have elapsed since the society was formed.

There were about 100 present, the newly elected president, Hon. John F. Cronan, presiding. and Judge Timothy F. McDonough was toastmaster.

At the head table were Hon. Joseph H. O'Neil, Hon. Edward J. Flynn, Rev. Stopford Brooke, Col. W. M. Doherty, Rev. Mortimer E. Twomey, John W. McAnarney, Esq ; A. D. Cairns, representing the British charitable society; Louis M. Ross of the Scots charitable society, E. M. Poitevin of the St. Jean Baptiste society and Hon. Philip J. Doherty.

Among the many eloquent and patriotic addresses, one was by our distinguished townsman, John W. McAnarney, Esq., who responded to the toast of "Ireland," and prayed for the day when she may be freed from present wrongs. It appeared in full in Thursday's LEDGER.

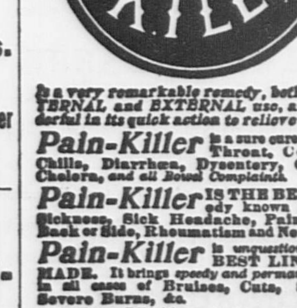

Patriotic Societies Meet.

Hotel Vendome, Boston, was besieged Tuesday afternoon by a thousand or more patriotic descendants of the soldiers of the Revolutionary War, who gathered to celebrate the 120th anniversary of the evacuation of Boston by the British troops.

The following attended from Quincy: Mr. and Mrs. N. V. Titus, Capt. and Mrs. B. R. Redman, Judge and Mrs. E. G. Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Prescott, Mrs. Walter T. Babcock, Mrs. C. Theodore Hardwick, Mrs. W. C. Couchier, Mrs. Wm. F. Cummings, Mrs. Mary E. Chamberlin, Mrs. A. G. Durgin, Mrs. Morrison, Mrs. Henry M. Faxon, Mrs A. H. Gilson, Mrs. Mary F. Lawton, Mrs. W. E. Simmons, Mrs. E. Fred Carr, Mrs. Thomas H. Fenno, Miss Prescott, Miss Annie L. Prescott, Miss Alice K. Prescott, Miss Emily C. Wild, Miss Mabel E. Adams, Miss Ellen M. Hersey, Miss I. F. P. Emery, Miss Mary E. Nightingale, Miss Belle Nightingale, Miss Malvina Phillips, Miss Hattie A. Pierce, the Misses Simmons, Miss Mary Perkins, Mr. Horace E. Spear, Miss Lottie Spear, Miss Frances Torrey.

QUINCY is an honorable name and one which Boston has often honored; thrice by electing a gentlemen of that distinguished name to the Mayoralty, and in other ways, notable the naming of the large market, Quincy Market. But Quincy depot, in honor of Mayor Quincy, as suggested by the Herald as the name for the proposed southern union station, will not be seriously considered, however appropriate. It would lead to no end of confusion with our own municipality. Two depots of the same name on one railroad, within eight miles of each other, is out of the question. The most appropriate name yet suggested is "Old Colony Depot," and we hope to see it adopted.

Letter from the State House.

BOSTON, March 18, 1896.

Norfolk county promises to cut considerable of a figure in the state house this session. The hearing upon the estimates for the county for 1896 has closed this forenoon. Ex-Representative Grover of Canton has been counsel for the County Commissioners and Treasurer Smith, Ex-Commissioners Grover and Field, Judge Asa French and other leading Norfolk county men have been at the hearing. The only member of the commissioners present was the one of shortest service who said that he was not familiar with the proceedings of the office. The other two have not been here at all, and the question of course, is why not. Some of the committee seem to think that there have been doings which may have been irregular in morals as well as in form, while others say that there has been nothing wrong done, but that there has been a transferring of money from one purpose to another which has been very reprehensible. Money appropriated for roads and bridges, for instance, they say, has been used for that purpose, but has been used for the court house, which was grossly improper, and ought not to be permitted.

The farmers have carried one point in their contest against the cattle commission, for the committee on agriculture has reported a bill to extend for one year, or to June 1, 1897, the prohibition of the use of tuberculin as a diagnostic agent upon cattle in this state without the consent of the owners. This leaves it possible to use it upon all cattle which are brought from outside the state and upon such as may be tested by consent of the owners and such as are put into quarantine. The cattle commissioners are exposed this year to the popular fury in two distinct ways. Many farmers of the state object to them on account of their attitude for the complusory use of tuberculin, while the prevalence of several cases of hydrophobia in the eastern part of the state has led to the issue of an order by the commissioners for the muzzling of all dogs within certain boundaries. This latter step has excited the wrath of many people who care more for their dogs than they do for some other people's lives and the staid Transcript has had wrathful communications aimed at the "obscure state commission" which has dared to interfere for the protection of the public. The fact that these wrathful owners have never before been brought into contact with the cattle commission may be to them sufficient reason for its seeming obscure to them, but it only shows that the world is bigger than they thought and the fact is that for several years the cattle commission has been anything but obscure. But the state makes progress by all this excitment, the narrow and selfish people get their eyes opened, if they are wise. If they are otherwise and stand in the way of progress the wheels of fate roll over them and crush them. In any event they cease to obstruct and the state goes on.

The state commission to investigate the use of voting machines has reported that the invention is still in its infancy and that it would not be wise to provide for the use of many such machines at present. There is evidently a belief that voting by machinery is sure to come before long and that the principals of the Australian ballot act can be attained with far less of objection than can be properly taken to that, especially to the long time which is required for the counting of the ballots. It will not be many years before the count will be recorded automatically and all that the clerks will have to do will be to copy off the figures. Then they can be telegraphed promptly on election night and all the returns ought to be received before seven o'clock in the evening, instead of not till nearly morning in some cases and sometimes not at all.

The opposition to a statue of Gen. Butler is beginning to find its voice more distinctly and there is yet a sentiment in the state which strongly condemns the movement and which will be likely to defeat the appropriation. There is less fear about speaking out than there was and the newspapers are finding that there is popular support for them if they protest against any such honor being paid.

Legislative politics are beginning to take shape. It is understood that Speaker Meyer will not return for another term and the possibilities of his successor are being canvassed. Two names are mentioned more than any others, Messrs. Bates of Boston and Lowell of Boston. Speaker Meyer was in Washington on Monday and was not able to be home in time to preside Tuesday. He went to present to a committee of Congress the resolutions of the Massachusetts legislature in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of Boston harbor. He had Mr. Lowell preside on Monday and Mr. Bates on Tuesday. Each is a good presiding officer, but the most commendation is due to Mr. Bates. He has a specially fine voice for the chair.

One of the sharpest liquor contests of the session promises to be over the bill to require all liquor license fees to be turned into the state treasury. The purpose of the friends of the bill, which was petitioned for by Henry H. Faxon, Rev. Alfred Noon, the secretrry of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society and others, is to remove the temptation to vote for license which exists from the fact that the fees go into the city or town treasury and thus reduce the taxes of the municipality. If there were nothing to be gained by voting for license, the presumption is, then many more towns than now would vote no-license, and perhaps some cities also. Hence there would be so much gain for the temperance cause. The present house has the reputation of being pretty strong on the temperance question. There were only three dissenters from the report of the committee—Senator Corbett and Representatives Donovan and Donahue. Consequently there is a good chance that the bill will pass the house at least, and perhaps the senate. Henry H. Faxon is in high feather over the attitude of the committee and feels hopeful for the future of the bill. But the committee has reported against a good many other plans for changing the present license law, presented by both sides.

New things are constantly coming up for legislative interference and issues are brought to the state house which would not have been dreamed of a few years ago. For instance, the question of compelling lights to be used on bicycles. A few years ago the average reader would not have understood the word, but now a plan to compel the use of lights nearly fills the old hall of the house with remonstrants. There was a great deal of interest, too, at the hearing. It was argued on the part of the objectors that bicycles are vehicles and that it is no more right to compel bicycles to carry lights than it would for all other vehicles. Furthermore, nine-tenths of the bicycles are used in cities where the streets are lighted and where there is no occasion for using them. But the friends of lights told of the dangers of being run down by these silent horses and whatever be the action of the legislature, the two sides may rest assured that the case has been well presented both for and against.

Extensions of the weekly payment law are pending in the house, having been reported unanimously by the labor committee. One of them provides that the law shall apply to all persons and partnerships engaged in manufacturing who employ more than 25 hands each, and the other says that no persons or corporations which are subject to the weekly payments law shall evade it by means of a private contract with their employes or by any other means. It is probable that there will be opposition to the bill, for some employers will not like to have the privilege of making contracts taken from them. There has been strenuous objection to this law ever since it was enacted and it was evaded at first materially. RULE.

Republican Caucuses.

Republican caucuses to elect delegates to the state and congressional conventions were held in all wards of the city Wednesday evening, and in most cases were largely attended. There seemed to be no general feeling in regard to the delegates to the state convention the contest being on those for the congressional convention. In this respect it was the fight of the last municipal caucuses renewed, and like in those the Hammond adherents came off victorious in Wards One, Two, Three and Four.

In these wards the Hammond men predominated and it was seen early that those who favored Mr. Merrill would be defeated, for that was what the fight was over.

It will be remembered that Mr. Merrill was not a Hammond man at the last municipal election and that very few, if any, of the Hammond men were among those who received invitations to be present at the first meeting called to organize a Republican club, and the caucuses Wednesday evening showed conclusively that they had not forgotten these facts.

There were rumors Wednesday that those opposed to Mr. Merrill were favorable to McKinley and this rumor was used as a handle to elect Merrill delegates at the caucuses, but it did not work.

Several of the anti-Merrill delegates elected Wednesday evening, when asked as to who they favored, were unanimous in saying that they were for Reed, and the only fight they had was to defeat Mr. Merrill.

In some of the wards attempts were made to pledge the delegates for Reed but in this they were unsuccessful, except in Wards Five and Six, the two wards which bolted the regular Republican nomination last December.

To sum the matter up, Mr. Merrill only secured seven out of the twenty-one delegates elected, four from Ward Five and three from Ward Six, while Wards One, Two, Three and Four having fourteen delegates are for anyone but Mr. Merrill.

The doings in the several wards are reported below:

Ward One.

The polls in Ward One were opened from 4 to 9 P. M. Isaac M. Holt was chairman and Edgar G. Cleaves secretary. The vote resulted as follows, the anti Merrill delegations being elected:

The total number of votes cast was 174 and the result in detail was as follows, those marked with an asterisk being elected:

STATE DELEGATES.

*Charles A. Howland,	116
*John W. Nash,	105
*Isaac M. Holt,	99
*George W. Prescott,	94
Theophilus King, Jr.,	52
John O. Hall,	51
Western W. Osborne,	45
James L. Edwards,	45

CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATES.

*John W. Hall,	114
*Archibald F. McLeod,	106
*Albert G. Dolliver,	99
*Andrew Olsen,	97
Russell A. Sears,	53
Joseph C. Morse,	50
Wilson Marsh,	55
E. W. Henry Bass,	53

Ward Two.

The Quincy Point caucus was well attended, the Hammond men being out in force and having everything their own way, notwithstanding the feeble efforts of the Merrill supporters to carry the ward.

Representative T. H. Newcomb called the caucus to order, read the call and was elected chairman, with John S. Gay as secretary.

John Shaw moved that candidates be nominated from the floor and the marking list used; voted.

A motion was made that as candidates were nominated from the floor, they state whether they favored Reed or not.

This motion was lost but the vote was doubted and upon a show of hands the vote was: No, 23; Yes, 21.

Nominations were then made from the floor and marking commenced, the result being as follows, those marked with an asterisk being elected:

STATE CONVENTION.

*Wilmot L. Spooner,	38
*Charles F. Colby,	36
*Maurice I. Gatcomb,	36
Edwin W. Newcomb,	17
George Crane,	14
John Shaw,	10
James P. Clare,	2

CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.

*John S. Gay,	48
*Frank E. Burrell,	45
*Benjamin Johnson, Jr.,	44
John R. Graham,	14
Edwin W. Newcomb,	12
John Shaw,	1

Ward Three.

In this ward Frederick L. Jones was chairman and H. L. Kincaide secretary.

Nominations were made from the floor and the voting list used, the result being the election of the following delegates who were unpledged although the Congressional delegates are said to be anti-Merrill.

State,—John P. Bigelow, James Thompson, Peter W. Dakers and Price Morris.

Congressional,—W. F. McCalder, William S. Williams, Andrew Stewart and Joseph P. Prout.

Ward Four.

In Ward Four the caucus was of short duration and while the delegates elected are unpledged it is a well known fact that they are opposed to Mr. Merrill although favoring Reed.

Tobias Burke was chairman and Nathan Ames secretary.

The delegates were nominated from the floor and were elected as follows:

State,—Jonas Shackley, Nathan Ames and Edward J. Sandberg.

Congressional,—Charles L. Hammond, Thomas F. Burke and Andrew Erickson.

Ward Five.

The Wollaston caucus was a tame affair, just such a one as a person would naturally expect to attend in a strong Democratic ward. There were but 17 voters present, 16 of them being Reed men and the 17th a McKinley man. The McKinley man (Capt. Benj King) had to vote for a solid Reed delegation or else not vote at all. He voted.

For the state delegation of four there was a tie between Mr. W. J. Wellington and Mr. Walter S. Pinkham. As one of the three who were elected was absent it was impossible to fill the vacancy, it being provided that in case of a tie vote the candidates who were elected should break the tie and fill the vacancy. As Mr. Wellington wished to withdraw in favor of Mr. Pinkham it is safe to assume that the latter will be elected.

Mr. Walter S. Pinkham was chairman of the caucus and Mr. Harry E. Gifford, secretary.

The result:—

State Convention,—George F. Pinkham, Charles R. Sherman and H. O. Fairbanks.

Congressional, — Charles M. Bryant, Richard R. Freeman, Hon. H. O. Fairbanks and Walter J. Wellington.

Ward Six.

The Atlantic caucus was presided over by Councilmen Badger as chairman, and Henry Von Emden as secretary.

It was voted to make all nominations from the floor, and vote by acclamation.

The following gentlemen were selected to represent the ward in the conventions.

State convention,—H. S. Barker, Stephen O. Moxon, Benj. K. Redman.

Congressional District convention,—Roger H. Wilde, Harry W. Reed, William F. Cummings.

A motion was made by Mr. Moxon that it be the unanimous expression of the caucus that the delegates be instructed to cast their votes for T. B. Reed delegates to the national convention at St. Louis. The motion was passed without any opposition whatever. So Atlantic will put herself on record as throwing her strength to aid the Reed boom.

A Summing Up.

The result of the Republican caucuses Wednesday night showed conclusively that the friends of Mr. Hammond had not forgotten the manner in which certain Republicans had bolted the ticket last year, and that they will leave no stone unturned to return the compliment.

It is possible, now, that the anti-Merrill delegates in Quincy may have the balance of power in the Tenth district convention, in which case it is said Mr. Hammond may be a candidate. The election of Mr. Hammond in place of ex-Senator Merrill seems not improbable.

The tenth district is entitled to 103 delegates, and with a full convention 52 will be necessary for a choice. It will be made up as follows:

Boston.
Ward 13	4
Ward 14	2
Ward 15	7
Ward 19	4
Ward 20	14
Ward 22	9
Ward 24	27
Quincy	21

Investigation Asked.

Two more days have been devoted this week by the Committee on Counties of the Legislature, to the Norfolk County Estimates, the remonstrants being heard on Monday and Wednesday, which wound it up.

At the hearing on Tuesday George W. Wiggin, for fifteen years a county commissioner, was the principal witness. He submitted numerous summaries all tending to show that the sum of $132,000 asked might be materially reduced. The following shows the county expenses, tax and receipts for ten years.

	Gross Expenses.	County Tax.	Receipts.
1886,	$84,000	$60,000	$18,143
1887,	84,000	60,000	18,823
1888,	81,000	68,000	19,202
1889,	95,000	80,000	8,950
1890,	98,000	85,000	11,950
1891,	96,000	105,000	20,321
1892,	89,000	140,000	9,246
1893,	92,000	140,000	10,044
1894,	100,000	150,000	11,166
1895,	100,000	160,000	13,000
	Av. $104,000	Av. $14,000

Judge French in his argument said we don't ask an investigation but would like one. Wanted now to show methods. No vouchers for much of the work. Contracts with architect for $3,000, yet he was paid $18,000, We come as citizens to remonstrate. It was idle to say we come because of prejudice. It was notorious that there was scandal there, and a gross dereliction of duty.

Judge Grover said he admired the calm presentation of Judge French, but it was a big bluff. They don't want an investigation. They don't dare to brave it. The Commissioners are ready for an investigation, but Judge French don't want it. Mr. Blackmur don't want it.

Efforts of Messrs. French and Blackmur to learn why they did not want it were unavailing.

Thursday Erastus Worthington, the clerk of courts, gave important evidence.

Judge French had a surprise at this point and asked that the committee report to the Legislature that an investigation seemed expedient.

This was discussed at length by committee and counsel, and will be considered by the committee in executive session.

Slight Fire—No Steamer.

The alarm from Box 42 at 12.45 A. M. followed a few moments later by a second round from the same box was for a fire in the paint shop of M. W. Frolund at Brewer's corner.

The alarm did not work just right owing to the storm and the first round of the first alarm came in 52 at the central station while on other bells it came in 42.

Hose 1 took the box as 52 and started for Wollaston. The Hook & Ladder and Steamer got the second round correct and started for Box 42. The Hook & Ladder got away from the house all right but the Steamer met with an accident and did not go.

It seems that four horses were hitched to the steamer and as it was the first time they had ever worked together they became unmanagable and in going out of the house the pole was broken.

Hose from West Quincy arrived all right and put two streams of water on the fire which was confined to the corner where it started. The loss will not exceed $75. The cause was probably spontaneous combustion.

Adams Shore.

An important real estate sale is reported, the fine tract of 63 acres of shore land of the John Quincy Adams' farm on the Houghs Neck road having changed hands. L. Shannon Davis, the purchaser, transfers to Davis W. Murray, and the property will hereafter be known as "Adam's Shore" and developed by a syndicate consisting or James R. Murphy, Henry C. Towle, M. D., E. D. Peters, M. D., C. P. Andersen and others.

Surveys for streets have been made and streets will be cut through as soon as weather permits.

Sick stomach means sick man (or woman). Why not be well?
Sick stomach comes from poor food, poor nourishment; means poor health, poor comfort. Shaker Digestive Cordial means health and a well stomach.
If we could examine our stomach we would understand why it is that so little will put it out of order.
But, unless we are doctors, we never see our stomach. We only feel it. We would feel it less if we took Shaker Digestive Cordial.
Shaker Digestive Cordial makes your stomach digest all the nourishing food you eat, relieves all the symptoms of indigestion, acts as a tonic and soon makes you well and strong again.
The more you take, the less you will feel of your stomach.
At druggists. Trial bottle 10 cents.

1896 Quincy Bicycles.

It's positive comfort to ride a Quincy Wheel. Public opinion says so. The 1896 construction embodies the most desirable features and improved ideas of all other wheels. It's a wheel you'll never have to apologize for. A wheel that don't find it necessary to tie a repair shop to the guarantee, and the only wheel in the world that has courage enough to give a two years' guarantee. Beautifully finished and made just to your notion, the 1896 models are favor winners everywhere.

By special arrangement with the Quincy Cycle Co. we will handle their famous wheels exclusively in Quincy.

1896 PRICES, $50.00, $75.00, $100.00.

Terms mighty easy for those who wish. Reasonable allowance for old wheels. If you want to drive cares away this spring and summer, order your wheel at once. You'll never regret the purchase of a Sterling Quincy.

Will.

You will be what you will to be;
Let failure find its false content
In that poor word "environment,"
But spirit scorns it and is free.

It masters time, it conquers space,
It cows that boastful tricksters chance;
And bids the tyrant Circumstance
Uncrown and fill a servant's place.

The human Will, that force unseen,
The offspring of a deathless Soul,
Can hew the way to any goal,
Though walls of granite intervene.

Be not impatient in delay,
But wait as one who understands;
When spirit rises and commands,
The gods are ready to obey.

The river, seeking for the sea,
Confronts the dam and precipice,
Yet knows it cannot fail or miss;
You will be, what you will to be.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Notes and Comments.

—Work on the Nashua river water system is progressing. The contractors for the second and third sections of the aqueduct have their plant on the ground and will begin digging as soon as the weather will permit.

—A new gas company in Washington proposes to furnish gas to ordinary consumers at seventy five cents a thousand feet and to the government at sixty cents.

—Governor Greenhalge, it is said, died a comparatively poor man, so far as dollars and cents are estimated, but for honor and integrity, the gold of the Astors would not buy his virtues.

Sick stomach means sick man (or woman). Why not be well?

Sick stomach comes from poor food, poor nourishment; means poor health, poor comfort. Shaker Digestive Cordial means health and a well stomach.

If we could examine our stomach we would understand why it is that so little will put it out of order.

But, unless we are doctors, we never see our stomach. We only feel it. We would feel it less if we took Shaker Digestive Cordial.

Shaker Digestive Cordial makes your stomach digest all the nourishing food you eat, relieves all the symptoms of indigestion, acts as a tonic and soon makes you well and strong again.

The more you take, the less you will feel of your stomach.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

It was a very busy meeting of the City Council Monday evening as will be seen by the report which follows.

The absent members were Councilmen Sidelinger and Rinn.

Communications.

A communication was received from Chairman Porter of the School Board, correcting some statement he had made in the hearing at the last meeting of the City Council. Placed on file.

The Mayor in a communication called attention of the Council to the expiration of the contract with the Electric Light and Power company. To Committee on Lights.

The Mayor forwarded his estimates of the annual appropriations which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

The estimates with appropriations of last year were printed in Tuesday's issue.

Petitions.

Petitions for State aid were received from James M. Cleverly and John Faircloth. To Committee on State Aid.

Report of Committees.

The Committee on Water Supply reported recommending that the report of the Water Commissioners be printed in the annual city report. Adopted.

The Committee on State Aid reported in favor of granting $6 per month to Bernard O'Reilley. Adopted.

The Committee on Finance on order for $75,000 for two schoolhouses reported an amendment to the order in relation to the payment of notes. Amendment adopted.

Councilman Claflin moved to suspend the rules to put the order on its final passage. Much time he said had been taken up and it now becomes the duty of the Council to forward the order as fast as possible, and as the majority of the Council were in favor of the Moxon plans the Council could not do better than pass the order, as he believed the best interest of the city required such action.

The rules were suspended and the motion was then on passing to be ordained.

Councilman Phillips offered an amendment that one building be built by the Moxon plans and one by the Bacon & Wright plans.

Councilman Parker was glad to see that the chairman of the Finance Committee took the stand he did and the work could be forwarded in no better way than by passing the order.

Councilman Sprague said it was plain that it was impossible to get approval of any plans but those of Mr. Moxon, and if the Supreme Architect of the Universe should present plans he doubted if they would be accepted. He would move to amend by substituting $70,000 and the name of Bacon & Wright in place of Moxon, as he believed by the latter set of plans a first class building could be erected, but by the other plans a building would be erected.

Councilman Parker said that in conversation with the Commissioner of Public Works the latter had considered them equal and better in some cases than the Wheelright plans by which the City of Boston was now building. If Bacon & Wright built its buildings Mr. Wright would be there every other day while Mr. Moxon would be there every day.

Councilman Sprague did not think that the executive would exercise any less care in one case than he would in another.

Councilman Field said it is not known who will erect these buildings. The council were considering plans and not men. He did not intend to say a word against Mr. Moxon, he was simply speaking of his plans. The Bacon & Wright plans are what the city should build by. He hoped the amendment would prevail. He considered the Moxon plans what was known as a double header.

Quarry Railroad Hearing.

The school house debate was interrupted at 8 o'clock by a hearing on the petition of the Quarry Railroad company, for approval of location of proposed extension to the North Common.

H. T. Whitman, the engineer, said the length of line was one and three-tenths miles and that spurs would increase it to two and 63-100. He understood it was only the street crossing with which the Council had to deal. At Granite street near Swithin Bros. office an overhead bridge was proposed with no change of grade of street. Next a private way was to be crossed at grade, then a cart way by a bridge, and then Quarry street at grade near Hitchcock's quarry. The cost of the enterprise would be about $77,000. As early as 1826 a quarry railroad was agitated. It will add to the taxable property of the city, as was shown by the West Quincy branch, and it would ease the highways.

Councilman Badger questioned if bridge on Granite street should not be over forty feet wide.

Councilman Nickerson asked if it was not possible to abolish grade crossings on Quarry street to which Mr. Whitman replied that it was not feasible.

Councilman Rice asked if location of Quarry street could not be changed.

There was also some further talk of a fifty foot bridge at Granite street.

Thomas H. McDonnell, president of the Quarry Railroad Co. hoped the Council would approve the location asked for. The bridge over Granite street would be high enough so that the grade could be raised at any time. It would be a very great benefit to the city of Quincy as it would save its streets from much heavy teaming. Then it would give employment to more men.

Representative Thompson spoke of the many benefits to be derived by the granite manufacturers. There was so much competition now that these firms should be given all the facilities possible.

John R. Graham appeared for the Board of Trade. He said the railroad was opposed to spur tracks on its main line and the proposed spur would open up a large manufacturing district and furnish location for many branches of business which were seeking to locate in Quincy.

Lewis Bass appeared as a remonstrant to the bridge over Granite street. It would be a public disfigurement and a great unfairness to travel over the street. It would injure and depreciate property. There would be no objection to putting the railroad under the street.

Upon being asked by Councilman Nickerson how much property he represented, Mr. Bass replied $16,000 of his own and $10,000 of Mrs. Bass.

The hearing closed at 8 50 and the matter was referred to the Committee on Streets.

Hancock Street Hearing.

The hearing on changing grade of Hancock street postponed from 8.15 was then opened.

John F. Merrill for the petitioners said there now was a hollow near Cottage street of 10 feet fall. It was proposed to erect a large new building near there but it was so low that it would not permit of a cellar. The greatest fill would be two feet.

Councilman Nickerson inquired as to cost and was referred to Commissioner Knowlton and John Cavanagh, who were present.

Councilman Badger asked if abutters benefitted should not pay much of the cost, to which Mr. Merrill replied, "They might."

Herbert T. Whitman appeared as a citizen and represented the Board of Trade. The change was about 800 feet and would cost considerable. The street should also be widened, but that was beyond the scope of the petition. He estimated the cost of construction from $3,500 to $4,000.

In answer to a question by Councilman Nickerson, Mr. Whitman said $4,000 was ample to pay for filling street, but did not include construction of sidewalk except to bring it to grade.

In response to a question by Councilman Field, Mr. Merrill said the amount of damage was about $5,000 which was offset by the benefit.

John R. Graham also appeared in favor of petition. The syndicate he represented had plans for one large building and might build two or three more. Property was now taxed for $20,000 which could be increased four times. This ought to be the boulevard. The Real Estate Trust company would give the land for widening.

John Cavanagh said upon request he had made an estimate of cost of raising the buildings. His estimate was as follows.

Williams' jewelry store,	$300
Tirrell & Sons,	900
John Hall's office,	300
Jones house and shop,	600
Old engine house,	100
Wilde's harness shop,	200
Wilde's blacksmith and wheelwright shop,	700
The old brick building.	500
Clapp's store,	300

Ex-Mayor Hodges said he did not appear as a remonstrant to a public improvement. He represented the Wilson property which would not be improved, but the change of grade would damage $2,000. If the front building was raised all back should also be raised.

James Edwards also appeared as a remonstrant. He objected as a taxpayer to spend $10,000 or $15,000 to give the Trust Co. a cellar for their building. He would claim damages for his land in the rear.

The hearing closed at 9.30 and the order was recommended to the Committee on Streets.

Schoolhouses.

Councilman Anderson moved to lay the matter of schoolhouses on the table. The motion was lost.

The amendment of Councilman Phillips that one schoolhouse be built by the Moxon plans and one by the Bacon & Wright was then put and lost.

Councilman Sprague withdrew his motion to amend by substituting $70,000 for $75,000 and Bacon & Wright for S. O. Moxon, and the motion was in passing the order to be ordained, which failed to receive the necessary two-thirds vote.

The vote was as follows:

YEAS—Anderson, Badger, Barker, Claflin, Geary, Lamb, Little, Murray, Nickerson, Parker, Pinkham, Rice, Rideout, Russell—14.

NAYS—Cleaves, Field, Hayden, Holt, Phillips, Sprague—6.

Absent,—Rinn and Sidelinger.

Not voting,—President Bryant.

Councilman Pinkham moved to reconsider. Voted.

Councilman Lamb moved to lay the order on the table. Voted.

Upon motion of Councilman Anderson it was voted when the council adjourn it be until next Monday.

Councilman Sprague offered an order that the Mayor be instructed to build two school buildings according to such plans as he may see fit, and that $75,000 be appropriated for that purpose.

The chair ruled the order out of order.

Councilman Sprague appealed from the chair. The Council however sustained the chair by a vote of 14 to 6.

Councilman Anderson offered an order that the petition of the Quincy Quarry Company be allowed. To Committee on Streets.

Adjourned at 9.45.

Boston Theatre.

Fanny Davenport will present her new and magnificent production of Sardou's "Gismonda" at the Boston Theatre, beginning next Tuesday night. It is stated that Miss Davenport's impersonation of the title role is, in the opinion of many, the most finished and viril portraiture she had ever presented, and that she succeeds in doing justice to this heroine is conceded on all sides. The tableaux are magnificent.

The last scene is the most massive and impressive of all, and represents the interior of the church Santa Maria at Athens.

Fanny Davenport has always been noted for her exquisite gowns, but in "Gismonda" she has eclipsed anything she has heretofore worn in any of her plays. In the palace scene she will wear a girdle that has $50,000 worth of diamonds, rubies, sapphires and emeralds, set in an exquisite net work of gold.

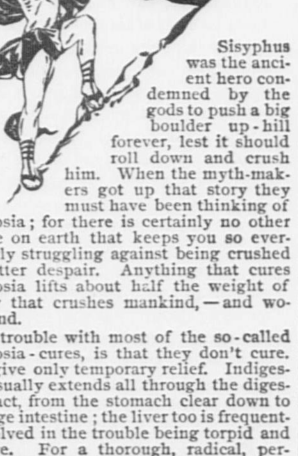

There will be no performance Monday night, which will be devoted to a rehearsal of "Gismonda" which will be the first play of her repertoire, which will include "La Tosca," "Fedora" and "Cleopatra" during this engagement.

Castle Square Theare, Boston.

For the next week, the announcement has been made of Planquett's ever popular "Chimes of Normanny," with all the scenery and accessories, which went so far to make the previous production of it so great a success. This opera will be on for one week only. Mr. Edward E. Rose, who has been manager since the opening of the house, has resigned his position. The present policy of the theatre will be in no wise affected or changed by the withdrawal of Mr. Rose. The management will be assumed by Mr. A. J. Clark, who has been the business manager of the house for over a year, and during the entire season of opera. There will be absolutely no change either in the company or in the departments which have contributed to the successful presentation of the standard musical works. With "Lucia," "Rigoletto" and "Traviata" in active preparation, the season of grand opera so auspiciously begun with "Mignon" will, it is promised, be continued to the complete satisfactions of the patrons of the Castle Square.

Sisyphus was the ancient hero condemned by the gods to push a big boulder up-hill forever, lest it should roll down and crush him. When the myth-makers got up that story they must have been thinking of dyspepsia; for there is certainly no other trouble on earth that keeps you so everlastingly struggling against being crushed into utter despair. Anything that cures dyspepsia lifts about half the weight of misery that crushes mankind,—and womankind.

The trouble with most of the so-called dyspepsia-cures, is that they don't cure. They give only temporary relief. Indigestion usually extends all through the digestive tract, from the stomach clear down to the large intestine; the liver too is frequently involved in the trouble being torpid and inactive. For a thorough, radical, permanent cure you must have the whole digestive organism set right.—Not violently stirred up, but regulated. Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets will do it. They stimulate the digestive juices of the stomach; invigorate the liver and help it to actively secrete the bile; and act gently on the bowels to promote a regular healthy movement. This means a complete and lasting cure of digestive troubles.

The "Pellets" are not a severe cathartic. They act on the bowels naturally and comfortably though surely. The dose can be regulated to your needs, and when the "Pellets" have done their work they can be discontinued. You don't become a slave to their use, as with other pills. If the druggist suggest some griping pill that gives him more profit, think what will profit you most.

The Voter Responsible.

The community is made up of individuals. What the community does as a whole, the individual member of the community does personally, if he approves and helps to bring about the thing done. This logic makes the person who gives his influence as a citizen in favor of the legalized rum traffic guilty of all the evil that it inflicts upon society. Behind the rumseller is the law that licenses the business. Behind the license law is the legislature that makes the law, and behind the legislature are the individual members of society who elect the legislature. Without the voter, there can be no legislature; without the legislature there can be no license law; without the license law there can be no legalized saloon.

If the man who sells is bad, the law that authorizes the selling is a bad law, the legislature that makes the law is a bad legislature, and the people who elect the legislature are a bad people. Thus the license system links the citizen with the liquor business, and makes him criminally responsible for the evil which the saloon inflicts upon society. The criminality of the union between the saloon and the citizens who endorse the license is emphasized by the fact that he shares as a citizen in the profits of a business that is essentially criminal. The license fee goes into the public treasury in one form or another and represents the financial interest of the citizen in the saloon.

If the money that goes into the saloon keeper's till is bad money, the license fee which goes into the public treasury is equally bad. If the saloon keeper is a bad man because he makes money by pursuing a bad business, the man who willingly shares in the profits of that business is also a bad man. From any possible point of view, the license system makes the citizen who supports it particeps criminis in the liquor business.—Temperance Cause.

Household Receipts.

FRITTERS. One pint of milk, two teacupfuls of flour, three eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one saltspoonful of salt. Fry in deep lard. Eat with maple syrup.

SALT FISH WITH CREAM. Soak a pound and a half of fish over night. Simmer an hour and a half, then drain and shred. Melt one large tablespoonful of butter and mix in it a tablespoonful of flour; then, add a quart of hot milk and the fish. Add the beaten egg and serve.

SCALLOPED FISH. Use cold, flaked fish free from skin and bones. Butter a shallow dish, then put in a layer of crumbs, then, of fish; then crumbs and add seasoning and drawn butter or any sauce you may have. Then, add another layer of fish and crumbs, again moistening with the sauce; if well seasoned, moist and hot, it is very nice. Mashed potatoes may be used instead of crumbs for a change.

IMPERIAL JOHNNY CAKE. Two cupfuls of sour milk, one cupful of sweet cream, one and one-fourth cupfuls of Indian meal, one-fourth cup of flour, two eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately; one large tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of soda. Bake in a sheet in a hot oven for twenty minutes, and do not make a mistake in thinking the cream which will be found in the middle of the cake is rawness, for it is really the most delicious kind ever eaten when prepared just right.

MRS. GOOLD'S GRATITUDE.

Her Story of How She Was Restored to Health.

Condition Before and After the Birth of Her Child.

From every city, town and hamlet on this vast continent, come letters from suffering women; from those whose physicians have been unable to assist them, or from that numberless class whose confidence in Mrs. Pinkham's advice and the curative properties of her Vegetable Compound is unbounded.

Every letter received from women is recorded, and hundreds of volumes of cases treated aid in furnishing practical information for the women of to-day. No letters are published without the request of the writer. The strictest confidence is observed. The following letter represents thousands:—

"I always enjoyed good health until six months before the birth of my babe. Then I was very weak; my back ached all the time. My physicians said I would be all right after the birth of the child, but I was not, although at that time I had the best of care. The pains in my back were almost unbearable. I had leucorrhœa in its worst form; menstruations were painful.

"Any work or care would entirely unnerve me. When my babe was 11 months old, friends persuaded me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Before I had taken one bottle I felt the effects. My back did not ache so badly, and I felt stronger. After taking four bottles I felt well. My ambition returned, menstruations were painless, leucorrhœa entirely cured, and I could take care of my babe and do my housework. I shall always recommend your Vegetable Compound for all women, especially for young mothers."—MRS. H. L. GOOLD, Oregon, Wis.

If Mrs. Goold had been well before the birth of her child, subsequent suffering would have been avoided. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should always be taken before and after birth, in order that the system may withstand the shock.

REGULATIONS OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH

Of the City of Quincy.

At a meeting held Feb. 20, 1895, the Board of Health of the City of Quincy made and adopted, and do hereby publish, the following regulations:

REGULATION 1. No person shall collect, remove or carry in or through any of the streets, lanes, avenues, places or alleys within the City of Quincy, the contents of any cesspool, vault, privy or privy well, the drainage of any stable, dwelling house, slaughter house, or other building in the city, unless expressly licensed therefor by the Board of Health, upon such terms and conditions, and by such methods, as the Board may deem that the public health requires and upon failure to comply therewith, the license shall be forthwith revoked, and cancelled. No privy vault or cesspool shall be cleaned between 6 P. M. and sunrise.

REG 2. No person shall deposit the contents of any privy-vault or cesspool, or any other filth, upon any premises within the limits of the city, without first having obtained a permit to do so from the Board of Health. Nor shall any cesspool for the retention of waste water be within ten feet of any house, unless the cesspool be cemented water-tight. No privy-vault or cesspool that is not water-tight shall be maintained within two rods of any well, spring, or other source of water supply used for drinking purposes.

REG. 3. No person, unless expressly licensed therefor by the Board of Health, shall collect, transport or convey, swill, fat, grease, bones, or any decaying, putrifying or offensive animal matter or vegetable substance through any of the public streets or ways of this city, and then only in securely covered vehicles or vessels, from which no liquid matter or odors can escape.

REG. 4. All persons licensed by the Board to remove the contents of privy-vaults and cesspools, and all who collect and transport swill, refuse and offensive animal or vegetable substances, shall keep all carts, equipments and implements used therefor, disinfected and free from all obnoxious or offensive odors when not in immediate use, and shall not allow the same to become obnoxious or offensive to the public or to the owners or occupants of premises adjoining those where the same are kept or stored.

REG. 5. No person shall place, or cause to be placed, or empty, or cause to be emptied, upon any street, way, lane or sidewalk, any house dirt, offal or rubbish, any sewage, or the drainage of any sink or stable, or the contents of any cesspool, vault, privy or privy well. No person shall cast any decayed vegetable or dead animal substance into any cesspool or privy vault, or any well, cistern, reservoir, pond or waters within the city, nor drown or caused to be drowned, any animal in any of said waters. And the carcasses of animals dead of disease or killed for any cause, shall be buried at such distance from dwellings, or wells, or other source of water supply, that no danger or nuisance can result; and no person shall establish or maintain any stable, swine pen, privy, privy well, cesspool or sink drain within six feet of any stream, watercourse or pond in this city, without a permit from the Board of Health.

REG 6. The keeping of swine, goats, cows or poultry in any part of the city where such keeping shall be held by the Board of Health detrimental to the public health or offensive to the neighborhood, is hereby prohibited, and after due notice by said Board to the owner or person in charge, he shall forthwith remove the same or cause the same to be removed, from any place at which the keeping thereof shall be prohibited by the Board.

REG. 7. No person shall burn, boil, try or decompose any refuse substances, either animal or vegetable, in such a manner that the same shall evolve odors or gasses obnoxious or offensive to the public or to the owners or occupants of adjoining premises.

REG. 8. Every occupant of any dwelling house, tenement or other building in this city shall keep such house or building, and the yard belonging to the same, free from all filth and from all substances having offensive odors.

Whenever a vault, cesspool, barn or cellar, or any building or premises of any description, becomes offensive, the same shall be satisfactorily cleansed, ventilated and disinfected, by the occupant or owner within such reasonable time as the Board of Health may in a notice therefor prescribe.

Whenever the Board of Health is satisfied on due examination that a cellar, tenement or building within the city, occupied as a dwelling house, has become, by reason of the number of occupants, want of cleanliness or other cause, unfit for such purpose, the occupants shall remove therefrom within forty-eight hours after written notice has been given them.

REG 9. When a householder knows that a person within his family is sick with small-pox, diphtheria, membraneous croup, scarlet fever or any other disease dangerous to the public health, he shall immediately give notice thereof to the Board of Health, unless he knows such cases have been duly reported by the attending physician.

When a physician knows that a person whom he is called to visit is infected with small-pox, diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles or typhoid fever, he shall immediately give notice thereof to the Board of Health.

REG. 10. No person from any dwelling wherein a case of small-pox, diphtheria, membraneous croup or scarlet fever exists shall attend any school, church, or public gathering of any kind, or take any book or magazine to or from the Public Library without a permit from the Board of Health. The Board will inform the librarian of all cases of said diseases, and until a written permit is given he shall allow neither books nor magazines to be taken to or returned from the dwellings where such cases exist.

REG. 11. In case of a death from small-pox, scarlet fever, membraneous croup or diphtheria, burial must be made within twelve hours, if practicable, and must be strictly private; and the body must not be exposed to view, or the coffin opened after the body has been placed therein.

REG. 12. All cases of small-pox, membraneous croup, diphtheria and scarlet fever must be issolated to the satisfaction of the Board, and no visitors of any kind allowed. After the sickness is over the rooms occupied must be disinfected by the householder or by the Board of Health. They must be tightly closed and sulphur burned in them at the rate of two pounds per one thousand cubic feet of space. They must remain closed from six to twelve hours, then opened and aired thoroughly before further occupancy. The bedding must be well spread out and exposed to the same sulphur fumes, and all the furniture, walls, bedding, carpets, etc., must be washed in a solution of carbolic acid, chloride of lime or corrosive sublimate.

REG. 13. No child from a family, any one of whose members is sick with small-pox, membraneous croup, diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles or whooping cough, will be permitted to attend school until six weeks after the complete cessation of such sickness in the family. Children from tenements immediately adjoining those in which any of these diseases exist will likewise be prohibited, unless by permission of the Board of Health, and all children so prohibited, by reason of sickness in their families, before again attending school shall obtain a certificate from the attending physician and from a member of the Board of Health, that all danger of contagion is past.

REG. 14. Whoever has knowledge of, or has reason to suspect the existence of a contagious disease among any domestic animals in this city shall forthwith give notice thereof to the Board of Health.

REG. 15. Persons having the care or custody of such suspected animals, and having received a written or verbal order from the Board of Health for their restriction, shall neither sell, trade, nor in any way dispose of them, nor move or allow them to be moved from the place assigned, nor allow other animals not already exposed to come in contact with them till permitted so to do by the State Cattle Commissioners.

Whoever violates any provisions of regulations 14 and 15 shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or by imprisonment not exceeding one year; and whoever violates any provisions of any other of these regulations shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars for each offense.

POINTS .·. Among the goods quoted in this list we wish to call attention to the Mohawk Valley Corn; we have 1200 dozen of this brand, and it is of excellent quality; 5½c. per can, 65c. per dozen. The spices quoted are all pure goods; best quality.

The Violet brand of Marrowfat Peas are the best you ever had in your life; just order one can; 9c per can, $1 00 per dozen.

Our Maryland Chief brand of early June Peas cannot be excelled; 11c per can, $1 25 per doz; but we tell you frankly the Violet will suit you better.

Gallon cans of Bartlett Pears, 20c. per can, $2 25 per dozen, good quality; you probably will never be able to buy them again for that price.

Weymouth brand Tomatoes; northern goods, solid packed, red-ripe, extra large can, first-class in every particular; 8c. per can, 95c. per dozen.

The goods advertised at 3½c. per pound are all of standard quality, and sold elsewhere from 5 to 10c. per pound.

The QUALITY of our "OLD GOLD" Flour is equal to any sold. The quality of flour, my friends, does not depend on its extensive advertising.

Don't fail to try our Tea and Coffee; they are in line with the rest, and can't fail to suit you.

A FEW REMARKS. Since opening this store in June, 1887, we have always catered to the hotel, restaurant and boarding house trade in Boston and vicinity, and have not striven to increase our family trade until recently. The former buy their groceries, with few exceptions, of the wholesale grocers or of the large retailers (some 5 or 6) in the wholesale department. The reason is plain—they can buy cheaper. "Catalogue" prices are for the family trade. While our hotel and restaurant trade has increased from year to year, until we have one of the largest in the city, the family trade has not grown in proportion. Why? Because we have quoted the same prices to the family trade as our neighbors, and there was no particular reason why they should buy of us. We have decided for the present to sell to the family trade the same as we do to the other. Our place of business, 78 Beach street, is one of the nearest stores to the Albany, Old Colony and New England depots; thousands of people who come in and go out on these roads pass our door every day; and this price list was prepared especially to secure their trade. Realizing that a great many of them could take their purchases with them, we make a price as low as possible over net cost of goods, therefore we are unable to pay freight or express charges on goods going out of town. Another point: We want those people who take their purchases with them to be paid for their trouble; we cannot afford to sell goods quite as cheap if we have to deliver the goods out of town.

Our prices are in many instances from 10 to 200 per cent cheaper than any "catalogue" list; our goods are of standard quality; every salesman in this store is instructed to never misrepresent goods; we want your orders, not only once, but for all time, and we propose to use you so well that you cannot afford to go elsewhere.

Talking Furniture Prices.

DID you ever hear of furniture prices talking? Probably not, but at this store the prices speak right up for themselves. Prices that are low to begin with and economical to end with—prices that are unmatched for genuine lowness by any furniture store prices in the State, prices that appeal to all classes of buyers, and prices that are not low because we say so, but because buyer after buyer return to this store and say, "We have tried elsewhere but return, after wasting our time. No better place on earth to buy Furniture or Carpetings. Goods that are just to your liking, selected with untiring efforts for the benefit of the patrons of this—the people's store.

Bide a Wee and Dinna Fret.

Is the road very dreary?
Patience yet,
Rest will be sweet if thou art a-aweary,
And after the night cometh the morning cheery;
Then bide a wee and dinna fret.

The clouds have silver lining,
Don't forget.
An' though he's hidden, still the sun is shining,
Courage instead of tears and vain repining.
Just bide a wee and dinna fret.

When with toil and cares unending
Thou'rt beset.
Bethink thee how the storms from heaven descending
Snap the stiff oak, but spare the willow bending,
And bide a wee and dinna fret.

Grief sharper sting doth borrow
From regret,
But yesterday is gone, and shall its sorrow
Unfit us for the present and the morrow?
Nay; bide a wee, and dinna fret.

An over anxious brooding
Doth beget
A host of fears and fantasies deluding;
Then, brother, lest these torments be intruding,
Just bide a wee and dinna fret.

Miscellany.

NOT A QUESTION OF LAW.

Enoch Southworth was dead. "He went out with the tide; 'twas just about seven I kind of had it in my mind that he would go then," said Mrs. Colter, on her return home after going to offer her assistance to the daughter of the dead man.

"How'd his sister and Hannah seem to take it?" asked Mr. Colter, who had just finished filling his clay pipe and was packing down the contents with a skilful twist of the thumb.

"Well, his sister from Corinth way was there, and she took on some; but Hannah—land! that girl ain't no more natural feeling! She didn't show a sign. She just went to sorting out the clothes for Mr. Jones to put on him, and then she went into the settin'-room and lit the light. Her aunt sort of noticed, and told her she guessed she hadn't better light that room up; and Hannah spoke out and says, 'It seems cheerfuller to have it lit.'"

Mr. Colter gave an expressive grunt, and Mrs. Colter continued:

"Then Hannah got out the atlas and ink bottle and began to write, and before I come away, if she wa'n't bargaining with Mr. Jones 'bout a coffin! I did hear her say, though, that she guessed it better be a casket, as her father set a good deal of store by such things."

"I reckon Enoch didn't leave nothin' except the place," said Mr. Colter.

"Leave nothin! Hannah's supported him for the past seven years; and he wa'n't the pleasantest man in the world to live with, neither; but Hannah had all the pride there was in the family. Emily always laid right back on her till she married that Wiswell fellow and went off to Lynn with him; and a poor tool he was!"

"I s'pose Emily'll come in for half the property," said Mr. Colter, reflectively.

"I sh'd like to know! Half the property!" Mrs. Colter's voice was sharp. "All there is, is that old house, and Hannah's earned it over a half-dozen times doin' for the old man; and as for Emily, if she's mean enough"—

"There ain't no question of meanness where property is concerned," interrupted Mr. Colter firmly. He had served on the jury one term and considered himself an authority on questions of law. "Emily's got a right to half there is there, 'cordin' to law."

"Well, she won't get it if she has a right to it," responded Mrs. Colter.

"I should like to know why not?" said Mr. Colter; but his wife made no reply.

The Southworth place was a low roofed cottage, bleached gray with wind and rain. There was a bunch of lilac trees near the gate, and a short distance from the house was an old barn that for years had been used as a woodshed and a shelter for a few hens. There was an acre of rough pasture land.

It was not much of an inheritance, but Hannah Southworth found it a comfortable home. For a year after her father's death she devoted a part of her savings to putting it in repair, and began to enjoy the possession of her own house. Her sister Emily had written just after her father's death saying she hoped Hannah wouldn't be lonesome. Emily had three children and found little time for letter writing.

"I didn't believe Emily'd want to rob Hannah," Mrs. Colter confided to her husband, when a year had passed and Emily had not made any claim against Hannah's right to the little house.

"Wouldn't be no question 'bout robbin'," replied Mr. Colter. "I aint sayin' as I should want Emily to have it, but so far as law goes she's got a perfect right to half there is there." Mrs. Colter's silence was expressive of her opinion.

Hannah Southworth continued her peaceful labors. She made dresses for her neighbors, and was always ready to help out with the mending, or to do up the starched clothes when such assistance was needed by the more prosperous women of the village.

She loved every rock on the old place; even the ledge at the head of the lot, that had always been an eyesore to old Mr. Southworth, was dear to her. Sometimes as she sat by the window that overlooked the road to the village she would lay down her work for a minute or two and look out across the fields with a little sigh of happiness at the thought of her many blessings.

"I 'spose you're able to lay by a little something now and then, ain't you, Hannah?" asked Mrs. Colter one day in early fall, as she sat with Hannah in the little west room. Your expenses ain't none to speak of."

"Well, I've got pretty near a hundred dollars put by, Mrs. Colter, though I shouldn't want you to mention it. I've had to pay for father's tombstone, and do some fixin' up 'bout the place. I've always felt that if I had a hundred dollars ahead I shouldn't worry much 'bout my future, bein' as I own the place and have got it fixed just as I want it," and the elderly woman looked with no little satisfaction at the homely belongings of the small room.

"You don't feel lonesome evenings, do you?" questioned her neighbor.

"No. I don't have many idle times, and when I get an hour now and again to sit by myself, I just enjoy it. It kind of rests me, so to speak; then you know I've got a number of books I set some store by, and I'm always sort of looking forward to having time to read 'em; but time ain't offered yet," concluded Hannah, with a hopeful smile.

It was only a few days after this conversation that Mrs. Colter saw the stage coach stop in front of her neighbor's door, and a man and a woman and three small children got out. A trunk and a number of bundles were put down just inside of Hannah Southworth's gate, and the coach went on its zig zag way to the postoffice.

"I vanny, if 'taint Emily Wiswell! Looks to me just as if she'd come home to settle right down on Hannah!"

"Now, mother," responded Mr. Colter, "what do you want to talk that way for? you act possess't 'bout Emily. Don't you 'spose she's got any natural feelin' and wants to see the only sister she has?"

Mrs. Colter sighed. "Maybe; but what on earth did she bring so much truck for if she's only going to visit?"

A month went by, and Mrs. Wiswell and her family were still at the cottage. Mr. Wiswell had become a regular visitor at the corner grocery, and the children's rough playthings decorated the hitherto neat walk to Hannah Southworth's house. As for Hannah, she attended to her work as usual, and in response to every question answered that "Emily'd just come for a little change."

"What'd they do with their furniture and things?" inquired one curious visitor.

"I ain't asked them," came the brief response, accompanied by a look that the neighbor declared reminded her so of old man Southworth that "it took the wits right out of her."

The weeks went on and still Hannah asked no questions. Emily had said that her husband was obliged to leave Lynn. "Jim didn't have no work after the strike in the big shop; he did the best he could, Hannah, but 'twas hard and he got discouraged; so he said he guessed we'd better come and stay with you for a spell, and perhaps he could get a chance to do something here. You know he's used to farming."

But the autumn passed and Jim made no effort to secure work. Hannah fitted out the children with new shoes and sent them to school. Jim did not hesitate to ask for money occasionally, which Hannah gave.

When the first snow came her little store of savings was about gone. The busy season was nearly over, and Hannah found that the supplies that would have promised comfort for her during the winter would not last a month longer with her sister's family. But she said nothing. A great fear was growing in her heart as to the safety of her home. Jim had spoken several times of late as to the probable worth of the place, and said he "guessed it was about time things was settled up."

Hannah knew what this meant. Jim intended to have the place sold and get Emily's share of the money.

It was early in December when he first spoke openly about it. "Hannah, don't you think it's about time that Emily had her share of her father's property?" he asked.

"Father didn't have no property except this house, Jim," said Hannah with a little choke in her throat.

"I know that, but this place is worth something. Mr. Jones has offered me six hundred, cash," responded Mr. Wiswell.

"I took care of father a good while, James, after his money was all gone," went on Hannah, feebly, "and though there wasn't no writin's, father always calculated on my havin' the place."

"Well, Hannah, I wouldn't a believed you was so mean spirited. Here you have had a comfortable home, we've never disturbed you, never said nothin' about rent; but now I've got to have some money. I've got wind of a job in Haverhill, and I'm going to have this place sold. You'll get your share of it all right enough."

Emily listened to the conversation tearfully. She knew all Hannah had borne to keep the little home; but she knew, too, how desperately Jim was in need of money.

Poor Hannah put down her work and turned her head toward the window. She had not minded her loneliness, the long years of toil and sacrifice; but the giving up of the only shelter she had ever known crushed her patient courage into silence.

"Ain't you got nothin' to say?" questioned Jim.

"I guess 'twouldn't be any use for me to talk much," she answered.

"I dunno as 'twould," responded her brother-in-law. "I'm going to see Mr. Jones and I guess I'll have him come right up with the papers for you and Emily to sign;" and Mr. Wiswell left the room briskly.

"When is Jim goin' to Haverhill?" asked Hannah.

"Next week."

"Be you and the children goin' with him, Emily?"

"Yes, I s'pose so. There won't be no other place for us to go, after the house is sold," and then as she remembered her sister's homelessness, "Oh, Hannah! where will you go?"

"I don't know. I guess some of the neighbors will let me stay a spell with them. I've got nineteen dollars, so I shan't be without means. I had most a hundred when you came, but—" Hannah hesitated and stopped. Emily was not to blame.

"And you've spent all that money for us; and now your bein' turned out. Hannah, don't you sign no papers! Jim must manage some way. I won't sign a thing, and you ain't going to, neither. The house is yours, and going to stay so," concluded Emily, firmly.

"Oh, Emily!" Hannah started up with outstretched hands, "will you let me keep it? I'll see that it goes to your children; and Jim can take my nineteen dollars and go to Haverhill. You and the children can stay right here till I can earn the money for you to go. Don't sign, will you, Emily?"

The next morning Mr. Wiswell was a passenger on the westward bound stage, and in his pocket was the remainder of Hannah's savings. Mr. and Mrs Colter watched his departure from their front-room window.

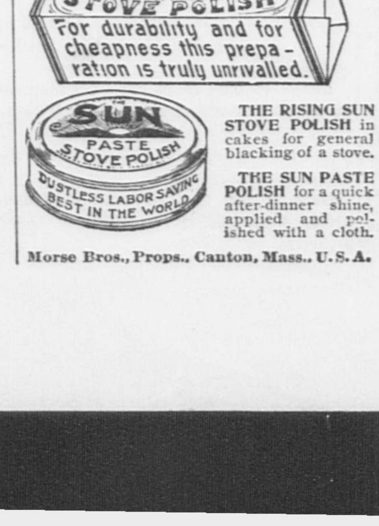

"Now, you see nobody wanted to cheat Hannah," remarked Mr. Colter. "Jim's made his visit and there he goes. He was a saying at the store last night that Emily and the children would stay a spell longer. He said he'd a been willin' to have stayed and helped Hannah through the winter, but his wife seemed to think 'twa'n't wise."

"He didn't mention, I presume to say, nothin' 'bout trying to sell the house right over her head, did he? Mr. Jones' wife told me the whole story, and I should judge Jones was 'bout as deep in the mud as Jim was in the mire. If Emily hadn't said right out that it shouldn't be done, the house would a been sold and Hannah turned right out."

"Sho!" Mr. Colter turned a surprised look upon his wife, who responded with a solemn nod of her head. "I declare to it," went on Mr. Colter, "if it don't beat all how folks act. Still, I ain't denying but what Emily's got a perfect right to half there is there."

It was nearly spring when Mrs. Wiswell and her children bade Hannah good-by. The two sisters had come to understand each other better during the winter, and it was Emily who had insisted that she should sign a paper giving her share of the place to Hannah, and the elder sister was no longer afraid of her future.

The hundred dollars was gone and nearly a year wasted, "but I am only fifty, and I can save yet," she thought hopefully as she stood in the doorway and listened to the rumble of the coach in which her sister was a passenger. She listened as long as any sound from the clumsy wagon could be heard, and then stepped back into the house and fastened the door behind her.—Transcript.

HANCOCK ST. HISTORY.

THE SIXTH INSTALLMENT OF PAPER BY EDWARD H. DEWSON.

During the ten years previous to 1827 there are no changes of note except that Henry Hardwick, the owner of the Samuel Baxter land that bordered upon the Training field, is found moving forward upon that portion of the field already twice redeemed by the parish. As in the case of former encroachments it is noticed, and protests are made in town meeting. In 1811 a committee is appointed to inquire into the state of land on the Training field. They reported a deed to the First Parish of Braintree in 1790, but no further action was taken. In 1827 work was begun on the present stone meeting-house. A committee was appointed by the town to examine the title of the First church to the land called the Training field. They reported that it was legal, clear and without any incumbrance whatever.

In this year Temple street was laid out from (Chestnut) Sea street to Washington street. It appears that the authorities took it for granted that Henry Hardwick was the owner of the land, as they laid out the south line directly through it and paid him damages. Their action strengthened his position as apparent owner of this fifteen thousand feet of land, and it remained undisputed until 1894. Mr. Spear remembers a board fence, erected by Hardwick about this time. It was thirty to forty feet long. Hooks were placed upon it to fasten saddle horses for the accommodation of the church goers. There were several poplar trees in front of this fence. Pattee mentions a granite horse block that stood a little to the westward of this sport. It was seven feet long by three and one-half feet wide, supported at either end by small blocks projecting beyond the upper block so as to form steps. It was to enable riders to seat their wives upon the pillion used in those days. In 1828, the Stone Temple was finished. It stood at right angles to the old church and the one was occupied, until the other was completed. The tower of the old building, was so near to the bell deck of the new one, the bell was swung from the one to the other. This enables us to locate the former meeting-house with accuracy.

In 1829 the present enclosures with posts and chains was made. The committee in so doing, placed upon the records of the parish the declaration that they were influenced by a desire for appearance only and did not thereby relinquish their claim to the land outside, at the various angles of which, they had placed stone bounds, even with the surface of the ground.

In 1832 the wheelwright shop and the dwelling-houses of Joshua Torrey and Samuel Nightingale, bordering on the north side of the meeting-house green were burned. Mr. Israel W. Munroe brought the Nightingale site and built the present house owned and occupied by Henry H. Faxon. Mr. Torrey rebuilt on the former site and later moved the house back and added to it. It is the cottage house west of Mr. Faxon's and owned by him.

In 1833 the Hingham Turnpike, then become Washington street, was extended to Hancock street. The north line only was established by removing the blacksmith shop that stood at now Coddington street and running a straight line through the land formerly a part of the Training field, which we have mentioned as being an encroachment by Torrey and Nightingale. The town awarded them damages for land taken as it had previously done to Hardwick on the opposite side under similar circumstances. Torrey refused to accept anything.

Early in the thirties, John Hayward built the house now standing on Temple street, east of the Adams block. In the fifties, it was occupied by Mr. Holden, father of the late John O. Holden. He kept a store here many years. It is now the property of Thomas A. Whicher.

In 1838 Coddington street was laid out. Mr. Horace B. Spear states that the Savings Bank building was built by George Hardwick, who inherited from his mother the Mears house adjoining. Later it was occupied by Nathan Fish for a grocery and dry goods store. There were two or more straight poplar trees in front.

Between it and the traveled road opposite, there was more or less of grass ground that was not traveled upon much. A flag staff stood on the green nearly in front of the Mt. Wollaston Bank of today. It marked the bend of Temple street toward the north-east. In the fifties, the late George L. Gill kept a book store and circulating library, in the present Savings bank building. Next to it, on the north, was a shed for two carriages owned by Josiah Brigham and Lemuel Brackett. Next, was a large harness shop occupied by Thaddeus Cross. Chamberlain's shop was in the bend. Beyond it was a shop occupied in later years by G. Fred Wilson for a grocery and market.

In 1888, John Quincy Adams bought all the land and buildings from the Savings Bank to the Whitcher building on Temple street, and erected the fine block that bears his name.

On the opposite side of the green, on Washington street there was in the sixties a blacksmith shop on the site of the Association building. The "Niagara Engine Company" had an engine-house here. Opposite to it on the church green, between Washington street and the driveway, a flag pole stood for many years. The town hay scales were at one time near here. They were also near the Nightingale house for a time. Next to it, there was an open space which the late Charles F. Pierce bought about 1866, and in 1877 erected the store and dwelling-house combined, now standing there.

In 1891 Mrs. Pierce sold it to the Quincy and Boston electric railway company who have a car house in the rear.

The chapel in the rear of the Stone meeting-house was built in 1889, at a cost of about nineteen thousand dollars.

In 1891 the parish granted permission to the Village Improvement Society to erect a fountain on its land. The architects were Walker & Best, the builders were McKenzie & Patterson. It cost a little over seven thousand dollars. When it was designed, there was a large plot of green sward between the driveway north of the posts and chains of the church enclosure and Washington street.

There was an opportunity here for a fine artistic effect, which the architects availed of by dividing the basin into two sections, each of which rested upon a street, and was for the use of horses. A third section faced toward the grass plot, and was arranged with steps and seats. At the present time it is abused and the grass plot nearly destroyed, by the unrestrained passage of teams over it.

A costly and beautiful work of art, desecrated, and fast becoming a nuisance, because of the neglect of its custodians.

There is a project now before the city government, to enclose this open space, and convert it into a park, a consummation greatly to be desired.

I have mentioned the printed works on which I have drawn so largely in the preparation of this paper. I now desire to record my indebtedness to persons who have so kindly assisted me. Mr. Edwin W. Marsh has proved to be a mine of valuable information, most cheerfully placed at my command. Col. A. B. Packard, Mr Horace B. Spear and others whose names I have mentioned, have also aided me.

Recollections do not always agree. Some people are positive, others doubtful and information has been given me by aged persons, whose memory is failing which the records do not confirm. Therefore your free but kindly criticism is invited.

The chief object of this society is the collection of facts for the benefit of those who come after.

John Hancock.

For a period of nearly 75 years until the present time no governor of the commonwealth of Massachusetts has died while holding office, but in the early days of the history of the commonwealth no less than four of its chief executives ended their usefulness and careers before their terms had expired.

Nothing was more fitting than that John Hancock, whose name stands first among the signers of the immortal Declaration, should be the first governor when the province, after various vicissitudes, adopted a constitution and became a commonwealth in 1780. Elected governor in that year he was annually re-elected till 1785, when he was succeeded by James Bowdoin for two years, but in 1787 was again elected, and re-elected until the year of his death, in 1793.

His illness was brief, and he died at his Quincy home, Oct. 8. He has always been regarded as a Boston man, but this was because of large business interests, which were in Boston. During his entire life he kept his home in the town of his nativity—Quincy. His death must have been unexpected, since it was first announced in the issue of the Boston papers succeeding those which contained his most fervid Thanksgiving proclamation, issued under date of Sept. 28, 1793. An order had been issued for the assembly of the militia of Boston and the neighboring towns for Oct. 8, to be reviewed by him as commander-in-chief, and the militia assembled only to be dismissed on the news of his death.

His funeral was an imposing one, occurring on Oct. 14, and the procession was in charge of Maj. Gen. Jackson, and was composed of the greater part of the militia of the commonwealth, under command of Maj. Generals Brooks and Fisk and Brig. Gen. Hale. Nearly all the state officials or justices of the time, justices of the various minor courts, the heads of the state departments, the members of council, of the supreme judicial court, Lieut. Gov. Samuel Adams, the vice president of the United States, John Adams, the secretary of war, the Massachusetts senators and representatives in congress, with the members of both branches of the legislature, formed a part of the funeral procession. Samuel Adams, as lieutenant governor, became acting governor, and in 1794 was elected as Hancock's successor, holding the office by annual re-election for three years.—Pawtucket Chronicle.

Republican Convention.

Massachusetts Republicans held a convention in Boston Friday and nominated Hon. Thomas B. Reed of Maine for President. These delegates favorable to him were elected: Henry Cabot Lodge of Nahant; W. Murray Crane of Dalton; Eben S. Draper of Hopedale, and Curtis Guild, Jr., of Boston.

Alternates,—Roland H. Boutwell of Belmont; Louis C. Southard of Easton; R. F. Hawkins of Springfield; Edward E. Courtney of Boston.

In the organization of the convention these Quincy men served on committees. Hon. John F. Merrill on Permanent Organization; vice president, Charles A. Howland; on Ballots, Hon. Henry O. Fairbanks.

Grand Swede Fair.

The three days' fair of the Swedish young ladies of St. Paul's church opened in Faxon hall, Thursday night, with a large attendance. The hall was very prettily decorated with bunting and the American, Norway and Sweden national flags, while on either side of the hall were pretty booths gaily trimmed in the national colors, blue, yellow, red and white, and these were presided over by young ladies attired in the picturesque Swedish costume.

At the right of the entrance was the booth for the sale of fancy articles, at which were Miss Josie Swenson, Miss Ida Peterson and Miss Annie Anderson.

Next was the confectionery booth at which were Miss Alma Carlson and Miss Alida Nelson.

At the left was the fish pond in charge Carl Edgen and Lars Dalberg.

The apron table was in charge of Miss May Witting, Miss Tilda Peterson, Miss Augusta Peterson, and Miss Hannah Erickson.

The flower table in charge of Miss Rosa Gustfason, Miss Emma Witting and Miss Selma Witting.

Post office in charge of Victor Siberg.

On the platform the voting contests were held. There was a silk hat for the most popular young man, a gold watch for the most popular young lady, a rocker for the married lady, a doll for the dearest little girl, and a rocking-horse for the smartest little boy. These were in charge of August Seiberg and William Gelotte.

Back of the stage was a lifting machine in charge of Alfred Olsen.

Down stairs mid a forest of pine trees refreshments were served by Mrs. Lamberg, Mrs. Gustafson, Mrs. Carlson, Miss Hannah Johnson and Miss Hannah Anderson.

The entertainment consisted of the singing of a Swedish national hymn is Swede by a chorus of thirty-two voices, and an American hymn in English by sixteen little girls, brief remarks Rev. V. Witting and Mayor Adams and the singing of "America" by the audience.

Mayor Adams in his remarks said it was a pleasure these days to find yourself among those who are doing something for others and to help upbuild ourselves, and nothing can be more worthy than doing everything for the church. We all want to honor and applaud those who work for the church, because the church stands for charity and kindness of heart, and these qualities we want to encourage. We are far too much inclined to applaud those men who achieve success without questioning there method of gaining it, but it is far better to applaud a man with a kind heart. Our country is large enough to welcome those from other lands, and when we extend the hand to you we know you believe in us. We have not forgotten the kind aid you gave us when our country was in trouble. We recognize you as a people akin to us in the way people ought to be governed, you may not have adopted our method but you have adopted our principles of liberty, and we are here as one people, Americans.

At the conclusion of the opening exercises Mr. Henry H. Faxon not only gave those who sang in the chorus ice cream but nearly all the young ladies in the hall as well.

The fair will close Saturday night.

Encampment Anniversary.

Manet encampment of Odd Fellows observed its fifth anniversary on Wednesday evening, at the lodge room in the Adams building. There was a goodly number of Odd Fellows and ladies present and an enjoyable time it was. Past Chief Stetson acted as master of ceremonies. Chief Patriarch W. H. Cobb briefly reviewed the history of the encampment. It was organized March 27, 1891, with 16 charter members and 23 were elected the first night. Since then 78 had joined and there had been but two deaths. The list of chief patriarch included A. W. Stetson, Frank W. Folsom, H. A. Willey, Charles G. Richards, E. L. Goodridge, Franklin Jacobs, Charles S. Berry, A. W. Woodward, John A. Gourd and W. H. Cobb.

Past Chief Jacobs spoke of the aims of the order, and the enjoyment of the meetings.

The remainder of the entertainment included slight of hand tricks by Prof. Peppercorn of Weymouth which were very clever; banjo solos by Master George Munroe, creditable performances for his first public appearance; readings by Miss Katherine Burkett, who has often delighted the Odd Fellows; piano solos by Miss Minnie Peppercorn, a talented artist; and vocal numbers by Mr. Everett Baker, which were encored.

Ice cream, cake and fruit were served, and dancing and card playing followed.

Easter Drill.

The entertainment at the Universalist vestry last evening was very much enjoyed. The programme opened with an excellent piano solo by Mr. Craig; followed by reading by Miss Prentice and a vocal duet by Misses Baker and Barlow. Mr. Craig then gave another piano solo which was followed by readings and singing.

Next in order was the Easter drill, which attracted the eager attention of the audience. Sixteen young ladies, who had been carefully drilled by Miss Grace Cain, performed admirably, and received hearty encore. They marched, counter marched and wheeled very finely; and great credit is due Miss Cain for the excellent manner in which the drill was performed. The ladies were all dressed in white, with bare arm to the shoulders, and carried instead of muskets, large Easter lilies. At the close of the march there were two beautiful tableaux, with colored light, which were very beautiful. Harry Field deserves special notice for his excellent services.

Quincy Debating Club.

The members of the Quincy debating club were in nowise daunted by the intricacy of the question—"Resolved, That the U. S. should adopt a double monetary standard. In fact several mentioned their pleasure in having this question to debate on Thursday evening.

F. W. Crane and Delcevare King were the principal deputants in the affirmative, and T. B. Pollard and J. C. Clarke in the negative. A good synopsis of their arguments was given in Friday's LEDGER.

When the debate was thrown open to the house and Mr. Faxon, Mr. Craig, Mr. Sargent and Mr. Pollard spoke.

Mr. E. S. Litchfield then criticised the principal disputants in a very fair and unprejudiced way, and yet with a criticism that criticised.

CITY BRIEFS.

Work is to be immediately commenced on the new brick block on Hancock street.

A petition is being circulated among the clerks and employes of the stores in Quincy to be presented to the Quincy Grocers Association, asking them to close their stores one-half day each week during the months of June, July and August. This closing is already in force in many places, including Atlantic.

A valuable horse was killed in a peculiar accident in the quarries Monday afternoon. The animal was hitched to a team loaded with stone, when he became frightened and ran away. When near Carlson's quarry the horse fell and one of the blocks of granite on the wagon fell onto him, crushing him so badly that he had to be killed.

Mr. Patrick Gallagher, well known to old Quincy residents, died at his residence on Cottage avenue, Wednesday, after an illness of about a week's duration, the result of a shock of paralysis. Mr. Gallagher was a blacksmith by trade and was employed as such by Tirrell & Sons for many years. For the last fifteen or twenty years he has done no business, having accumulated enough during his younger years to live without labor. He was about 70 years of age and leaves two sons, his wife having died many years ago.

An attempt was made sometime between Saturday night and Monday to enter manufactory of the Bay State Aluminum Co., on Granite street by forcing one of the rear doors and a window with a chisel, the marks being plainly visible. The party, or parties was apparently unsuccessful, for a window on the side toward the railroad was opend by smashing the glass and turning the catch. As far as can be learned the burglars got nothing for their trouble. It is thought they were frightened away.

Commissioner Knowlton's horse took fright while left alone for a few minutes on South street Wednesday afternoon, and started off at a rapid gait without his usual guiding hand. The horse ran down South street into Elm and then into Hancock and down through the centre at a rapid gait. When City Hall was reached the animal turned into the depot yard where he was stopped. Fortunately but little damage was done to the buggy.

Benjamin F. Curtis, who has made a study in the interests of the city of the alleged encroachments of Albert Keating upon Canal street, says Mr. Keating is upon Canal street more than a few inches. That, in fact, it is from two feet to five feet. The line was defined only a few years ago, in 1888, and should have been well known. The corner itself is rounding and not square, and Canal street first curves in. It is probable also that it will be claimed that the entire new structure is an encroachment, and possibly a part of the store now occupied by Mr. Hall.

The proposed law relative to license fees should not be considered from a standpoint of how much a city will gain or lose by the abatement of the State tax, but from a moral standpoint and justice to neighboring localities. Boston, Hull and other places now license liquor selling just for the immense revenue received, and cities like Quincy, which recognize the evils of drink, are still forced to maintain a police force and pay criminal costs because Boston rum or men with Boston rum inside, come here and cause disturbances and crime. It is right that Boston should pay damages to Quincy, and the act should pass.

All members of the church and corporation are entitled to vote.

The second year of the Association's educational work closes this week. Last year the work was inaugurated in a small way as an experiment. The classes included free hand drawing, clay modeling, and monumental designing. It took but a few weeks to demonstrate that there was a magnificent field for industrial educational work in Quincy. As it was the first attempt at this kind of work in Massachusetts by the associations, it was watched with much interest all over the State.

A special meeting of the City Council has been called for next Monday evening. Among the matters to come before the session are: to draw three jurors; to take action to secure legislation to relieve the city of the care and maintenance of the Point and Weymouth Back river bridges, to take action on order No. 11 relating to two new schoolhouses, and to act on the report of the Committee on Streets upon the petition of the Quincy and Boston street railway company for a re-location of its tracks on Hancock street.

QUINCY POINT.

Representative Newcomb spoke in the House Wednesday against the bill to allow Ward 25 of Boston to control the granting of liquor licenses. The bill was rejected 99 to 58.

The entertainment Wednesday evening in the Washington Street Congregational church was the last of the course given during the winter under the management of the Y. P. S. C. Endeavor. Though somewhat disappointed in the original programme the committee was fortunate in securing the following named artists who gave an excellent entertainment: Miss Goss, soprano soloist; Miss Catherine Tinker, reader from the Emerson school of Oratory, Boston; Mr. Herbert A. Hayden, organist and accompanist; the boy soprano, Master Warren Mitchell of Quincy: Mr. Hayden has most kindly acted as organist for the course and has aided much in making the whole a success.

Echo from Wollaston heard at the Point—"Mamma; ladies are Miss before they are married and Mrs. afterwards, ain't they?"

"Yes my son."

"Well why don't they call men Mr. first, and when they are married call them misteries (mysteries).

"They should my boy but the title is not changed."

Mr. and Mrs. J. Stuart Clarke have moved from the Point to Quincy Centre.

Mr. John Federhen has purchased what was known as the Capt. John Shaw property, from Mrs. Arthur Mitchell and Mr. John Shaw. We understand that improvements are contemplated.

Street Railway Improvements.

The directors of the Quincy & Boston street railway have had a number of improvements under way for some time and these were laid before the stockholders of the road at a meeting held Saturday afternoon.

It was voted to increase the capital stock to $165,000, to enlarge the car house and power station, to rebuild the line on Hancock and Washington streets and to extend the line from the present terminus in East Weymouth to the Hingham line to connect with the Hingham street railway.

Work on these new improvements, especially the rebuilding of the tracks on Hancock and Washington streets will commence soon, as the rails for this purpose have arrived. There seems however to be a desire on the part of the citizens that the line on Hancock street should be moved from the side to the centre of the street.

☞ There are days of electricity and the time will soon be at hand when nearly every family will use it in some form. It is necessary, therefore, that every appliance be of the best, and workmanship perfect. Willard E. Dow of Braintree guarantees all his work and invites correspondence if you are intending to have anything done in the electrical line.

The many friends and aquaintances of Master Robert E. McAuliffe, will be pained to hear of his death from Bright's disease Saturday at the residence of his mother on Bennington street. The young lad was the son of the late Mr. Robert McAuliffe and Mrs. Mary McAuliffe. He was aged 17 years, 1 month and 3 days, and had been sick for some time.

The funeral was held from St. John's church, Monday, Rev. John P. Cuffe being the celebrant of the requiem mass. The body lay in a white casket and was borne by the following young men, friends of the deceased in life: Michael Toomey, Thomas Little, William McCarthy, Thomas Toomey, James Walsh and Eugene McCarthy. The casket was almost buried from sight by the mass of flowers, remembrances from the young lad's friends. The interment was at St. Mary's cemetery, West Quincy.

It was to celebrate the seventh anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Foster that called together a number of their friends at their residence on School street Mar. 20, and the occasion proved to be one of enjoyment to those present. The entertainment provided by Mr. and Mrs Foster for the celebration of this interesting event consisted of a few hands at whist, in which the honors, a handsome painted plaque representing a landscape scene, the handiwork of Mrs. Foster, was carried off by Mrs. Eben F. Mitchell. Refreshments were then served being followed by music, dancing, and in the exchange of thoughts. It was not thought necessary by those present that the nuptial knot should be tied over again, as this had been securely done seven years ago, in lieu thereof however, the whist club of which Mr. and Mrs. Foster are members presented them with an ice cream set, the presentation speech being by Mr. E. Frank Mitchell, to which Mr. Foster briefly responded. The hours passed all too quickly, and when the guests took their departure it was with the wishes that their host and hostess might see many more such anniversaries.

At the Calvary Baptist church on Sunday, Rev. Morton W. Plummer, the Evangelist, preached at all services. At 10.30 A. M., 3 P. M. and 7 P. M. Morning and afternoon he spoke on Christ's coming, from John 14:3. In the evening he talked on the subject of "Feeling in connection with Salvation." Three steps in the way of salvation.

I. Fact a reality or a truth.

II. Faith the attitude toward a fact.

III. Feeling the mode of sensibility.

This subject was handled and simplified in a most wonderful manner. Mr. Plummer is a young man of rare ability as a bible student, as a preacher will hold large audiences enraptured with the wonderful truths of God's word. He will continue his service every night this week, "Saturday excepted."

Miss Lucy Eaton of East Milton has accepted a position with A. H. Doble & Co., as bookeeper.

The office of Biganess, Le Clair & Co. was entered by burglars sometime between Saturday and Monday morning. The only thing missed was a few thumb tacks, a rule and a pair of dividers.

William F. Gragg, one of West Quincy's well known and respected citizens died at his home on Crescent street, Sunday morning, after an illness of ten weeks' duration of heart trouble. Mr. Gragg was formerly employed as a stone cutter but of late years has been driving one of the city teams and Hose wagon No. 3. He was a member of Mt. Wollaston lodge and Manet encampment, I. O. O F. He was 55 years of age and leaves a widow and five children, two sons and three daughters.

The suit of Jake Zip against John B. Reinhalter for $1000 for injuries received at the quarry of Alphonse Reinhalter Feb. 15, 1893, was heard on Friday before Judge Humphrey. On the day in question Zip was at work in the quarry of Alphonse Reinhalter, adjoining which is the quarry of John B. Reinhalter. A large rock was started in the quarry of John B. Reinhalter and was rolling down into the quarry of Alphonse Reinhalter toward Zip, who to save himself jumped on to a pile of rough rocks receiving injuries which incapacitated him from duty for some time. Had he remained where he stood the rock would have struck him and probably killed him. Decision reserved.

The Grecian Art Tableaux Co., of which Miss Alberta Turner of West Quincy is a member, will give an entertainment at Hancock hall in April.

Commissioner Knowlton is doing a good job in rebuilding the sidewalk on Willard street between the junction of Crescent street and the Milton line.

Golden Cross Anniversaay.

Granite Commandery, U. O. G. C., celebrated its fourteenth anniversary Wednesday evening by an entertainment, supper and social dance at Faxon hall. Considering the many other amusements that were being held about the city there was a good attendance and a grand good time was enjoyed.

Archibald F. McLeod presided over the entertainment part of the exercises and introduced the several artists who took part, and each did his part equally well in the way of entertainment and was generously applauded.

The first on the programme was an address on the aims and objects of the order of Golden Cross by Past Grand Commander Evans of Boston. Then came a banjo and harmonica duet by Charles Baron; solo by Mrs. Laura Tirrell; reading by Miss Harvey of Boston; clog dancing by Mr. Milne and a one act drama, the characters of which were impersonated by Mr. Fred Goss, Mr. Rose, Miss Walker and Miss Porterfield.

At the conclusion of the entertainment an adjournment was made to the banquet room where a tempting supper was served under the direction of the ladies of the order.

Dancing was then in order until midnight, music being furnished by Bates' orchestra.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

ATLANTIC.

The combination wagon of Atlantic left its house eighteen minutes after the alarm from Wollaston sounded Saturday evening. Horses and several members of the company were in the building at the time. Enough said.—The chief of department should investigate, before anything of this kind is repeated.

The attendance at the Memorial Congregational church on Sunday was very large, Rev. Mr. Gurney of Wollaston, occupied the pulpit. The evening service of the Y. P. S. C. E. was under the direction of Miss Alice G. Coe and the pastor, Rev. Edward Norton, gave the fifth of his series of Sunday, evening talks on the Lord's Prayer, this time his text being "Give us this day our daily bread." Misses Moxon, Briggs and Coe favored with several trios.

A complimentary concert was tendered to William H. Owen by his many friends in Music hall, Atlantic, Monday evening. Owing to the inclemency of the weather the attendance was not as large as was expected, although the hall was fairly well filled. Mr. Owen received a great ovation when he appeared to sing.

The programme rendered was of a most excellent order and was greatly appreciated by all who attended. The following artists assisted, Miss Jennie Mae Spencer, contralto; Miss Edith W. Hatch, soprano; Miss Belle Temple, reader; Mr. Frank Kennedy, violinist; Mr. Sidney, tenor; and Prof. John Alden, pianist.

All the numbers on the programme were greatly applauded, especially the readings by Miss Temple and the songs, by Miss Spencer and Mr. Owen.

Six tables played until ten thirty, when prizes were distributed to the successful ones. First ladies' to Mrs. Locke, second to Mrs. Fowler, first gentlemens' to Mr. A. Shaw, second to Mr. F. Wright, while the boobies were cheerfully received by Miss Thompson and Mr. R. F. Shaw. The usual delicious and bountiful lunch was enjoyed. Mr. A. Tirell favored the company with several songs which were very much appreciated.

Horace G. Willard, LL. D., principal of the Howard Seminary for girls at West Bridgewater, has purchased the Quincy mansion at Wollaston Park, in this city. He intends to enlarge and improve the same, and open it as a school for higher education for girls.

It is delightfully situated on the line of the street cars, only a few minutes' walk from two railroad stations, where the fare is but a few cents to Boston; and still so far removed from noise and business pursuits, as to make it very attractive for a school. Certainly Quincy is well blessed with good schools—academies, seminaries and public schools.

There was a narrow escape from a serious fire at Norfolk Downs, Tuesday, when Mr. Richard Barry extinguished a blaze in the cellar of the house owned by James W. Woodward and occupied by Mr. McKay and family.

The alarm from box 57 at 10.45 Saturday evening was for a slight fire in a house on Hancock street, Wollaston, recently occupied by Mr. James J. Lord and owned by the Quincy estate. Damage, $250, insured; cause incendiary.

"Harsh and Questionable."

Walter S. Pinkham, Esq., of Wollaston appeared Thursday at the hearing of the Committee on Insurance of the Legislature relative to that part of the Governor's address referring to complaints made in regard to harsh and questionable methods of so-called mutual benefit insurance companies. He represented Long & Hemenway who have been retained by the Assessment Association and the Massachusetts Benefit Life Association in particular. At the request of W. H. Coolidge, who appeared for the committee of the policy holders of the above association, the hearing was postponed indefinitely.

MILTON.

Thomas Healey of Squantum street, aged about 15 years, was seriously if not fatally injured by a runaway team Monday afternoon at Milton hill. Mrs. Leigh of Wollaston was driving toward Quincy with a pair of horses which became unmanagable and resisted all efforts of the occupants to stop them. As they dashed along, the Healy boy who was passing with a hand swill cart was knocked down and run over. He received a deep gash on the head about two inches from the temple, but whether the cut was made from being struck with the pole or the horses hoof is not known. After running over the boy the animals kept on to East Milton where they were quieted. The boy meanwhile had been taken up uncouscious and carried to his home where he lies in a very serious condition not having regained consciousness on Wednesday.

Full Moon, March 29, 12.22 A. M.

THE PROPOSED legislation on liquor license fees, making the same payable to the State, and in turn abolishing the State tax upon cities and towns, is stirring up the liquor people, who were caught napping, and it is amusing to see them squirm.

They admit that some cities and towns now vote for license because of the revenue derived therefrom. This on the other hand will be a gain for temperance.

They say Boston may vote against license if the city is not to receive the fees. Temperance people hope it will. The police are under State control and should wage war on "free rum."

They say 90 per cent. of the inmates of our jails, houses of correction and almshouses have become public charges as a result of the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. Then why should not Boston, which receives the revenue, help support these institutions in Quincy and in Norfolk county. Not necessarily directly, but by abolishing the State tax as proposed.

Fifteen of the 32 cities voted against licenses and about nine-tenths of the towns. Such votes doubtless increase the sales in Boston and the revenue of the city, yet much of that liquor gets to Quincy and other no-license towns, increasing the costs of our police force, our courts and our poor department.

The representatives of no-license cities and towns and the temperance members of the Legislature have it in their power this year to strike a blow for temperance and they should wield it.

THE DEMOCRATS of Quincy are again in arms and swearing vengeance upon the heads and hopes of some of the past leaders. They have in this instance been aroused from their lethargic state by a certain letter written by Dr. Everett to Postmaster General Wilson relative to the Wollaston postoffice matter. The genial doctor, who has always prided himself upon his repugnance to the policy and practices of office seekers, has in this instance outdone the most zealous politicians in the city. The Democratic book of grievances contains, it is said, many black marks, and if one-sixteenth of the plans now being concocted are carried into effect, it will mean the utter disruption of the party this fall. The feeling against the sage of Elm street is particularly strong, as it deemed that he and his advisers have gone considerably out of their way to injure the candidate for the postmastership of Wollaston.

THE WATER Commissioners have had a gang of men at work on Third Hill, Wollaston, the past few days sounding the soil to see if it is suitable on which to erect a standpipe. It is not contemplated to build the standpipe immediately but when it is done the designing of the structure will be supervised by the Park Commissionners. We are assured the structure will not be one of those hideous, grim looking affairs which so plentifully disfigure the landscape, but a structure which will be artistic in design and color as well as useful. It is a pity that the Penn's hill pipe cannot be improved in appearance, even a change in color from its present sombre hue to a gray would harmonize much better with the landscape.

THE INDEPENDENTS have yet to see much independence on the part of Mayor Adams in his appointments, but he has one more opportunity and they are watching him closely. Never until this year has the Water Board been composed entirely from one party, and those three all active politicians. But Mr. Cavanagh has resigned to accept an appointment as superintendent, and it now remains to be seen whether the city is to have a nonpartisan board as under Mayors Porter, Fairbanks and Hodges.

IT IS probable that our handsome granite drinking fountain, on Hancock street, in this city will be duplicated in the city of Everett. A committee including the Mayor, an alderman and a G. A. R. man, has been appointed to procure plans and get estimates of the probable cost of such a design, which is intended for a memorial to soldiers and sailors of the late war. It will be as practical as it is ornamental.

MANY WILL be surprised to learn that there is before this Legislature a bill providing for sewage disposal for Quincy. It is in the hands of the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs, and it is only through a metropolitan system that Quincy can hope to obtain this crying necessity. We realize every day the need of a sewer system and the progress of the city is being retarded.

THERE SEEMS to be no doubt but interest is a current expense. Many know it to their sorrow. The debt and interest of the city of Quincy is now responsible for very nearly one half of the annual tax levy.

YES, WE can play whist in Quincy. The Quincy club has done well with the Algonquins of Brockton. Would it stand a ghost of a show with the veterans of the Granite City club.

Shawmut Spring Water.

How many people realize the importance of drinking only pure water in large quantities in order to keep in absolutely good health? When we consider that two-thirds of the human body is in the form of water, and that in order to supply the losses from excretion and evaporation it is necessary to drink from one-half to one gallon of water daily; it is of the utmost importance that it should be of the very best quality, perfectly free from the slightest trace of organic matter.

The Shawmut Spring Water stands second to none as a pure drinking water. Hundreds of families are using it every day. It is an important factor in maintaining health, building up and restoring the organs of digestion to healthy action. Cures Rheumatic, Kidney and Bladder troubles, when drugs have proved useless.

Send your order for a 5-gallon sample package. If you don't like it, it costs you nothing. Drink it and you will be satisfied of its purity.

For the Patriot.

Letter from the State House.

BOSTON, March 25, 1896.

The committee on manufactures has reported leave to withdraw on the petition of the city of Quincy for authority to establish an electric lighting plant without buying any existing plant. Mr. Melaven of Worcester dissents and there will be a contest over the report.

Mr. Thompson of Quincy secured the passage to be engrossed, under suspension of the rules, of the bill to extend for six months the time for locating the Quincy Quarry Company's tracks.

The problem of the municipal ownership of the gas and electric light works seems destined to experience no progress at the hands of the legislature of 1896. Several petitions for leave to build and operate municipal lighting plants have been reported upon adversely. The keenness of interest which was felt in this matter a few years ago has passed away. It is seen that they cannot jump to a conclusion all at once. The operation of the state oversight tends to prevent abuses and the disposition to escape from the rule of the lighting companies is not as ardent as it was. Furthermore, it would not be at all strange if the companies had exerted themselves to put up their fences so that the popular discontent with them shall be less. At any rate the problem does not seem as near solution as it did two or three years ago.

Last November's vote against woman suffrage has not hurt the standing of the women with the committees on liquor laws and election laws, whatever may be true of the legislature as a whole.

There have been reported bills to allow women to vote on the issue of liquor licenses and to give them municipal woman suffrage. On each instance there have been dissenters. On the other hand, the women do not seem to have as much interest in the reform this year as usual. They did not turn out nearly as many for the committee hearings as they did last year and when the question of general suffrage was pending in the house there was no more numerous attendance of women than on other days. Perhaps they will turn out when the municipal suffrage bill is reached, but they certainly let one opportunity pass without making the slightest effort to improve it. The dissenters from the municipal suffrage bill are Senators Blodgett and Corbett and Representative Moriarty.

The hearing before the committee on ways and means on the appropriation of of $50,000 for a statue to Gen. Butler, taken in connection with the remonstrances against such a statue which have been put into the legislature, have doubtless killed for this year all idea of erecting a statue to him, and it would not be strange if the proposition were never renewed again. In the first place, the petitioners have made out a remarkably weak case when they descended to particulars and were called upon for specifications of what in particular the general had done to make him worthy of this distinguished honor at the hands of the state. In the next place, the testimony on the other side has completely riddled whatever pretence there might be that Butler was a military genius.

The gas combinations which are announced make the common people feel as if they had very little to do with the control of that which they must have for the supply of their daily wants. After weeks of controversy and hostile encounter before the legislative committee on manufactures, the Bay State Gas Company and Mr. Henry M. Whitney have arranged such a deal that the latter's Dominion coal mines will supply the former with coal for gas purposes, while Mr. Thomas W. Lawson who stood ready to give the state $1,000,000 for the privilege which Mr. Whitney asked for with the expectation of giving nothing for it, has drawn out of the case. Thus the great advantages which the people were to receive from Mr. Whitney's Dominion coal fade away and the gas monopoly continues as strong as ever. The fight is still kept up by the Brookline company against the Bay State, but competent judges who watch the fight, predict that the only possible outcome will be a combination here also, leaving the people wholly dependent upon the one source of supply, upon such terms as the monopoly may choose to give, modified by such compulsion as may be put upon it by the gas commissioners. It is to be remembered that Massachusetts has one commission which has authority to enter the field of monopoly, upon petition by the consumers, and say what the price of the commodity shall be. Thus there is hope for the people, but not by any grace of the gas companies.

One of the hardest fights of the session has been over a bill in the house to permit Brighton, which is one of the wards of Boston, to vote by itself upon the issue of liquor licenses. The former town stands almost entirely by itself, surrounded by territory which is not part of Boston, and a strong prima facie case was made out in favor of granting it local option. But it was argued that if this were done, many other wards of cities would ask for equal privileges. At any rate, it was evident that there was far more interest in the bill than was warranted by Brighton alone. It was debated vigorously for three several times and once carried the house, but finally it was beaten by 54 to 98.

Both branches are agreed upon a general investigation of the relation of the state charities to each other and a report has been ordered to be made by the beginning of next year. Great powers have been given to the committee and a thorough overhauling will doubtless occur. Owing to this action, there has been an adverse report made upon the proposed children's bureau for the better protection of the children of the state who are under the control of the state board of lunacy and charity. Much friction has occurred in the board and doubtless much linen will be washed before the committee.

RULE.

Mr. Hammond a Delegate.

Again the Hammond Republicans played a winning hand on Monday evening at the Tenth District convention held in Wesleyan hall, Boston, and within an hour the result was bulletined by the LEDGER to greet the "night owls" and the "early birds."

The balloting begun at 8 50 and is summarized below, and the doings between the ballots follow.

Receiver Asked.

A climax seems to have been reached in the affairs of the Massachusetts Benefit Life association which is managed largely by Wollaston gentlemen. It has been noted that the policy holders have become aroused, and that a committee of prominent business men has been appointed by them to make an investigation. And now William F. Simpson of Dedham has filed in the supreme judicial court a bill in equity against the association and the following persons: George A. Litchfield, Everett S. Litchfield, Wendell G. Corthell, Henry B. Pierce, Salmon P. Hibbard, John C. Rand and Charles H. Bacall.

Already nearly 1000 protests have been received by the committee of the policy holders of the Massachusetts Benefit Life Association against the course of the corporation and the number is hourly increasing. Many go to the headquarters personally and others write. Secretary Eldridge gives out that the intention of this committee is not, as has been stated, to break up the Massachusetts Benefit Life Association, but simply obtain for the policy holders their rights. For a long time the members have been protesting against the doings of the association. No plan of action has yet been laid out by the committee, and there will probably be none until after the April assessments have been paid.

George A. Litchfield of Wollaston, the president of the Massachusetts Benefit Life Association, met the committee of the policy holders on Wednesday and held a conference of an hour and a half. He agreed that the committee should have an opportunity to make an examination of the affairs of the company, and they will begin at once.

The County Tax.

The county tax on Norfolk county towns this year will be 25 per cent. smaller than in 1895. The County Commissioners voluntarily reduced it from $160,000 to $132,500, but upon hearing the Committee on Counties of the Legislature decided this week that they must get along with $120,000. They reduced the estimate of $15,000 for highways to $5,000 and dropped $2,500 from the item of $6,000 for repairs and furnishings of county buildings.

The county tax last year upon Quincy was $16,105.30, and 25 per cent. less will make it $12,078 98 this year, a reduction of $4,026 32, which means about 25 cents on the tax rate.

Relative to an investigation asked by Judge French the committee considered it at length in executive session, March 26. It was finally tabled for a few days to see what luck Judge French has with a petition.

Some representative citizens of the county have signed the petition as will be seen by the names which follow:

C. F. Adams, 2d, Quincy; S. M. Weld, Moorfield Storey, Felix Rackeman, George Wigglesworth, E. C. Bumpus, Quincy; J. Q. A. Field, Quincy; Clarence Burgin, Quincy; R. F. Claflin, Quincy; J. L. Whiton, Quincy; G. H. Hitchcock, Quincy; Edwin W. Marsh, Quincy; C. A. Howland, Quincy; E. F. Hayden, Quincy; John Curtis, Quincy; S. W. Nickerson, Franklin; J. G. Ray, Franklin; G. H. Whist and Pool Tournament.

The final games in the whist and pool tournament between teams from the Algonquin club of Brockton, and the Quincy club of Quincy, were played at Quincy on Monday evening.

The prizes offered the victors in the tournament are two pictures valued at $10 each. Both clubs desired to possess these pictures, and the contest was therefore a spirited one.

Up to this meet Quincy led Brockton 46 points at pool, and Brockton led Quincy 7 points at whist.

It therefore looked as though Quincy would be victorious at pool and with a good chance of also winning at whist. The result however upset this view; Quincy won at whist by 5 points, while Brockton won at pool by 7 points.

The result of the meets previous to Monday night was as follows:

First meet,—Brockton won at whist by 10 points, and Quincy won at pool by 9 points.

Second meet,—Quincy won at whist by 4 points reducing Brockton's lead to 6 points; and Quincy won at pool by 23 points, increasing its lead to 32 points.

Third meet,—Brockton won at whist by 1 point increasing its lead to 7 points; and Quincy won at pool by 14 points, increasing its lead to 46 points.

Fourth meet,—Quincy won at whist by 12 points, which gave the Granite City a lead of 5 points; and Brockton won at pool by 53 points which gave the Shoe City a lead of 7 points.

King's Daughters' Convention.

A very full convention of the King's daughters of Norfolk county was held in Ellsworth hall, East Milton, Saturday, March 21, 1896, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M. The convention opened with devotional exercises, led by Miss Mary E Lunn, superintendent of the Deaconess home, Massachusetts avenue, Boston. The programme included: Address of welcome, Miss Marion L Pierce, leader of the East Milton circle; response, Mrs. Bridgman, Hyde Park; remarks by Mrs. E Trask Hill, State secretary, Massachusetts; song, "The Resurrection Morn," Miss Edna Joslyn, East Milton; address by county secretary, Mrs. M. M. Sawtelle, Readville; basket lunch, 12,30 to 1 30.

In the afternoon: Devotional exercises conducted by a member of Deaconess Home. Roll call of circles. Two minute reports of circles. Parlimentary Drill conducted by Mrs. E. Trask Hill.

Fifty Years Married.

There are few couples better known in Quincy than Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. French, whose fiftieth marriage anniversary was noted in Monday's LEDGER, although perhaps "Capt. Joe" is the better known of the two. He was born in Quincy, May 30, 1824, in the old Hancock House, and was the son of Daniel French, the proprietor. His wife was Miss Augusta Spear, whom he married March 19, 1846. She also was born in Quincy. The marriage ceremony was by Rev. William Lunt at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. Benjamin Curtis.

Capt. Joe was one of the forty-niners to California, sailing before the mast in the Lamerteen under Capt. Underwood, and a rough passage they had.

While in California he turned his attention for a while to steamboating and afterward opened a public house, calling it the Hancock House, after the famous hostelry in Quincy. In 1851 he made the maiden trip on the old Columbus from San Francisco to Panama and back, two months being consumed on the passage.

He returned to Quincy in 1853 and continued steamboating in Boston harbor, being made master in 1859 of the old Massasoit which plied between Quincy and Boston, which position he held up to August 24,1862, when he enlisted in Co. D, 39th regiment.

He was mustered out April 4, 1865, and again went on the Massasoit as captain.

In 1874 he gave up steamboating and opened a livery stable near the Quincy depot which he still carries on.

In politics he is a Democrat. He was first elected constable in 1868 and was re-elected every year until the adoption of a city form of government, and he has been appointed to that office by each successive Mayor since.

Of late years Capt. Joe has taken up auctioneering and has been successful in this as well as in his other enterprises.

The Hancock House was in its day the most popular road house between Boston and Plymouth, and Daniel Webster always stopped their en-route for Boston, and he was attended by Cap Joe who received a tip of a two shilling piece, and on Christmas the tip was a guinea.

Up to a few years ago he looked after the property of the late John Quincy Adams and few were more intimate with him than he.

Mr. and Mrs. French have three daughters, Mrs. Winslow Burrell, Mrs. Henry Alden and Mrs. Warren Gray.

The wedding celebration was confined to the family although Mr. and Mrs. French received many congratulations and well wishes from their neighbors and friends.

What a change has taken place since 1846. Mr. Gillett's stage coach could then take all our citizens who wished to visit Boston.

The city or town hall had been finished but a few months and the land on which it stands was purchased of Mr. French's father, who kept the Hancock House just north of the hall.

The groom was a smart, active youth about as attractive as any country lad you could find, but time has of late told somewhat on his electricity, and rheumatism has troubled him sometime, still he takes good care of the old Hancock House stable and his many friends find him daily attending to his arduous business.

Norfolk County Probate Court.

At Hyde Park, Wednesday, Judge White allowed the wills of S. D. Hitchcock of Sharon, Julia Cluer of Stoughton, Harriet Louis of Brookline, William Baker of Norwood, and Ann Brigham of Hyde Park.

Administrations were granted on the estates of Thaddeus Cushman of Randolph, Humphrey Jones of Quincy, O. B. Smith of Stoughton, George Haigh of Hyde Park, Mary Welsh of Dedham, Hugh Smith of Avon, Ada Lord of Hyde Park, Michael Welch of Hyde Park, Charlotte Holmes of Stoughton, Phebe Stockwell of Medfield.

Several inventories were filed, accounts allowed, guardians appointed and widows' allowances granted.

My

Nerves are weak, many people say, and yet they do not seem to know that they are literally starving their nerves. Weak, pale, thin blood cannot give proper sustenance—that is why you are nervous, tired, exhausted. The cure for this condition is to purify, vitalize and enrich your blood. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla fairly and faithfully, and the rich, red blood, which it makes, will soon feed the nerves the elements of true strength they require; they will cease their agitation and will resume their proper place—being under the control instead of controlling the brain and body. Read Miss Bartley's letter:

"I want to express my gratitude for what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me. My health has been very poor for three years, due to trouble with my

Kidneys

I was nervous, had pains in my back. I cannot tell what I suffered. My eyesight became affected and I was so despondent I did not have any interest in life. I had two physicians, but my complaints became worse. I was told that I was affected with Bright's disease. A relative urged me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I did so and in a short time I began to notice a change in my condition. Things began to appear brighter, my eyes improved and did not trouble me so severely. My appetite returned and I gained strength every day. I am now able to do my own work, and feel perfectly well. I cannot find words to express my gratitude for what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me and I gladly recommend it." MISS ELLA BARTLEY, 213½ S. Grant Ave., Columbus, Ohio

My Back

Anecdotes.

"I have finished your portrait, Mrs. De Fash," said the artist. "All but the coloring of the face."

"And why do you not finish that?"

"I wanted to hear from you as to whether you preferred me to have you look healthy or merely interesting."

Aunt Maria—Are you sure that Mr. Spooner loves you?

Carrie—I guess you would think so, to hear the silly things he says to me.

Aunt Maria—But how do you know you love him?

Carrie—Because they don't seem silly to me.

Mrs. Shanghai—"That is it, exactly! If you want any sitting done around here you can do it yourself. I have joined the Hen's Advanced Club, and we have firmly determined to let the males take their share of domestic cares."—Puck.

A lady had in her employ an excellent girl who had one fault. Her face was always in as mudge.Mrs. — tried to tell her to wash her face, without offending her, and at last she resorted to strategy.

"Do you know, Bridget," she remarked in a confidential manner, "that if you wash the face every day in hot, soapy water, it will make you beautiful?"

"Will it?" answered the wily Bridget. "Sure, it's a wonder ye niver tried it, ma'am."—Ex.

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, MAR. 28, 1896.

Snowdrop and Crocus.

From Harper's Bazar.

Long were the wintry days and cold,
No bloom could pierce the frozen mould,
Chill blew the gale o'er mount and wold.

But who remembers frost and snow,
When sweet today the south winds blow,
And birds are flying to and fro?

We hear the robin's flute-note clear;
It is the love-tide of the year;
Soft shadows play on field and mere.

A vestal in her garments white,
The snowdrops gleams in purest light,
The crocus smiles in jewels dight.

Dear April, leading on to May,
Sweet Spring, upon her royal way!
No wonder earth is glad today.

Notes and Comments.

—If genius is indeed the power of taking infinite pains, then Mr. Edison is one of the greatest of geniuses. He tried no less than one thousand eight hundred chemicals before he found one to aid him in his attempt to see through an eight-inch block of wood with the naked eye.

—March weather gets more abuse than the weather of any other month in the year, but its abusers forget that but for its storms and howling winds the remainder of spring would lose half of its charms.—Roxbury Gazette.

—The general trade situation throughout the country may be regarded as less satisfactory at the middle of March, 1896, than had been anticipated. Even prices of staples have refused to make and maintain advances.—Bradstreet's, March 14, 1896.

—The United States pays $900,000 a year for its weather service.—Taunton News. The appropriation ought to be cut down. We are paying altogether too much for such weather as we get.—Orange Enterprise.

—It is hard to realize that less than seventy years ago cows were pastured on Boston common.

—Mayor Pingree's latest benefaction is to introduce the city of Detroit to build and own its own lighting plant, about $600,000 worth of bonds being issued. The city now save thousands of dollars annually.

—The New York legislature has passed a bill obliging railroad companies to carry the bicycles of passengers free. In enacting this law it is probable that the Solons didn't love their old friends, the railroad corporations, less, but did love the votes of the several thousand wheelmen in the state, more.

—The Hon. H. C. Lodge, junior senator from this state, has introduced a bill in the Senate with an additional restriction upon immigration to this country. The bill debars those unable to read and write, and strikes particularly at Italians, Russians, Hungarians, Bohemians, etc., the lowest, poorest, and most undesirable class of people, a class easily led into laziness, vice and anarchy. They bring disease, filth and danger, and are a great injury to the coarser kinds of labor, as they work cheap and live upon garbage—Norwood Advertiser.

—A printing office in a little town up in Michigan is always opened with prayer, which leads an irreverent editor to remark that it must be a rare exception to the rule, as from time immemorial it has been customary for the average office to be opened by the "devil and closed by the sheriff.—Franklin Sentinel.

—Rosa Bonheur has celebrated her seventy fifth birthday, and attributes much of her robust health to her habit of wearing male attire. There is indeed food for dress reformers in the fact that Rosa Bonheur as well as Dr. Mary Walker are women of remarkable vitality for their age. —Home Journal.

—A man near Pittsfield, Massachusetts, buys water from the city at 10 cents a thousand gallons, and has put in a pipe to distribute it. He has no doubt that it will pay a good dividend on grass crops, and much more on fruits.—New England Farmer.

—The New York legislature has passed a bill which will prevent the erection of any more unsightly monstrosities in the shape of monuments and memorials.

—Boston is not sorry that it has built the finest public library in the United States. The attendance in a single day sometimes reaches 5000 persons.

—The tramp crop starts very early in the spring, before the grass turns green and the first crocuses appear. A village wood yard will harvest them best.

—It has been a long time, says the Boston Journal since any State Legislature has passed a more revolutionary act, and one affecting more capital and more people, than the Raines bill, which Gov. Morton signed Monday. The liquor business of New York State will now be in State hands, and the cities will receive but two-thirds of the revenue. The present licenses will terminate on June 30.

—Thirteen of fifteen dog-bitten boys, who have been undergoing the anti-hydrophobia treatment at the New York Pasteur Institute, will be discharged from the institution soon.

—It is difficult to see how respectable people can oppose a measure that will close more than 9000 of the worst saloons in New York as it is admitted the Raines bill will do.—Pawtuket Chronicle.

—Morton's signing of the Raines bill seems to have upset Wall street considerably. Some sort of an underhand alliance and sympathy between the broker and the saloon, has existed at least in the minds of the people, for sometime; but it was rather surprising to see the market go-of just because the saloon got a very black eye at the hands of the governor.—Boston Record.

—A well-known inventor is reported to have discovered a method by which electricity can be generated directly from heat without the intervention of the steam engine and boiler, and thus avoided the large percentage of loss resulting from their use. It is claimed that three times the power can be developed and applied from the same amount of coal as by the present method, and experiments already made afford good reason for belief in the practical success of the scheme. If the expectation regarding the new discovery proves to be well grounded, a complete revolution of business industries must follow, the magnitude of which can scarcely be conceived.

—W. L. Douglass of Brockton is said to have dropped $40,000 so far in trying to keep the Times of that city going. Douglas is a good shoemaker but is learning that it costs money to run a daily paper.

—A five cent nickle of 1877 is worth $1 and a nickle five-cent piece of 1878 about fifteen cents. You arn't likely to know when you have them, however, without wasting more than $1.15 worth of time.

—We want more revenue, and we must have it. There is only one way to get it. We must pass a Protective tariff law. Then we shall be a solvent Government. Then we shall pay our bills when they are presented. Then we shall not need Treasury bookkeeping to show a "comfortable surplus" when every man of common sense in the country knows that we are living "on trust" and dodging our creditors.—N. Y. Press.

—It is said that Presidents John Adams, Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, Van Buren, Wm. Henry Harrison, Polk, Taylor, Fillmore and Garfield never vetoed a single measure passed by Congress.

—"All the fools are not dead yet" if there is any truth in the report that a new daily paper is to be started in Lynn. To be sure there is but an Item in the way of its success, but that has already been sufficient to bankrupt several concerns that have undertaken to run a new daily in that city.—Athol Chronicle.

—The Pawtucket Gazette says, "If the X rays come into general use frame houses will lose cast. Edison finds no difficulty in photographing through planks."

Paying Investments.

While there are thousands of opportunities for the safe investment of money in legitimate and paying industries in New England, it is a fact that those having a few hundred or a few thousand dollars for investment prefer putting it into outside enterprises, influenced by the speculative nature characteristic of Americans. And no more striking example of this is to be found than in the fact that within the past year 600 companies, capitalized at from $10,000 to $2,000,000, have been organized in Colorado to develop mining interests. The largest part of the stock in these mine-booming enterprises is disposed of in the East, and on the strength of a few wonderfully-successful operations. The New England capitalist is said to be proverbially conservative, but his conservatism is confined to New England. If he was as ready to take stock in some local enterprise as he is to invest in Western farm mortgages, mining schemes and Southern land companies, he would be fully as sure of something in return, even though the dividends were not as large as those promised, but seldom realized, from outside investments. The cotton mills, paper and pulp mills and manufactures of all kinds in New England are among the best paying properties in the country, as a rule, and were the money which has been lost in the South and West by New England investors utilized in building up and increasing home industries, New England would today be the el dorado toward which the wealth of the land would be drawn.—North Eastern Lumberman.

Don't Grease the Griddle.

Hot pancakes are such universal favorites, and the family is so varied in all its branches, that every one knows how to mix the most approved ingredients. But how to bake them is the question, without filling the house with smoke and a heavy, greasy odor. Do not grease the griddle. That is my way of cooking them. The griddle must be perfectly clean and smooth, and neither too hot nor yet too cool. When I think it is about right I wipe it off with a wet towel, then try a small cake. If it bakes to a light brown, then I keep the griddle at that temperature until the meal is finished, moving it alternately to a cooler or warmer place on the range, as may be needed.—Elizabeth Cady Stanton, in The Household.

Literary Notes.

Harper's Magazine for April contains the concluding chapters of the story of "Joan of Arc," showing the maid and conqueror as at last the martyr. The frontispiece is an engraving, by Florian, of the mural painting by Lenepveu in the Pantheon at Paris—a striking representation of the execution of Joan. "A Phase of Modern College Life," is novel and interesting, as showing to what extent organized Christian work is carried on in our colleges. The fiction of the number includes Mr. Black's new novel "Briseis," now approaching its conclusion; a short story by Octave Thanet, entitled "A Missionary Sheriff," illustrated by Frost; "A Spring-Flood in Broadway," a new "Vignette of Manhattan," by Brander Matthews, illustrated by Smedley; and "The Voice of Authority," by Mrs. Alexander, illustrated by John W. Alexander.

The Easter number of Harper's Bazar appears on March 28th. It will be distinguished by an extra supplement and a decorated cover, and will be full of the Easter sentiment as expressed in fashions suitable to the season. Elegant gowns and wraps and lovely Easter hats and bonnets will appear in almost bewildering variety. A strong story by Marian Harland, entitled "Jim Purdy, Martyr," with a fine illustration by A. J. Kellar, will be a striking feature.

An interesting feature of April Ladies' Home Journal will be a series of hitherto unpublished letters from Louisa M. Alcott to "five little girls" residing in Pennsylvania. In these epistles the author of "Little Women" is said to have most delightfully revealed her extraordinary nature. She takes her young correspondents into her closest confidence. She says: "I think immortality is the passing of a soul through many lives or experiences, and such as are truly lived, used and learned, help on to the next, each growing richer, happier, higher, carrying with it only the real memories of what has gone before. If in my present life I love one person truly, no matter who it is, I believe that we meet somewhere again, though where or how I don't know or care, for genuine love is immortal.

The alb, so often mentioned as a priestly garment, was a long gown, fastened with a belt.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

It was a short meeting that the City Council held Monday evening, no important matters coming up for debate. An attempt to take the order for school-houses from the table was defeated, and the Committee on Finance was not ready to report on the annual appropriations.

Councilmen Rinn and Russell were the only absent members.

The Mayor forwarded a communication from William B. Rice for the trustees of the City Hospital, asking that the city's appropriation toward the Hospital be $3,000. To Committee on Finance.

A communication was received from the Mayor calling attention to an early hearing of the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs of the Legislature in relation to the Neponset river valley branch of the Metropolitan sewer which included Quincy. His Honor asked to be authorized to appear before the committee and have Quincy stricken out.

This communication was laid on the table until later in the evening when Councilman Rice offered the necessary order.

Councilman Claflin thought some information should be given on the order.

Mayor Adams said the Council should take some action tonight. If none is taken Quincy will be in that bill. We do not want to enter that bill. If Quincy is stricken out now we can get put in at any time. If we let Quincy remain it will be impossible to get out and it may involve some expense.

Councilman Rice said the proposition is to take in the towns of Hyde Park, Milton, Neponset and Quincy and connect with the Boston sewer. Quincy now has permission to use this outlet and all the facilities it needs and if the proposed bill passes it would involve expense.

The Mayor was instructed to have Quincy striken out of the bill.

Report of Committees.

The Committee on State Aid recommended the granting to John Fairclolh $6 per month, and to Henry Talbot $8 per month. Adopted.

The Committee on Streets, on petition of the Quincy Quarry Co., reported an order approving the location asked for, imposing certain restrictions, among which were: That they shall build an overhead iron bridge across Granite street at least 14 feet above travelled part of street, to be approved by Commissioners of Public Works; they shall at their own expense guard and protect rails by planks, or otherwise at grade crossing, that they shall agree to comply with all regulations in regard to the rate of speed to be run, the time and manner of using the railroad over and upon said ways and travelled places as in the judgment of the Mayor and City Council public safety and convenience require, and further, if at any time Granite street or other travelled places shall be widened or changed the company shall without expense to the city reconstruct its bridge or railroad so as to conform to side widening. Also that they shall accept this order and agree to comply with its conditions in writing within twenty days from its passage.

The order was passed to be ordained, and was immediately approved by Mayor Adams.

The Committee on Streets, on petition for repairs of Liberty street, recommended the matter be referred to the executive department. Adopted.

The Committee on Streets on lights for Wollaston avenue and Fenno street, reported favorably, and the reports were adopted.

The Committee on Streets reported an order for one incandescent light on Elm street, between Baxter and South Walnut streets. Adopted.

The Committee on Fire Department reported favorably on petition for fire alarm box at the junction of Copeland and Crescent streets. Adopted.

The Committee on Streets reported an order for a public hearing, April 20, on the petition of the Quincy & Boston street railway for location on Washington street to connect its Quincy Point and Houghs Neck lines. Adopted.

Petitions.

Councilman Lamb presented a petition of the Quincy & Boston street railway for a relocation on Hancock street in the centre of street. To Committee on Streets.

Councilman Sprague presented petitions of the Quincy Electric Light and Power Co. for location for one pole on Pearl street, and one on Woodbine street. To Committee on Streets.

Schoolhouses.

Councilman Sprague moved that schoolhouse order be taken from the table.

Councilman Pinkham hoped motion would not prevail. He hoped matter would remain on the table until there was a full meeting.

Councilman Sprague inquired how long we should wait on this matter?

The motion was lost by a vote af 10 to 10.

Adjourned at 8 o'clock.

A man's life may be saved in many ways. A man may commit suicide in a great many ways. Shooting himself through the head is quicker, but it is no more certain than neglecting his health. If a woman saw her husband with a pistol to his head, she would take prompt and vigorous measures to save him; but the same woman might see her husband on the down-grade to disease and death without seeing the seriousness of it. One-sixth of all the people who die, die of consumption. Consumption doesn't come all at once. It is insidious. The seeds of it are seemingly insignificant. Most people do not know how it starts. Thousands of people are on the road to consumption and don't know it. Whenever there is loss of flesh—paleness—wasting away—look out. Consumption easily finds a foot-hold in a weakened body. Low vitality, impure or poor, blood, imperfect digestion, nervousness, sleeplessness—all these lead to consumption.

Taken in time, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will prevent the development of the disease. Taken according to directions, it will positively and perfectly cure ninety-eight per cent. of all cases of consumption, whether incipient or fully developed. Consumption is a disease of the blood. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is a cure for all blood diseases, no matter in what part or how they manifest themselves.

If you want to know all about it, and what it has done for other people, send twenty-one (21) one-cent stamps to cover the cost of mailing only for a FREE COPY of Dr. Pierce's great 1008 page work, "Common Sense Medical Adviser." Every family should have a copy of this book for ready reference. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

Household Receipts.

SALMON PATTIES. Take half a can of salmon, flake and mix with half a pint of cream thickened with a spoonful of butter rolled in corn starch; season with salt, pepper, anchovy sauce and a few olives chopped fine. Allow to cool, and fill the patty cases.

CURRIED EGGS. Have one teaspoonful of chopped onion and three tablespoonfuls of butter, and place in a pan over the fire; when the butter is hot add one tablespoonful of flour and a generous teaspoonful of curry powder; stir until smooth and add one cupful of stock, one-half cupful of milk, some salt and a little pepper, and cook ten minutes. Have half a dozen eggs boiled twenty minutes, shell them, cut them into quarters and place them on a hot dish; strain the sauce over them and serve immediately.

WHILE-FISH SALAD. Boil some white fish, sufficient for your salad. When ready ake it out of the water. Boil gently in the same water half a package of gelatine and whites of two eggs. Strain, and set aside to cool. Remove the bones from the fish and pick it into small pieces, which place in a layer on a platter with some sharp gravy poured over it. Next a layer of beets, pickled cucumbers, and hard-boiled eggs, all cut in thin slices; then fish with gravy, and so on. Continue until all the fish is used, the last layer being gravy. Garnish with capers, pieces of the fish jelly, and pickled beets.

Granite Business Reviving.

John Thompson & Sons have recently put on ten new cutters.

Richards & Trowbridge report a batch of orders for designs.

F. Hardwick & Son are at present giving employment to double the force employed at any period during the past two years.

The newly elected officers of the Merry Mount Granite Co. are: President, Michael B. Geary; clerk, John Sullivan; treasurer, John C. Kapples; agent, Peter W. Driscoll; directors, the above with Enos S. Costa. The company is erecting a new fifty-ton derrick.

Badger Bros. have the contract for a soldiers' monument to be erected at Holidaysburg, Penn., at a cost of $11,000.

C. H. Hardwick & Co. have recently shipped a polished granite ball three feet in diameter to a customer in Denver, Col. They are at present engaged in cutting rough stock for the addition to the Boston University building.

Fuller, Foley & Co. have received several orders for fair sized memorials.

Anglo Malnati is giving employment to twenty-six cutters.

William T. Spargo has increased his force of cutters.

H. W. Adrian is cutting a large boulder monument for U. S. Senator J. C. Burrows of Michigan, which when completed will weigh about twenty tons. He is also equipping his plant with a 25 horse power boiler and a five-horse power air compressor.

The Granite Railway Co. have orders for several large monuments to be cut from their dark Quincy stock.

The granite shipments for the month of February were:—Quincy Adams, 2,179,788 pounds; West Quincy, 7,947,088 pounds; and over the Quarry railroad 15,746,915 pounds.

The newly elected officers of the Quincy branch of the Granite Cutters' Union are: James Copland, president; Wm. Souden, vice-president; James McAdam, corresponding secretary; John Johnson, financial secretary; Alexander Chalmers, treasurer; Charles Miller, Henry Rendle, figuring committee; Alexander Souter, Alexander Mundie, John Russell, standing committee.

Joseph Walker is now employing thirteen cutters.

The sarcophagus style of monuments are more in demand than the former style.

George H. Hitchcock & Co., are sending out handsome specimens of their stock in the shape of a granite polished ball watch charm.

The Craig & Richards Granite Co. has moved into their new office.

Cook & Watkins have put in a new ten-horse power air compressor in place of their five-horse power engine.

Where Would You Put a Saloon.

Every voter who markes a cross against the word "Yes," means of course that in his judgment it is best that the open saloon should come back. Let him also answer this question. Where does he want these saloons planted which he proposes shall come back? On the corner where his wife has to go to take the car? On the same street where he resides? Or in the neighborhood of the schoolhouse where his children must pass it daily? Where?

The saloons, if they come back, are going to injure somebody's property, they are going to ruin somebody's boys. You who intend to vote "Yes," just take a look over the city, thriving with clean and orderly streets, with few disturbances of the public peace, with few arrests for drunkenness, without a single open saloon anywhere, and ask yourself where are the proper places to plant thirty saloons. That is what your vote means if you vote "Yes," Don't vote that way until you have decided that other question, "Where?"—Temperance Cause.

The Quickest and Best.

The Atlantic Coast Line, via Richmond, Va., has again placed at the service of the travelling public the celebrated "New York-Florida Special." Here is one of the triumphs of railroading as it enables tourists to reach the beautiful winter resorts of the South with perfect ease and with luxurious surroundings. One night only between Boston and Florida. Exclusively Pullman Vestibuled train composed of dining, sleeping, library and observaion cars. A perfect road-bed running through a section of the country historical and picturesque. The route is via Washington and Richmond to Charlestown, Savannah, Jacksonville, and St. Augustine. This is the quickest and best line also, to Thomasville, Brunswick, Aiken, Augusta and Middle Georgia.

Before deciding on your trip be sure to consult the illustrated pamphlets and descriptive matter of the Atlantic Coast Line.
